CH. XVI. We have now advanced to the first of the two speeches ascribed by our author to Alcibiades; in which we recognise,—more than in any other of the orations contained in this history,—what might be expected from the hasty and fiery temperament of the speaker,—abundance of involved constructions and bold metaphors, such as, taken with the abrupt plain-spokenness and cool confidence prevailing throughout, may be supposed to have been characteristic of the oratory of this extraordinary person, to whom we may well apply the line of the poet, 'too quick for thought, For action too refined.' It is justly remarked by Bauer, that 'the arrogance and self-sufficiency of this hot-headed youth are well set forth by the circumstance of the speech thus abruptly commencing with a simple demand urged in this authoritative tone: "Ay—to me rather than to others belongs it of right to bear rule, (for need have I to commence from hence, considering that I have been here carped at by Nicias,) and withal I think myself worthy [of the honour]."' The terms προσήκει μοι and ἄξιος—εἶναι are not merely convertible ones; the former (as Bauer and Arnold are agreed) having reference to his right to the office, on the score of his birth, wealth, and lavish expenditure for the benefit of the state, and former services to it (in which view compare Plato, 491, D, τούτους προσήκει τῶν πόλεων ἄρχειν); the latter, as Bauer points out, to his personal merits and proved fitness for the office, in his capability to discharge its duties. Compare Plato, Alcib. i. ἐνδείξασθαι Ἀθηναίοις ὅτι ἄξιος εἶ τιμᾶσθαι.

ὧν γὰρ πέρι ἐπιβόητός εἰμι] 'for as to the things about which a clamour has been raised against me.' The term ἐπιβόητος (occurring also in Dio Cass. p. 375. 450. 963.) is properly one of middle signification; though it is (as Pollux, Eustathius, and Th. Mag. point out) employed in malam partem (of which use examples are found in Anacreon and the Anthol. Gr. iii. 10, 3): and no wonder; since the ἐπι signifies at or against. Thus at the end of the chapter we have ἐπιβοώμενος, 'clamoured against.'

προγόνοις μου καὶ ἐμοὶ δόξαν φέρει ταῦτα, τῇ δὲ πατρίδι καὶ ὠφέλειαν. 2. οἱ γὰρ Ἕλληνες καὶ ὑπὲρ δύναμιν μείζω ἡμῶν τὴν πόλιν ἐνόμισαν τῷ ἐμῷ διαπρεπεῖ τῆς Ὀλυμπίαζε θεωρίας, πρότερον ἐλπίζοντες αὐτὴν καταπεπολεμῆσθαι, διότι ἅρματα μὲν ἑπτὰ καθῆκα, ὅσα οὐδείς πω ἰδιώτης πρότερον, ἐνίκησα δὲ, καὶ δεύτερος, καὶ τέταρτος ἐγενόμην, καὶ τἆλλα ἀξίως τῆς νίκης παρεσκευασάμην. νόμῳ μὲν γὰρ τιμὴ τὰ τοιαῦτα, ἐκ δὲ τοῦ δρωμένου καὶ δύναμις ἅμα ὑπονοεῖται. 3. καὶ ὅσα αὖ ἐν τῇ πόλει χορηγίαις ἢ ἄλλῳ τῳ λαμπρύνομαι, τοῖς μὲν ἀστοῖς φθονεῖται φύσει, πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ξένους καὶ αὕτη ἰσχὺς φαίνεται. καὶ οὐκ ἄχρηστος ἦδ' ἡ ἄνοια, ὃς ἂν τοῖς ὅσα οὐδείς πω ἰδιώτης πρότερον] This is said cautiously; for kings, it appears, might have sent more: and yet Isocrates de Bigis, § 14, says, ζεύγη καθῆκε τοσαῦτα τὸν ἀριθμὸν, ὅσοις οὐδ' αἱ μέγισται τῶν πόλεων ἠγωνίσαντο. But that is evidently a mere oratorical exaggeration, which it is strange Mitford should have introduced into his history. Ἐνίκησα: meaning, 'I obtained the first prize.' In καὶ δεύτερος καὶ τέταρτος we have a certain variation of expression for 'obtained the second and the fourth prizes.' Of καὶ τἆλλα ἀξίως τῆς νίκης παρεσκευασάμην the sense is, 'et cætera apparavi pro victoriæ dignitate;' where there is perhaps an allusion (as Duk. supposes) to the sacrifices offered by him at the temple of the Olympian Jove; which were so complete, that from them the whole assemblage present were feasted.

2. τῷ ἐμῷ διαπρεπεῖ τῆς Ὀλυμπίαζε θεωρίας] Here we have an example of the use of adject. for subst. τῇ ἐμῇ διαπρεπείᾳ; with which compare supra ii. 71, ἐν τῷ—ἀσθενεῖ τῆς γνώμης. On the θεωρ. here spoken of see note at v. 16. In καθῆκα, a little after, ('I sent down to the course,') we have an allusion to the situation of the stadium, which was somewhat lower than the level of the adjacent country, so as to afford to the spectators in the raised seats a better view. The same sort of allusion may be recognised in Dio Cass. 985, 71, ἡνίοχοι τὰ ἅρματα εὐθὺς καθῆκαν. Pausan. vi. 2, καθῆκεν ἐπὶ ὀνόματι τοῦ Θηβαίων δήμου τὸ ἅρμα.

νόμῳ μὲν γὰρ τιμὴ τὰ τοιαῦτα] That such victories were regarded as reflecting honour not to the individual only, but also the state, is plain from various passages of Pindar. With the words following, ἐκ δὲ τοῦ—ὑπονοεῖται, (of which the sense is, 'from the thing done, the power also of the country of the doer is imagined,') compare Dio Chrys. Orat. xxxi. οὐ γὰρ μόνον κόσμον φέρει τὸ τοιοῦτον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν ἰσχὺν τῆς πόλεως ἐπιδείκνυσι. See also Pind. Nem. ix. 25, 3, and Isth. ii. 54.

3. καὶ ὅσα αὖ—χορηγίαις] On this subject see Boeckh, Pub. Œcon. vol. ii. p. 207. Λαμπρύνομαι. Render, 'I am distinguished,' i. e. I render myself distinguished. Πρὸς τοὺς ξένους, 'quod ad peregrinos attinet.' In the words following, καὶ αὕτη ἰσχὺς φαίνεται, 'this appears to be even strength,' 'gives an appearance of power,' the fem. stands for the neut., according to the rule laid down in Matth. Gr. § 440, 7, that 'when the demonstr. pronoun is the subject, and has a subst. for the predicate, it is put in the gender of the predicate, as in a passage of Plato, p. 433, E, τὰ συνθήματα εἶναι τὰ ὀνόματα—καὶ εἶναι ταύτην ὀρθότητα ὀνόματος, συνθήκην. Here τοῦτο (which Goeller thinks we should have expected rather than αὕτη) would not have been so well, the latter being chiefly adapted to impart emphasis.' See Matth. ubi supra. As to vulg. αὐτὴ, retained by Bekker, it cannot be defended.

ἦδ' ἡ ἄνοια] So I edit, with Wasse, Duk., Bauer, Poppo, and Arnold, instead of vulg. ἡ διάνοια, which was restored by Goeller, and is now adopted by Bekker. Which of these two readings is the true one, I would not venture positively to pronounce: but I must think that Arnold's arguments for ἄνοια are not so strong as Goeller's against it; and yet Goeller's are not so strong as to be decisive, since ἄνοια need not be explained to mean madness properly so called, but folly; of course, understanding the term, with the Scholiast, as said sarcastically, q. d. 'what you call folly:' of which use the following are examples—Soph. Ant. 95, Ἀλλ' ἔα με καὶ τὴν ἐξ ἐμοῦ δυσβουλίαν: and Œd. T. 397, ἀλλ' ἐγὼ μολὼν, ὁ μηδὲν εἰδὼς, ἔπαυσά νιν. St. Paul, 1 Cor. i. 21, διὰ τῆς μωρίας τοῦ κηρύγματος: 2 Cor. xi. 1, ὄφελον ἠνείχεσθέ μου μικρὸν τῆς ἀφροσύνης: and so ἰδίοις τέλεσι μὴ ἑαυτὸν μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν πόλιν ὠφελῇ. 4. οὐδέ γε ἄδικον ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ μέγα φρονοῦντα μὴ ἴσον εἶναι, ἐπεὶ καὶ ὁ κακῶς πράσσων πρὸς οὐδένα τῆς ξυμφορᾶς ἰσομοιρεῖ. ἀλλ', ὥσπερ δυστυχοῦντες οὐ προσαγορευόμεθα, ἐν τῷ ὁμοίῳ τις ἀνεχέσθω καὶ

the word is to be taken at ch. 17, init. It is true that ἦδ' ἡ ἄνοια is weak in external authority, (and yet to the three MSS. cited as having it, I can add two others, Cant. and M. B.) but it is strongly supported by a passage of Procop. p. 337, 20, ἄχρηστος καὶ ἄνοια προπετὴς, from which it clearly appears that ἄνοια was read in this passage of our author in the time of that writer: and that the Scholiast so read, is quite certain; though, by a blunder of the scribes, διάνοια has place in the heading of the Scholium; yet the Scholium itself is evidently founded on the reading ἄνοια. Moreover, according to the reading διάνοια, the sense as it is laid down by Valla, propositum, besides being devoid of proof, is very flat and spiritless; whereas the other possesses a certain pointed and sarcastic tone, quite characteristic of the speaker, and therefore more likely to be genuine. Again, supposing the term to bear the more probable sense, disposition of mind, that is to assign to it a sense by no means apposite; since it is not disposition or affection of the mind that is here spoken of, but action,—namely, that of benefiting the state at one's own expense. Finally, it may be added, that internal evidence is quite in favour of ἦδ' ἡ ἄνοια; since, had ἡ διάνοια been the original reading, it is not easy to imagine how so plain and facile a reading could have been altered. On the other hand, supposing ἦδ' ἡ ἄνοια to have been written, one can easily imagine the possibility of its being taken for ἡ διάνοια by scribes who did not perceive the sarcasm conveyed; since δὴ might easily pass into δια. Lastly, ἡ διάνοια has the objection of being incorrect, since propriety would require ἦδ' ἡ διάνοια, which, however, is not found in a single MS.: and though it be true that, as Goeller says, 'nihil eorum, de quibus hoc loco Alcibiades loquitur, Nicias, cap. 11, init. amentiæ arguerat,' yet it may be observed that he had applied the epithet ἀνόητος to his projects and designs against Sicily, and consequently might be thought to ascribe folly to his whole character: which attack Alcibiades parries by the witty turn, that 'it is a not unuseful folly for any one, at his own expense, to benefit, not himself alone, but the state.'

On the idiom in ὃς ἂν see note supra ch. 14, τὸ ἄρξαι τοῦτ' εἶναι, ὃς ἄν.

4. οὐδέ γε ἄδικον—ἰσομοιρεῖ] The full sense is, 'Nor truly is it unjust that any one [like myself] proud of himself (i. e. bearing himself loftily on his merit) should not bear himself on an equality [with others], but rather carry himself above them:' meant as an answer to those who objected to his pride as unjust, in a state where political equality was apportioned to all the citizens. It is, he argues, not unjust, ἐπεὶ καὶ—ἰσομοιρεῖ, 'inasmuch as he who is in misfortune finds no one to partake with him in his calamity.' By μὴ ἴσος εἶναι is meant, 'not to be disposed to be on a footing of equality.' Alcibiades might have added, that hauteur, in such a case, is excusable. To which purpose compare a passage of Alexis ap. Athen. p. 224, F, where it is well said, τοὺς μὲν στρατηγοὺς τὰς ὀφρῦς ἐπὰν ἴδω Ἀνεσπακότας, δεινον μὲν ἡγοῦμαι ποιεῖν, Οὐ πάνυ τι θαυμάζειν δὲ προτετιμένους Ὑπὸ τῆς πόλεως μείζοτι τῶν ἄλλων φρονεῖν, where, for μείζοτι, read μεῖζόν τι. How often τι is added to adverbs derived from the neuter of the adject. in comparison, it is scarcely necessary to observe.

Of the phrase ἰσομοιρεῖν τινι τῶν κακῶν an example is adduced by Schneid. Lex. from Dionys. Hal.

ἀλλ', ὥσπερ δυστυχοῦντες—ὑπερφρονούμενος] This forms the other part, containing the proof of the justice of the thing; which is evinced by showing its equality,—literally, evenness of measure. Render, 'But as we [fortunate ones] are, when in calamity, not even spoken to in like manner, let any one [who is not of the number of the fortunate] bear to be looked down upon by the fortunate:' a sentiment happily expressed in the words of a great writer, forming at once a free and faithful version of the present: 'For as no man will even speak to us when we are unfortunate, so must they, in their turn, bear to be despised by us when fortunate: this conduct being little more than retaliation.' And truly the multitude repay the hauteur of their superiors with interest; for, as observes Herodian, vii. 3, 11, τὰ γὰρ τῶν εὐδαιμονεῖν δοκούντων πταίσματα πρὸς τῶν ὄχλων οὐ μόνον ἀμελεῖται, ἀλλά τινας τῶν κακοήθων καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν εὐπραγούντων ὑπερφρονούμενος· ἢ, τὰ ἴσα νέμων, τὰ ὁμοῖα ἀνταξιούτω. 5. οἶδα δὲ τοὺς τοιούτους, καὶ ὅσοι ἔν τινος λαμπρότητι προέσχον, ἐν μὲν τῷ κατ' αὐτοὺς βίῳ λυπηροὺς ὄντας, τοῖς ὁμοίοις μὲν μάλιστα, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ξυνόντας, τῶν δὲ ἔπειτα ἀνθρώπων προσποίησίν τε ξυγγενείας τισὶ, καὶ μὴ οὖσαν, καταλιπόντας. καὶ, ἧς ἂν ὦσι πατρίδος, ταύτῃ αὔχησιν ὡς οὐ περὶ ἀλλοτρίων οὐδ' ἁμαρτόντων, ἀλλ' ὡς περὶ σφετέρων τε καὶ καλὰ πραξάντων. 6. ὧν ἐγὼ ὀρεγόμενος, καὶ διὰ ταῦτα τὰ ἴδια ἐπιβουόμενος, τὰ δημόσια σκοπεῖτε εἴ του χεῖρον μεταχειρίζω. φαύλων ἔσθ' ὅτε καὶ εὐφραίνει, φθόνῳ τῶν κρειττόνων καὶ εὐτυχούντων.

ἢ τὰ ἴσα— ἀνταξιούτω] 'or else, having given what is just and right, let him claim the like in return:' meaning, in other words, as the Scholiast explains, ἢ, εἰ βούλεται μὴ ὑπεροράσθαι κακοπραγῶν, μήδ' αὐτὸς τῶν ἀτυχούντων καταφρονήσῃ.

5. οἶδα δὲ τοὺς τοιούτους—πραξάντων] Here we have a mournful truth,—as feelingly, as it is forcibly conveyed; the writer having himself experienced the bitterness of being so circumstanced. We cannot doubt, however, that he foresaw that, applicable as it was to his own case, it would be made good in the latter as well as the former respect; when the disgraced exile of twenty years would be one of the proudest boasts of that country which had cast him forth as a broken vessel.

ἐν τῷ κατ' αὐτοὺς βίῳ] Meaning, as Poppo explains, 'in ætate quæ incidat in eorum tempora.' Of ξυνόντας the sense is, 'quum versentur cum iis.' In οὐδ' ἁμαρτόντων there is an allusion to the false charges of offences (as in the case of Thucydides himself) which the envy of others is sure to raise against the illustrious.

6. ὧν ἐγὼ ὀρεγόμενος — μεταχειρίζω] Render, 'Such, then, being the objects of my ambition, and on account of these (which are private matters) exclaimed against,—see whether I am inferior to any one in the management of public affairs.' The argument is, that such (namely, τὰ καλὰ) being the objects of his pursuit in private life, it might be presumed that they would in public, and by implication he affirms that it is so in the strongest manner, by calling on his hearers to decide whether he is inferior to any one in the management of public affairs: as a proof of which he then proceeds to instance the success with which he had conducted the affairs of the state in Peloponnesus, as an inference of his capacity for the command with which he was now invested. Of the words Πελοποννήσου γὰρ τὰ δυνατώτατα—θαρσοῦσι the sense is, 'for [instance] having brought together to our alliance the most powerful states of Peloponnesus, without any great danger or cost to you, I caused the Lacedæmonians, in one day, at Mantinea, to fight for their all: on account of which, though victorious in the battle, they do not yet even now feel a sure confidence in themselves.' This sense of ξυστῆσαι, 'societatem efficere, conjungere alios alicui,' is established by a passage of Isocr. de Bigis, § 15, τὰς μεγίστας πόλεις τῶν ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ Λακεδαιμονίων μὲν ἀπέστησεν, ὑμῶν δὲ συμμάχους ἐποίησεν. Herodot. vi. 74, ἀπικόμενος ἐς τὴν Ἀρκαδίην, νεώτερα ἔπρησσε πράγματα, συνιστὰς τοὺς Ἀρκάδας ἐπὶ τῇ Σπάρτῃ. Dr. Arnold accounts for this peculiar use of ἐς in ἐς μίαν ἡμέραν κατέστησα, by regarding this as a sort of abridged form of expression, similar to one in Herodot. viii. 71, ἐς τὸν Ἰσθμὸν ἵζοντο, for ἐς τὸν Ἰσθμὸν ἐλθόντες, ἐν αὐτῷ ἵζοντο. But the idiom in question is not quite of the same kind; and the expression in the present passage is, I think, best explained (as it is by Poppo) to mean, 'I brought them to one day's contest for their all,' meaning, in other words, to the necessity of one day's battle for their all. We may suppose our author to have here had in mind the phrase καθιστάναι ἐς ἀγῶνα, ἐς πόλεμον, ἐς ἀνάγκην, &c., and to have moulded the wording thereto in the present instance.

XVII. *καὶ ταῦτα ἡ ἐμὴ νεότης καὶ ἄνοια παρὰ φύσιν δοκοῦσα εἶναι, ἐς τὴν Πελοποννησίων δύναμιν λόγοις τε πρέπουσιν ὡμίλησε, καὶ, ὀργῇ πίστιν παρασχομένη, ἔπεισε. καὶ νῦν μὴ * πεφόβησθε αὐτήν· ἀλλ', ἕως ἐγώ τε ἔτι ἀκμάζω μετ' αὐτῆς, καὶ ὁ Νικίας εὐτυχὴς δοκεῖ εἶναι, ἀποχρήσασθε τῇ ἑκατέρου ἡμῶν ὠφελείᾳ. 2. Καὶ τὸν ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν πλοῦν μὴ μεταγιγνώσκετε ὡς ἐπὶ μεγάλην δύναμιν ἐσόμενον· ὄχλοις τε γὰρ ξυμμίκτοις πολυανδροῦσιν αἱ πόλεις, καὶ ῥᾳδίας ἔχουσι τῶν πολιτειῶν τὰς μεταβολὰς καὶ ἐπιδοχάς. 3. καὶ οὐδεὶς δι' αὐτὸ, ὡς περὶ οἰκείας πατρίδος, οὔτε τὰ*

CH. XVII. The first section of this chapter ought to have been thrown to the foregoing; the scope being to draw an inference of his fitness for the present command by his former actions, and to claim their confidence in him on that score. The sense here intended to be expressed seems to be as follows: 'And these affairs my youth and folly, which is thought enormous, transacted with the power of the Peloponnesians, by dint of suitable words, and, obtaining confidence to my impetuosity, persuaded and brought about:' where παρὰ φύσιν is equiv. to ὑπερφυὴς, as used in Hdot. viii. 116, and Demosth. p. 543; and immanis in Latin, as 'immanis avaritia;' the literal sense being, 'what transcends the bounds of [even] youthful folly, [great as that may by nature be expected to be.]' There is enough on record (especially in a curious passage of an ancient writer, preserved in Athenæus, p. 534) to justify and illustrate the present expression, especially when taken in conjunction with the mad follies and drunken orgies to which Alcibiades was so prone, and which made the subject of a dramatic satire by Eupolis; not to mention the general belief of his guilt in the mutilation of the Hermæ and the profanation of the mysteries. By τὴν Πελοποννησίων δύναμιν understand, 'the most powerful states of Peloponnesus,' i. e. those both of the Lacedæmonian and the Argive confederacy: indeed Alcibiades, by this masterly stratagem of policy, broke the power of the Peloponnesians in general. By πρέπουσι is meant, 'suitable to the occasion.' Ὡμίλησε is, as Abresch and Bauer observe, for ὁμιλήσασα ἔπραξε. By ὀργῇ is meant, in a good sense, zeal or ardour. Ἔπεισε signifies, by a sensus prægnans, 'brought about by persuasion,' as at iii. 43, 2, ὥστε δεῖν—τὰ δεινότατα πεῖσαι. Of course the word ἄνοια is here, as at ch. 16, used ironically; the sense being, 'what you call mad folly.' Compare Soph. Antig. 95, ἀλλ' ἔα με καὶ τὴν ἐξ ἐμοῦ δυσβουλίαν.

For vulg. πεφοβεῖσθαι, I have, with Goeller, Haack, and Bekker, adopted the conjecture of Reiske, πεφόβησθε; the change demanded by the context being so slight as scarcely to need the authority of MSS. Render, 'And now fear it not; but while both I am in the flower of this [so called] mad folly, and Nicias is thought to be fortunate, use freely what is serviceable in each of us.' On this intensive force of the term ἀποχρ. (which signifies literally, 'to use up') see note at i. 68; and compare Jos. Ant. xv. 5, 1, τῇ προθυμίᾳ τοῦ πλήθους ἀποχρ. Appian, ii. 691, 12, ἀποχρ. τῇ τοῦ στρατοῦ προθυμίᾳ.

2. Alcibiades now encourages them as to the expedition, by showing that the enterprise is not so difficult or dangerous as Nicias represents it, but held out a fair prospect of great advantage at a trifling risk. First, he represents the power of Sicily as by no means formidable. Then he shows in what respects it is weak, notwithstanding it may seem strong: weak it is, he declares, as torn by factions and ripe for change. In sections 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, is established on argument the fact of the real weakness with the seeming strength of Sicily. And first it is shown that the mixed population (however great) of Sicily had been agitated by such a series of revolutions, that it had not yet become firmly attached to the soil, and was destitute of the patriotic feelings which lead men to unite for the common defence of their country. Accordingly, an invader would meet with no steady resistance, and, profiting by their internal dissensions, might, by the aid of the barbarians, (who would easily be induced to furnish it against their common oppressor Syracuse,) easily subdue the island. Πολυανδρεῖν signifies 'to swarm with inhabitants.' By μεταβολὰς καὶ ἐπιδοχὰς understand, 'changes of political institutions, and the reception of others in their place.'

3. δι' αὐτὸ] This I would refer, not to the immediately preceding words, but to περὶ τὸ σῶμα ὅπλοις ἐξήρτυται, οὔτε τὰ ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ νομίμοις κατασκευαῖς· ὅ τι δὲ ἕκαστος ἢ ἐκ τοῦ λέγων πείθειν οἴεται, ἢ στασιάζων ἀπὸ τοῦ κοινοῦ λαβὼν ἄλλην γῆν, μὴ κατορθώσας, οἰκήσειν, ταῦτα ἑτοιμάζεται. 4. καὶ οὐκ εἰκὸς τὸν τοιοῦτον ὅμιλον οὔτε λόγου μιᾷ γνώμῃ ἀκροᾶσθαι, οὔτε ἐς τὰ ἔργα κοινῶς τρέπεσθαι· ταχὺ δ' ἂν ὡς ἕκαστοι, εἴ τι καθ' ἡδονὴν λέγοιτο, προσχωροῖεν, ἄλλως τε καὶ εἰ στασιάζουσιν, ὥσπερ πυνθανόμεθα. 5. καὶ μὴν οὐδ' ὁπλῖται οὔτ' ἐκείνοις ὅσοιπερ κομποῦνται, οὔτε οἱ ἄλλοι Ἕλληνες διεφάνησαν τοσοῦτοι ὄντες ‡ὅσους ἕκαστοι σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ἠρίθμουν· ἀλλὰ μέγιστον δὴ αὐτοὺς ἐψευσμένη ἡ Ἑλλὰς μόλις ἐν τῷδε τῷ πολέμῳ ἱκανῶς ὡπλίσθη. 6. τά τε οὖν ἐκεῖ, ἐξ ὧν ἐγὼ ἀκοῇ αἰσθάνομαι, τοιαῦτα, καὶ ἔτι εὐπορώτερα ἔσται· (βαρβάρους [τε] γὰρ πολλοὺς ἕξομεν, οἳ Συρακοσίων μίσει ξυνεπιθήσονται αὐτοῖς·) καὶ τὰ ἐνθάδε οὐκ ἐπιthose a little further off, ὄχλοις ξυμμίκτοις πολ. It was because the cities swarmed with a population of mixed race,—and who, from frequent revolutions, would have often to change their residence,—that no one regarded his place of abode so much in the light of his own country, as to be prepared to fight in its defence. Here, then, the meaning intended is, that 'from the little patriotism felt by the people, and from the want of mutual reliance, the defence of the country was little attended to, either by the providing of weapons and armour for individuals, or of military stores in general, and the raising of such works or fortifications as are necessary for putting any country in a posture of defence:' where κατασκευαῖς is to be understood as referring to the formation of the works above mentioned; and νομίμοις, to the doing of them by public authority, at the common expense of the state, and not leaving them to be done just when wanted,—opere tumultuario. Dr. Arnold, indeed, would refer the words not only to public works for the defence of the country, but also to what we should express by improvements, as roads, bridges, &c. But the above (which is the view of the sense adopted in my Translation) is borne out by the fuller phrase occurring at viii. 5, κατασκευὴ τοῦ πολέμου. (See also note at i. 10.) Moreover, it is not to be supposed that men would expend money and labour about either one or the other, since such κατασκευαὶ could not be taken away with them, should they have to change their country. And as to the love of country, it could not well exist, since no one would regard his present place of abode as his own country.

ὅ τι δὲ ἕκαστος — ταῦτα ἑτοιμάζεται] The order is, ἕκαστος δὲ ἑτοιμάζεται ταῦτα ὅ τι ἀπὸ τοῦ κοινοῦ λαβών, ἢ ἐκ τοῦ λέγων πείθειν ἢ στασιάζων, οἴεται οἰκήσειν ἄλλην γῆν μὴ κατορθώσας. It should have been τοῦτο instead of ταῦτα, but the writer forgot that he had used the singular number in the beginning of the sentence, ὅ τι. (Dr. Arnold.)

4. γνώμῃ] Meaning counsel, as opposed to action, implied in ἔργοις, just after.

5. ὅσους] So I have edited, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, from two or three MSS., instead of the common reading, the accus. being demanded by propriety of language. As to the deficiency of external authority for the former, it is fully compensated by internal evidence, which is quite in favour of ὅσους, since an accus. between two nominatives might easily pass into a nominative.

μέγιστον δὴ αὐτοὺς ἐψευσμένη] 'which had falsely exaggerated them,' viz. its heavy-armed or regular soldiers. So Xen. Anab. v. 7. 35, (cited by Poppo,) τὰ δὲ χρήματα, ἃ ὑπέσχοντο Τιμασίωνι—ἐψευσμένοι ἦσαν. To this sort of falsification the Greeks were always prone; and this is alluded to as an acknowledged fact by Juvenal in the well-known 'Quidquid Græcia mendax audet in historiâ.'

6. εὐπορώτερα] 'more practicable or opportune for the reduction of the island.' I have placed τε between brackets, as having no place here. I doubt not that it arose from ϝε, and that from mistaking the abbreviation of γάρ. Thus the words are perpetually confounded. The Cod. Clarend. is without the γάρ, and I suspect that its archetype had not the ϝε or τε.

καὶ τὰ ἐνθάδε — οἱ γὰρ πατέρες, &c.] The speaker proceeds to say, that 'there is nothing at home to hinder them from κωλύσει, ἢν ὑμεῖς ὀρθῶς βουλεύησθε. 7. οἱ γὰρ πατέρες ἡμῶν, τοὺς αὐτοὺς τούτους, οὕσπερ νῦν φασὶ πολεμίους ὑπολείποντας ἂν ἡμᾶς πλεῖν, καὶ προσέτι τὸν Μῆδον ἐχθρὸν ἔχοντες, τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐκτήσαντο, οὐκ ἄλλῳ τινὶ ἢ τῇ περιουσίᾳ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ἰσχύοντες. 8. καὶ νῦν οὔτε ἀνέλπιστοί πω μᾶλλον Πελοποννήσιοι ἐς ἡμᾶς ἐγένοντο, εἴ τε καὶ πάνυ ἐῤῥωνται, τὸ μὲν ἐς τὴν γῆν ἡμῶν ἐσβάλλειν, κἂν μὴ ἐκπλεύσωμεν, ἱκανοί εἰσι, τῷ δὲ ναυτικῷ οὐκ ἂν δύναιντο βλάπτειν· ὑπόλοιπον γὰρ ἡμῖν ἐστιν ἀντίπαλον ναυτικόν. XVIII. this expedition, since their enemies there were never able or less disposed to attack them: and should they do so, they could do nothing more than overrun the open country, as heretofore; which could inflict no serious injury.'

7. τῇ περιουσίᾳ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ] 'by the superiority of our naval force.'

8. καὶ νῦν—ἐγένοντο] 'And as things now are, never have the Lacedæmonians been in less hopes of overpowering us.' Εἴ τε καὶ πάνυ ἐῤῥωνται is, as Duker remarks, equivalent to εἰ ὅλῃ προθυμίᾳ καὶ σθένει παντὶ ὁρμηθεῖεν.

CH. XVIII. 1. ὥστε τί ἂν—βοηθοῖμεν] Literally, 'Accordingly what probable reason, either ourselves alleging should we shrink back; or what excuse offering to our allies there, should we not afford them aid?' The construction here is perplexed from the words ἢ αὐτοὶ being thrown out of their right place, which, as Poppo observes, was before the participle λέγοντες. There is, he adds, a similar transposition of ἤ at ch. 24, where see note. Of the words λέγοντες ἢ αὐτοὶ the sense is best expressed by the version of Haack, 'argumentis a nostra ipsorum conditione petitis, ipsi per nos.' At σκηπτόμενοι repeat τί: of which syntax (an exceedingly rare one) the only examples I have noted elsewhere are the following: Herodot. v. 102, τὸ σκηπτόμενοι οἱ Πέρσαι. Plato, p. 217, ταῦτα ἐσκήπτετο πρὸς ἡμᾶς (where the construction is exactly parallel to that in the present passage). Æschin. p. 88, οὐ γὰρ τοῦτό γε σκήψῃ. Polyb. 40, 6, 11, σκ. ἀσθένειαν. Plut. Sol. σκ. ἔκστασιν τῶν λογισμῶν. The Scholiast explains the expression by προφασιζόμενοι, prætexentes; and very properly; since the word πρόφασιν is sometimes found added after the term by way of explanation; on which see Bast, Lettre, p. 164, ad Ep. Cr. 201.

ἐπειδή γε καὶ ξυνωμόσαμεν] 'inasmuch as we have interchanged oaths.' Ἀντιτιθέναι, 'to object;' literally, 'to set off against.' Δεῦρο ἀντιβοηθῶσι, 'give us aid here in return.' Προσεθέμεθα αὐτούς, 'added them to our confederacy.' See Valcken. on Herodot. v. 69. Τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ἡμῶν λυπηροὶ ὄντες, 'giving annoyance to our enemies there.' So Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 2, Μυσοὺς ἡμῖν λυπηροὺς ὄντας.

2. ἢ βαρβάροις] The ἤ is in several MSS. not found, and has been cancelled by Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold; while by Poppo it is retained within brackets. I have here, as in my small edition, not hesitated to do the same, because the word might have easily been absorbed by the ἀεί, though removed it cannot be without enervating the vigour of the expression, (quite characteristic of our author,) with which we may compare another altogether parallel one at ch. 53, στόλοι ἢ Ἑλλήνων ἢ βαρβάρων.

φυλοκρινοῖεν] The reading here has been disputed. The common lection is φιλοκρινοῖεν, and this has been retained περὶ αὐτῆς ἂν ταύτης μᾶλλον κινδυνεύοιμεν. τὸν γὰρ προὔχοντα οὐ μόνον ἐπιόντα τις ἀμύνεται, ἀλλὰ καὶ, † μὴ ὅπως † ἔπεισι, προκαταλαμβάνει. 3. καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμῖν ταμιεύεσθαι ἐς ὅσον βουλόμεθα ἄρχειν, ἀλλὰ ἀνάγκη, ἐπειδήπερ ἐν τῷδε καθέσταμεν, τοῖς μὲν ἐπιβουλεύειν, τοὺς δὲ μὴ ἀνιέναι, διὰ τὸ ἀρχθῆναι ἂν ὑφ' ἑτέρων αὐ-

by Haack and Bekker, (in their first editions.) and is preferred by Arnold; while Poppo and Goeller have, from most of the best MSS. and Valla, edited φυλοκρινοῖεν; which reading has been, though before rejected, since received in their second editions by Haack and Bekker; and very properly; for though the sense yielded by φιλοκρινοῖεν (namely, 'should make nice distinctions whom to choose as the objects of their favour') be a good one, yet it is not so good as that which is yielded by φυλοκρινοῖεν, namely, 'should make distinctions of race,' (i. e. in determining whom to aid or not,) meaning race, either as regarded Greeks or barbarians; or, if Greeks, between Ionians and Dorians. The former, however, is, from the foregoing mention of the Egestæans as barbarians, more probable. Again, φυλοκρινοῖεν is not a little borne out by the weight of internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance of its not only yielding a stronger sense, and one more agreeable to the context; but of its being more likely to have been altered, through misconception, into φιλοκρινοῖεν, than vice versâ: for actual examples of which alteration of the word, I refer to Aristid. i. 382. Basil, Ep. 204. Synes. p. 29, and Lucian, 2 Phalar. 9, φιλοκρινεῖν τὰ ἀναθήματα καὶ γενεαλογεῖν τὰ πεμπόμενα, where one good MS. has, what is undoubtedly the true reading, φυλοκρινεῖν. and at the Abdic. 4, for φιλοκρινούντων the Flor. edition has φυλοκρ. I have not met with the word φιλοκρινέω in any but recent writers; while φυλοκρινεω, though a word of rare occurrence, (and one from that circumstance found obliterated by the carelessness of scribes,) is of good authority, and is attested as such by Pollux, Hesych., Suidas, Zon., and Eustathius. The word, which is found also in Lucian, Eusebius, Liban., Basil, and Clem. Alex., is by Eustathius supposed to have been formed from the Homeric expression in Il. ii. 362, κρῖν' ἄνδρας κατὰ φῦλα: though, whether it was ever used in that primary signification, is more than doubtful. We may suppose it to have been one of those many verbs spoken of by Abresch, 'quorum significatio propria rarissimè occurrit, secundaria ac tropica passim.'

τὸν γὰρ προὔχοντα—προκαταλαμβάνει] Render, 'For any one not only defends himself against the superior party when attacking; but he even anticipates the attack, that he may not come upon him.' For μὴ ὅπως. which may justly be thought corrupt, I would read, from at least one MS. (what probably the Scholiast had in his copy,) ὅπως μή; and ἔπεισι I would take as a future, comparing Xen. Anab. v. 7, 12, ὃ, εἰ ἔπεισι (ingruet) καὶ ἔσται: on which use of the fut. after ὅπως and ὅπως μὴ in the Attic writers, it may suffice to refer to Matth. and Kühner's Gr. Gr. To suppose, as some have done, that μὴ ὅπως stands for ὅπως μὴ, is surely not permitted by any rules of correct interpretation. Again, to cancel (as Poppo proposes to do) the word ὅπως, would, besides incurring a very great violence, require ἔπεισι to be changed to ἐπίῃ. And as to the conjecture of Haack, who proposes, for μὴ ὅπως ἔπεισι, to read μή πως ἔπεισι, that is alike objectionable on the ground that πως would here be next to useless. The mode of emendation above proposed is one which,—simple as it is effectual,—may be well borne out by the admirable critical dictum of Porson, Præf. ad Eurip. Hec. p. 15, 'Tutissima corrigendi ratio est vocularum, si opus est, transpositio.'

3. ταμιεύεσθαι ἐς ὅσον βουλόμεθα ἄρχειν] Of these words the sense, though disputed, seems to be, 'to mark out, define, determine, to what extent we choose to carry our empire.' As to the controverted term ταμιεύεσθαι, it signified primarily 'to act the part of a ταμιὰς, or dispenser,' and that whether by laying up any thing for future use, or for present distribution: though, as either implies a full power over the thing, so the word came to bear, as here, the sense nostro arbitratu constituere, definire, 'to appoint for oneself, to determine;' of which sense, however rare, I have noted examples elsewhere in Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 47, παραδόντες ἑαυτοὺς ἡμῖν ταμιεύεσθαι, ὥσθ' ὁπόσοις ἂν βουλώμεθα μάχεσθαι: and Cyrop. iv. 1, 18. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1557, 8, ταμ. τὴν τύχην, and 1618, 6, τ. τὰς τύχας.

τοὺς δὲ μὴ ἀνιέναι] 'on those not to let go our hold,' viz. by slackening the reins καὶ οὐκ ἐκ - μεταλήψεσθε] 'And quietude it is not in your power to consider, in the same degree with others; unless you also change your habits into a similarity to theirs.'

4. λογισάμενοι — ἣν ἴωμεν] Render, 'Reckoning therefore that we shall rather increase these things (i. e. our possessions here) if we go after those:' where at αὐξήσειν supply ἡμᾶς. In Πελοποννησίων τε στορέσωμεν τὸ φρόνημα ('may lay prostrate, pull down, the pride of the Peloponnesians') the term στορέσαι (which properly signifies 'to smooth down, lay even,' especially as applied to the waves of the sea; according to its use in Hom. Od. iii. 158, and Herodot. vii. 193) bears the metaphorical sense to lower, as said of pride; a sense also found in Liban. Epist. 125, where the very expression occurs, evidently borrowed from our author. Similarly, too, in Suidas, v. Diogenes, we have, τὸν θυμὸν κατεστόρησε, (an expression probably suggested by that in Æschyl. Prom. 198, στορέσαι τὴν ὀργήν,) and in a passage of Plut. Lucull. 5, κατεστόρησε τὴν φιλοτιμίαν. This term, while occasionally used simply of conquering an enemy, (as in the well-known inscription to the memory of the Athenians who fell at Marathon, Χρυσοφόρων Μήδων ἐστόρεσαν δύναμιν,) was also employed to denote the putting down of a rebellion; which latter sense it bears in Plut. Cæs. 25, τὰς ἀποστάσεις κατεστόρησε. Both senses belong to the Latin sterno in Virg. Æn. vi. 858, 'sternet Pœnos Gallumque rebellem:' and so in our poet Dryden we have the expression 'to quell any one's pride,' and in our English divine, Atterbury, the phrase 'to quell seditions;' and again in Milton we have the use of quell'd for conquered. Indeed there is every reason to think that as the Greek στορ. signified originally to lower and smoothen down protuberances on the surface of any thing, so the primary sense of the Ang.-Sax. cwellan (whence our quell) was to put down, bring under: a sense which the word quelle bears in a passage of Chaucer in the Nonnes Preeste's Tale: 'The dockes crieden as men wold hem quelle,' i. e. 'pull down' under water.

ὑπεριδόντες τὴν—ἡσυχίαν] 'contemning, holding cheap our present inactive tranquillity.' So Dio Cass. 622, 20, ὑπερειδὼν αὐτὰ καὶ καταφρονήσας.

5. παρέξουσι· ναυκράτορες] Here I have followed all the recent editors in adopting, instead of vulg. παρέξουσιν· αὐτοκρ., the happy emendation of Valcken., as above: and though there be a certain harshness in thus taking ναυκράτορες Σικελιωτῶν as standing for ναυσὶ κρεισσονες Σικελιωτῶν; yet this may be tolerated as one of those daring though harsh forms of expression spoken of in the introduction to this speech, as characteristic of the individual.

6. Τῶν λόγων must be explained as standing for ἐν τοῖς λόγοις,—unless we may suppose the true reading to be, what I suspect it is, τῷ λόγῳ, 'in, or by, his speech:' a conjecture which derives some support from the similar expression in Plato, p. 416, διαβολὴ διάστασις φίλων λόγῳ. After ἀπραγμοσύνη I have thought proper to place a comma, from the nouns ἀπραγμοσύνη and διάστασις here being in totally separate constructions. The term διάστασις here bears the active sense, to denote separating and disuniting, as in Greg. Naz. i. 197, D, and Dionys.

τῷ δὲ εἰωθότι κόσμῳ, ὥσπερ καὶ οἱ πατέρες ἡμῶν, ἅμα νέοι γεραιτέροις βουλεύοντες, ἐς τάδε ἦραν αὐτά, καὶ νῦν τῷ αὐτῷ τρόπῳ πειρᾶσθε προαγαγεῖν τὴν πόλιν, καὶ νομίσατε νεότητα μὲν καὶ γῆρας ἄνευ ἀλλήλων μηδὲν δύνασθαι, ὁμοῦ δὲ τό τε φαῦλον καὶ τὸ μέσον καὶ τὸ πάνυ ἀκριβὲς ἂν ξυγκραθὲν μάλιστ' ἂν ἰσχύειν· καὶ τὴν

Hal. i. 636, ὃν ἐπὶ διαστάσει τῆς πόλεως ἐξελεγχθέντα. Plut. Coriol. 16, διάστασιν τῆς πόλεως: and such is the use of the simple noun στάσις in Eurip. Andr. 475. Render, 'the setting the young at variance with the elder.' Finally, that the noun should bear this sense, is the less strange, considering that such is the sense of the verb, from whence it is derived, in Aristot. Pol. v. 4, διεστασίασαν αὐτοὺς πρὸς τοὺς εὐπόρους, and frequently in Dionys. Hal. Not that this will suffice to account for the use here of the dative instead of the accus.; which may be best explained, as it is by Dr. Arnold, thus: 'The notion is, that Nicias stood to the young men in the relation of one who was setting them at variance with their elders. And this relation, like others, is expressed by the dative νέοις.' On this dative of reference the reader is referred to Jelf's Kühn. Gr. § 599 & 600.

For ἀποστρέψῃ, Poppo and Goeller, (in his second edition,) taking into consideration the words at ch. 8, ὁ Νικίας ἀποτρέψαι ἐβούλετο, and ch. 19, ἀποτρέψειε, accordingly read ἀποτρέψῃ, referring to the remark of Dorv. on Charit. p. 54, 6, 'ἀποτρέψαι magis suasoriis verbis quam rebus fit.' But though the remark in question be just in itself, it will merely suffice to show the suitableness of ἀποτρέψῃ, but not to prove the unsuitableness of ἀποστρέψῃ. Several instances, indeed, might be adduced tending to evince that ἀποστρέψῃ, while chiefly used of things, is occasionally applied to persons; as Jos. p. 282, 5, ταύτης ἀποστρέψῃ τῆς ὁρμῆς. And that such is the case here, would appear from the circumstance, that all the MSS. without exception present ἀποστρέψῃ (which that Plutarch here read, plainly appears from his words, t. ii. 802, D.). Suffice it to say, then, that there is this distinction between the two words ἀποτρέψῃ and ἀποστρέψῃ, that whereas the former was almost wholly confined to words, the latter was applied chiefly, though not exclusively, to things. Here, however, ἀποστρέψῃ is used with peculiar propriety, as being applied, in opposition to the idea of words, (viz. those of Nicias,) to what may be said to come under the idea of things,—namely, supineness and factious spirit on the part of Nicias.

ἅμα—βουλεύοντες] 'by consulting together, the young with the elderly.' With the expression ἐς τάδε ἦραν αὐτὰ compare supra i. 144, 5, ἐς τάδε προήγαγον αὐτά. With the sentiment, a little after, νομίσατε νεότητα—δύνασθαι, comp. Philostr. Vit. Ap. vi. 30, νεότητος δὲ γήρᾳ ἅμα ἐς τὸ ἄρχειν ἰούσης, τὶς μὲν λύρα, τὶς δὲ αὐλὸς ἡδεῖαν ὧδε ἁρμονίαν καὶ ξυγκεκραμένην ἀείσεται; πρεσβύτερα γὰρ ξυμβήσεται νέοις, ἐξ ὧν καὶ γῆρας ἰσχύσει, καὶ νεότης οὐκ ἀτακτήσει. See also Onosander, § 13 & 18, and Schwebel in loc.

ὁμοῦ δὲ τό τε φαῦλον—ἰσχύειν] Render, 'but that the mean, the mediocre, and the prime judgments, when blended together, would be most effective:' where, Bauer says, there is especial reference to the three ages of man,—the juvenile, the virile, and the senile; thus understanding the term φαῦλον to denote the first of these three stages,—so expressed, he observes, by way of compliment to his elderly auditors. That by τὸ μέσον is denoted the middle-aged, is plain: and similarly in Dio Cass. 616, 25, we find joined ἡ τῆς νεότητος προπέτεια, ἡ τοῦ γήρως ἔκλυσις, and αὐτὸ τὸ μέσον ἑκάστου. Hence may be illustrated a passage of Æschyl. Sept. contra Theb. 10—13, Ὑμᾶς δὲ χρὴ νῦν, καὶ τὸν ἐλλείποντ' ἔτι Ἥβης ἀκμαίας, καὶ τὸν ἔξηβον χρόνῳ, Βλαστημὸν ἁλδαίνοντα σώματος πολὺν, Ὥραν τ' ἔχοντθ', ἕκαστον, ὥστε συμπρεπὲς, Πόλει τ' ἀρήγειν, where we have a poetical designation of the three ages of man. Yet though in the present passage the reference is, strictly speaking, to the three ages, there is an allusion to the position which they may be thought to occupy in the exercise of counsel; a circumstance alluded to in the epithets τὸ φαῦλον, τὸ μέσον, and τὸ πανὺ ἀκριβὲς, meaning the raw, the mature, and the quite consummate judgments: and so iii. 83, οἱ φαυλ. τὴν γνώμην. Ἂν ξυγκραθὲν is equivalent to εἰ ξυγκραθείη, the sense being, 'if blended together, one attempering the other.' So in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Cor. xii. 24, we have, ἀλλ' ὁ Θεὸς συνεκέρασε τὸ σῶμα, 'has so blended together and attempered the members of the body;' and in Plato, p. 50, συγκεκραμένης ἡδονῆς λύπαις: and such is the use of the noun in Eurip. Æol. frag. 6, οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο χωρὶς ἐσθλὰ καὶ κακά· Ἀλλ' ἔστι τις σύγκρασις, ὥστ' ἔχειν καλῶς.

τρίψεσθαι αὐτὴν περὶ αὑτὴν] Literally, 'will wear out, by rubbing itself against itself;' meaning, in other words, 'will grow rusty for want of use.' So, by another metaphor taken from metals, Plut. Fab. Max. ch. 2, αὐτὴν ἐᾷν περὶ αὑτῇ μαραίνεσθαι τὴν ἀκμὴν τοῦ Ἀννίβου, where, for αὐτὴν, read αὐτήν: and Livy, xxxiii. 45, 'marescere (grow torpid) otio civitatem.' With the expression ἐγγηράσεσθαι compare Livy, i. 22, 'senescere civitatem otio,' and a similar elegance in Sallust, Catil. 21, 'illis, annis atque divitiis, omnia consenuerunt.' Of this use of the word as applied to arts and sciences, several examples are found in Menander and Philostr.; and the sentiment has been closely imitated by Maxim. Tyr. in his Diss. xxx., and Procop. 334, 35.

ἀγωνιζομένην δὲ—ἕξειν] 'But by being in active exercise, will perpetually acquire fresh skill; and will have its power of resistance habitual and familiar; and that not in word, but in deed.'

7. παράπαν τε γιγνώσκω] Dr. Arnold is of opinion that παράπαν is analogous to παρὰ πολὺ, and as this signifies 'in a great degree,' so does that altogether. This, however, holds good of the word only as used at the middle or end of a sentence, not, as here, when commencing it. There it bears the sense in universum, 'upon the whole.' Here it cannot but have that sense, because the sentence which it introduces is intended to sum up the whole in one pithy dictum, standing for τὸ σύνολον. Dr. Arnold thinks that 'γιγνώσκω must here bear the sense sententiam fero, otherwise γιγνώσκω δοκεῖν might seem a tautology.' So speaking, however, he forgets that γιγνώσκω δοκεῖν cannot be construed together; and that from the circumstance of (what it is strange he should have failed to perceive) μοι δοκεῖν being an interposed form thrown in for modesty sake, with a separate construction; the complete form of expression being, as Blomf. on Æschyl. Pers. 251, points out, κατὰ τὸ δοκεῖν μοι. It is scarcely necessary to add, that this phrase ἐμοὶ δοκεῖν, as also δοκεῖν ἐμοὶ, is of frequent occurrence in the best writers, especially Herodot. (as i. 172. ii. 77. iii. 45. v. 6, et al.) and is found in Æschyl. Pers. 251. Soph. Elect. 410, in which passages the best editors very properly point off the expression, as I have done.

In ἀπραγμοσύνης μεταβολῇ we have a condensed form of expression to signify, not, indeed, as it is explained by Goeller, 'the change which inactivity produces,'—a sense surely bordering on nonsense,—but rather, 'the change from activity to inactivity,' or, more literally, 'a change in respect to inactivity,' viz. by taking it up instead of the other.

τῶν ἀνθρώπων—πολιτεύωσιν] Various parallel sentiments, found in the most eminent ancient authors, may be seen in my note in Translation.

'might draw them from their opinion or purpose,' compare similar expressions in Antiph. p. 740, γνώμην ἐξ ὀργῆς μεταστήσειν, and a passage of Septuagint in Is. lix. 15, μετέστησαν τὴν διάνοιαν [αὐτῶν] τοῦ συνιέναι. The word αὐτοῖς after παρελθὼν I have inserted within brackets, because it may strongly be suspected to be from the margin, and to have originated in a misreading of the word following, αὖθις. I have not ventured, indeed, with Bekker, to cancel the word, (that being scarcely allowable on the authority of one MS.) but that it is insititious, may reasonably be argued from the little likelihood that both words should have been used by our author: and certainly no ground is there to suspect the genuineness of αὖθις, which has the authority of every good MS. to establish its correctness.

CH. XX. 1. ὡρμημένους στρατεύειν] 'bent on the expedition.' How completely the minds of the Athenians were set on the expedition, appears from the circumstance adverted to by Plutarch in his Life of Nicias, ch. 13, that the young men in the gymnasia, and the old men in the workshops and in the semicircular seat for them at the public assemblies, were seen chalking the outline of the form of Sicily.

ξυνενέγκοι μὲν ταῦτα] 'may these things prosper.' Imitated from hence are the similar words in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1445, ἐπεὶ δὲ ἡ Οὐαλερίου γνώμη νικᾷ, καὶ συνενέγκῃ μὲν ταῦτα ὑμῖν, where, for ἐπεὶ δὲ, read ἐπειδὴ, and, for συνενέγκῃ, συνενέγκοι: and another imitation may be recognised in Jos. Bell. ii. 16, 4.

2. οὔθ' ὑπηκόους ἀλλήλων—μεταβολῆς] Meaning that they were not subject to another, but independent, and therefore not desirous of change.

οὔτε δεομένας μεταβολῆς — ἀρχὴν] 'Bek. legi vult οὐδὲ δεομένας — οὔτ' ἂν τὴν ἀρχὴν, &c., ac sane rectius juxta ponuntur οὔτε ἀλλήλων, οὔτε ἡμῶν ὑπηκόους [προσδεξομένας εἶναι], quam οὔτε ἀλλήλων ὑπηκόους, οὔτε δεομένας μεταβολῆς.' (Goeller.) The general sentiment is, as Poppo remarks, well illustrated by the words at vii. 55, οὐ δυνάμενοι ἐπενεγκεῖν οὔτε ἐκ πολιτείας τι μεταβολῆς τὸ διάφορον αὐτοῖς ᾧ προσήγοντο ἄν. On the two terms μετάστασις and μεταβολή, see note at ii. 48.

προσδεξαμένας] This I have, with Bekker and Arnold, received, on the authority of six good MSS., instead of vulg. προσδεξομένας, which has been retained by Poppo and Goeller; but not on good grounds; this being one of those cases in which internal evidence has peculiar weight, and that is here decidedly in favour of the former, from the greater probability that προσδεξαμένας should have been altered to προσδεξομένας, than the contrary.

3. ὁμοιοτρόπως τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ δυνάμει] 'in a manner very like our own forces.' So Appian, ii. 285, ὁμ. ἐσκευασμένων. Nymphodor. ap. Schol. in Soph. Œd. Col. 337, τὸ μὲν γὰρ—ὁμοτρόπως καὶ ἡμῖν διοικοῦσι.

4. ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς] The Scholiast understands this of public money laid up, according to ancient custom, in the temples. But to that view of the sense Goeller opposes the consideration that we have elsewhere in our author a distinction instituted between τὰ κοινὰ [χρήματα] and τὰ ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς, as vi. 6, 3, et al. Accordingly he would here by the χρήματα—ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς understand the sacred presents and the sacred treasures generally; referring to Wachsm. Ant. ii. 2, p. 367.

ἀπαρχὴ ἐσφέρεται] Several of the best MSS. here have ἀπ' ἀρχῆς φέρεται, which was approved by Duk., and has been edited by Haack and Poppo; but not, I think, on good grounds: for first it lies open to strong objection, as involving a most unpleasant tautology, and, besides this, very harsh ellipsis, namely, that of χρήματα: and the sense thus arising, (the best that can be assigned to ἀπ' ἀρχῆς.) 'from the very beginning of the Syracusan state,' is one which, besides being lame and irrelevant, is absolutely at variance with facts: for it was only at a comparatively recent period that the Syracusans had acquired such power as to compel the barbarians to pay tribute. I must still, then, as formerly, give the decided preference to the common reading, which has been retained by Bekker, Goeller, Dind., and Arnold; and which, I apprehend, Duk. was only led to think of altering, from his not comprehending the exact force of the term here, ἀπαρχὴ, which denotes, as Portus long ago perceived, tribute; so called, we may suppose, from its being at first paid in kind, as a sort of first-fruit; though afterwards commuted for a sum of money, and yet continuing to bear the original name of ἀπαρχή. Hence the term was sometimes used to denote revenue, namely, that arising from such tribute or rent paid. For the above view of the sense, I would observe, no small confirmation may be derived from the following highly apposite passages of Plato de Leg. vii. p. 806, D, γεωργίαι (farms) δὲ ἐκδιδόμεναι ('let out') δούλοις ἀπαρχὴν τῶν ἐκ τῆς γῆς ἀποτελοῦσιν. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 616, 36, γεωργοῦντες ἐπὶ ῥηταῖς τισὶ τεταγμέναις μοίραις, ἃς ἐκ τῶν καρπῶν αὐτοῖς ἐτέλουν: and to this purpose is a passage of the New Testament, Matth. xxi. 41, where see my note. Finally, of ἀπαρχὴ as used in this sense to denote revenue, another example occurs in Jos. Ant. vii. 14, 10, where, on the subject of David's contributions to the building of the temple, it is said, καὶ νῦν δ' ἔτι τῆς ἰδίας ἀπαρχῆς διακόσια [τάλαντα], for there ἀπαρχῆς, which has place in the best MSS. and Epiphanius, and not ἀπ' ἀρχῆς. as edited by Hudson and Havere., may justly be supposed to be the true reading. And as illustrative of this expression τῆς ἰδίας ἀπαρχῆς, which signifies 'his own private revenue,' that reserved to himself when he should give up the crown to his son Solomon, we have only to compare another passage, 1 Chron. xxix. 3, where it is said, 'moreover, I have of mine own proper goods (i. e. private property) given to the house of God 3000 talents of gold.' So also in a passage of Herodot. i. 92, (on the subject of the presents of Crœsus to the temple of Delphi,) τὰ μὲν—ἀνέθηκε, οἰκήϊά τε ἐόντα (meaning 'his own private property') καὶ τῶν πατρῴων χρημάτων ἀπαρχήν.

The view of the sense above propounded has been, I find, unhesitatingly adopted by Bredow, Didot, Arnold, and partially by Goeller: while by Poppo it has been rejected, but on very insufficient grounds. For as to the argument founded on the distinction between φέρειν and ἐσφέρειν, it carries little weight: and even supposing it to present any serious difficulty, we have only to adopt a slight alteration in the reading, by substituting for ἀπαρχὴ ἐσφέρεται, what is found in three MSS., and, as I am enabled to ascertain, formerly had place in the Cod. Clar. ἀπαρχὴ φέρεται; the probable correctness of which reading I have in the text indicated by the interposition of a bracket. And indeed for ἐσφέρεται there is scarcely the existence of a single MS. As to what Poppo urges, that ἀπ' ἀρχῆς φέρεται might more easily be corrupted so as to pass into ἀπαρχὴ ἐσφέρεται, than the latter into the former,—it is any thing but decisive; since supposing ἀπαρχὴ φέρεται to have been originally written, we may account for its being corrupted to ἀπ' ἀρχῆς φέρεται from the circumstance that the term ἀπαρχὴ, as used in the sense 'tribute or revenue,' being of unfrequent occurrence, the scribes would naturally mistake what was written for ἀπ' ἀρχῆς φέρεται, and the first part of the φ would be taken for a C. And so, by a similar inadvertence in Hesych. v. ἀπαρχὴ Χριστὸς, the old reading (very properly emended as above by Alberti) was ἀπαρχῆς Χριστός. Finally, comparing a passage of Dio Cass. p. 1217, 85, evidently written with a view to the present, little less than certain is it that that writer had ἀπαρχὴ φέρεται in his copy, since he has there used the term in the rare sense above mentioned, to denote a payment of money made by way of tributary offering, as follows: ἡμᾶς, ἓν χρυ- οὐκ ἐπακτῷ χρῶνται. XXI. Πρὸς οὖν τοιαύτην δύναμιν οὐ ναυτικῆς καὶ φαύλου στρατιᾶς μόνον δεῖ, ἀλλὰ καὶ πεζὸν πολὺν ξυμπλεῖν, εἴπερ βουλόμεθα ἄξιόν [τι] τῆς διανοίας δρᾶν, καὶ μὴ ὑπὸ ἱππέων πολλῶν ἔργεσθαι τῆς γῆς· ἄλλως τε καὶ ‡ εἰ ξυστῶσιν αἱ πόλεις φοβηθεῖσαι, καὶ μὴ ἀντιπαράσχωσιν ἡμῖν φίλοι τινὲς γενόμενοι ἄλλοι ἢ Ἐγεσταῖοι, ᾧ ἀμυνούμεθα ἱππικόν. 2. αἰσχρὸν δὲ βιασθέντας ἀπελθεῖν, ἢ ὕστερον ἐπιμεταπέμπεσθαι, τὸ πρῶτον ἀσκέπτως βουλευσαμένους· αὐτόθεν δὲ παρασκευῇ ἀξιόχρεῳ ἐπιέναι, γνόντας ὅτι πολύ τε ἀπὸ τῆς ἠμετέρας αὐτῶν μέλλομεν πλεῖν, καὶ οὐκ ἐν τῷ ὁμοίῳ στρατευσάμενοι, † καὶ [οὐκ] ἐν τοῖς τῇδε ὑπηκόοις ξυμ-σοῦς ἕκαστον, ὥσπερ τινὰ ἀπαρχήν, κατ' ἔτος ἐκέλευσέν οἱ ἀποφέρειν.

ἵππους — χρῶνται] These words are meant to intimate the great advantage which the Siceliots would have over their Athenian invaders, inasmuch as horses, for mounting the cavalry, they had in the island, and did not need to bring over sea, as must the Athenians; and corn they had in plenty of their own growth, and not needing to be imported, as was the case with Attica, from foreign countries. See Wachsmuth's Ant. Gr. vol. ii. 1, p. 85 & 88, and Boeckh's Publ. Œcon. of Ath. i. p. 84. Ἐπακτῷ, 'imported.' So Alciphr. i. 24, ἐπακτοὺς πυρούς, and Dem. de Cor. § 87, σίτῳ—ἐπεισακτῷ.

Ch. XXI. 1. φαύλου στρατιᾶς] 'a slender army.' So Xen. Hist. v. 3, 8, φαύλην—δύναμιν. I have not ventured, with Bekker and Poppo, to cancel the τι after ἄξιον, because, though it has no place in most of the best MSS., it is found in two parallel passages, at ii. 89, and vii. 38. Yet so decidedly is it opposed by internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance of its being far easier to account for the addition than the removal of the word, that I have bracketed it; and since it has been proved by Fritzch, Quæst. Lucian. p. 95, (referred to by Poppo,) that ἄξιον without τι would be good Greek, and that τι has elsewhere been introduced after a neuter adjective, (see iv. 50, 2.) I should have cancelled it, were it not that a τι so pregnant in meaning (standing for τι πρᾶγμα, 'some achievement') could not well be left understood. And considering the near resemblance in MS. abbreviations between τι and τῆς, it is not improbable that the latter, seeming a mere repetition of the former, was omitted. The scribes would be more likely to miss than to perceive the force of the article here, which, as in several other passages of our author, stands for the possessive pronoun.

Ἔργεσθαι τῆς γῆς is not well explained, as it has generally been, 'to be hindered from effecting a debarkation on the land;' for certainly the Sicilian horse could not prevent a landing at some point of so extensive an island; or at least the debarkation might be made at Egesta. The sense is rather, 'to be excluded from the country at large, by being hemmed in and confined to their camp;' as was, in fact, afterwards the case. So vii. 11, 4, ξυμβέβηκε πολιορκεῖν δοκοῦντας ἡμᾶς ἄλλους αὐτοὺς μᾶλλον, ὅσα γε κατὰ γῆν, τοῦτο πάσχειν· οὐδὲ γὰρ τῆς χώρας ἐπὶ πολὺ διὰ τοὺς ἱππέας ἐξερχόμεθα. Compare also iii. 86, τῆς τε γῆς εἴργοντο καὶ τῆς θαλάσσης. Xen. Hist. i. 1, 35, Ἀθηναίους εἴργειν τῆς γῆς (i. e. exclude them from the use of the country of Attica by besieging Athens). Arrian, E. A. ii. 1, 6, τῆς γῆς εἰργόμενοι, and iv. 27, 13, εἴργοντο τῆς χώρας. Dio Cass. 512, 78, τῆς ἠπείρου εἰργόμενος.

For εἰ before ξυστῶσιν five MSS. have ἤν, which is regarded as the true reading by Poppo, and has been received into the text by Goeller. I have chosen, with Bekker and Arnold, to retain the εἰ, because the authority of all the MSS., except a few of the least valuable, requires this; and moreover, the actual occurrence, however rare, of an idiom in one or two Attic writers, tends to establish the possibility of its existence in another. Finally, the very rationale of the thing (as regards the essential difference between εἰ and ἤν) serves to show that it is not a solecism.

ἀντιπαράσχωσιν] Of this word, which is exceedingly rare, I have found only two examples elsewhere, Phalar. Epist., and Leonid. Alex. p. 34. The import of the term is represented by Dukas thus: ἐξ ἐναντίας δῶσιν ἡμῖν ἱππικὸν κατὰ τῶν ἱππέων τῶν κωλυσόντων ἡμᾶς ἀποβαίνειν καὶ ληΐζεσθαι τὴν ἐκείνων γῆν.

2. ἐπιμεταπέμπεσθαι] 'to send over for fresh forces.' The οὐκ just after I have thought proper to bracket, because Herm., Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker are agreed μαχοι ἦλθετε ἐπί τινα,—ὅθεν ῥᾴδιαι αἱ κομιδαὶ ἐκ τῆς φιλίας ὧν προσέδει,—ἀλλ' ἐς ἀλλοτρίαν πᾶσαν ἀπαρτήσαντες, ἐξ ἧς μηthat it can have no place here, and had no existence in the Scholiast's copy. Still the καὶ οὐ cannot be right; and for this the true reading is, I doubt not, (what Goeller and Didot have edited from conjecture,) καὶ εἰ; according to which the sense will be, as Goeller renders, 'non eadem conditione bellum geremus, quâ in terris nobis subjectis hic auxilio venistis contra aliquem.' How easily εἰ and οὐ may be and have been confounded, has, he adds, been fully shown by Bast. Palæogr. p. 760. Yet, I would observe, no case of this kind of confusion can be in point, except one in which, as in the present instance, a καὶ precedes: hence I am rather inclined to think that the tail of the κ having, in the course of time, faded in some very ancient archetype, the εἰ following was united with κ, and was taken for καί. For the introduction of the οὐκ we may best account by supposing that the οὐκ just before having been accidentally omitted, was afterwards noted in the margin, and in the transcript was brought in after the latter καὶ instead of the former; and that afterwards the mistake was rectified by the insertion of the οὐκ in the right place, though it was omitted to be cancelled in the wrong.

ἀλλ' ἐς ἀλλοτρίαν πᾶσαν ἀπαρτήσαντες] Of these words the sense is far from clear, and has been much disputed. Almost all translators and expositors take ἀπαρτήσαντες to signify profecti: but of the term in this acceptation examples are utterly wanting; and no wonder; for how ἀπαρτᾶν, which signifies suspendere ex, can ever come to mean proficisci ex, I am quite unable to comprehend. Accordingly, supposing the signification in question to be absolutely required by the context, we must then suppose the existence of some corruption: and, in that case, I should be inclined to adopt the conjecture of Poppo, ἀπάραντες. But the above signification is, in reality, far from being necessary; and the present reading is susceptible of a sense highly suitable to the context, and far more significant in itself, than the other, namely, 'depending upon:' a sense which the term is well adapted to bear, if we suppose that, like our verb to hang, it has a neuter, or passive, as well as an active, sense; and thus will signify 'depending or dependent on.' Such is the explanation of the term propounded in my smaller edition of our author; and this view of the sense has, I find, been followed by Goeller, who, in his second edition, explains, 'with one's subsistence thrown upon and dependent on a foreign land.' Finally, in proof of this signification, I am enabled to adduce the following passages: Plut. vi. p. 401 (Reiske), ἀπηρτημένος τούτοις (equivalent to ἐς τούτους) ὁ κωμικὸς, 'dependent on those [for support];' and especially Dio Cass. p. 234, 14, (a passage evidently formed on the one before us,) where it is given as a reason why the Parthians cannot maintain any continued or regular war with any of the neighbouring nations,—namely, that καὶ ἐς ἀλλοτριωτάτην σφισι καὶ τῆς γῆς καὶ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ κατάστασιν ἀπαρτῶνται, καὶ μήτε σίτου μήτε μισθοφόρου σκεύη ποιούμενοι: a passage justly pronounced by Reimar totally corrupt, but which is not to be emended (as he thought it might) by expunging the καὶ before μήτε. Indeed, to remove the word is to part with an important clue to the truth; since καὶ ποιούμενοι will be found to require a participle in the preceding clause. We have only, for ἀπαρτῶνται, to read (what the evident imitation of this passage of Thucydides tends to show must have been originally written by Dio Cass.) ἀπαρτῶντες, and all will be right. Participles, and not verbs, are required in each of the two clauses, because a reason is there given why the Parthians could not maintain any continued foreign war. Such being the case, the καὶ before ἐς ἀλλοτριωτάτην is worse than useless, having, we may suppose, crept in from ignorance of the construction. It only remains to observe, that the term κατάστασιν in the same passage signifies constitutionem, indolem; and for μισθοφόρου, which is manifestly corrupt, ought to be read μισθοφόρων, according to which the sense will be, 'the paid troops,' or 'regular soldiers.'

As tending no little to confirm the sense above laid down in the present passage, I would notice the occurrence of the words which follow a little further on in the next chapter, namely, ἵνα ἔχῃ ἡ στρατιὰ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια· τά τε ἄλλα—ἑτοιμάσασθαι καὶ μὴ ἐπὶ ἑτέροις γίγνεσθαι, 'to be dependent on others [for support].'

I have followed Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker in adopting στρατευσάμενοι (for vulg. στρατευσόμενοι) in the former part of the passage, and ἀπαρτήσαντες in the part under present consideration, because while consistency requires the same tense in both, the authority of MSS. and internal evidence alike preponderate in favour of νῶν οὐδὲ τεσσάρων τῶν χειμερινῶν ἄγγελον ῥᾴδιον ἐλθεῖν. XXII. Ὁπλίτας τε οὖν πολλούς μοι δοκεῖ χρῆναι ἡμᾶς ἄγειν, καὶ ἡμῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων, τῶν τε ὑπηκόων καὶ ἤν τινα ἐκ Πελοποννήσου δυνώμεθα ἢ πεῖσαι, ἢ μισθῷ προσαγαγέσθαι, καὶ τοξότας πολλοὺς καὶ σφενδονήτας, ὅπως πρὸς τὸ ἐκείνων ἱππικὸν ἀντέχωσι, ναυσί τε καὶ πολὺ περιεῖναι, ἵνα καὶ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια ῥᾷον ἐσκομιζώμεθα· τὸν δὲ καὶ αὐτόθεν σῖτον ἐν ὀλκάσι, πυροὺς καὶ πεφρυγμένας κριθάς, ἄγειν, καὶ σιτοποιοὺς ἐκ τῶν μυλώνων πρὸς μέρος ἠναγκασμένους ἐμμίσθους, ἵνα, ἤν που ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας ἀπολαμβανώμεθα, ἔχῃ ἡ στρατιὰ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια (πολλὴ γὰρ οὖσα οὐ πάσης ἔσται πόλεως ὑποδέξασθαι)· τά τε ἄλλα ὅσον δυνατὸν ἑτοι-

the aorist, which is here perfectly proper and correct, considering that it has (as Herm. points out) the force of the futurum exactum, on which see Jelf's Kühn. Gr. § 407, 1.

μηνῶν τεσσάρων τῶν χειμερινῶν] This division of time (with which comp. Hdot. ii. 68, τοὺς χειμεριωτάτους μῆνας τέσσερας) accords with the usual mode of reckoning the year adopted among the ancients; who used to give four months out of the twelve to each of the two seasons Summer and Winter, and the other four to Spring and Autumn. So Eurip. incert. frag. cxliii. θέρους τε χειμῶνός τε μῆνας τέσσαρας.

Ch. XXII. 1. τῶν ξυμμάχων, τῶν τε ὑπηκόων καὶ ἤν τινα, &c.] Verte: 'sociis, sive ex iis qui, &c. sive quem alium.' Vide ch. 43 and 63, fin. vii. 20 and 57. (Dobree.)

By τινα ἐκ Πελοποννήσου are doubtless meant (as Dukas points out) the Mantineans, or the Argives (see ch. 29, 43); and by μισθῷ δὲ ἄλλους, the Arcadians. By the expression τὸν αὐτόθεν σῖτον is denoted, (as Poppo explains it,) 'id frumentum, quod hic suppetit; tantum frumenti, quantum hic ad usum bellicum paratum est.'

σιτοποιοὺς ἐκ τῶν μυλώνων—ἐμμίσθους] Render, 'bread-makers impressed, in a certain proportion, from the millers' shops.' The bakers are said to be ἠναγκασμένοι ἔμμισθοι, because, (as I pointed out in my smaller edition,) though obliged to serve, they received pay; a case similar to that of our impressed sailors, and, in former times, of persons impressed for public works which required to be accomplished speedily.

Of πρὸς μέρος the sense is, as Duk. explains it, 'pro rata portione;' not meaning, however, (as Abresch and Bauer understand,) of corn, but of workmen employed in the mills. Agreeably to this view of the sense, Dobree renders, 'pro servorum apud quemque numero;' adducing examples of this signification of πρὸς μέρος from Demosth. p. 1018 & 954.

ὑπὸ ἀπλοίας ἀπολαμβανώμεθα] 'if we be detained by any thing which prevents navigation,' as calms, (see note on ii. 85, fin.) or rough weather. So Jos. Ant. xvi. 2, 2, ἐκεῖ δὲ αὐτὸν ἀπολαμβάνει ('detains') πνεῦμα βόρειον.

In the words, a little after, πολλὴ γὰρ οὖσα, we have, not the occurrence of an antiptosis, nor the use of nomin. for genit., but the word αὐτὴν may be supplied after ὑποδέξασθαι. The construction will appear from Bauer's version, 'multus quum sit, non erit cujusvis urbis ad recipiendum.' For examples of which use of εἶναι in the sense 'to be able,' see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 316, 6, where he, perhaps rightly, supposes a sort of grammatical attraction, by which the verb is referred to στρατιὰ as its subject, instead of belonging to πολλὴν οὖσαν—ὑποδέξασθαι, as in a passage of Soph. Œd. Tyr. 393, καίτοι τό γ' αἴνιγμ' οὐχὶ τουπιόντος ἦν ἀνδρὸς διειπεῖν, where render, 'And yet the enigma was not a riddle for the first comer to solve.'

Of ὑποδέχεσθαι the sense might be either recipere or excipere. Poppo adopts the former; Portus the latter view. Perhaps the true sense intended may be, 'to find it port-room,' implying also the supply of τὰ ἐπιτήδεια. That the word was sometimes used in that sense, may fairly be inferred from its use in a strikingly similar passage of Herodot. vii. 49, where it is said of the fleet of Xerxes, οὔτε γὰρ τῆς θαλάσσης ἐστὶ λιμὴν τοσοῦτος—ὅστις—δεξάμενός σευ τοῦτο τὸ ναυτικὸν, φερέγγυος ἔσται διασῶσαι τὰς νέας. Οὐκ ὦν δὴ ἐόντων τοι λιμένων ὑποδεξίων, &c. Finally, strong confirmation is derived to this view of the sense from what we μάσασθαι, καὶ μὴ ἐπὶ ἑτέροις γίγνεσθαι, μάλιστα δὲ χρήματα αὐτόθεν ὡς πλεῖστα ἔχειν. τὰ δὲ παρ' Ἐγεσταίων, ἃ λέγεται ἐκεῖ ἑτοῖμα, νομίσατε καὶ λόγῳ ἂν μάλιστα ἑτοῖμα εἶναι. XXIII. Ἦν γὰρ αὐτοὶ ἔλθωμεν ἐνθένδε μὴ ἀντίπαλον μόνον παρασκευασάμενοι, (πλήν γε πρὸς τὸ μάχιμον αὐτῶν τὸ ὁπλιτικὸν,) ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑπερβάλλοντες τοῖς πᾶσι, μόλις οὕτως οἷοί τε ἐσόμεθα τῶν μὲν κρατεῖν, τὰ δὲ καὶ διασῶσαι. 2. πόλιν τε νομίσαι χρὴ ἐν ἀλλοφύλοις καὶ πολεμίοις οἰκιοῦντας ἰέναι· οὓς πρέπει τῇ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ, ᾗ ἂν κατάσχωσιν, εὐθὺς κρατεῖν τῆς γῆς, ἢ εἰδέναι ὅτι, ἢν σφάλλωνται, πάντα πολέμια ἕξουσιν. 3. ὅπερ ἐγὼ φοβούμενος, καὶ εἰδὼς πολλὰ μὲν ἡμᾶς δέον βουλεύσασθαι, ἔτι δὲ πλείω εὐτυχῆσαι (χαλεπὸν δὲ ἀνθρώπους ὄντας), ὅτι ἐλάχιστα τῇ τύχῃ παραδοὺς ἐμαυτὸν βούλομαι ἐκπλεῖν, παρασκευῇ δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν εἰκότων ἀσφαλὴς ἐκπλεῦσαι. 4. ταῦτα γὰρ τῇ τε ξυμπάσῃ πόλει βεβαιότατα are told at ch. 42, as to the measures taken by the Athenian generals to avoid this very evil: τρία μέρη νείμαντες ἓν ἑκάστῳ ἐκλῆρωσαν, ἵνα μήτε ἅμα πλέοντες ἀπορῶσιν ὕδατος καὶ λιμένων καὶ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἐν ταῖς καταγωγαῖς: meaning, 'port-room, and supplies of water and provisions at the places where the ships were drawn on shore.'

Ch. XXIII. 1. ἦν γὰρ αὐτοὶ — διασῶσαι] The full sense is, ['And all this will be no more than necessary;] for if we go hence provided, I do not say with a force of equal match,—except, indeed, against their warlike heavy infantry,—but in all points on a footing of superiority,—even thus we shall with difficulty subdue that country, or even save this.' The above view of the sense of πλήν γε (propounded in my smaller edition) has since, I find, been adopted by Haack and Poppo, and is supported by the opinion of Dukas as follows: ἐξαιρεῖν ἔοικε τούτοις τὸ πρὸς τὸ ὁπλιτικὸν ἐκείνων ἀντίπαλον εἶναι τὴν δύναμιν· πολλοὶ γὰρ ἦσαν τῇ Σικελίᾳ ὁπλῖται, καὶ Ἀθήνηθεν ἔχειν ἀντίπαλον δύναμιν ὁπλιτικὴν ἀδύνατον ἦν. Ἀντίπαλον stands (as Poppo points out) for ἀντίπαλόν τι: an elliptical expression observable also at ch. 21, and for which at i. 3, we have the complete one. In τὸ μάχιμον αὐτῶν τὸ ὁπλιτικὸν the article is not pleonastic, but the second τὸ is in apposition, for the purpose of further definition; τὸ μάχιμον meaning 'the force fit for service,' as distinguished from the camp-followers: (Hdot. vii. 186. ii. 165. Xen. v. 4, 46. Lucian, iii. 270. Plato, p. 25 and 310.) and τὸ ὁπλιτικὸν (scil. σύστημα) signifies 'the heavy-armed force.' Compare infra ch. 72. Arrian, E. A. ii. 8, 9. Plato, p. 191. Dio Cass. 176, 71.

2. οἰκιοῦντας] So I have thought proper to edit, with Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, instead of vulg. οἰκειοῦντας: for though the former has but slender support from the authority of MSS. (to which add Cant. and Clar. a pr. manu,) it is strongly borne out by internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance, that πόλιν οἰκίζειν is of frequent occurrence in the best writers, (as Xen. Mem. i. 1, 7, and Anab. v. 6, 8. Arrian, E. A. iv. 1, 3. Plato, p. 470.) while πόλιν οἰκειοῦντες, though found at iii. 65, and elsewhere, admits of no sense suitable to the present purpose. Οἰκιοῦντας is, as Goeller points out, for ὡς οἰκιοῦντες, which occurs supra i. 100.

κρατεῖν τῆς γῆς] 'to be masters of the field.' With the words following, ἢν σφάλλωνται—ἕξουσιν, comp. Xen. Anab. iii. 2, 28, κρατουμένων μὲν γὰρ ἐπίστασθε ὅτι πάντα ἀλλότριά ἐστιν.

3. I have thought proper, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, to cancel the εὖ before βουλεύσασθαι found in some MSS., not so much from the deficiency of external evidence for it, as from the existence of internal evidence against it.

χαλεπὸν — ὄντας] i. e. χαλεπὸν δὲ ἡμᾶς ἀνθρώπους ὄντας εὐτυχῆσαι πολλά. (Hudson.) So in a passage of Lucian de Lapsu we have, χαλεπὸν μέν, ἄνθρωπον ὄντα, scil. πράσσειν. The phrase, a little after, ἀπὸ τῶν εἰκότων, must of course connect with ἀσφαλής. With respect to ἐκπλεῦσαι, this, from the tautology which it appears to involve, has been by Krueger ἡγοῦμαι, καὶ ἡμῖν τοῖς στρατευσομένοις σωτήρια. εἰ δέ τῳ ἄλλως δοκεῖ, παρίημι αὐτῷ τὴν ἀρχήν."

XXIV. Ὁ μὲν Νικίας τοσαῦτα εἶπε, νομίζων τοὺς Ἀθηναίους τῷ πλήθει τῶν πραγμάτων ἢ ἀποτρέψειν, ἢ, εἰ ἀναγκάζοιτο στρατεύεσθαι, μάλιστα οὕτως ἀσφαλῶς ἐκπλεῦσαι. 2. οἱ δὲ τὸ μὲν ἐπιθυμοῦν τοῦ πλοῦ οὐκ ἐξῃρέθησαν ὑπὸ τοῦ ὀχλώδους τῆς παρασκευῆς, πολὺ δὲ μᾶλλον ὥρμηντο. καὶ τοὐναντίον περιέστη αὐτῷ· εὖ τε γὰρ παραινέσαι ἔδοξε, καὶ ἀσφάλεια νῦν δὴ καὶ πολλὴ ἔσεσθαι. 3. καὶ ἔρως ἐνέπεσε τοῖς πᾶσιν ὁμοίως ἐκπλεῦσαι· τοῖς μὲν γὰρ πρεσβυτέροις, ὡς ἢ καταστρεψομένοις ἐφ' ἃ ἔπλεον, ἢ οὐδὲν ἂν σφαλεῖσαν μεγάλην δύναμιν· τοῖς δ' ἐν τῇ ἡλικίᾳ τῆς τε ἀπούσης πόθῳ ὄψεως regarded as not genuine. But, considering that all the MSS. have it, and that its not being expressed in Valla's version is by no means sufficient to prove it had no place in that translator's copy,—it is uncritical to think of excluding the word. Nor am I, indeed, quite sure that there is, after all, any absolute tautology. Βούλομαι may be supposed to belong alike to both of the two members, ὅτι ἐλάχιστα—ἐκπλεῖν and παρασκευῇ—ἐκπλεῦσαι, though not, perhaps, as understood in quite the same sense. In the first, the meaning intended being, 'My wish is to sail hence, committing myself as little as possible to fortune:' in the second it would seem to be as follows: 'Moreover, my intention is to sail hence secure, according to probabilities, in my preparations.' Now this change of sense, it will be observed, rendered a change of tense necessary; since βούλεσθαι in the sense to intend, requires properly the aorist, as said of what is future, according to the general usage of the best writers, and of which, besides the classical, instances present themselves in the scriptural writers, e. g. Matth. i. 19, ἐβουλήθη — ἀπολῦσαι αὐτήν.

4. ταῦτα] Meaning the measures above proposed. Εἰ δέ τῳ—τὴν ἀρχήν. Comp. Xen. Anab. v. 7, 10, παρίημι (scil. τὴν ἀρχήν), ἀρχέτω. Herodot. vii. 161, οὐδενὶ παρήσομεν ναυαρχέειν. Nicias here acted just as he had before done in the case of Cleon, iv. 28.

CH. XXIV. 1. μάλιστα] Bekker and Dobree would read μάλιστ' ἄν, but it is observable that the ἄν is sometimes omitted, even when the thing reckoned on, expected, &c., does, as here, depend on a condition. So iv. 24, we have, εἰ γὰρ κρατήσειαν—ἤλπιζον—χειρώσασθαι. Yet, so easily might the ἄν have been lost after μάλιστα, that it was very probably written by our author.

2. τὸ ἐπιθυμοῦν] for τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, as τὸ λυποῦν, ii. 62, for τὴν λύπην. On the use of the accus. here, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 424, 1. Τοῦ ὀχλώδους, 'the burdensomeness.' Of this word (which is extremely rare) the only examples that I have met with elsewhere are in Plato, p. 590, and Plut. viii. 767. Ὀχληρὸς is the more usual term. At τοὐναντίον supply πρᾶγμα; the meaning being, that 'the business took a turn the contrary to what he expected.' In this sense, to signify mutari, περιϊστ. occurs supra i. 32, et al. sæpe. Νῦν δή, jam nunc, or nunc demum, as in Xen. Cyr. iv. 1, 23. vii. 5, 53.

3. καὶ ἔρως ἐνέπεσε — δύναμιν] Withdrawing the variation of construction here adopted, the passage would stand thus: καὶ ἔρως ἐνέπεσε τοῖς πᾶσιν ὁμοίως ἐκπλεῦσαι· τοῖς μὲν γὰρ πρεσβυτέροις ἐνέπεσεν, ὡς ἢ καταστρεψομένοις, ἐφ' ἃ ἔπλεον, ἢ οὐδὲν ἂν σφαλεῖσι μεγάλῃ δυνάμει: for which last words we have the accus. ἢ οὐδὲν ἂν σφαλεῖσαν μεγάλην δύναμιν. Again, for the next words, τοῖς δ' ἐν τῇ ἡλικίᾳ—ἐν τῷ παρόντι, &c., strict grammatical propriety would rather have required τοῖς δ' ἐν τῇ ἡλικίᾳ τῆς τε ἀπούσης πόθῳ ὄψεως καὶ θεωρίας, καὶ ἐλπίδι σωθήσεσθαι· ὁ δὲ πολὺς ὅμιλος καὶ στρατιώτης ἤλπισαν ἔν τε τῷ παρόντι, &c. But our author has employed the nominatives, εὐέλπιδες ὄντες and ὁ πολὺς ὅμιλος, from the expression ἔρως ἐνέπεσε being equivalent in sense to ἐπεθύμουν. See Matth. Gr. § 537. (Goell.) Ἔπλεον. Render, 'they were going to sail.' See i. 134, 1.

τῆς ἀπούσης πόθῳ ὄψεως καὶ θεωρίας] 'by the desire of seeing and knowing about a far-off country.' Θεωρίας, as the Schol. points out, stands for ἱστορίας, investigation; and the nouns ὄψεως and ἱστ. are put for their correspondent verbs. So the Scholiast explains by ἰδεῖν καὶ ἱστορῆσαι.

καὶ θεωρίας, καὶ εὐέλπιδες ὄντες σωθήσεσθαι· ὁ δὲ πολὺς ὅμιλος καὶ στρατιώτης, ἔν τε τῷ παρόντι ἀργύριον οἴσειν, καὶ προσκτήσασθαι δύναμιν, ὅθεν ἀίδιον μισθοφορὰν ὑπάρξειν. 4. ὥστε, διὰ τὴν ἄγαν τῶν πλειόνων ἐπιθυμίαν, εἴ τῳ ἄρα καὶ μὴ ἤρεσκε, δεδιὼς μὴ, ἀντιχειροτονῶν, κακόνους δόξειεν εἶναι τῇ πόλει, ἡσυχίαν ἦγε.

XXV. Καὶ τέλος παρελθών τις τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ παρακαλέσας τὸν Νικίαν, οὐκ ἔφη χρῆναι προφασίζεσθαι, οὐδὲ διαμέλλειν, ἀλλ' ἐναντίον ἁπάντων ἤδη λέγειν ἥντινα αὐτῷ παρασκευὴν Ἀθηναῖοι ψηφίσωνται. 2. ὁ δὲ, ἄκων μὲν, εἶπεν ὅτι καὶ μετὰ τῶν ξυναρχόντων καθ' ἡσυχίαν μᾶλλον βουλεύσοιτο· ὅσα μέντοι ἤδη δοκεῖν αὐτῷ, τριήρεσι μὲν οὐκ ἔλασσον ἢ ἑκατὸν πλευστέα εἶναι· (αὐτῶν δ' Ἀθηναίων ἔσεσθαι ὁπλιταγωγοὺς ὅσοι ἂν δοκῶσι· καὶ ἄλλας ἐκ τῶν ξυμμάχων μεταπεμπτέας εἶναι·) ὁπλίταις δὲ τοῖς ξύμπασιν Ἀθηναίων καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων πεντακισχιλίων μὲν οὐκ ἐλάσσοσιν, ἢν δέ τι δύνωνται, καὶ πλείοσι· τὴν δὲ ἄλλην παρασκευὴν ὡς κατὰ λόγον, καὶ τοξοτῶν τῶν αὐτόθεν καὶ ἐκ Κρήτης, καὶ σφενδονητῶν, καὶ ἤν τι ἄλλο πρέπον δοκῇ εἶναι, ἑτοιμασάμενοι ἄξειν.

XXVI. Ἀκούσαντες δ' οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐψηφίσαντο εὐθὺς αὐτοκράτορας εἶναι καὶ περὶ στρατιᾶς πλήθους καὶ περὶ τοῦ παντὸς πλοῦ τοὺς στρατηγοὺς πράσσειν ᾗ ἂν αὐτοῖς δοκῇ ἄριστα εἶναι Ἀθηναίοις. 2. καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἡ παρασκευὴ ἐγίγνετο, καὶ ἐς τε τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἔπεμπον, καὶ αὐτόθεν καταλόγους ἐποιοῦντο. ἄρτι δ' ἀνειλήφει ἡ πόλις ἑαυτὴν ἀπὸ τῆς νόσου καὶ τοῦ ξυνεχοῦς πολέμου, ἔς τε ἡλικίας πλῆθος ἐπιγεγενημένης, καὶ ἐς χρημάτων ἄθροισιν, διὰ τὴν ἐκεχειρίαν, ὥστε ῥᾷον πάντα ἐπορίζετο. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐν παρασκευῇ ἦσαν.

XXVII. Ἐν δὲ τούτῳ, ὅσοι Ἑρμαῖ ἦσαν λίθινοι ἐν τῇ πόλει τῇ

CH. XXV. 1. τις] Meaning, as we learn from Plut. Nic. 12, Demosthenes; the same who (as we find from Plut. Nic. 13) proposed the motion that Nicias and Alcibiades should have the command.

2. ἄκων μὲν εἶπε] Here, as Poppo points out, we have a brief form of expression for ἄκων μὲν εἶπεν, εἶπε δέ. Comp. Plut. Nic. 13, ὁ δὲ Νικίας ἄκων μὲν ᾑρέθη στρατηγός. In such a case, μὲν may well be rendered by our indeed, or although; and the words are better pointed off by commas. With the expression, a little after, ὅσα—δοκεῖν αὐτῷ, compare ὅσον γέ μ' εἰδέναι in Aristoph. Nub. 1254; the ὅσον in such cases standing for ὡς, (as in various passages adduced in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 545.) except that ὅσον or ὅσα has more of the limitative force than ὡς; the sense being, 'in so far as [it is possible] for me to know.' At ἑτοιμασάμενοι ἄξειν the word ἔφη is left understood; and hence the use of the nominative where one might have expected the accusative. On this sort of transition from the singular to the plural, (though in the latter the speaker includes himself,) which is such as not unfrequently may be observed in cases where the subject treated of is that of a general and his colleagues; see Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, p. 96.

Ἀθηναίων, (εἰσὶ δὲ,—κατὰ τὸ ἐπιχώριον ἡ τετράγωνος ἐργασία,—πολλοὶ καὶ ἐν ἰδίοις προθύροις καὶ ἐν ἱεροῖς,) μιᾷ νυκτὶ οἱ πλεῖστοι περιεκόπησαν τὰ πρόσωπα. 2. καὶ τοὺς δράσαντας ᾔδει οὐδείς, ἀλλὰ μεγάλοις μηνύτροις δημοσίᾳ οὗτοί τε ἐζητοῦντο, καὶ προσέτι ἐψηφίσαντο, καὶ εἴ τις ἄλλο τι οἶδεν ἀσέβημα γεγενημένον, μηνύειν ἀδεῶς τὸν βουλόμενον καὶ ἀστῶν καὶ ξένων καὶ δούλων. 3. καὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα μειζόνως ἐλάμβανον· τοῦ τε γὰρ ἔκπλου οἰωνὸς ἐδόκει εἶναι, καὶ ἐπὶ ξυνωμοσίᾳ ἅμα νεωτέρων πραγμάτων καὶ δήμου καταλύσεως γεγενῆσθαι. XXVIII. Μηνύεται οὖν ἀπὸ μετοίκων τέ τινων καὶ ἀκολούθων περὶ μὲν τῶν Ἑρμῶν οὐδέν, ἄλλων δὲ ἀγαλμάτων περικοπαί τινες πρότερον ὑπὸ νεωτέρων μετὰ παιδιᾶς καὶ οἴνου γεγενημέναι, καὶ τὰ μυστήρια ἅμα ὡς ποιεῖται ἐν οἰκίαις ἐφ' ὕβρει·

Ch. XXVII. 1. εἰσὶ δὲ—ἱεροῖς] I have so pointed, as the sense requires. These Hermæ were busts (or sometimes half-length figures) of Mercury; the side parts from the shoulders downward being squared off, and flat at bottom, so as to admit of being placed on a level surface; though they were sometimes mounted on a pedestal. Their form may be seen stated at large in Winckelman, History of the Arts among the Ancients, vol. i. p. 6. cap. i. § 9, 10. Frequent mention of them is made by Pausanias, who uniformly speaks of them as τετράγωνοι, and at iv. 33, 11, informs us that they were much in use among the Athenians; a circumstance which will serve to account for the expression κατὰ τὸ ἐπιχώριον, 'according to their country custom.'

περιεκόπησαν τὰ πρόσωπα] 'were maltreated (literally, hacked around) on their faces.' In other accounts of the transaction (as those of Aristophanes, Pausanias, &c.) is added the circumstance, probably a not unfounded one, (as appears from what we read in Herodot. ii. 51. Plutarch, and other writers,) καὶ τὰ αἰδοῖα. No mention, indeed, of this is made by our author, because such was not necessary in a statement of facts, like the present, brief and general, rather than circumstantial and particular.

3. μειζόνως ἐλάμβανον] indignius quam pro re capiebant, 'took it in too serious a light.' Of this very rare expression the only examples I have noted elsewhere are, Jos. Ant. xvi. 3, 2, τό τε μέλλον—μεῖζον ὑπελάμβανον. Chrysost. t. iv. p. 891, μειζόνως ἐποιοῦντο τὰς κατηγορίας. And such is the sense (namely, 'magis quam par est') that μειζόνως bears in Herodot. vi. 84, ὁμιλέειν σφι μειζόνως διεθρόησαν. Thus the expression is no other than equivalent to that occurring in the following chapter, ἐμεγάλυνον, scil. τὸ πρᾶγμα: and answering to this is what we read in Plut. Alc. ὀργῇ τὸ γεγονὸς λαμβάνοντες.

ἔκπλου οἰωνὸς εἶναι] 'to be a bad omen of the expedition,' i. e. 'of its termination, so as to be ominous [for evil].' Hence are we best enabled to account for the perpetration of the deed itself, which may with great probability be supposed to have been accomplished by the contrivance of the aristocratical party, in order, by the superstitious apprehension excited by an occurrence so ominous, to delay the undertaking of an expedition which they so little approved. Besides the present, there occurred, as appears from Plut. Nic. p. 18, various other circumstances, regarded as equally ominous and unpromising.

Ch. XXVIII. 1. ἀκολούθων] pedissequos, 'body-attendants.' Such is the use of the term in Xen. Mem. i. 7, 2. iii. 13, 4, and other writers.

οἰκίαις] By Andocides, Isocrates, Plutarch, and Pausanias, the thing is stated to have been done in one house, viz. that of Polytion: and hence we might not without reason suspect, that for οἰκίαις should here be read οἰκίᾳ (a conjecture which would derive no slight countenance from the circumstance that a few MSS. have what comes very near to the above, viz. οἰκίας); but, not to mention that there is some reason to think that the same thing was done in other houses as well as the one just mentioned; and whether it was or was not confined to that one house, the plural here might be defended, on the supposition of being (as it not unfrequently is in cases like the present, where something of exaggeration might be expected)

ὧν καὶ τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην ἐπῃτιῶντο. 2. καὶ αὐτὰ ὑπολαμβάνοντες οἱ μάλιστα τῷ Ἀλκιβιάδῃ ἀχθόμενοι, ἐμποδὼν ὄντι σφίσι μὴ αὐτοῖς τοῦ δήμου βεβαίως προεστάναι, καὶ νομίσαντες, εἰ αὐτὸν ἐξελάσειαν, πρῶτοι ἂν εἶναι, ἐμεγάλυνον, καὶ ἐβόων ὡς ἐπὶ δήμου καταλύσει τά τε μυστικὰ καὶ ἡ τῶν Ἑρμῶν περικοπὴ γένοιτο, καὶ οὐδὲν εἴη αὐτῶν ὅ τι οὐ μετ' ἐκείνου ἐπράχθη, ἐπιλέγοντες τεκμήρια τὴν ἄλλην αὐτοῦ ἐς τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα οὐ δημοτικὴν παρανομίαν. XXIX. Ὁ δ' ἔν τε τῷ παρόντι πρὸς τὰ μηνύματα ἀπελογεῖτο, καὶ ἑτοῖμος ἦν πρὶν ἐκπλεῖν κρίνεσθαι, εἴ τι τούτων εἰργασμένος ἦν (ἤδη γὰρ καὶ τὰ τῆς παρασκευῆς ἐπεπόριστο), καὶ εἰ μὲν τούτων τι εἴργαστο, δίκην δοῦναι, εἰ δ' ἀπολυθείη, ἄρχειν. 2. καὶ ἐπεμαρτύρετο μὴ ἀπόντος πέρι αὐτοῦ διαβολὰς ἀποδέχεσθαι, ἀλλ' ἤδη ἀποκτείνειν εἰ ἀδικεῖ, καὶ ὅτι σωφρονέστερον εἴη μὴ μετὰ τοιαύτης αἰτίας, πρὶν διαγνῶσι, πέμπειν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τοσούτῳ στρατεύματι. 3. οἱ δ' ἐχθροὶ δεδιότες τό τε στράτευμα μὴ εὔνουν ἔχῃ, ἣν ἤδη ἀγωνίζηται, ὅ τε δῆμος μὴ μαλακίζηται, θεραπεύων ὅτι δι' ἐκεῖνον οἵ τ' Ἀργεῖοι ξυνεστράτευον καὶ τῶν Μαντινέων τινές, ἀπέτρεπον καὶ ἀπέσπευδον, ἄλλους ῥήused for the singular,—it is a sufficient reason against any such alteration of the reading, that the singular οἰκίᾳ would have required τινι to be subjoined.

2. I have thought proper to place a period (not a colon) after ἐπῃτιῶντο, because from the context it appears that the words ὧν καὶ τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην ἐπῃτιῶντο belong, not to what follows, but what just went before: and with the words καὶ αὐτὰ an entirely new sentence commences, where καὶ, as not unfrequently, bears the sense and now. Render, 'And now these matters, those who were especially ill-disposed towards Alcibiades taking up,' and admitting. In this use (which is rare) with a genitive of thing, ἀχθ. occurs also in Xen. Cyr. viii. 4, 9. Plato, p. 99, 216, and 506. Lucian, i. 792. The true sense of the term here is, that which it bears also in Xen. Hist. vi. 3, 5, namely, infensus esse. Of ὑπολαμβάνοντες the sense is doubtless that assigned by one of the Scholiasts, προσδεχόμενοι αὐτά, ὥστε πιστεύειν, excipientes, arripientes. I know, indeed, of no other example of the word so used; but nearly allied to this is the use of ὑποδέχεσθαι in the sense admittere, found in Herodot. iv. 167; whence comes the sense to approve or ratify any thing said.

ἐμποδὼν—προεστάναι] 'quod sibi impedimento esset, quo nimis ipsi constanter præessent,' &c. Ἐπιλέγοντες stands, as Poppo says, for προστιθέντες, 'subjoining.' Τὴν ἄλλην—παρανομίαν. Render, 'his in other respects violation of the customs of the country, in his habits and course of life, any thing but suitable to a democracy.'

Ch. XXIX. 1. ἑτοῖμος ἦν—κρίνεσθαι] So Xen. Hist. i. 4, 14, ἐθέλοντος δὲ τότε κρίνεσθαι παραχρῆμα, τῆς αἰτίας ἄρτι γεγενημένης, ὡς ἠσεβηκότος ἐς τὰ μυστήρια, ὑπερβαλλόμενοι δὲ ἐχθροὶ τὰ δοκοῦντα δίκαια εἶναι, ἀπόντα αὐτὸν ἐσπέρησαν τῆς πατρίδος.

2. In ἐπεμαρτύρετο there is, as Bauer points out, a signif. prægnans, since, as referred to the subjoined infinitives, it bears the sense 'obsecrabat, obtestatus est;' and at ὅτι σωφρ. εἴη it means 'affirmabat, demonstrabat.'

3. θεραπεύων] scil. αὐτὸν, 'honore ac admiratione prosecutus,' as in Hdot. iii. 80.

ἀπέτρεπον καὶ ἀπέσπευδον] scil. τὸ πρᾶγμα, literally, 'put back and hindered the matter.' Imitated from these are the words of Dio Cass. 461, 13, αὐτὸν ἀπέστρεψε καὶ ἀπέσπευσε δὲ ἀπ' αὐτῶν (where, for ἀπέστρεψε, read ἀπέτρεψε). However, ἀπέσπευσε may bear the sense dissuaded, as in Hdot. vii. 18, ἀποσπευδόντων τὴν συμβολήν ('the engagement'). The two terms are also united in Hdot. vii. 17, ὁ ἀποσπεύδων Ξέρξεα στρατεύεσθαι—ἀποτρέπων τὸ χρέον γενέσθαι, 'turning back, preventing what must be.' In Dionys. Hal. Ant. x. 11, ἀποφεύγειν τὴν τῆς ἀληθείας ἐξέτασιν, I doubt not should be read, from the Vatican MS., ἀποσπεύδειν.

τορας ἐνιέντες οἳ ἔλεγον νῦν μὲν πλεῖν αὐτὸν καὶ μὴ κατασχεῖν τὴν ἀναγωγήν, ἐλθόντα δὲ κρίνεσθαι ἐν ἡμέραις ῥηταῖς, βουλόμενοι ἐκ μείζονος διαβολῆς, ἢν ἔμελλον ῥᾷον αὐτοῦ ἀπόντος πορεῖν, μετάπεμπτον κομισθέντα αὐτὸν ἀγωνίσασθαι. καὶ ἔδοξε πλεῖν τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην.

XXX. Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα θέρους μεσοῦντος ἤδη ἡ ἀναγωγὴ ἐγίγνετο ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν. τῶν μὲν οὖν ξυμμάχων τοῖς πλείστοις καὶ ταῖς σιταγωγοῖς ὀλκάσι καὶ τοῖς πλοίοις, καὶ ὅση ἄλλη παρασκευὴ ξυνείπετο, πρότερον εἴρητο ἐς Κέρκυραν ξυλλέγεσθαι ὡς ἐκεῖθεν ἀθρόοις ἐπὶ ἄκραν Ἰαπυγίαν τὸν Ἰόνιον διαβαλοῦσιν· αὐτοὶ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ εἴ τινες τῶν ξυμμάχων παρῆσαν, ἐς τὸν Πειραιᾶ καταβάντες ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ῥητῇ ἅμα ἕῳ ἐπλήρουν τὰς ναῦς ὡς ἀναξόμενοι. 2. ξυγκατέβη ἐνιέντες] immittentes, subornantes, as in Dio Cass. p. 203, 35, ἐνιέντες ἄλλους. Hence the verbal ἐνετὸς, subornatus, in Appian, i. 728. ii. 33. Ἔλεγον stands (by a use not unfrequent in the classical writers) for ἐκέλευον. Instead of ἀναγωγὴν, Bekker, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold edit, from 11 of the best MSS. (as they had also done at iv. 29, from five of the best MSS.) ἀγωγήν: a change which Dr. Arnold on the former passage justifies on the ground that the term ἀγωγὴ will relate to the voyage generally, while ἀναγωγὴ would only relate to the commencement of it: but that ἀγωγὴ ever bore the sense voyage, is, I think, more than can be certainly made out. As to the instance alleged by Dr. Arnold from Hesych., ἀγωγὴ, ὁδὸς, that is quite insufficient, the two words forming not a separate article, but only occurring in the course of another, namely, the following: Ἀγωγὴ· τρόπος, ἀναστροφή. ἀπαγωγὴ, ὁδός. Πορεία τῆς νύμφης πρὸς τὸν ἄνδρα Ῥόδιον. But there the words ἀπαγωγὴ, ὁδὸς, &c., form a separate gloss, which (as often elsewhere in Hesych.) was brought in out of its proper place, or adduced by way of indicating the difference in sense between the words. At the same time, not without reason may it be suspected, that in the passage to which the glossographer there alludes, there was the not unfrequent error of ἀπαγωγὴ for ἐπαγωγή. And vain is it to attempt to show that ὁδὸς refers to ἀγωγὴ by making the gloss (as does Abresch) relate to Xen. Cyrop. vi. 1, 24, ἅμα δ' ὅπως ἐν ταῖς ἀγωγαῖς τὰς τάξεις ὑπομιμνήσκοιντο: for there, as critics are now agreed, the sense is, 'in rebus vehendis, inter vecturam,' as vi. 1, 55, εὔπορον—τὴν ἀγωγήν. Needless were it to adduce examples of ἀναγωγὴ in the above sense, since these are frequent in the best prose writers, as Xenophon, Plato, Demosthenes, Polybius, Lucian, Appian, Arrian, and Josephus. Again, vain were it to defend the reading ἀγωγὴν on the ground of its being favoured by internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance that a rare term may easily be altered into a common one, but not vice versâ,—since that canon of criticism does not apply to the case of terms of whose existence no proof can be found: and where, as in the present instance, the change in question was one likely to be made by the scribes, the authority of MSS. is but slender. That it was likely, may justly be affirmed, considering how easily the abbreviation for ανα might be mistaken for an α. Indeed the very same error is observable in the ordinary editions of Jos. Ant. xviii. 6, 3, λαβὼν ναῦν, ἐν ἀγωγαῖς ἦν, where, for ἀγωγαῖς, Hudson and Haverc. have, very properly, edited, from the two best MSS. of that author, ἀναγωγαῖς. Finally, the expression ἐν ταῖς ἀναγωγαῖς is found in Plato, p. 298. And when it is considered that the very expression occurs again without any various reading in the next chapter but one, we are surely not warranted in supposing any other but that to have place in the present passage.

ἐλθόντα] 'having come [back].' Ἐν ἡμέραις ῥηταῖς, 'at an appointed time,' for ἐν τακτῇ ἡμέρᾳ, or ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ῥητῇ ch. 30. The term ἡμέραι here, as often in the scriptural, and occasionally in the classical, writers, denotes time generally; though the use of the plural may here be accounted for without any reference to that idiom, if we suppose the sense to be literally, 'at the expiration of certain specified days.' Πορισῖν. Render, 'would obtain.'

CH. (Poppo.) The learned commentator further observes, that the former enunciation, ὡς κτήσοιντο, depends on ἐλπίδος; the latter, εἰ ὄψοιντο, connects with ὀλοφυρμῶν. By τὰ μὲν understand, with the Scholiast, τὰ κατὰ τὴν Σικελίαν.

αὐτοὺς ἐσῄει] 'entered their minds;' a sense required by the use of the accusative, on which see note at iv. 30.

τῇ παρούσῃ ῥώμῃ] 'by the strength [of the forces] present.' Τῇ ὄψει ἀνεθάρσουν, 'took courage at the sight.' The words following, διὰ τὸ πλῆθος ἑκάστων ὧν ἐώρων, are meant to complete the idiom in ὄψει; the sense being, 'by reason of the multitude which they, the citizens and the foreigners, mutually saw each to consist of.' Κατὰ θέαν, 'for [the sake of] the sight.' See note at v. 7. At ἀξιόχρεων (which signifies considerable, worthy of notice) supply τι, which is expressed at ch. 34, τι ἀξιόχρεων (where see note). Of ἄπιστον διάνοιαν the sense is, as it is explained by Schol. Leyden. μεῖζόν τι τῆς ὑπολήψεως.

CH. XXXI. The historian now proceeds, in this and the next chapter, to describe the embarkation; previously, however, taking occasion, from the concluding words of the foregoing chapter, ἦκεν — ἐπ' ἀξιόχρεων καὶ ἄπιστον διάνοιαν, to advert to the armament, as being one of the finest and most sumptuous Greece had ever yet sent forth. Such, then, is the general sense intended at § 1. As respects the construction, this—supposing the passage to be not corrupt—may be laid down, with Poppo, as follows: αὕτη γὰρ [ἡ παρασκευὴ] ἐγένετο παρασκευὴ ἐκπλεύσασα πρώτη πολυτ. δὴ, 'hic enim fuit apparatus primus sumptuosissimus, profectus,' &c. Πρώτη Poppo makes to belong to the predicate, and would join the datives δύν. Ἑλλ., not (as Goeller does) with ἐκπλεύσασα, but with πολυτελεστάτη; the whole forming, he thinks, a condensed form of expression parallel to another occurring supra i. 98. But this mode of adjusting the words involves so great a harshness, as to be, I apprehend, wholly inadmissible. Equally objectionable were it, with Dobree, to read and point αὕτη, ἡ πρώτη: for that the comma should be placed after πρώτη, scarcely admits of a doubt. Finally, as to the sense assigned to the words by Arnold, 'This first expedition sent out by a single city,'—that, besides being not a little forced and jejune, would, as Poppo observes, require the article before ἐκπλεύσασα. And though the article might, without any great improbability, be supposed to have formerly existed, but afterwards to have been lost, after παρασκευὴ,—yet it is by no means clear that the article is even necessary, at least supposing the sense intended to be, 'this first expedition (namely, as opposed to the second sent to Sicily with Demosthenes) was the most sumptuous and magnificent of any up to that time as sent out by a single city with a Grecian force;' a sense sufficiently apt and suitable, and which, so far from requiring the article at ἐκπλεύσασα, would rather reject it. Suffice it to observe, that, had there been prefixed before ἐκπλεύσασα (what in the above version is supplied, to help it out) the word ὡς, much of the perplexity which involves the phraseology would have been prevented.

καὶ ὁπλιτῶν καὶ ἡ ἐς Ἐπίδαυρον μετὰ Περικλέους καὶ ἡ αὐτὴ ἐς Ποτίδαιαν μετὰ Ἄγνωνος οὐκ ἐλάσσων ἦν· τετράκις γὰρ χίλιοι ὁπλῖται αὐτῶν Ἀθηναίων καὶ τριακόσιοι ἱππῆς καὶ τριήρεις ἑκατόν, καὶ Λεσβίων καὶ Χίων πεντήκοντα, καὶ ξύμμαχοι ἔτι πολλοὶ ξυνέπλευσαν. 3. ἀλλὰ ἐπί τε βραχεῖ πλῷ ὡρμήθησαν καὶ παρασκευῇ φαύλῃ, οὗτος δὲ ὁ στόλος ὡς χρόνιός τε ἐσόμενος καὶ κατ' ἀμφότερα, οὗ ἂν δέῃ, καὶ ναυσὶ καὶ πεζῷ ἅμα, ἐξαρτυθείς· τὸ μὲν ναυτικὸν μεγάλαις δαπάναις τῶν τε τριηράρχων καὶ τῆς πόλεως ἐκπονηθὲν, καὶ ναῦς παρασχόντος κενὰς, ἑξήκοντα μὲν ταχείας, τεσσαράκοντα δὲ ὁπλιταγωγούς, καὶ ὑπηρεσίας ταύταις τὰς κρατίστας, τῶν δὲ τριηράρχων ἐπιφοράς τε πρὸς τῷ ἐκ δημοσίου μισθῷ διδόντων τοῖς θρανίταις τῶν ναυτῶν, [καὶ †ταῖς †ὑπηρεσίαις] καὶ τἆλλα σημείοις

3. οὗ ἂν δέῃ—ἐξαρτυθείς] 'quocunque opus est instructus.' (Poppo.) The verb to the nominative οὗτος ὁ στόλος is ὡρμήθη, left to be understood from ὡρμήθησαν preceding.

ὑπηρεσίας κρατίστας] This may be best taken (as it is by Duk.) to designate the crews, literally, 'those who worked the vessel,' as distinguished from those who fought it; a view confirmed by another passage of our author, i. 121, κυβερνήτας καὶ τὴν ἄλλην ὑπηρεσίαν, and Demosth. p. 1214, διεξιὼν τούς τε μισθοὺς τοὺς τῇ ὑπηρεσίᾳ, καὶ τοῖς ἐπιβάταις κατὰ μῆνα διδομένους. Thus ὑπηρεσία is used, as ministerium in Latin, for ministri: and such is its use in passages cited by Poppo from Arrian, E. A. v. 1, αἱ δὲ ὑπηρεσίαι αὐτῷ ἐς τὰς ναῦς ξυνεπληρώθησαν ἐκ τῶν, &c.; also in Demosth. cont. Polycl. § 7, 10; and again in another passage at § 25, 29, 30 (where mention is made of these ὑπηρεσίαι in conjunction with ἐπιβάται); and, finally, in Demosth. de Cor. Trier. § 6, where we have ὑπηρεσίαν τὴν κρατίστην.

After τῶν I have received into the text the word δὲ, as being required by the scope of the clause, (which is to state what was furnished by the trierarchs, as distinguished from that furnished by the state-treasury,) and being found in two of the best MSS.

ἐπιφορὰς] Meaning the sums added to the regular pay, in the way of bounty. Of this term, which is rare, two examples occur elsewhere, in Dio Cass. 503, and Diod. Sic. t. viii. 447; and notice of it is found in Pollux, iii. 94.

ταῖς ὑπηρεσίαις] Here some error may fairly be presumed to exist,—at least supposing the term ὑπηρεσία to bear the same sense as just before: though, instead of this, Goeller understands the term to mean the seamen's servants, who are at vii. 13, denoted by the term θεράποντες: a sense which, being admitted, will leave nothing at which to object on the score of the reading; but if not, then we cannot do better than, with Poppo, read, for ταῖς ὑπηρεσίαις, τοῖς ὑπηρεσίοις, according to which the sense will be, the cushions, of which mention was made at ii. 93. Considering, however, that such a minute and trivial particular were one scarcely to be thought of sufficient moment to have found a place in this history,—not to say that such would of course be included in the particulars just afterwards specified,—namely, the κατασκευαὶ immediately following; hence, supposing the true reading to be, what Poppo conjectures, τοῖς ὑπηρεσίοις, yet even then I must still adhere to the opinion I formerly expressed,—and view the words so read as not those of our author, but a mere marginal insertion brought in at the wrong place. And as to the query proposed, in opposition to this view, by Poppo,—namely, 'for what imaginable reason were the words in question so entered down in the margin?'—I answer, doubtless for the purpose of intimating that these cushions were also provided by the trierarchs; an intimation, to be sure, wholly unnecessary, considering that those would, of course, be included in the κατασκευαὶ just after mentioned. Accordingly, I have thought proper after ναυτῶν to place a comma, which is found in some MSS.; and indeed in the Cambridge MSS. I find a colon has place.

καὶ τἆλλα σημείοις — χρησαμένων] Render, 'and in other respects employing figure-heads and expensive equipments.' Τἆλλα here, as at iii. 3 & 10, is used adverbially, answering to the Latin cetera, so employed as in the Horatian cetera lætus. On these σημεῖα, ensigns (Ang. figure-heads) of vessels, which consisted of images, or bas-reliefs, of gods or heroes, or even animals, placed on the prow for ornament, and by way of distinction, and also serving to give name to the ship, I have treated at large in my Translation. Wrongly is the term by Duk. understood as said 'de παρασήμοις et tutelis navium;' for the tutela was on the poop, and was usually a painting of some god or hero; whereas the παρασ. was always on the prow, and generally a figure in bas-relief; though sometimes a painting, as appears from Aristoph. Ran. 953, (the only passage where I have found the term σημεῖον as thus used,) σημεῖον οὖν ταῖς ναυσὶν, ὦ 'μαθέστατ', ἐνεγέγραπτο. And so the Scholiast on the present passage remarks, that 'some took the term σημείοις properly, καθάπερ καὶ τὰ στρατεύματα (though for that should doubtless be read κατὰ τὰ στρατεύματα, 'as in armies'); others took it to denote τὰς ἔξωθεν καταγραφὰς τῶν τριηρῶν.' Finally, in support of his view, Duk. cites a passage of Lucian, Navig. t. viii. 160, where, among the several particulars forming the κόσμον of a ship, mention is made of αἱ γραφαί. But that, I apprehend, relates to the ornamental paintings on the poop.

By the κατασκευαὶ, just after, understand the equipments, as sails, rigging, and spare-masts, yards, and rigging. Of the term as used in this sense, (which is one not a little rare,) I have noted an example elsewhere in Xen. Œcon. viii. 17, κατιδὼν ταύτην τὴν ἀκρίβειαν τῆς κατασκευῆς: and such is the use of τὰ σκεύη in Ælian, V. H. vi. 12, σκεύη εἶχεν ἕτοιμα ναυσὶν ἄλλαις, and Sept. in Jonah i. 5, answering to what is in Demosth. p. 212, and some later writers, expressed by ἡ σκευὴ τῆς νηός. The epithet πολυτελέσι belongs to both κατασκ. and σημ.: and the term following, χρήσασθαι, here bears the sense, not, according to Bauer, of assumere, addere, nor, again, that assigned by Portus, instruere; but simply, to employ. Here, indeed, there is a sort of hypallage for σημείοις καὶ κατασκευαῖς τέλεσι πολλοῖς χρησ., 'bestowing much expense on.'

καὶ κατασκευαῖς πολυτελέσι χρησαμένων, καὶ ἐς τὰ μακρότατα προθυμηθέντος ἑνὸς ἑκάστου, ὅπως αὐτῷ τινι εὐπρεπείᾳ τε ἡ ναῦς μάλιστα προέξει καὶ τῷ ταχυναυτεῖν· τὸ δὲ πεζὸν καταλόγοις τε χρηστοῖς ἐκκριθὲν, καὶ ὅπλων καὶ τῶν περὶ τὸ σῶμα σκευῶν μεγάλῃ σπουδῇ πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἀμιλληθέν. 4. ξυνέβη δὲ πρός τε σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ἅμα ἔριν γενέσθαι, ᾧ τις ἕκαστος προσετάχθη, καὶ ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους

ἐς τὰ μακρότατα προθυμ.] 'striving to the uttermost:' for such is undoubtedly the sense intended; though it has been, strangely, missed by the commentators. One of the Scholiasts has not ill explained it by ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, though that does not set forth the ratio significationis. The τινὶ here bears the sense 'each, or every one,' and is used by way of strengthening the force of the αὐτός.

καταλόγοις χρηστοῖς ἐκκριθὲν] 'selected by [the use of] excellent muster-rolls, or levies,' i. e. consisting of persons χρηστοί, utiles bello, efficient, and fit for service. To a force so levied is at v. 8, and in Herodot. i. 2, 11, applied the term καθαρός. This use of the term ἐκκρίνεσθαι is so rare, that its very existence might have been unknown, but for the present passage and the not unfrequent use of the verbal ἔκκριτος in the best writers. Such, moreover, is the use of the simple verb in Hom. Il. xi. 417, κεκριμένη φυλακὴ, 'a guard of select men;' and Od. xxiv. 107. Compare Æschyl. Pers. 808, πλῆθος ἔκκριτον στρατοῦ.

περὶ τὸ σῶμα σκευῶν] 'accoutrements around the body, as clothing and armour.' Πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἀμιλληθέν. Render, 'vying with each other:' ἀμιλλᾶσθαι being one of those many verbs (treated on in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 495. b.) which with a passive form bear an active sense, being used as deponents; a view, I apprehend, preferable to that adopted by Abresch, Gottl., Jacobs, and Goeller, who suppose ἀμιλληθὲν to bear the sense δι' ἀμίλλης παρασκευασθὲν — a signification destitute of proof, and which enervates the strength of the expression, (as referring directly to the man,) with which compare supra ch. 32, 2, ἐκπλεύσαντες ἄμιλλαν μέχρι Αἰγίνης ἐποιήσαντο.

4. ξυνέβη δὲ — προσετάχθη] I would render, with Goeller, 'Contigit autem, ut simul et illi inter se certarent in illo munere cui quisque fuerat præfectus,' &c. He rightly takes ᾧ as standing for ἐν ἐκείνῳ (μέρει) ᾧ, and well compares supra

Ἕλληνας ἐπίδειξιν μᾶλλον εἰκασθῆναι τῆς δυνάμεως καὶ ἐξουσίας, ἢ ἐπὶ πολεμίους παρασκευήν. 5. εἰ γάρ τις ἐλογίσατο τήν τε τῆς πόλεως ἀνάλωσιν δημοσίαν καὶ τῶν στρατευομένων τὴν ἰδίαν, τῆς μὲν πόλεως, ὅσα τε ἤδη * προετετελέκει, καὶ ἃ ἔχοντας τοὺς στρατηγοὺς ἀπέστελλε, τῶν δὲ ἰδιωτῶν, ἅ τε περὶ τὸ σῶμά τις, καὶ τριήραρχος ἐς τὴν ναῦν, ἀναλώκει, καὶ ὅσα ἔτι ἔμελλεν ἀναλώσειν,—χωρὶς δ' ἃ εἰκὸς ἦν καὶ ἄνευ τοῦ ἐκ τοῦ δημοσίου μισθοῦ πάντα τινὰ παρασκευάσασθαι ἐφόδιον, ὡς ἐπὶ χρόνιον στρατείαν, καὶ ὅσα ἐπὶ μεταβολῇ τις ἢ στρατιώτης ἢ ἔμπορος ἔχων ἔπλει,—πολλὰ ἂν

vii. 70, πᾶς τέ τις ἐν ᾧ προσετέτακτο αὐτὸς ἕκαστος ἠπείγετο πρῶτος φαίνεσθαι.

καὶ ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους—παρασκευήν] Render, 'and in respect to the other Greeks, [it happened] that an idea was formed rather of a display, parade, or showing off of power and pomp or opulence, than of an armament against enemies;' literally, 'the thing was represented to the mind as a parade.'

5. What we have in this section is meant to prove and illustrate what was said of the splendour and opulence of the armament, by a reference to the expenses, public and private, which it must have occasioned. Εἴ τις ἐλογίσατο, 'if any one counted up.' I cannot agree with Krueger and Poppo in regarding δημοσίαν as merely from the margin, and therefore to be cancelled. For why, it may be asked, should what seems so unnecessary have been thus noted in the margin? And being found in every MS., it must surely be retained, and regarded as a sort of pleonasm ('the public expense of the state') occasioned by the desire to accommodate the expression here to the antithetic one καὶ τῶν στρατευομένων τὴν ἰδίαν. That the word should have been put in, as Poppo supposes, in order to cause that correspondence, is highly improbable, and indeed is disproved by the consent of all external authorities. For as to the MS. of Valla, it will not follow, because that translator passed over the word, that it had no place in his MS. The best translators often omit what seems to them unnecessary; and Valla's licentious and negligent mode of translating is such as to deprive his version of any great critical value in such a case. In short, the word in question is sufficiently defended by an exactly similar use of it in Plato, p. 877, ὡς τῆς πόλεως δημόσια ὅς τε καὶ ἴδιος. And so in Livy, v. 21, we have, 'ut eam invidiam lenire suo privato incommodo [potius] quam minimo publico populi Romani liceret.' And in what does τῆς πόλεως here differ from populi there? In either passage the genitive is one of explanation, and consequently there is no pleonasm. As to Poppo's objection, that the article τὴν ought to have been used before δημοσίαν, it is one possessing very little weight in a writer like Thucydides, not very attentive to such niceties, and is overruled by passages occurring in a writer no less pure than Plato, p. 957, τὰ δημόσια καὶ κοινὰ δικαστήρια, and 780, πῇ τὰ δημόσια καὶ κοινά, &c. 469, καὶ τὰ δημόσια καὶ ἴδια.

προετετελέκει] This I have followed Poppo and Goeller in adopting, from the conjecture of Reiske, (approved by Duk.) instead of vulg. προσετ., which is capable of no sense suitable to the context. The authority of MSS., in this case, is rendered of little or no weight by the circumstance of the prepositions in composition being so frequently confounded.

Before δημοσίου I have, with Poppo and Bekker, received τοῦ, on the authority of the best MSS. (to which I am enabled to add that of Clarend. and Cantab.) because, while the article cannot with propriety be dispensed with, it might easily here be omitted, on account of the τοῦ just before.

ἐπὶ μεταβολῇ] The Scholiast explains by ὠνήσεως, and very properly if ὦνησις be understood to denote that most ancient and primitive mode of sale which consists in the traffic carried on by barter, or exchange of the commodities of one article for that of another; and to which even war, we find, could not quite put a stop. The persons who chiefly carried on this traffic were the ἔμποροι alluded to at ch. 44, from which passage it appears that they carried a very considerable lading of goods. It seems, however, that the soldiers themselves drove a petty traffic, and even the sailors, as appears from vii. 13, εἰσὶ δ' οἳ καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐμπορευόμενοι—τὴν ἀκρίβειαν τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ἀφῄρηνται. 'This mixing up of trade with war was,' τάλαντα εὑρέθη ἐκ τῆς πόλεως τὰ πάντα ἐξαγόμενα. 6. καὶ ὁ στόλος οὐχ ἧσσον τόλμης τε θάμβει καὶ ὄψεως λαμπρότητι περιβόητος ἐγένετο, ἢ στρατιᾶς, πρὸς οὓς ἐπῆσαν, ὑπερβολῇ, καὶ ὅτι μέγιστος ἤδη διάπλους ἀπὸ τῆς οἰκείας, καὶ ἐπὶ μεγίστῃ ἐλπίδι τῶν μελλόντων πρὸς τὰ ὑπάρχοντα ἐπεχειρήθη.

XXXII. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ αἱ νῆες πλήρεις ἦσαν, καὶ ἐσέκειτο πάντα ἤδη, ὅσα ἔχοντες ἔμελλον ἀνάξεσθαι, τῇ μὲν σάλπιγγι σιωπὴ ὑπεσημάνθη, εὐχὰς δὲ τὰς νομιζομένας πρὸ τῆς ἀναγωγῆς οὐ κατὰ

Dr. Arnold observes, 'a natural consequence of the system which made military service rather an interruption to a man's common business, than his profession.' Yet it is not to be imagined that any considerable number of the Athenian soldiers, who went on the expedition, were merchants by profession; and, consequently, we may rather suppose that, belonging to so commercial a nation as Athens, and aware of the value of the Sicilian market, they carried such a stock of the articles most likely to be profitable in the way of exchange. Similarly, in modern times, the Spanish soldiers who went out to the conquest of America used for a considerable time to carry out with them articles for traffic with the Indians; and, long after that time, it was allowed, as a sort of privilege, to the sailors and soldiers on board of the galleons which carried on the trade between Manilla and Acapulco.

Of the term μεταβολή, as used in the above sense, I know of no example elsewhere: but μεταβολεὺς and μετάβολος, to denote merchant, I have noted in good writers from Demosthenes downwards (though chiefly as understood of petty chapmen like our pedlars): and the verb μεταβάλλεσθαι, in the sense 'to exchange for one's profit,' is found in Xen. Mem. iii. 7, 6. Plato, p. 849, and Aristot. Œcon.

6. τόλμης—ὑπερβολῇ] Meaning, 'no less by reason of wonder at the boldness [of the measure] and the splendour of appearance [in the forces], than by the superiority of the force in respect of those against whom it went.' To which purpose Goeller aptly compares the words supra ii. 65, οὐ τοσοῦτον γνώμης ἁμάρτημα ἦν, πρὸς οὓς ἐπῄεσαν, i. e. as to those against whom they went; implying Thucydides' opinion, that the force the Athenians brought was strong enough to bear down resistance on the part of the Syracusans.

μέγιστος διάπλους] This is said because, though Egypt (against which they had formerly gone) was further in direct distance, yet the circuitous navigation to Sicily, by Corcyra and the foreland of Iapygia, made a greater distance. The conjecture of Bekker, who proposes, for ἤδη, to read δή, would tend to press the assertion further than our author intended, and weaken the sense, which is nunc jam.

καὶ ἐπὶ μεγίστῃ—ἐπεχειρήθη] Render, 'and was enterprised with the greatest hope of the future, as compared with the present [condition of the state];' meaning, that 'their future prospects were greater, compared with their present possession [than they had ever been].' The term μεγίστη must, of course, relate to Athens only; though the assertion might hold good of almost any other state: for (as I have shown in my Translation) taking into consideration the magnitude of future hopes in comparison with present possessions, perhaps no armament had yet left any country that equalled it. Had Athens succeeded in conquering Sicily, she would soon have added to her dominions part of Italy, and perhaps Carthage—the whole of Greece, and perhaps Macedonia and Thrace.

CH. XXXII. This chapter contains a brief, but graphic, narrative of the embarkation of the armament.

1. ἐσέκειτο] 'were put on board,' neut. for pass.; on which use see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 496, 3, where it is observed that κεῖσθαι is generally equivalent to τεθεῖσθαι. And it might have been further remarked, that ἐγκεῖσθαι is not unfrequent, but ἐσκεῖσθαι rare; for I know of no other example, except the present passage and one in Herodot. ii. 73, ἐσκειμένου δὲ τοῦ πατρός: and even there I should doubt whether the true reading (and that seemingly required by the words preceding, ἐνέθηκε τὸν πατέρα) were not ἐγκειμένου, which is found in most of the MSS., but that ἐσκειμένου is borne out by the words, a little before, τὸν πατέρα ἐς αὐτὸ ἐντιθέναι. Thus ἐσκειμένου is to be regarded as standing for ἐγκειμένου ἐς.

σιωπὴ ὑπεσημάνθη] In ὑποσ. we have a term commonly employed to denote public notice or proclamation of any thing.

ναῦν ἑκάστην, ξύμπαντες δὲ ὑπὸ κήρυκος ἐποιοῦντο, κρατῆράς τε κεράσαντες παρ' ἅπαν τὸ στράτευμα καὶ ἐκπώμασι χρυσοῖς τε καὶ ἀργυροῖς οἵ τε ἐπιβάται καὶ οἱ ἄρχοντες σπένδοντες. 2. ξυνεπεύχοντο δὲ καὶ ὁ ἄλλος ὅμιλος ὁ ἐκ τῆς γῆς, τῶν τε πολιτῶν, καὶ εἴ τις ἄλλος εὔνους παρῆν σφίσι. παιωνίσαντες δὲ, καὶ τελεώσαντες τὰς σπονδὰς, ἀνήγοντο, καὶ ἐπὶ κέρως τὸ πρῶτον ἐκπλεύσαντες, ἅμιλλαν ἤδη μέχρι Αἰγίνης ἐποιοῦντο. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐς τὴν Κέρκυραν, ἔνθα περ καὶ τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα τῶν ξυμμάχων ξυνελέγετο, ἠπείγοντο ἀφικέσθαι.

3. Ἐς δὲ τὰς Συρακούσας ἠγγέλλετο μὲν πολλαχόθεν τὰ περὶ τοῦ ἐπίπλου, οὐ μέντοι ἐπιστεύετο ἐπὶ πολὺν χρόνον οὐδέν. ἀλλὰ καὶ, γενομένης ἐκκλησίας, ἐλέχθησαν τοιοίδε λόγοι ἀπό τε ἄλλων, τῶν μὲν πιστευόντων τὰ περὶ τῆς στρατείας τῆς τῶν Ἀθηναίων, τῶν δὲ τὰ ἐναντία λεγόντων, καὶ Ἑρμοκράτης ὁ Ἕρμωνος παρελθὼν αὐτοῖς, ὡς σαφῶς οἰόμενος εἰδέναι τὰ περὶ αὐτῶν, ἔλεγε καὶ παρῄνει τοιάδε.

So Jos. Ant. 1124, 32, ὑποσημαίνει ἡ σάλπιγξ. Dio Cass. 521, 69, σαλπιγκτὴς ὑπεσήμανε, and 575, 78, ἡ σάλπιγξ ὑπεσήμανε. Polyæn. i. 35. iv. 3, 5. Plato, Pol. p. 566, (where the word is used of a demagogue,) ὃς ἂν ὑποσημαίνῃ χρεῶν τε ἀποκοπὰς καὶ γῆς ἀναδασμόν. In that passage, as in the present, the sense is, 'to be proclaimed.' But the question is, whether Abresch and other commentators be right in reckoning ὑποσημαίνειν among those verbs in which ὑπο is equivalent to πρό. It may be doubted whether that be ever the case; certainly not in the instance of ὑποσημαίνω, where the sense of publicity is implied in the simple σημαίνω which as it even of itself often signifies to order, (as in Homer, Plato, &c.) may thus very well bear the sense to proclaim: and ὑπο when added can denote no more than some accompanying circumstance of the action expressed by the verb. Hence the phrase ὑποσημαίνειν σιωπὴν signifies 'to order or proclaim silence' under or by some accompanying action, as that of sounding a trumpet. And thus the full sense of the expression τῇ σάλπιγγι σιωπὴ ὑπεσημάνθη is, 'by the sound of a trumpet silence was proclaimed under [that sign]:' a somewhat overloaded phrase for the plainer ὑπὸ σάλπιγγι (or σάλπιγγος) σιωπὴ ὑπεσημάνθη, which occurs in Appian, i. 515, σιωπὴν ἐσήμηνεν ὑπὸ σάλπιγγι.

ὑπὸ κήρυκος] 'præcone verba præeunte.' See Wesseling on Herodot. ix. 98; and of this sense of ὑπὸ see examples in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 592, β.

κρατῆρας κεράσαντες, καὶ σπένδοντες] In illustration of this custom of libations, as accompanying public prayers, Duk. cites Arrian, E. A. vi. 3, and Poppo, Aristid. i. p. 374, and Herodot. vii. 54. To advert to the manner of the thing, cups of wine mixed with water were first filled and drunk round, to the success of the expedition; and then the officers and seamen with gold and silver cups of wine unmixed, made the libation, which was poured out on the ship or into the sea.

2. ἐπὶ κέρως—ἐκπλεύσαντες] See note on ii. 90. Ἅμιλλαν ἐποιοῦντο, literally, 'made a race of speed to Ægina,' trying who should get there first. Of the phrase ἅμιλλαν ποιεῖσθαι I have met with no examples elsewhere, except in Onosand. p. 48; but τῶν νεῶν ἅμιλλαν I have noted in Herodot. vii. 44; πλοίων ἅμ. in Pausan. ii. 35, 1; and τριηρῶν ἅμ. in Isocr. p. 303: and in Aristid. ii. 19, we have, ἡ μέχρις Αἰγίνης ἅμιλλα. A parallel use is found in Virg. Æn. iii. 128, 'vario certamine,' and iii. 290, 'Certatim socii feriunt mare.' With the ellipsis before μέχρις I would compare a similar one in Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 28, τὰς τριήρεις ἀπὸ σημείου ἀφίει ἀνθαμιλλᾶσθαι ἐς τὴν γῆν.

3. ἀλλὰ καὶ] Render, quinetiam, 'nay, even.' Ἐλέχθησαν τοιοίδε, &c. 'such kind of speeches [as the following] were spoken, both by those who believed the reports, and those who did not credit them.' The force of the ἀλλὰ καὶ hinges on this, that even when the report in question came to be thought so worthy of consideration, as to demand an assembly of the people to be called, such kind of speeches as the following were delivered, some crediting, and others discrediting, the report. Ὡς σαφῶς οἰόμενος, &c. A similar use of ὡς οἰόμενος is cited by Poppo from vii. 40, 1, and Plato, Apol. 23. The σαφῶς belongs to εἰδέναι, with which term it is also united supra iii. 12.

XXXIII. "Ἄπιστα μὲν ἴσως, ὥσπερ καὶ ἄλλοι τινὲς, δόξω ὑμῖν περὶ τοῦ ἐπίπλου τῆς ἀληθείας λέγειν, καὶ γιγνώσκω ὅτι οἱ τὰ μὴ πιστὰ δοκοῦντα εἶναι ἢ λέγοντες ἢ ἀπαγγέλλοντες οὐ μόνον οὐ πείθουσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄφρονες δοκοῦσιν εἶναι· ὅμως δὲ οὐ καταφοβηθεὶς ἐπισχήσω, κινδυνευούσης τῆς πόλεως, πείθων γε ἐμαυτὸν σαφέστερόν τι ἑτέρου εἰδὼς λέγειν. 2. Ἀθηναῖοι γὰρ ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, ὃ πάνυ θαυμάζετε, πολλῇ στρατιᾷ ὥρμηνται καὶ ναυτικῇ καὶ ‡πεζῇ, πρόφασιν μὲν Ἐγεσταίων ξυμμαχίᾳ καὶ Λεοντίνων κατοικίσει, τὸ δὲ ἀληθὲς Σικελίας ἐπιθυμίᾳ, μάλιστα δὲ τῆς ἡμετέρας πόλεως, ἡγούμενοι, εἰ ταύτην σχοῖεν, ῥᾳδίως καὶ τἄλλα ἕξειν. 3. ὡς οὖν ἐν τάχει παρεσομένων, ὁρᾶτε ἀπὸ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων ὅτῳ τρόπῳ κάλλιστα ἀμυ-

CH. XXXIII. The general purpose of this speech seems to have been to quiet the anxiety which the reports in question, however generally disbelieved, could not fail to occasion to all. Hermocrates commences by first assuring the incredulous that these reports are true; that the Athenians are coming, to attempt the conquest of Sicily; but that there is no cause for fear, since though they are not to be despised, yet neither are they to be feared, considering that the very magnitude of their armament will expose it to greater peril, and consequently pave the way for failure.

Such is the substance of what is said in ch. 33. In ch. 34 the speaker proceeds to suggest the measures to be adopted in order to ward-off the danger which really exists. He enjoins them to apply for aid in every quarter, and at the same time to employ to the uttermost their own resources. Nay, he recommends them, as the best method to strike fear into the enemy, and make him abandon his enterprise, to boldly anticipate his attack on the island, by disputing the very passage of the Ionian gulf. Sect. 1 contains the proem, which is occupied with a statement of the reasons why he thinks proper to address his countrymen. 'Though it may be his lot—as it has been that of others—to speak what may seem incredible; and though he knows that, far from convincing their hearers, they are regarded as fools, yet he shall not, through fear of such an imputation, suppress what he has to say (proceeding as it does from surer information than others possess). The danger his country is in, will not let him hold his peace.'

1. ἄπιστα μὲν—λέγ.] Evidently imitated from these are the words of Hdian. vii. 8, 6. Καταφοβηθείς. Render, 'through fear,' viz. of being thought foolish. Ἐπισχήσω, seil. ἐμαυτὸν, 'I will not refrain from speaking.' Similarly in a passage of the Septuagint, Isaiah lxii. 1, we have, διὰ Σιὼν οὐ σιωπήσομαι—καὶ οὐκ ἀνήσω.

σαφέστερόν τι ἑτέρου εἰδὼς λέγειν] 'that I speak [as] knowing some more certain [information] than another:' alluding to the leader of the democratic party, Athenagoras. With the expression πείθων γε ἐμαυτὸν comp. Plato, p. 433, ὡς ἐμαυτὸν πείθω. Lucian, ii. 197.

2. ὃ πάνυ θαυμάζετε] i. e. 'much as you may wonder at it.' I have now, with Bekker (second edition) and Arnold, received πεζῇ, though found in only one MS., because the term πεζὸς as used for πεζικὸς is used in the earlier Attic writers to the time of Demosthenes. And though πεζικὸς is occasionally found in Xenophon, yet it is to be remembered that that writer uses not a few of the common Greek forms. As to Aristotle, his use of πεζικὸς will not go to disprove the use of πεζὸς by the earlier and purer writers, his own Greek being full of the forms and language of common life. Certain it is, that internal evidence is quite in favour of the reading πεζῇ.

In ξυμμαχίᾳ and κατοικίσει the dative signifies 'on account of;' though in the former term cause, and in the latter, purpose is to be understood; the sense, as indicated in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 393, b, (where may be seen several examples of this use of the dative,) being 'on account of the alliance with the Segestæans, and in order to re-establish the Leontines.'

3. ἀπὸ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων] 'pro præ-νεῖσθε αὐτούς, καὶ μήτε καταφρονήσαντες ἄφρακτοι ληφθήσεσθε, μήτε ἀπιστήσαντες τοῦ ξύμπαντος ἀμελήσετε. 4. εἰ δέ τῳ καὶ πιστὰ, τὴν τόλμαν αὐτῶν καὶ δύναμιν μὴ ἐκπλαγῇ. οὔτε γὰρ βλάπτειν ἡμᾶς πλείω οἷοί τε ἔσονται ἢ πάσχειν, οὔθ' ὅτι μεγάλῳ στόλῳ ἐπέρχονται, ἀνωφελεῖς, ἀλλὰ πρός τε τοὺς ἄλλους Σικελιώτας πολὺ ἄμεινον (μᾶλλον γὰρ ἐθελήσουσιν, ἐκπλαγέντες, ἡμῖν ξυμμαχεῖν), καὶ ἢν ἄρα ἢ κατεργασώμεθα αὐτούς, ἢ ἀπράκτους ὧν ἐφίενται ἀπώσωμεν (οὐ γὰρ δὴ, μὴ τύχωσί γε ὧν προσδέχονται, φοβοῦμαι), κάλλιστον δὴ ‡ ἔργον ἡμῖν ξυμβήσεται, καὶ οὐκ ἀνέλπιστον ἔμοιγε. 5. ὀλίγοι γὰρ δὴ στόλοι μεγάλοι ἢ Ἑλλήνων ἢ βαρβάρων, πολὺ ἀπὸ τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἀπάραντες, κατώρθωσαν. οὔτε γὰρ πλείους τῶν ἐνοικούντων καὶ ἀστυγειτόνων ἔρχονται (πάντα γὰρ ὑπὸ δέους ξυνίσταται)· ἤν τε δι' ἀπορίαν τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἐν ἀλλοτρίᾳ γῇ σφαλῶσι, τοῖς ἐπιβουλευθεῖσιν ὄνομα, κἂν περὶ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς τὰ πλείω πταίωσιν, ὅμως καταλείπουσιν. 6. ὅπερ καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι αὐτοὶ οὗτοι, τοῦ Μήδου παρὰ λόγον πολλὰ σφαλέντος, ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι ὡς ἐπὶ Ἀθήνας ἥξει, ἠξήθησαν, καὶ ἡμῖν οὐκ ἀνέλπιστον τὸ τοιοῦτο ξυμβῆναι.

XXXIV. Θαρσοῦντες οὖν τά τε αὐτοῦ παρασκευαζώμεθα, καὶ ἐς senti rerum facultatibus.' Of κάλλιστα, just after, the sense is simply best. Καταφρονήσαντες, 'through contempt [of your foes.' Ἀπιστήσαντες, 'through incredulity.' Τοῦ ξύμπαντος, scil. δήμου, reipublicæ, 'the commonwealth,' as vi. 89, 6. The word thus left understood is expressed in a fragment of Æschylus, where we have σύμπας δῆμος. Possibly, however, the word is of the neuter gender; which is the more probable, considering the frequent use of the expression τὸ κοινὸν, respublica.

4. At πιστὰ repeat δόξω λέγειν from the preceding. At ἀνωφελεῖς supply εἰσι. Worthy of observation is the meiosis here existing, (with which compare similar instances noticed at ii. 91.) the sense being, 'they are convenient [to deal with].' Dobree aptly compares two passages infra viii. 96, 5, ξυμφορώτατοι προσπολεμῆσαι ἐγένοντο, and viii. 66, 5, πλεῖστα—ὠφέλησαν.

I have, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, received ἔργον, found in several of the best MSS. (to which I add Cantab.) instead of the vulg. ἔργων, retained by Bekker, but not on good grounds; the former being required not only by the customary usage of our author, but by propriety, since, as Poppo shows, 'the sense contained in the common reading would, instead of κάλλιστον ἔργον, call for τὸ κάλλιστον τῶν ἔργων.' Moreover, the sense would thus be overloaded.

5. οὔτε γὰρ, &c.] Now follows the second reason why he thinks the Athenians will fail of success. Ξυνίσταται, 'combine together,' viz. for mutual aid, as v. 82. vi. 37. vii. 15. Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 26, (which last passage was written with a view to the present,) πάντα γὰρ ὑπὸ δέους συνίστασθαι φιλεῖ τὰ διάφορα. Strange that he did not perceive the use (so frequent in our author) of neut. for masc.: unless indeed we suppose that ἔθνη was in the writer's mind, and that he there accommodated the gender thereto.

σφαλῶσι] 'should fail of their purpose,' and be obliged to go away ἄπρακτοι. On περὶ σφίσιν, &c. see note at i. 69, 9.

6. ὅπερ] Goeller takes this as standing for δι' ὅπερ: while Poppo thinks our author here meant to have subjoined ἔπαθον at the end of the sentence, but instead of it he inadvertently wrote ηὐξήθησαν. It may rather be supposed that our author here blends together the two words; the full sense intended being, 'which the Athenians themselves experiencing, grew great thereby.'

Ch. XXXIV. The matter now assumes quite an inspiriting and hortative tone.

1. Αὐτοῦ has the very rare sense here, 'at this place,' as in Herodot. iv. 9, 6.

τοὺς Σικελοὺς πέμποντες, τοὺς μὲν μᾶλλον βεβαιωσώμεθα, τοῖς δὲ φιλίαν καὶ ξυμμαχίαν πειρώμεθα ποιεῖσθαι· ἔς τε τὴν ἄλλην Σικελίαν πέμπωμεν πρέσβεις, δηλοῦντες ὡς κοινὸς ὁ κίνδυνος, καὶ ἐς τὴν Ἰταλίαν, ὅπως ἢ † ξυμμαχίαν ποιώμεθα ἡμῖν, ἢ μὴ δέχωνται Ἀθηναίους. 2. δοκεῖ δέ μοι καὶ ἐς Καρχηδόνα ἄμεινον εἶναι πέμψαι· οὐ γὰρ ἀνέλπιστον αὐτοῖς, ἀλλ' ἀεὶ διὰ φόβου εἰσὶ μή ποτε Ἀθηναῖοι αὐτοῖς ἐπὶ τὴν πόλιν ἔλθωσιν· ὥστε τάχ' ἂν ἴσως,—νομίσαντες, εἰ τάδε προήσονται, κἂν σφεῖς ἐν πόνῳ εἶναι,—ἐθελήσειαν ἡμῖν ἤτοι κρύφα γε, ἢ φανερῶς, ἢ ἐξ ἑνός γέ του τρόπου ἀμῦναι. δυνατοὶ δέ εἰσι μάλιστα τῶν νῦν, βουληθέντες· χρυσὸν γὰρ καὶ ἄργυρον πλεῖστον κέκτηνται, ὅθεν ὅ τε πόλεμος καὶ τἆλλα εὐπορεῖ. 3. πέμ-

Βεβαιωσώμεθα, 'assure and confirm them [in their amity],' as iv. 70.

2. I have followed Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing ποιώμεθα, instead of vulg. ποιῶνται, which, though the easier reading, and apparently called for by the word ἔχωνται, is yet not so Thucydidean as ποιώμεθα, which carries in its very harshness the mark of genuineness. Nor is there any thing objectionable in the sense thereby yielded, namely, that 'we may make unto ourselves alliances,' i. e. alliance; ἡμῖν standing for ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς, as σφίσι for σφίσιν αὐτοῖς; on which use see Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, 174. But, to advert more particularly to the harshness,—the question, Duk. thinks, is, whether ὅπως ξυμμαχίαν (scil. αὐτῶν) ποιώμεθα ἡμῖν can be thought put for ὅπως ξυμμάχους αὐτοὺς π. ἡ. 'It cannot,' he adds, 'be denied that this is any thing but a usual form of expression; but our author here, as elsewhere, prefers to desert the beaten path.' Be it so; but he seldom takes a path quite untrodden; he seldom employs a term so rare as to be quite unprecedented; and such the phrase in question may justly be considered, since none of the editors have adduced a single example of it in any other writer. Ξυμμαχίαν may be taken in a generic sense as standing for ξυμμαχίας, alliances; and Poppo grants that 'the notion societatis conciliandæ satisfies the passage.' Accordingly the sense might be expressed as follows: 'in order that either we may form alliances to ourselves, or,' &c. And as peculiarly apposite to the case in point, we might compare a similar form of expression in a passage of St. Luke, xvi. 9, ποιήσατε ἑαυτοῖς φίλους ἐκ τοῦ μαμωνᾶ τῆς ἀδικίας. After all, however, it is very possible that ξυμμαχίαν may be corrupt, and that our author wrote (as Coray conjectures him to have done) ξυμμαχίδα; the letters ΔΑ being such as might easily be mistaken for ΑΝ. And ξυμμαχὶς thus used in the adjectival sense auxiliaris is frequent in Thucydides, Xenophon, and other writers. So infra viii. 23, ξυμμαχίδων—νεῶν. Xen. Hist. i. 6, 21.

2. ἄμεινον εἶναι] Meaning, that 'it is our best course.' On the form τάχ' ἂν ἴσως, (of which another example occurs at ch. 78.) Poppo refers to Wolf on Demosth. Lept. p. 235. Τάδε: meaning 'this country,' as ch. 77, οὐκ Ἴωνες τάδε εἰσίν.

ἤτοι κρύφα γε, ἢ φανερῶς] 'privily at least, if not openly.' Dr. Arnold remarks on the order here of the adverbs being contrary to that in English; the more probable supposition being, according to the former, put before the less probable; while, according to the latter, it would be the reverse, i. e. 'either openly, or at least secretly.' Poppo aptly compares another passage of our author supra ii. 40, ἤτοι κρίνομέν γε ἢ ἐνθυμούμεθα ὀρθῶς τὰ πράγματα.

εὐπορεῖ] The expression is capable of more than one sense. By Portus it is rendered, commodè administrantur; by Hobbes, 'are easily expedited.' But it may best be explained simply to mean, 'goes well, succeeds;' a signification of the word found in Plato and other writers, and arising out of that primary and original sense by which εὐπορεῖν signifies 'to take a good course,' 'to go well,' and thence, in a figurative acceptation, (as found in our phrases to go right and to go well,) to prosper. I am not enabled to adduce any example elsewhere of the term as used in this sense; but such may be discerned in the parallel expressions εὐθυπορεῖν (occurring in Æschyl. Ag. 975, where render, 'recto itinere uti,' and Pind. Ol. vii. 167, 'recto gressu ambulare,' and Isthm. v.

πωμεν δὲ καὶ ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα καὶ ἐς Κόρινθον, δεόμενοι δεῦρο κατὰ τάχος βοηθεῖν, καὶ τὸν ἐκεῖ πόλεμον κινεῖν. 4. ὃ δὲ μάλιστα ἐγώ τε νομίζω ἐπίκαιρον, ὑμεῖς τε διὰ τὸ ξύνηθες ἥσυχον ἥκιστ' ἂν ὀξέως πείθοισθε, ὅμως εἰρήσεται. Σικελιῶται γάρ, εἰ θέλοιμεν, ξύμπαντες, εἰ δὲ μή, ὅτι πλεῖστοι μεθ' ἡμῶν, καθελκύσαντες ἅπαν τὸ ὑπάρχον ναυτικὸν μετὰ δυοῖν μηνοῖν τροφῆς, ἀπαντῆσαι Ἀθηναίοις ἐς Τάραντα καὶ ἄκραν Ἰαπυγίαν, καὶ δῆλον ποιῆσαι αὐτοῖς ὅτι οὐ περὶ τῇ Σικελίᾳ πρότερον ἔσται ὁ ἀγὼν, ἢ τοῦ ἐκείνους περαι-76.) and εὐοδοῦν and εὐοδοῦσθαι, occurring in Herodot. vi. 73, ὡς Κλεομένεῖ εὐωδώθη τὸ πρᾶγμα.

3. τὸν ἐκεῖ πόλεμον κινεῖν] Render, 'to rouse up the war there,' as if it had been sleeping; which was actually the case; for though hostilities had never quite ceased between Athens and the Lacedæmonian confederacy, yet they had grown torpid and required rousing up. Comp. Hom. Il. iv. 15, Ἦ ῥ' αὖτις πόλεμόν τε κακὸν καὶ φύλοπιν αἰνὴν Ὄρσομεν, and v. 496, ἔγειρε δὲ φύλοπιν αἰνήν. Here, then, it is proper to distinguish the phrase τὸν πόλεμον κινεῖν from πόλεμον κινεῖν without the article, which is equivalent to ὅπλα κινεῖν occurring at i. 82; the term κινεῖν here signifying commovere, excitare, 'to rouse up.' And such, in our own language, is the use of the term to rouse or rouse up, as applied both to persons (which is its more proper use) and impropriè, by a certain catachresis, to things. It is observable, however, that in this use of κινεῖν in Greek and rouse in English, there is a metaphor taken either from the idea of rousing any one from sleep, or rousing an animal from its lair. Thus, for instance, in a passage of Xen. Mem. iv. 2, 2, ὁ Σωκράτης, βουλόμενος κινεῖν τὸν Εὐθ., the sense is, not that assigned by Wyttenb. and Valcken., to pique, lacessere, nor, as Sturz explains, de sententiâ dimovere,—but 'to rouse up from a state of inactivity;' the very sense conveyed in a passage of Addison in his Cato, 'to rouse up all that's Roman in them.'

4. ἐπίκαιρον] opportunum, literally, 'suited to the time and season, and consequently fit to be done at any time;' and hence (in a general sense) important or expedient, as said of measures to be adopted. So Xen. Œcon. v. 4, αἱ ἐπίκαιρον πράξεις, 'res maxime opportunæ, quæ maximè prosunt, maximi sunt momenti.' Soph. Œd. Tyr. 895, ἃ μὴ 'πίκαιρα μηδὲ ξυμφέροντα. On this use of τε—τε in the place of μὲν—δὲ, see note at v. 26, 2, and Kuhn. Gr. § 722, 4. It is scarcely necessary to observe, that the τὸ, just after, is to be referred, not to ξύνηθες, but to ἥσυχον. And so we have ἡσύχιον (as opposed to τὸ ὀξύτατον) in Plato, p. 154, and the fuller expression τὸ ἡσύχιον ἦθος at p. 604 of the same writer.

Πείθοισθε, as Poppo observes, is to be construed with ὅ, the sense being, 'de quo—vobis persuadeantur,' 'ad quod inducamini.' It is worthy of remark, that the counsel here given by Hermocrates to the Syracusans is precisely that given, on a similar occasion, by Themistocles to the Greeks: for, as Plutarch tells us, Vit. Themist. ch. 17, Ἔπεισεν ('urged') τοὺς Ἀθηναίους τὴν πόλιν ἐκλιπόντας, ὡς προσωτάτω τῆς Ἑλλάδος ἀπαντᾷν τῷ βαρβάρῳ κατὰ θάλασσαν.

I have not followed Poppo and Arnold in obelizing τῇ Σικελίᾳ, further on; much less have I chosen, with Haack, to alter it, on the conjecture of Duk., to τῆς Σικελίας. The force of the περὶ before τῇ Σικελίᾳ is best represented, not by de, but, as it is explained by Dukas and Poppo, by super, over, about or for it. As illustrative of this use of the preposition, Dr. Arnold aptly cites Hom. Od. xvii. 471, ἀνὴρ περὶ οἷσι μαχειόμενος κτεάτεσσιν, and Tyrtæus, Eleg. i. 1, περὶ ᾗ πατρίδι μαρνάμενον: and Poppo, a passage of Procop. p. 262, αὐτῶν ἀμφὶ ταύτῃ διαμαχομένων τῇ λείᾳ. Dr. Arnold attempts to account for this peculiar use of the περὶ on the supposition that it possesses the double sense of our about, as denoting neighbourhood as well as relation; and that the full sense intended to be conveyed is, 'fighting in our country, to defend it.' But the sense thus arising is not a little forced and jejune: and better is it to suppose that in this use of the preposition after verbs of fighting there is (as in the passages of Homer and Procopius above cited) meant to be conveyed a certain graphic designation, proceeding on a sort of allusion to the sensible image of soldiers fighting over or around any ωθῆναι τὸν Ἰόνιον, μάλιστ' ἂν αὐτοὺς ἐκπλήξαιμεν, καὶ ἐς λογισμὸν καταστήσαιμεν ὅτι ὁρμώμεθα μὲν ἐκ φιλίας χώρας φύλακες (ὑποδέχεται γὰρ ἡμᾶς Τάρας), τὸ δὲ πέλαγος αὐτοῖς πολὺ περαιοῦσθαι μετὰ πάσης τῆς παρασκευῆς (χαλεπὸν δὲ διὰ πλοῦ μῆκος ἐν τάξει μεῖναι), καὶ ἡμῖν ἂν εὐεπίθετος εἴη, βραδεῖά τε καὶ κατ' person or thing they mean to defend or preserve. And in this point of view the passage adduced by Dr. Arnold from Hom. Il. xvii. 132, Αἴας δ' ἀμφὶ Μενοιτιάδῃ σάκος εὐρὺ καλύψας Ἕστήκει, ὥς τίς τε λέων περὶ οἷσι τέκεσσιν, is (notwithstanding what Poppo says) highly to the present purpose, as serving to illustrate the origin of the metaphor; which may be traced to the image of a man or beast standing around or about, so as to defend any person or thing. Since, however, the idea of thus standing about a person or thing necessarily supposes that of standing over him or it, hence the περὶ or ἀμφὶ is, in this use, equivalent to ὑπὲρ, which has this sense in the phrase μάχεσθαι ὑπέρ τινος, 'to fight over (i. e. for) any one.' Finally, from the passage of Hom. Od. above cited, it appears that the image involved in the metaphor is one derived from nature and natural instinct—similarly as that which we observe in the beautiful and highly pathetic address in Matth. xxiii. 37, Ἱερουσαλήμ, Ἱερουσαλήμ!—ποσάκις ἠθέλησα ἐπισυναγαγεῖν τὰ τέκνα σου, ὃν τρόπον ἐπισυνάγει ὄρνις τὰ νοσσία ἑαυτῆς ὑπὸ τὰς πτέρυγας! And hence we see why, just after, in the present passage, the construction is at ἢ τοῦ ἐκείνους περαιωθῆναι changed from the dative to the genitive, namely, because there the figure in question were out of place, and is accordingly dropped by the change of construction.

ἐς λογισμὸν καταστήσαιμεν ὅτι, &c.] literally, 'may set them on reflecting that,' &c., for what the Scholiast explains by ποιήσαιμεν αὐτοὺς ἐν διαλογισμῷ γενέσθαι: though the former is the stronger expression. Worthy of remark is the omission (noticed by Abresch) of the pronoun ἡμεῖς, which would have seemed necessary to correspond to αὐτοῖς before; and which being supplied, the words would run thus: 'We are sallying from; while to them,' &c. As illustrative of which omission of the pronoun in discretione, Bauer adduces, among other examples, one in the New Testament, 2 Tim. ii. 12, εἰ ἀρνούμεθα, κἀκεῖνος ἀρνήσεται ἡμᾶς, where we have a twofold omission of pronouns, both ἡμεῖς and αὐτόν. In the present passage the omission of ἡμεῖς may be attributed to the occurrence a little before of ἡμῶν, which, had it been succeeded so soon after by ἡμεῖς, would have involved the double objection of tautology and confusion. Besides, ἡμᾶς occurs just after, and is very emphatical, the sense being us (not them).

By the φιλίας χώρας understand Tarentum. Supplying at φύλακες, what most expositors suppose left understood, the pronoun αὐτῆς, the reference will thus necessarily be to Tarentum, as denoted by χώρας. But thus a sense arises little suitable to the context: and to suppose (with the Scholiast) an ellipsis of τῆς Σικελίας, involves too great an irregularity to be tolerated. It is best to regard φύλακες, as standing for ὡς φύλ., to be here used absolutely, and to bear the figurative sense, 'as guards to descry danger, and ward it off from the state.' So understood, the words will import that, 'though in a foreign country,—namely, Tarentum,—they would be as picket-guards to their own, namely, Syracusan Sicily.' Similarly Demosthenes (in his second Olynth. p. 17. 13) exhorts τοὺς ἐν ἡλικίᾳ, ἵνα, τὴν τοῦ πολεμεῖν ἐμπειρίαν ἐν τῇ τοῦ Φιλίππου χώρᾳ κτησάμενοι, φύλακες τῆς οἰκείας γένωνται. Finally, by a similar figure it is said in a passage of the Old Testament, Ezek. iii. 17, 'Son of man, I have made thee a watchman to the house of Israel.' Only in this last-mentioned passage the allusion is to those watchmen who were placed on the top of a high tower, to give notice of the coming of the enemy; while in the former ones it is to those troops who discharged the duty of our picket-guards or persons sent out to watch for the approach of the enemy and give notice thereof; and who are in Eurip. Rhes. not unfrequently denoted by the expression φύλακες στρατοῦ or στρατιᾶς.

εὐεπίθετος] Supply, from the subject-matter, ἡ δύναμις αὐτῶν. In the words following, for vulg. κατὰ λόγον, I have, with all the recent editors, received the reading κατ' ὀλίγον, (though found in only three MSS.) because of its being so strongly supported by the weight of internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance, that it is a far less usual expression than κατὰ λόγον—that the sense it yields ὀλίγον προσπίπτουσα. 5. εἰ δ' αὖ τῷ ταχυναυτοῦντι ἀθροωτέρῳ, κουφίσαντες, προσβάλοιεν, εἰ μὲν κώπαις χρήσαιντο, ἐπιθείμεθ' ἂν κεκμηκόσιν· εἰ δὲ μὴ δοκοίη, ἔστι καὶ ὑποχωρῆσαι ἡμῖν ἐς Τάραντα. οἱ δὲ, μετ' ὀλίγων ἐφοδίων, ὡς ἐπὶ ναυμαχίᾳ, περαιωθέντες, ἀποροῖεν ἂν κατὰ χωρία ἔρημα, καὶ ἢ, μένοντες, πολιορκοῖντο ἄν, ἢ, πειρώμενοι παραπλεῖν, τήν τε ἄλλην παρασκευὴν ἀπολίποιεν ἂν, καὶ (namely, 'a few at a time') is one more suitable than that arising from the former —and that its propriety is sufficiently defended by its occurrence supra iv. 10, κατ' ὀλίγον μαχεῖται, and v. 9, κατ' ὀλίγον κινδυνεύειν, where it stands opposed to ἅπαντας.

5. τῷ ταχυναυτοῦντι] scil. μέρει, 'with the swift-sailing division of their fleet.' At ἀθροωτέρῳ supply ὄντι. Κουφίσαντες means, 'having cleared ship,' viz. for action. Similarly Dio Cass. ch. 28, 81, ὅπως κουφίσαντες διαφυγῶσι. The term is one frequent in Dio Cass. and Polybius, though only to denote lightening a ship by throwing overboard its lading, &c.; not, as here, to denote merely relieving a ship of all encumbrances for action, as superfluous tackle, baggage, stores, &c.; of which latter use of the term I know of no example elsewhere.

εἰ δὲ μὴ δοκοίη] Supply προσβαλεῖν from προσβάλοιεν preceding. Χωρία ἔρημα: meaning not merely desert and uninhabited, (as in Herodot. v. 9, ἔρημος χώρη,) but also, by implication, parts where supplies cannot be had. So supra iv. 26, 4, ἐν νήσῳ ἐρήμῳ, and Hom. Od. xii. 351, στρεύγεσθαι ἐν νήσῳ ἐρήμῳ. By the particular tracts in question are, I apprehend, meant, those stretching from the eastern sea-coast of Magna Græcia, from Tarentum to Rhegium, extending for about two hundred and thirty miles, with a coast-line rendered singularly bold by the existence of numerous rocky headlands. The country itself was doubtless then, what it is now described as being, namely, 'alike uncultivated and savage.'

πολιορκοῖντο] An expression of which the sense (too obscure to be fixed with certainty) has been variously explained. Some, as Abresch and Dukas, regard it as a brief form of expression, requiring us to supply τῇ ἀπορίᾳ from the foregoing ἀποροῖεν, 'inopiâ oppugnabuntur ac prementur:' while others, as Heilm. and Goeller, explain it to mean, 'fame ad deditionem cogerentur.' But that sense would require, for πολιορκοῖντο, ἐκπολ. to have been written, as infra vii. 14, ἐκπολιορκηθέντων ἡμῶν: and again supra i. 131 & 135. And though Poppo refers to a passage of Leo Diac. x. 4, 6, 9, where such a sense is found; yet that, as merely existing in a writer infimæ Græcitatis, is by no means to be held as any sufficient precedent for an author of so totally different an order as Thucydides. Besides, as Poppo urges, how could the Syracusans, if not able to face the Athenians at sea, have been able to blockade their fleet in any port? Not to say that there is no port that could have received such an armament; nor would the Athenians have landed at any open beach, and drawn the ships on shore, (as they are described as doing, vii. 14.) since they would thus rush on certain ruin. In short, vainly does Goeller maintain the physical force of the term, oppugnare, since if even ἐκπολ. were read, it would lead to a sense embarrassed with difficulties unsurmountable. Hence preferable is the view of Poppo, who adopts the metaphorical sense laid down by Abresch, prementur, vexabuntur, of which an example is adduced by Poppo from Xen. Mem. ii. 1, 17, τὸ σῶμα τοῖς τοιούτοις πολιορκεῖσθαι (viz. with the evils of hunger, thirst, and cold); and he might have added another, from Xen. Mem. ii. 1, 13, πολιορκοῦντες τοὺς ἥττονας, and Lucian, Somn. 29. Yet this view would suppose too great an ambiguity of sense, and such a boldness of expression as were little suited to the occasion, and only adapted to tragic or lyric poetry, or the ambitious style of such rhetorical declaimers as Max. Tyr., Dio Chrys., Aristides, Libanius, and Julian. Hence I would finally acquiesce in the sense, partly physical and partly metaphorical, prementur; supposing that though the Syracusans could not literally besiege the Athenian armament, yet they could hover about continually, and intercept the bringing of provisions whether by sea or land. Such, I would observe, is evidently the sense which the term bears in a passage of Xen. Hist. iv. 7, 1, ὁμοίως ἂν πολιορκεῖσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν τὸν σῖτον φθειρόντων, ὥσπερ εἰ περιστρατοπεδευσάμενοι πολιορκοῖντο (where, for περιστρατοπεδευσάμενοι, read περιστρατοπεδεύομενοι).

παραπλεῖν] Not, 'sailing past Tarentum,' as the Scholiast explains; but, coasting along, namely, on the coast of Magna Græcia and Sicily, as far as Syracuse. Τὴν ἄλλην παρασκευήν: meaning the rest of their armament, namely, the heavier sailing triremes and the transports. The words following, καὶ τὰ τῶν πόλεων — ἀθυμοῖεν, are well explained by the Schol. as equivalent to καὶ, οὐκ εἰδότες βεβαίως, εἰ αἱ πόλεις ὑποδέξονται αὐτοὺς, ἀθυμοῖεν ἄν. With respect to the ἂν before βέβαια ἔχοντες, I agree with Poppo, that, though placed in juxta-position with that participle, yet it does not belong to it, but to the verb ἀθυμοῖεν. Render, 'And not being sure whether,' &c. Here ὑποδέξασθαι bears the same sense as at ch. 22, where see note. The ports here alluded to are Thurii, Croton, Locri Epizephyrii, Rhegium, Messana, Naxos, and Catana.

6. ὥστε—τούτῳ τῷ λογισμῷ—ἀποκλῃομένους] Construe, ὥστε ἔγωγε ἡγοῦμαι αὐτοὺς, τούτῳ τῷ λογισμῷ ἀποκλῃομένους, οὐδ', &c. The term here, ἀποκλῃομένους, (which may be said to partake of a similar obscurity as that involving the term, a little before, πολιορκοῖντο,) is best rendered hindered, prevented, literally, precluded, as meant to denote a situation in which we are prevented from taking any given course by certain reasons which preclude that course. A similar idea of force (from circumstance) is observable in the expression, a little after, ἐξωσθῆναι ἂν τῇ ὥρᾳ ἐς χειμῶνα, of which the sense is, literally, 'will be pushed by the time of year upon the winter season;' i. e., as Bauer explains, 'tempore exclusi in hiemem incidant.' Agreeable to which is the rendering (though somewhat loose and paraphrastic) of Dr. Arnold, 'will be prevented from acting at the proper time by the lateness of the season, so as to be obliged to run their operations into the winter.' Compare Polyb. xvii. 8, 2, βουλόμενος ἐκκλεῖσαι τῷ καιρῷ (i. e. by the lateness of the time) τὴν κατηγορίαν. Plato, p. 487, τελευτῶντες ἀποκλῄονται, i. e. are blockaded up and excluded from τὰ τῶν πόλεων οὐκ ἂν βέβαια ἔχοντες, εἰ ὑποδέξοιντο, ἀθυμοῖεν. 6. ὥστε ἔγωγε τούτῳ τῷ λογισμῷ ἡγοῦμαι ἀποκληομένους αὐτοὺς οὐδ' ἂν ἀπᾶραι ἀπὸ Κερκύρας· ἀλλ' ἢ διαβουλευσαμένους, καὶ κατασκοπαῖς χρωμένους, ὁπόσοι τ' ἐσμὲν καὶ ἐν ᾧ χωρίῳ, ἐξωσθῆναι ἂν τῇ ὥρᾳ ἐς χειμῶνα, ἢ, καταπλαγέντας τῷ ἀδοκήτῳ, καταλῦσαι ἂν τὸν πλοῦν, ἄλλως τε καὶ τοῦ ἐμπειροτάτου τῶν στρατηγῶν, ὡς ἐγὼ ἀκούω, ἄκοντος ἡγουμένου, καὶ ἀσμένου ἂν πρόφασιν λαβόντος, εἴ τι ἀξιόχρεων ἀφ' ἡμῶν ὀφθείη. 7. ἀγγελλοίμεθα δ' ἄν, εὖ οἶδ' ὅτι, ἐπὶ τὸ πλεῖον· τῶν δ' ἀνθρώπων πρὸς τὰ λεγόμενα καὶ αἱ γνῶμαι any course of safety. And evidently imitated from the expression of our author is that of Appian, t. i. 773, ἐξωσθῆναι ἕως χειμῶν ἐπέπεσε.

εἴ τι ἀξιόχρεων — ὀφθείη] The sense here is but imperfectly developed. Adopting the explanation of the words offered by the Scholiast and Portus, 'if any considerable force should be displayed on our part,'—utterly impossible is it to account for the use of the neuter. Hence it is best to suppose ἀξιόχρεων to stand, as at iv. 30, 3, for ἀξιόχρεων πρᾶγμά τι. And so supra ch. 30, fin. ὡς ἀξιόχρεων, scil. τι: and again in Herodot. v. 65, ὅσα ἔρξαν ἀξιόχρεα. Isocr. ad Philip. § 5, πραγματεία ἀξιόχρεως. Render, 'if some considerable action, some exploit of éclat, should be displayed on the part of us;' namely, such as that before mentioned, of meeting the armament at the promontory of Iapygia.

7. ἀγγελλοίμεθα — ἐπὶ τὸ πλεῖον] 'we should be reported at more [than our real strength];' 'report would rate our strength at more than it actually is.' Somewhat rare is this use of ἀγγέλλεσθαι with persons; and still more so (as Poppo remarks) such a usage not followed by an infin. (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 537.) or a participle (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 555, 2). The only example elsewhere that I have noted is in Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 57, (a passage evidently written in imitation of the present,) ἀγγέλλεται τὰ γινόμενα ἐπὶ τὸ φοβερώτατον, where I conjecture φοβερώτερον, since the comparative alone, and not the superlative, is employed in this idiom; and possibly Dionysius had also in view another expression of our author, infra ch. 83, ἐπὶ τὸ φοβερώτερον ὑπονοεῖτε, just as Dio Cass. at p. 507, 78, evidently imitates both passages of our author in the words τῶν ἐν Ῥώμῃ πραττομένων ἐπὶ τὸ φοβερώτερον ἀγγελλομένων. In πλεῖον, which means 'something beyond [the truth],' we have a certain elliptical for the following complete expression in Livy, xxi. 32, ἴστανται· καὶ τοὺς προεπιχειροῦντας, ἢ τοῖς γε ἐπιχειροῦσι προδηλοῦντας ὅτι ἀμυνοῦνται, μᾶλλον πεφόβηνται, ἰσοκινδύνους ἡγούμενοι. 8. ὅπερ ἂν νῦν Ἀθηναῖοι πάθοιεν. ἐπέρχονται γὰρ ἡμῖν ὡς οὐκ ἀμυνουμένοις, δικαίως κατεγνωκότες ὅτι αὐτοὺς οὐ μετὰ Λακεδαιμονίων ἐφθείρομεν· εἰ δ' ἴδοιεν παρὰ γνώμην τολμήσαντας, τῷ ἀδοκήτῳ μᾶλλον ἂν καταπλαγεῖεν ἢ τῇ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀληθοῦς δυνάμει.

'quâ [famâ] incerta in majus vero ferri solent.' Here, as again a little further on, and in another passage, ch. 38, 1, the commas at εὖ οἶδ' ὅτι ought not (as they have been) to be removed, being highly necessary to keep distinct what forms no part of the construction of the sentence, and is purely parenthetical. Wherever the phrase in question forms part of the construction, it is when it stands first in the sentence. Where such is not the case, it is merely meant to be taken parenthetically, in the sense 'that I well know.' And such is its use in Xen. Cyrop. iii. 3, 32, διαλεγομένων περὶ ἡμῶν, ἐγὼ οἶδ' ὅτι, οὐδὲν παύονται, and in Demosth. p. 72, 24, and often in the best Attic writers. Notice of this idiom is found in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 624; though, in ascribing to this inserted phrase the force of our adverb certainly, he too much overlooks its full meaning, which far exceeds that of any such adverb; especially considering that the ὅτι is here not a mere particle, but a pronoun, it. Such it must be, otherwise the formula could not be used, as it sometimes is, at the end of a sentence, as in Eurip. Phœn. 1659. Arist. Lys. 101 and 154, and οἶδ' ὅτι in Soph. Antig. 276, in which case it must be rendered that. Moreover, in Soph. Œd. Tyr. 1438, instead of ὅτι we have, as the metre requires, τοῦτο. Had Musgrave and Matthiæ been aware of the true nature of the formula, they would not have corrupted, as they have done, the text of Eurip. Suppl. 396, Καδμεῖος, ὡς ἔοικεν, οὐ σάφ' οἶδ' ὅτι, Κήρυξ, by introducing, purely on conjecture, the reading Καδμεῖος, ὣς ἔοικεν οὐ σάφ' εἰδότι, Κήρυξ. They stumbled, it seems, at the double insertion there, which is indeed rare. But the harshness that prevails might be lessened by pointing thus: Καδμεῖος, ὡς ἔοικεν—οὐ σάφ' οἶδ' ὅτι—, Κήρυξ. Again, no little force there exists in the words οὐ σάφ' οἶδ' ὅτι (a force destroyed by the above alteration, besides the sense being thus rendered jejune and feeble); for, as Markland observes, he knew by his Caduceus, that the person was a herald, but did not know for a certainty that he was a Theban herald.

τῶν δ' ἀνθρώπων—ἵστανται] A pithy gnome, (similar to that at i. 140, 1.) of which the meaning is, that 'men's opinions do generally set in the direction of what is rumoured:' where, as Bauer remarks, there is a metaphor derived from the winds, to which the sails, when turned, are set. And so in our own language we speak of men's minds being set upon certain objects of desire, that fix the affections to one point as a ship's sails to the trade-wind: an idea doubtless had in view by our author; the expression τὰ λεγόμενα, rumours, suggesting an idea of winds sometimes blowing this way and that, and sometimes taking a steady direction. The same metaphor may be recognised in an ill-understood passage of Æschyl. Choeph. 333, Ἡ πρὸς γυναικῶν δειματούμενοι λόγοι ('rumores ad terrorem confecti') Πεδάρσιοι θρώσκουσι ('sublimes discurrunt, volitant') θνήσκοντες μάτην· literally, 'dying away (like a wind that ceases to blow) without effect,' i. e. so as to be without effect, attaining to no truth.

τοὺς προεπιχειροῦντας] Render, 'those who are prepared to strike the first blow.' Of this word, which is rare, the only examples I have met with elsewhere are in Plut. Dion, ch. 38. Appian, i. 182, and Zonar. Hist. t. ii. 286.

ἢ τοῖς γε—ἀμυνοῦνται] I now assent to the opinion of Bauer, Haack, and Poppo, who suppose the sense to be, 'or [who] at least show beforehand that they will resist attack, repel force by force.' Ἰσοκινδύνους ἡγούμενοι, i. e., as the Scholiast explains, ἰσοπαλεῖς, 'an equal match,' 'regarding them as alike disposed to face dangers.' Comp. Dio Cass. p. 22, 21, and 297, 58, ἰσόῤῥοποι ἀλλήλοις καὶ ἰσοκινδυνοι ἐγίγνοντο.

8. ὅπερ] scil. πεφοβῆσθαι, 'standing in awe.' Δικαίως κατεγνωκότες, 'justly (i. e. with reason) holding us cheap.'

ὅτι αὐτοὺς οὐ μετὰ Λακεδ. ἐφθείρομεν] 'because we do not unite with the Lacedæmonians in destroying them.' Τῷ ἀδοκήτῳ: meaning, as the Schol. explains, τῷ ἀπροσδοκήτους ἡμᾶς αὐτοῖς ἀντιτάξασθαι. Compare a similarly short-cut expression in a kindred passage supra ii. 89, 6, τῷ οὐκ εἰκότι πλέον πεφόβηνται ἡμᾶς ἢ τῇ κατὰ λόγον παρασκευῇ. Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀληθοῦς is a substantival phrase, meaning literally, 'of a truth,' for the adjective τῷ ἀληθεῖ: on which idiom see Abresch in Dilue. p. 602.

9. πείθεσθε οὖν, μάλιστα μὲν ταῦτα † τολμήσαντες, εἰ δὲ μή, ὅτι τάχιστα τἆλλα ἐς τὸν πόλεμον ἑτοιμάζειν, καὶ παραστῆναι παντὶ, τὸ μὲν καταφρονεῖν τοὺς ἐπιόντας ἐν τῶν ἔργων τῇ ἀλκῇ δείκνυσθαι, τὸ δ' ἤδη, τὰς μετὰ φόβου παρασκευὰς ἀσφαλεστάτας νομίσαντας ὡς ἐπὶ † κινδύνου πράσσειν χρησιμώτατον ἂν ξυμβῆναι. 10. οἱ δὲ

πείθεσθε οὖν—τολμήσαντες] The construction here (not a little disputed) depends on the word to which ταῦτα is referred. It may (as it is by Schoemann, Goeller, and Poppo) be referred to πείθεσθε, τολμήσαντες being regarded as added per epexegesin: or it may (as it is by Duk., Bekker, Bauer, and Arnold) be referred to τολμήσαντες. The latter view is, on various grounds, deserving of the preference; for, though it involves a somewhat harsh construction, (requiring τολμήσ. to be taken as standing for πειθ. τολμῆσαι) yet it is sufficiently borne out by the characteristic style of our author; and, while avoiding the very violent transposition which the former would suppose, yields a sense as vigorous as the other does one weak, not to say jejune,—namely, 'parate igitur eo, ita ut audeatis,' 'Be persuaded, then, most of all, to venture on this bold plan; but, if not, to provide as speedily as possible the other measures for the war.' Poppo, indeed, hesitates at the aorist, for which he says a present tense is rather called for. However, it is sufficient to say that the verb has reference, in its result, not to the present, but to the future. And hence, unless the aorist here could (which I consider doubtful) be taken in a future sense, I should think it probable that our author wrote τολμήσοντες, which will yield the required sense, ita ut audeatis. Render, 'Take my advice; above all, so as to adventure on this bold plan, but at any rate to provide for the other emergencies of the war.' As to the variation in construction from the participle to the infinitive, it is no more than what is elsewhere found in our author. In order to avoid the unparalleled harshness of construction which will arise if we suppose παραστῆναι παντι to likewise depend on πείθεσθε,—Portus would supply here δεῖ or χρή. But this is quite inadmissible; and equally such is the expedient proposed by Goeller, namely, to take the infinitive as here standing for an imperative. The difficulty would be best obviated by the reading found in some MSS., παραστήτω, but that that is evidently no more than a gloss proceeding from certain correctors, who thought an imperative sense was here called for, and saw that the infinitive was by no means susceptible of it. As it is, we must suppose that though the reference is indeed to πείθεσθε, yet that, through negligence, certain words are here joined in grammatical construction, which do not readily combine in sense. Allowing, however, a certain modification of meaning to παραστῆναι,—which, as a term somewhat indefinite, may well admit it,—and which, while it signifies properly to occur to the mind, signifies also, by implication, 'to be felt as an abiding thought of sure conviction,'—we may suppose that the full sense here intended is, 'Be persuaded, then, to feel sure that this truth,' &c. (namely, to despise one's foes) is best evinced in prowess of works rather than in contemptuous words. To advert to the construction, the subject to παραστῆναι is, in reality, the enunciation commencing at the words following, τὸ μὲν, &c.; similarly as at iv. 61, 2, παρεστάναι δὲ μηδενὶ ὡς οἱ μὲν, the subject to παρεστάναι is (as Poppo in his note there points out) the enunciation commenced at ὡς οἱ μὲν. &c. With the implied antithesis here, compare that at ii. 41, 1, ἔργου καιρῷ — λόγου κόμπῳ. and again, 41, 2, λόγων κόμπος — ἔργων ἀλήθεια.

In the next words the construction is traced by Goeller as follows: τὸ δ' ἤδη τὰς μετὰ φόβου, ὡς ἐπὶ κινδύνου, παρασκευὰς ἀσφ. νομίσαντας ὡς ἐπὶ κινδύνου πράσσειν χρησιμ. ἂν ξυμβῆναι. He further remarks, that the words ὡς ἐπὶ κινδύνου belong both to φόβου and to πράσσειν. But the words are by no means necessary to come in after τὰς μετὰ φόβου, being implied in the ἤδη, which is here (as not unfrequently in the Attic writers) highly emphatic, meaning, 'at the present moment [of peril].' And such is its force ἄνδρες καὶ ἐπέρχονται, καὶ ἐν πλῷ, εὖ οἶδ' ὅτι, ἤδη εἰσὶ, καὶ ὅσον οὔπω πάρεισιν."

XXXV. Καὶ ὁ μὲν Ἑρμοκράτης τοσαῦτα εἶπε. τῶν δὲ Συρακοσίων ὁ δῆμος ἐν πολλῇ πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἔριδι ἦσαν, οἱ μὲν, ὡς οὐδενὶ ἂν τρόπῳ ἔλθοιεν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, οὐδ' ἀληθῆ ἐστιν ἃ λέγει· τοῖς δὲ, 'εἰ καὶ ἔλθοιεν, τί ἂν δράσειαν αὐτοὺς, ὅ τι οὐκ ἂν μεῖζον ἀντιπάθοιεν;' ἄλλοι δὲ, καὶ πάνυ καταφρονοῦντες, ἐς γέλωτα ἔτρεπον τὸ πρᾶγμα. ὀλίγον δ' ἦν τὸ πιστεῦον τῷ Ἑρμοκράτει, καὶ φοβούμενον τὸ μέλλον. 2. παρελθὼν δ' αὐτοῖς Ἀθηναγόρας, ὃς δήμου τε προστάτης ἦν καὶ ἐν τῷ παρόντι πιθανώτατος τοῖς πολλοῖς, ἔλεγε τοιάδε.

in a passage of the New Testament, Matth. iii. 10, ἤδη δὲ καὶ ἡ ἀξίνη πρὸς τὴν ῥίζαν τῶν δένδρων κεῖται, 'at this moment the axe is being directed at the root of the tree.' With the expression here, τὰς μετὰ φόβου παρασκευὰς, compare a similar one supra ii. 1, χρὴ—δεδιότας παρασκευάζεσθαι.

For vulg. ἐπικινδύνους, which is manifestly corrupt, I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, edited ἐπὶ κινδύνου: and to the five MSS. adduced as having it, I am enabled to add three others, the Clarend., Cantab., and Mus. Br.: not that I consider it as undoubtedly the true reading; for, adopting this, there still remains the difficulty how to account for ς having been thus introduced after the ου preceding, and the circumstance that all the MSS. except eight have either ἐπικινδύνους or ἐπὶ κινδύνους. Insomuch that one might suspect the true reading to be ἐπὶ κινδύνοις, did not the phrase ἐπὶ κινδύνων, (similarly used,) occurring in Xen. Mag. Eq. iv. 5, seem to confirm the reading here, ἐπὶ κινδύνου. Though, even there, Xenophon may possibly have written ἐπὶ κινδύνῳ: and certainly I know no other instance of the genitive.

10. οἱ δὲ ἄνδρες — πάρεισιν] Render, 'But the men are both advancing against us, and are, I well know, already on the voyage, and are all but at hand.' For examples of the phrase ὅσον οὔπω πάρεισιν, see my note in Translation.

Ch. XXXV. 1. οἱ μὲν] scil. ἐρίζοντες, taken from ἔριδι: as we should say, 'contending,' 'strenuously maintaining.' Οὐδενί: answering to our old phrase 'in no wise.' At τοῖς δὲ I would now supply, with Abresch and Poppo, ἦν ἔρις, i. e. λόγος ἐριστικὸς, from which must be supplied ἐριστικῶς λέγοντες ὅτι at the subsequent words εἰ καὶ ἔλθοιεν. A similar variation of construction is adduced by Bauer from ch. 24, and an instance of a similar ellipsis to that to be supplied from ἔριδι ἦσαν, is noted by Poppo in a passage of similar character to the present, of Eurip. Phœn. 1474, seqq. Ἀνῆξε δ' ὀρθὸς λαὸς εἰς ἔριν λόγων, Ἡμεῖς μὲν ὡς νικῶντα δεσπότην ἐμὸν, Οἱ δ' ὡς ἐκεῖνον· ἦν δ' ἔρις στρατηλάταις, Οἱ μὲν πατάξαι πρόσθε Πολυνείκην δορὶ, Οἱ δ' ὡς θανόντων οὐδαμοῦ νίκη πέλοι.

τί ἂν δράσειαν—ἀντιπάθοιεν] Compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. 81, p. 210, εἰπὼν ὡς τῷ δράσαντι δεινὰ τὸ ἀντιπαθεῖν ('suffer from them in return') οὐ περὶ ἄλλου τινὸς μᾶλλον, ἢ τοῦ πεπονθότος ὀφείλεται. By μεῖζον understand greater in degree, worse. Καὶ πάνυ καταφρονοῦντες, 'even out of mere contempt.' With the phrase ἐς γέλωτα ἔτρεπον τὸ πρᾶγμα, compare Aristoph. Vesp. 1235, ἐς γέλων τὸ πρᾶγμ' ἔτρεψας. Herodot. vii. 105, εἰς γέλωτα ἐτρέψατο. Lucian, t. iii. 398, εἰς γέλωτα φέρειν τί. Also in Gen. xix. 14, the equivalent phrase ἔδοξε δὲ γελοιάζειν, &c. At ὀλίγον ἦν supply τὸ μέρος.

2. δήμου προστάτης] As respects the force of this expression, which is found also at iii. 75, and iv. 46, and in Xenophon and other writers, I agree with Müller and Arnold, that it denotes not only (what Wachsmuth and Bp. Thirlwall suppose to be meant) 'one invested with a sort of tribunician character, as the official advocate of the commonalty, but that, considering its occurrence three or four times in our author, twice in Xenophon, and twice in Æneas Tact., and also taking into account the existence, in modern times, of the name capitano e dispensore del popolo, given to a particular magistrate at Florence and at Milan, whose business it was to act as guardian of the people,—it denotes the official title of magistrate, corresponding to the tribunus populi at Rome, whose business it was to act for the people, by taking care of their interests: for that is the leading idea involved in the term here, and not that of defending, which came to be such afterwards.' So in Plato, p. 766, are combined the two terms προστάτης and ἐπιμελητὴς as follows: τοῦτον—αὐτοῖς καθιστάντα προστάτην καὶ ἐπιμελητήν. And in Pollux, viii. 84, are similarly joined the terms προηγεμόνα, προστάτην, ἐπιμελητήν. So also Herodot. ii. 178, προστάτας τῶν ἐμπορίου, for ἐπιμελ.

XXXVI. "Τοὺς μὲν Ἀθηναίους ὅστις μὴ βούλεται οὕτω κακῶς φρονῆσαι,—καὶ ὑποχειρίους ἡμῖν γενέσθαι ἐνθάδε ἐλθόντας,—ἢ δειλός ἐστιν, ἢ τῇ πόλει οὐκ εὔνους· τοὺς δ' ἀγγέλλοντας τὰ τοιαῦτα, καὶ περιφόβους ὑμᾶς ποιοῦντας, τῆς μὲν τόλμης οὐ θαυμάζω, τῆς δὲ ἀξυνεσίας, εἰ μὴ ο�ίονται ἔνδηλοι εἶναι. 2. οἱ γὰρ δεδιότες ἰδίᾳ τι βούλονται τὴν πόλιν ἐς ἔκπληξιν καθιστάναι, ὅπως τῷ κοινῷ φόβῳ τὸ σφέτερον ἐπηλυγάζωνται. καὶ νῦν αὗται αἱ ἀγγελίαι τοῦτο

Ch. XXXVI. This oration totally differs in its character from the former. While that is grave, dignified, and truly pathetic without party-spirit, this is the declamation, however able, of a popular orator dealing chiefly in invective, calumny, and minatory language. Its commencement without any thing in the way of preface was probably characteristic of Athenagoras as well as Alcibiades.

1. τοὺς μὲν Ἀθηναίους, &c.] The words are, as Bauer observes, so placed, however suspended on ὅστις μὴ βούλεται, on account of the antithesis in τοὺς δ' ἀγγέλλοντας. The word βούλεται is highly significant, and perhaps even emphatic; the reasoning being, that 'however every Syracusan ought to wish that the Athenians would come,—it would not be credited that prudent persons would act so madly.'

καὶ ὑποχειρίους—ἐλθόντας] Bauer and Poppo take the καὶ as standing for the more usual ὥστε after οὕτω. But that, though a common mode of treating the particle καὶ, is any thing but satisfactory; and indeed needless is it to resort to such a method of accounting for its use, since the καὶ may very well retain its usual copulative force; for the οὕτω does not need any ὡς or ὥστε to correspond to it. So in a passage of the New Testament, Galatians iii. 3, we have, οὕτως ἀνόητοί ἐστε; ἐναρξάμενοι πνεύματι, νῦν σαρκὶ ἐπιτελεῖσθε; 'are ye so foolish [as to do so]?' for there, as in many such cases, the apodosis is left to be mentally supplied. Here there is some harshness occasioned by the subjoined words καὶ ὑποχειρίους—ἐλθόντας: but these may be considered as hyperparenthetic, and rendered, 'having come hither to fall into our clutches.' The clause in the antithetic member of the sentence, καὶ περιφόβους ὑμᾶς ποιοῦντας, corresponds to the present, except that, from there being there no οὕτω, as here, no difficulty thus exists, the sense being, 'and [thereby] throw you into consternation.'

τοὺς δ' ἀγγέλλοντας — τῆς τόλμης οὐ θαυμάζω] Literally, 'I do not wonder at them for their audacity.' The genitives τόλμης and ἀξυνεσίας are genitives of cause: and hence there is no occasion to supply, with the Scholiast, ἕνεκα. Compare with the present the similar form of expression θαυμάζω τῆς σοφίας, and others adduced in Kühn. Gr. § 495, Jelf. Ἔνδηλοι εἶναι, 'to be detected.'

2. οἱ γὰρ δεδιότες, &c.] The speaker here adverts to a class of persons distinct from those who disseminate terrific rumours to work certain purposes of their own,—namely, those who are simply frightened, and act on that impulse only. Render, 'For [as to] those who are, on some private interest, afraid, — they wish to throw the city into consternation, in order that,' &c. For τὸ σφέτερον, one might have expected τὸν σφέτερον, which, indeed, is found in a certain quotation of this passage by Erotian, and seems to have been read by the Scholiast. But the common reading is defended by the authority of all the MSS., and by what is no other than a transcript of these words of our author, a passage of Dexipp. tom. i. p. 18, D, (contained in Corp. Byz. Hist.) ὅπως ἂν τὸ σφέτερον δέος ἐπηλυγάζωνται, from which words it clearly appears that that writer supposed (what Abresch and others have done) that at τὸ σφέτερον is to be supplied δέος from the foregoing δεδιότες.

ὅπως ἐπηλυγάζωνται] Render, 'that they may conceal, or hide.' The term ἐπηλυγάζεσθαι (derived from ἐπὶ and ἠλύγη, a shadow, of which word, though rare, an example occurs in Aristoph. Acharn. 682, τῆς δίκης τὴν ἠλύγην, 'the covering up, or hiding, of justice') signifies obumbrare, 'to cast a shade or veil over in order to hide any object;' (as in passages of Diog. Laert. and other writers referred to by Steph. in his Thes., Wasse, and Duk.) also, figuratively, to conceal, as in Plato, p. 207, τούτους ἐπηλυγασάμενος. Dio Cass. p. 884, τὴν φιλίαν ἐπηλυγαζόμενος, and 992 and 1323. Plut. de Isid. et Os. § 46, ἐπηλυγιζόμενος καὶ περικαλυπτόμενος. Such, too, is the use of obumbrare in Latin, as in the phrase crimen obumbrare occurring in Ovid, and simulationem obumbrare in Petronius. Finally, the difference between the active and middle is, that ἐπηλυγάζειν signifies 'to cover any one over,' viz. with a shade or veil; and ἐπηλυγάζεσθαι, 'to cover oneself over,' i. e. 'to hide oneself.' Sometimes, however, (as here and in various passages of other writers,) it is used as a mere deponent.

τοῦτο δύνανται] Meaning, eo spectant, id sibi volunt, 'this is their purpose,' viz. to hide the terror of individual cowardice under the common fear. The next words, οὐκ ἀπὸ ταὐτομάτου — ξύγκεινται, are illustrative, being meant to further unfold the sense, which is more plainly expressed, 'they have not arisen fortuitously, from mere chance, as it were of themselves,' as is the case with the rumours in question. Compare Æschin. contr. Tim. § 127, p. 18, ἀπὸ ταὐτομάτου πλανᾶται φήμη κατὰ τὴν πόλιν, and § 145, p. 47, where φήμη is defined to be ὅταν τὸ πλῆθος πολιτῶν αὐτόματον ἐκ μηδεμιᾶς προφάσεως λέγῃ τινὰ, ὡς γεγενημένην πρᾶξιν.

ἀεὶ τάδε κινοῦσι] 'are always stirring these matters.' Ξύγκεινται, componuntur, 'are put together;' as we should say, manufactured.

3. ἄνθρωποι δεινοὶ καὶ πολλῶν ἔμπειροι] Here, for πολλῶν, Lennep on Phal. p. 129, would read (what he had already proposed to do in that passage) πολέμων. But the alteration, scarcely justifiable there, were still less so here, the word πολλῶν being sufficiently defended by such passages as Isocr. Panath. § 90, ἄνδρα δεινὸν καὶ πολλῶν ἔμπειρον (a passage probably written with a view to the present). Hdot. v. 23, ἀνδρὶ δεινῷ τε καὶ σοφῷ. Plato, p. 133, πολλῶν—ἔμπειρος ὤν, and p. 320, πολλῶν ἔμπειρον. Moreover, it is political prudence and sagacity, and practised skill in state-affairs, (the term δεινοὶ standing for what the Schol. explains it by, συνετοὶ, φρόνιμοι,) that are here adverted to, and not skill in war; there being at πολλῶν an ellipsis of πραγμάτων, which word is expressed in two passages of Plato, p. 89 and 601.

4. καταλελυμένους] On this use of the perfect tense in a deponent sense, see Valcken. on Herodot. viii. 140, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 493.

CH. XXXVII. 1. διαπολεμῆσαι] 'to carry the war through successfully:' a sense which the word bears also at viii. 14 & 25. Ὅσῳ. Render, 'by how much,' 'in proportion as.' So ii. 47, ὅσῳ καὶ μάλιστα προσῄεσαν, and i. 68, ὅσῳ καὶ μέγιστα ἐγκλήματα ἔχομεν.

μέγα—κομισθῆναι] Arnold has, on the suggestion of Abresch, thrown these words into a parenthesis; by which, he thinks, παρασκευὴν, ὅσην δεῖ, ἐπὶ πόλιν τοσήνδε πορισθῆναι, οὐκ ὀλίγην οὖσαν. 2. ὥστε, — παρὰ τοσοῦτον γιγνώσκω, — μόλις ἄν μοι δοκοῦσιν, εἰ πόλιν ἑτέραν τοσαύτην, ὅσαι Συράκουσαί εἰσιν, ἔλθοιεν ἔχοντες, καὶ ὅμορον οἰκήσαντες, τὸν πόλεμον ποιοῖντο, οὐκ ἂν παντάπασι διαφθαρῆναι, ἥπου γε δὴ ἐν πάσῃ πολεμίᾳ Σικελίᾳ the perplexity of former editions is removed. But such a method as this, in order to be effectual, ought to be entirely free from objection on the score either of requiring the words to be altered, or on that of the construction of the rest of the sentence being necessarily connected with that of the words proposed to be thus placed in parenthesis; in which case the prisoners so unjustly put in limbo will make their escape! Now both these objections apply to the above method; since 1. Dr. Arnold himself is obliged to construe as though οὔτε τὴν ἄλλην, and not τήν τε ἄλλην, had been written; and 2. considering that the last clause is rather suited to the parenthesis than to its own proper government — οἷς γ' ἐπίσταμαι — he makes, as Poppo truly remarks, an admission which effectually excludes his own punctuation. What Thucydides means is (as Goeller and Poppo are agreed) this: 'difficile est enim vel cum solis navibus κούφαις trajicere, et pariter difficile est reliquum apparatum [præter naves] adversus tantam urbem comparare.' Thus, as Goeller observes, 'a distinction is instituted between the trajectum (κομισθῆναι) navium, and the paratum (πορισθῆναι) rerum adversus tantam urbem necessarium.'

To advert to the phraseology in particular, at μέγα is to be supplied ἔργον, which is expressed in Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 26, Th. μέγα ἔργον ἀρχὴν καταπρᾶξαι. Of the elliptical expression examples are found also in Plato, p. 977, καίτοι μέγα μὲν καὶ τοῦτο. Herodot. vii. 36, μέγα τι, opposed to ἐλαφρὸν, and Plato, p. 287, οὐ μέγα, and p. 255, οὐδὲν μέγα. Of αὐτὸς thus bearing the sense solus, examples occur also ii. 65. iv. 49. 113, & 120. v. 60.

2. ὥστε, παρὰ τοσοῦτον γιγνώσκω] I have here followed Bauer, Bekker, and Goeller in placing a comma after ὥστε, such being called for by the sense, which is, 'so that, insomuch that, or such being the case;' for this is one of those cases in which we have that use, treated of in Hoog. de Part. p. 598, 24, by which the particle serves to a fuller demonstration of any truth, to the proof of which it adds the corona, equal to οὖν, as in 1 Cor. xv. 58, ὥστε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοί, ἑδραῖοι γίνεσθε, and xiv. 39, ὥστε, ἀδελφοί, ζηλοῦτε τὸ προφητεύειν.

The words παρὰ τοσοῦτον γιγνώσκω are parenthetic; though, from the extreme brevity which characterizes them, their sense is far from clear. In my former edition I explained it to be, 'so far am I from thinking [so],' viz. as Hermocrates and others do, that the danger is both real and impending, and such as to require preparations being made on our part with fear. This, however, Dr. Arnold pronounces to be nonsense: though on what ground he does not show. As to the interpretation of the words proposed by Dr. Arnold himself, (which is no other than that formerly brought forward by Reiske, Gail, and Bauer,)—'so strong is my opinion of this subject, to such a length do I carry it,'—this involves a sense too jejune to deserve a moment's attention. And the proof he adduces from Vig. p. 648, to establish the point that παρὰ τοσοῦτον may mean, 'to such a degree,' is invalid; since the writer from whom it is derived may fairly be presumed to be one infimæ Græcitatis. I will only add, that my interpretation of the words is supported by the opinion of Goeller, who renders, 'tantum abest, ut sentiam [quemadmodum ceteri].' See also Matth. Gr. Gr. § 588.

ἥπου γε δή] 'multo magis saltem:' which falls under that rule laid down in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 604, of ἥπου δή as used in the apodosis, after an hypothetical proposition, but following as a consequence from the preceding, ('in argumento à minori ad majus,) as in Isocr. p. 164. Here, however, (and in a kindred passage of i. 142, ἥπου δὴ ἐν πολεμίᾳ τε,) there is nothing hypothetical, neither is there here going before, as Matthiæ supposes, a negative proposition; though there may be an argument à minori ad majus: for, notwithstanding that the literal sense is minime ni, that, by implication, conveys the meaning of multo magis. Of this form of expression ἥπου γε δή an example is adduced in Hoogev. de Part. 265, from Aristot. Pol. ii. 5, τοῦτο δὲ στάσεως αἴτιον γίγνεται καὶ παρὰ τοῖς μηδὲν ἀξίωμα κεκτημένοις, ἥπου γε δὴ παρά γε θυμοειδέσι καὶ πολεμικοῖς ἀνδράσι: and he might have added another from Herodot. ii. 11, ἐγὼ μὲν γὰρ ἔλπομαί γε καὶ μυρίων ἐντὸς χωσθῆναι ἄν· κοῦ (for ποῦ or ἤπου) γε ἔῃ, ἐν τῷ προαναισιμωμένῳ χρόνῳ πρότερον ἢ ἐμὲ γενέσθαι; κ.τ.λ. With the interposed ξυστήσεται γὰρ (seil. ἡ Σικελία, meaning its cities) compare supra ch. 33, πάντα γὰρ ὑπὸ δέους ξυνίσταται.

στρατοπέδῳ τε — ἐξιόντες] No inconsiderable difficulty here exists, both as regards the construction,—which is somewhat anomalous,—and the import of some of the terms employed, as στρατοπέδῳ, ἱδρυθέντι, and ἀναγκαίας,—terms admitting of more than one sense, and hence variously understood. Στρατοπέδῳ is by Bredow and Haack joined with ἐξιόντες, and made to depend on the foregoing ἐν, in the sense with. This view, however, involves something very irregular; and how the with can apply, as it must, to παρασκευῆς, it is not easy to see. Again, assigning to στρατοπέδῳ (as does Goeller) the sense army, we are thus obliged to render, 'with an army, and with an apparatus;' thus supposing an ellipsis which, though propounded by the Scholiast and approved by Dobree, rests on no solid foundation. Rejecting, then, this view, we cannot do better than abide by the interpretation of the word long ago adopted by Portus and Hobbes, (and subsequently embraced by Arnold and Poppo,) namely, castris, 'camp.' Accordingly I would render στρατοπέδῳ 'at a camp,' regarding this as a dative of circumstance, (see Jelf's Kühn. Gr. § 603.) or perhaps mere locality, (see Jelf's Kühn. Gr. § 605.) to denote what might have been expressed by an ἐπί: though here we may be permitted to repeat ἐν from the preceding; which will come to the same thing.

Of the term ἱδρυθέντι the sense may very well be, (as it is explained by Bredow,) pitched, formed; since, as Poppo remarks, we have elsewhere, at vi. 4, ἱδρυθῆναι βωμούς, and ii. 15, ἱερὰ ἵδρυται. Ἐκ νεῶν Arnold and Goeller take to mean, 'by men landed from the ships.' But rather than suppose so much left to be supplied, I prefer, with Poppo, to explain the sense of [ἐν] στρατοπέδῳ ἐκ νεῶν ἱδρυθέντι to be, 'in a camp formed from ships,' meaning the fleet; thus regarding the expression as nearly equivalent to ἐν στρατοπέδῳ, in castris nauticis. Such, too, is the import of τῷ στρατοπέδῳ at i. 117, and vii. 23, and also in Xen. Hist. i. 6. 21, and 37, and not unfrequently in Herodian, as is testified by Schaefer on Steph. Thes. in voc. Now this camp is here said to be ἐκ νεῶν, because formed out of materials from the fleet, and dependent on it for support.

The words following, ἐκ σκηνιδίων καὶ ἀναγκαίας παρασκευῆς, connect, not (as some have supposed) with ἐξιόντες, but, as Didot and others are agreed, depend, like στρατοπέδῳ τε ἐκ νεῶν ἱδρυθέντι, on all the words from ἤπου γε to παρασκευῆς or δοκοῦσιν — διαφθαρῆναι. They are meant to further develop the idea contained in ἐκ νεῶν, and there may be, as Dr. Arnold thinks, an ellipsis of ὁρμώμενοι or such like; not, however, as understood to mean, what he assigns as the sense, 'beginning their operations with, as a base on which to rest them;' but as taken in the sense which ὁρμεῖσθαι bears at ii. 65, ἐπ' ἐλασσόνων ὁρμώμενος, and i. 141, ἀπὸ τοσῶνδε ὁρμώμενοι, where render, 'proceeding from, or upon, as means or resources.' By these σκηνίδια καὶ ἀναγκαία παρασκευὴ are meant, certain poor wretched tents, and such equipments, consisting of stores of every kind, both food and clothing, as might be made shift with, rather than were sufficient; for such the Scholiast and Goeller rightly explain to be the sense intended in the term ἀναγκαίας, which is equivalent to the German nothdürftig and our make-shifty. Comp. ὅπλισιν ἀναγκαίαν at v. 8.

In the words following, οὐκ ἐπὶ πολὺ — ἐξιόντες, the participle ἐξιόντες forms together with the subject of the preceding sentence, αὐτοὶ (the Athenians), nominatives absolute for genitives absolute, (as at iii. 53, θεῶν δὲ φόβος ἢ ἀνθρώπων νόμος οὐδεὶς ἀπεῖργε, seil. αὐτούς, which is equivalent to θεῶν φόβῳ ἢ ἀνθρώπων νόμῳ οὐδενὶ ἀπειργόντων) and consequently αὐτοὶ can be fetched out of it. So also supra iii. 36, we have, ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς (equiv. to ἐψηφίσαντο)—ἐπικαλοῦντες, seil. αὐτοὶ, and at iv. 108, καὶ γὰρ ἐφαίνετο αὐτοῖς (equiv. to ἠγοῦντο)—κρίνοντες, seil. αὐτοῖς. Of οὐκ ἐπὶ πολὺ ἐξιόντες the real sense is, 'they not being able to stir far out of the camp.' And in ὑπὸ τῶν ἡμετέρων ἱππέων we have, as the Scholiast points out, a brief mode of expression for εἰργόμενοι ὑπὸ τῶν ἡμετέρων ἱππέων, and consequently the words should be pointed off, as standing for a clausula.

3. οὐδ' ἂν κρατῆσαι αὐτοὺς τῆς γῆς] This is not well rendered by Portus, 'ne quidem potituros terra;' nor by Didot, 'devenir maitre de la campagne:' for by τῆς γῆς (as appears from the words preceding, οὐκ ἐπὶ πολὺ ἐξιέναι — ὑπὸ τῶν ἱππέων) can only be meant that part of the land on which they might endeavour to effect a landing. And so in my Translation it is rendered, that 'they would not even effect a landing;' the expression being thus considered as equivalent to what the Scholiast explains it by, ἀποβῆναι εἰς τὴν γῆν. But the meaning of the term κρατῆσαι is rather, to obtain possession of by getting firm hold of, as iii. 47, ὅπλων ἐκράτησεν, & iii. 23, ἐκεκρατήκεσαν τοῦ πύργου. Hdot. iv. 111, τῶν νεκρῶν ἐκράτησαν· and such is occasionally the use of potiri in Latin. And so I would understand a passage of Virg. Æn. i. 172, 'ac, magno telluris amore Egressi, optatâ potiuntur Troës arenâ:' meaning, that 'they were glad to get fast hold of it:' a strong sense, indeed, but one confirmed and illustrated by a yet stronger one in Hom. Od. v. 463, (which passage is supposed to have been in the mind of Virgil,) κύσε δὲ ζείδωρον ἄρουραν.

Ch. XXXVIII. 1. τὰ σφέτερα αὐτῶν—σώζουσι] Render, 'they are keeping what they have,' i. e. they are occupied in so doing; a sense required by the antithetic term λογοποιοῦσι.

καὶ ἐνθένδε, &c.] Render, 'and that persons here (meaning Hermocrates' party) are disseminating reports which neither are nor can be true.' Compare Lucian, t. iii. 19, οὔτε ὄντος—οὔτε γενόμενά ποτε (where, for οὔτε, before γενόμενα, I conjecture οὔτ' ἄν). Of the phrase ἐνθένδε ἄνδρες another example occurs at vi. 10; and similar is the use of αὐτόθεν at v. 83. Both are found in Aristoph. Acharn. 116, κοὐχ ὅπως οὐκ εἰσὶν ἐνθένδ' αὐτόθεν. As confirmatory of the sense assigned by the Scholiast to λογοποιοῦσιν, namely, συντιθέασι ψευδέσι λόγοις, comp. Theophr. Char. Eth. in the treatise περὶ λογοποιίας, where we have, ἡ δὲ λογοποιία ἐστὶ σύνθεσις ψευδῶν λόγων καὶ πράξεων ὧν βούλεται ὁ λογοποιῶν.

3. καὶ δέδοικα μέντοι] The particle μέντοι has here, I apprehend, that sense which our however occasionally bears,—namely, at least, at any rate: the argument being, 'I have always fully known these arts to obtain the government of the state; and I fear, at any rate, lest, after long trying, they should one day carry their ends:' or rather each particle may be said to retain its usual force, which will appear by tracing the ratiocination. So here, 'He well knows and is inclined to hope: and yet he fears lest,' &c.

ἡμεῖς δὲ κακοί — ἐπεξελθεῖν] Render, 'and, lest we be too sluggish to foreguard, until we are suffering under the evil, and after perceiving [their machinations], to proceed against them:' where, as Goeller very properly points out, ὦμεν is to be repeated after προφυλάξασθαι, the full construction being, ἡμεῖς δὲ μὴ κακοὶ ὦμεν προφυλάξασθαι, πρὶν ἐν τῷ παθεῖν ὦμεν. By κακοί is meant, 'sluggish from timidity.' So Æschyl. Theb. 612, οὐδὲ λήματος κακῆ.

5. ὑμᾶς τοὺς πολλούς] 'you the many,' (i. e. the people,) as opposed to τοὺς

τὰ τοιαῦτα μηχανωμένους κολάζων, μὴ μόνον αὐτοφώρους (χαλεπὸν γὰρ ἐπιτυγχάνειν), ἀλλὰ καὶ ὧν βούλονται μὲν, δύνανται δ' οὔ (τὸν γὰρ ἐχθρὸν οὐχ ὧν δρᾷ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς διανοίας προαμύνεσθαι χρὴ, εἴπερ καὶ μὴ προφυλαξάμενός τις προπείσεται)· τοὺς δ' αὖ ὀλίγους τὰ μὲν ἐλέγχων, τὰ δὲ φυλάσσων, τὰ δὲ καὶ διδάσκων· μάλιστα γὰρ δοκῶ ἄν μοι οὕτως ἀποτρέπειν τῆς κακουργίας. 6. καὶ δῆτα,—ὃ πολλάκις ἐσκεψάμην,—τί καὶ βούλεσθε, ὦ νεώτεροι; πότερον ἄρχειν ἤδη; ἀλλ' οὐκ ἔννομον. ὁ δὲ νόμος ἐκ ὀλίγους, the optimates. Τὸν ἐχθρὸν, 'the enemy,' singular, in collective sense, to signify 'our enemies.' So Eurip. frag. incert. 103, νόμοι τὸν ἐχθρὸν δρᾶν, ὅπου λάβῃς, κακῶς. and Temen. frag. ix. 2. The idiom is one of frequent occurrence in the Sept.

εἴπερ καὶ μὴ προφυλαξάμενός τις προπείσεται] 'seeing that he who uses not foreguard, will be the first to suffer;' 'qui non præcaverit, is præpatietur.' In this peculiar sense the word occurs also at iii. 82, 9, ἀντιτιμωρήσασθαί τέ τινα περὶ πλείονος ἦν, ἢ αὐτὸν μὴ προπαθεῖν, the only example elsewhere that I know of. Something, indeed, very nearly approaching to it is found in the term noted in Steph. Thes. εὐπροπαθὼν, but that is evidently a corrupt reading, for which the true one is undoubtedly εὖ προπαθὼν, equivalent to ὁ προπαθὼν εὖ, 'qui prius beneficio est affectus,' i. e. the party that has been the first to benefit by the friendship.

In the next words, τοὺς δ' αὖ ὀλίγους—κακουργίας, Athenagoras adverts to the three especial modes in which he proposes to deter the Few (i. e. the oligarchical party) from their κακουργία, or malpractices — 1. by bringing to light their evil designs; 2. by guarding against them; and 3. by counselling and admonishing the persons who harbour such evil designs. And here, I would notice, ἐλέγχων should not be rendered coarguens, 'reproving;' any more than in a passage of the New Testament, Ephes. v. 11, ἐλέγχετε (scil. τὰ ἔργα τοῦ σκότους). In either passage the sense is simply, 'to bring to light,' as in Artemid. i. 155, τὰ κρυπτὰ ἐλέγχει, and elsewhere. By φυλάσσων is meant, 'keeping a watchful eye to;' and διδάσκων is here to be taken not in its general sense teaching, but that of counselling and admonishing them to desist,—a sense which the word bears both in the classical and scriptural writers. See my Lexicon of the New Testament.

So speaking, then, he intimates that he shall, for his part, be at his post to protect the commonalty from the machinations of its oligarchical foes: language tending strongly to confirm the opinion before adverted to, that Athenagoras was filling a sort of tribunician office.

6. Here Athenagoras proceeds to apostrophize the most active members of the party opposed to him, in two leading questions, as to what is their real aim, — whether to bear rule now, — or, not to be on an equal footing with the multitude. To each of which questions he gives a brief reply, conveying dignified expostulation and reproof of the folly as well as criminality of their designs; which is further carried out in the subsequent chapter, and then followed up by grave and serious warning to desist from such detected and guarded-against malpractices. First, then, the speaker employs expostulation, and that ushered in by the expressive formula καὶ δῆτα, of which examples are found in Xenophon, Plato, and other good writers; where the δῆτα may best be rendered now, it being a particle highly suitable to exhortation, deprecation, and, what is here particularly conveyed, expostulation. Here, however, it seems closely connected with the καὶ in τί καὶ βούλεσθε following, (the intermediate words ὃ πολλάκις ἐσκεψάμην being parenthetical,) and accordingly may be said to stand for καὶ τι δῆτα; 'et quidnam tandem, or quæso, sibi vultis?' Compare Plato, p. 236, τί δῆτα στρέφει; and 279, τί δῆτα τοῦτ' ἐδράσαμεν; Aristoph. Plut. 39. Eurip. Hec. 814, τί δῆτα θνητοὶ—μοχθοῦμεν; Here ἐσκεψάμην is, as the Scholiast points out, for κατ' ἐμαυτὸν ἐπὶ συννοίας ἔσχον, 'I have attentively considered with myself;' a sense also found at i. 91, and in Æschyl. Prom. 1016. Thus addressing the oligarchical party, the speaker employs, by which to designate them, the term νεώτεροι, adverting chiefly to the young nobles, always the most violent maintainers of the power of an aristocracy. See note on v. 81, οἱ χίλιοι—οἱ λογάδες. The ἤδη after ἄρχειν alludes to the persons in question not being τοῦ μὴ δύνασθαι ὑμᾶς μᾶλλον ἢ δυναμένους ἐτέθη ἀτιμάζειν. ἀλλὰ δὴ μὴ μετὰ πολλῶν ἰσονομεῖσθαι; καὶ πῶς δίκαιον τοὺς αὐτοὺς μὴ τῶν αὐτῶν ἀξιοῦσθαι; XXXIX. yet of age to hold offices of state. Compare vi. 12, νεώτερος ὢν ἔτι ἐς τὸ ἄρχειν. The next words, ὁ δὲ νόμος, &c., are meant to justify the law by which νεώτεροι ('younkers') were excluded from office. Render, 'the law was promulgated rather that you are unable to govern, than to put a slight upon you, though possessed of the power.'

ἀλλὰ δὴ μὴ μετὰ πολλῶν ἰσονομεῖσθαι;] 'But is it forsooth that you wish not to be on a footing of merely equal rights with the many?' See notes on iii. 82, and iv. 78. Of the word ἰσονομεῖσθαι I have not met with an example elsewhere; but I would compare ἐξισον., found in Hesych. i. p. 842. To this question the answer is, καὶ πῶς — ἀξιοῦσθαι; 'And how [can it be], just that the same [fellow] men should not be thought worthy of receiving (should not receive) the same political rights?' Τῶν αὐτῶν, scil. ἴσων. The argument is, that the multitude being the same, (i. e. naturally equal,) ought to enjoy equal privileges with the higher classes. On the contrary, those classes (as is implied in the preceding clause) thought it not right to have only equal privileges with them, though themselves not equal. Aristotle, in his Pol. v. 3, well states the claims of each, and the grounds of their discontent, as follows: στασιάζουσι δ' ἐν ὀλιγαρχίαις οἱ πολλοὶ, ὡς ἀδικούμενοι, ὅτι οὐ μετέχουσι τῶν ἴσων, ἴσοι ὄντες· ἐν δὲ ταῖς δημοκρατίαις οἱ γνώριμοι, ὅτι μετέχουσι τῶν ἴσων, οὐκ ἴσοι ὄντες.

CH. XXXIX. 1. φήσει τις — βελτίστους] Here the speaker has recourse to the third of the above-mentioned methods of deterring the oligarchical party from carrying into execution their designs,—namely, that denoted by the term διδάσκειν: and he introduces what he has to say with a formula adapted to preoccupy an objection which the adversary is supposed to make: 'A man may say,' &c. Of φήσει in this sort of formula I have met with only one example elsewhere, Jos. Bell. iii. 8, 5. In Xen. Cyr. iv. 3, 3, we have, ἀλλ' ἐρεῖ τις — ὅτι. Eurip. Phœn. 583, and Suppl. 314, ἐρεῖ δέ δή τις, and Bacch. 204.

οὔτε ξυνετὸν οὔτ' ἴσον εἶναι] 'is neither well-judged (as we should say, sensible) nor equitable.' This use of ξυνετὸς, as said of things, is very rare. The only examples that I have noted of it elsewhere are, Lucian, i. 349, ταῦτα ξυνετώτερα εἶναι. Eurip. Phœn. 501, συνετά μοι δοκεῖ λέγειν, and a passage of the Old Testament, Isaiah xxxii. 8, οἱ δὲ εὐσεβεῖς συνετὰ ἐβουλεύσαντο: whence I am of opinion that here ξυνετὸν is of the neuter gender, τι (scil. χρῆμα) being understood; otherwise it would have been ξυνετὴν and ἴσην. By τοὺς δ' ἔχοντας—βελτίστους it is meant, that 'those who have property are also the fittest to govern well.' In οἱ ἔχοντες τὰ χρήματα we have the full phrase for the more usual brief one, οἱ ἔχοντες, 'the have-somethings,' as opposed to the οἱ οὐκ ἔχοντες. Βελτίστους here stands, as often, for ἐπιτηδειοτάτους.

δῆμον ξύμπαν ὠνομάσθαι, &c.] 'That democracy is a name for the whole, but oligarchy, only for a part:' meaning, that the very name having reference to the whole, while ὀλιγαρχία (the invidious term for ἀριστοκρατία) only to a part, is a circumstance that claims preference. The literal sense is, that 'democracy was so named (or, had its name) as embracing the whole together; oligarchy, only a part.' So ὀνομάζεσθαι is used at iv. 98. 6, παρανομίαν—ὠνομασθῆναι. With this panegyric on democracy compare that in Herodot. iii. 80, a portion here, I apprehend, had in view by our author, especially that passage in it which follows (πλῆθος δὲ ἄρχον πρῶτα μὲν οἰνομα πάντων κάλλιστον ἔχει, ἰσονομίην· δεύτερα δὲ, &c., where ὄνομα signifies, not name (i. e. appellation), but an attribute, what is ascribed to any thing or person (as inherent in it as a quality): and such is its sense in a passage of the New Testament, Revel. iii. 1, ἔχεις ὄνομα ὅτι ζῇς, καὶ νεκρὸς εἶ, 'and yet thou art dead.' By the term πλῆθος is there (as in Thucyd. i. 72) denoted the people at large: and the sense of πλῆθος ἂν, ἀκούσαντας, ἄριστα τοὺς πολλούς· καὶ ταῦτα ὁμοίως, καὶ κατὰ μέρη καὶ ξύμπαντα, ἐν δημοκρατίᾳ ἰσομοιρεῖν. 2. ὀλιγαρχία δὲ τῶν μὲν κινδύνων τοῖς πολλοῖς μεταδίδωσι, τῶν δ' ὠφελίμων οὐ πλεονεκτεῖ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ξύμπαν ἀφελομένη ἔχει. ἃ ὑμῶν οἵ τε δυνάμενοι καὶ οἱ νέοι προθυμοῦνται· ἀδύνατα ἐν μεγάλῃ πόλει κατασχεῖν. XL. Ἀλλ' ἔτι καὶ νῦν, ὦ πάντων ἀξυνετώτατοι, εἰ μὴ μανθάνετε κακὰ σπεύδοντες,—ἢ ἀμαθέστατοί ἐστε ὧν ἐγὼ οἶδα Ἑλλήνων, ἢ ἄρχον is, 'the government of the people at large.'

ἀκούσαντας] 'after having heard [the different opinions or counsels].' Κρῖναι—ἄριστα, 'can form the best decision [as to where the preference lies];' meaning, not individually, but collectively, οὐχ ὡς ἕκαστον, ἀλλ' ὡς ξύμπαντας, to use the words of Aristot. Pol. iii. 7.

καὶ ταῦτα—ἰσομοιρεῖν] 'That these matters (both as to parts and altogether, severally and collectively) have their just portion allotted to them in a democracy.' By ταῦτα are meant the several claims pertaining to the three classes respectively. And so the expression is well explained by Æmil. Port. as equivalent to τὰ διάφορα τῶν πολιτῶν συντάγματα, parts assigned to each of those orders in society by some common arrangement or composition established. With the use here of the verb ἰσομοιρεῖν, compare that of the noun ἰσομοιρία supra v. 69, which signifies there 'an equal share of influence and authority,' what is otherwise expressed by ἰσοτιμία. And such is its use in a passage of Nymphodorus brought forward by Schol. on Soph. Œd. Col. 337, ὁ γὰρ Σέσωστρις ἐκθηλῦναι τοὺς ἄνδρας βουλόμενος, ὅπως μὴ συστραφέντες ἐπ' ἰσομοιρίαν ὁρμήσωσι, &c. Evidently written with a view to the present is a passage of Dio Cass. 380, 14, Δημοκρατία ὄνομα εὔσχημον ('specious') ἔχει, καί τινα ἰσομοιρίαν πᾶσιν ἐκ τῆς ἰσονομίας φέρειν δοκεῖ.

2. Here we have, as Poppo points out, a transition, for greater certainty, ad orationem rectam. Ξύμπαν, scil. τῶν ὠφελίμων, 'of the advantages.' Of the words following, ἃ ὑμῶν — κατασχεῖν, the full sense is, 'which things (namely, to impart a share of the dangers to the many, and yourselves carry off and possess the whole profits) such of you as are powerful and young are striving after;—[things] impossible in a great city for you to obtain,' literally, to get hold of and keep: a sense which κατέχειν bears also in Hdot. iv. 43, τὰ (scil. χρήματα) Σάμιος ἀνὴρ κατέσχε. Hence the phrase πράγματα κατέχειν occurring supra iv. 22, and in Hdot. iii. 143. Here, as not unfrequently, the pronoun ἃ stands for the demonstr. pron. and a particle—'and these things.' At ἀδύνατα supply ὄντα. This sense of προθυμεῖσθαι with an accus. of thing, as τοῦτο or ταῦτα, is of frequent occurrence in Plato: and so infra viii. 90, we have, τὴν ὀλιγαρχίαν προὐθυμοῦντο. Finally, οἱ δυνάμενοι stands for οἱ δυνασταί: though the young men were not so much themselves δυνασταὶ as the ἀνδρῶν δυναστέων παῖδες, to use the words of Hdot. ii. 32.

Ch. XL. I have made ch. 40 commence here, (and not at ἀλλ' ἤτοι,) because, whatever may be the view adopted as to the remarkably perplexed construction of the passage ἀλλ' ἔτι—τολμᾶτε, one thing is clear, (and had been long ago seen by Hobbes, and since his time by Dobree, Poppo, and Arnold,) namely, that in the words ἀλλ' ἔτι καὶ νῦν—τὸ κοινὸν αὔξετε we have the true apodosis of the sentence; the ἀλλὰ being, as Dr. Arnold says, repeated after the intermediate matter, either εἰ μὴ—τολμᾶτε, (as he supposes,) or rather ἢ ἀμαθέστατοι—τολμᾶτε. According to which latter mode, the sense may very well be laid down, as it is by Poppo, thus: 'At etiamnum, omnium stultissimi, si mala vos machinari non intelligitis,—aut stupidissimi estis omnium, quos ego novi, Græcorum, aut injustissimi, si scientes audetis,—at, inquam, aut,' &c. This is, upon the whole, preferable to the mode pursued by Dr. Arnold, which, however plausible as to the sentiment, is liable to insuperable objections. Nor is that adopted by Poppo so satisfactory even to himself, but that he suspects the words to labour under great corruption, and proposes to read ἀλλ' ἔτι καὶ νῦν πάντων ἀξυνετώτατοι, εἰ μὴ μανθάνετε κακὰ σπεύδοντες, ἔστε ὧν ἐγὼ οἶδα Ἑλλήνων. Yet this, though approved by Goeller, I consider a method of removing the difficulty far too violent to be safely resorted to: and not a little objectionable is it on the ground, 1. that it tends to enervate the force and δεινότης of the ἀδικώτατοι, εἰ εἰδότες τολμᾶτε,—ἀλλ', ἤτοι μαθόντες γε ἢ μεταγνόντες, τὸ τῆς πόλεως ξύμπασι κοινὸν αὔξετε·—ἡγησάμενοι τοῦτο μὲν ἂν καὶ ἴσον καὶ πλέον οἱ ἀγαθοὶ ὑμῶν ἥπερ τὸ τῆς πόλεως πλῆθος μετασχεῖν, εἰ δ' ἄλλα βουλήσεσθε, καὶ τοῦ παντὸς κινδυνεῦσαι στερηθῆναι·—καὶ τῶν τοιῶνδε ἀγγελιῶν, ὡς πρὸς αἰσθομένους καὶ μὴ ἐπιτρέψοντας, ἀπαλλάγητε. ἡ γὰρ πόλις ἥδε, καὶ εἰ ἔρχονται Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀμυνεῖται αὐτοὺς ἀξίως αὐτῆς· καὶ στρατηγοὶ εἰσὶν ἡμῖν, οἳ σκέψονται αὐτά. 2. καὶ, εἰ μή τι αὐτῶν ἀληθές ἐστιν,—ὥσπερ † οὐκ οἴομαι,—οὐ, πρὸς τὰς ὑμετέρας ἀγγελίας καταπλαγεῖσα, καὶ ἑλομένη ὑμᾶς ἄρχοντας, αὐθαίρετον δουλείαν ἐπιβαλεῖται· passage by removing the apostrophe; and 2. that no good reason can be imagined how words which thus appear so little necessary as ἡ ἀμαθέστατοι should have crept into all the MSS. But, in truth, far are they from being unnecessary; for in ἀμαθὴς we have what is a stronger term than ἀξύνετος; the latter being equivalent to our word simpleton; and the former, to another still stronger term in our language, dolt; and accordingly meaning, not, what Dobree explains as the sense, wrong-headed, but thick-headed. In short, we have here simply a repetition, with an intensity of sense.

Of the words following, μαθόντες and μεταγνόντες, the former has reference to the preceding terms ἀξυνετώτατοι and ἀμαθέστατοι; and the latter, to what went just before, ἀδικώτατοι, εἰ εἰδότες, importing repentance of wrong committed knowingly and deliberately. Of the expression τὸ κοινὸν αὔξετε see another example supra i. 4, and compare αὔξειν πόλιν in Eurip. Iph. A. 572. Soph. Ant. 197. The Scholiast well explains the words τὸ τῆς πόλεως ξύμπασι κοινὸν by τὸ πᾶσι κοινῶς ὠφέλιμον τῆς πόλεως.

ἡγησάμενοι τοῦτο — μετασχεῖν] The nominative here, οἱ ἀγαθοὶ ὑμῶν, (meaning, 'those of you who are optimates,') stands, as Goeller observes, for the accusative, because the persons addressed are optimates. Of τοῦτο ἴσον καὶ πλέον—μετασχεῖν the sense is, 'to share in an equal, or even greater, proportion;' where καὶ bears (as at iv. 8. 17. 83. v. 10 & 13. vi. 91. viii. 2.) the sense etiam or adeo, atque adeo, 'or even.' Finally, on this use of μετέχειν with the accusative, see Poppo in loc., and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 421, note 2.

τῶν τοιῶνδε — ἀπαλλάγητε] 'Desist from, have done with, such sort of reports.' In this sense (which is rare) ἀπαλλάσσεσθαι occurs also in Aristoph. Plut. 316, τῶν σκωμμάτων ἀπαλλαγέντ ς, 'missa facientes.' Eurip. Phœn. 601, τῶν μακρῶν δ' ἀπαλλαγεῖσα νουθετημάτων, and Hippol. 1176, ἀπαλλαχθεὶς γόων. Plato, p. 148, ἀπαλλαγῆναι τοῦ μέλλειν.

πρὸς αἰσθομένους] So I have edited, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, though only on the authority of two indifferent MSS.; since this reading is strongly confirmed by the circumstance of some MSS. having προσαισθ. and προσαισθαν.; and vulg. προαισθ. or προαισθαν. cannot be tolerated. At πρὸς αἰσθομένους supply from the context γιγνομένων, λεγομένων, or φερομένων. The full sense is, 'as carried (or reported) to those who are aware of, and will not permit, your designs.'

2. καὶ, εἰ μή τι—ἐστιν] For μή, (which is generally thought to have no place here,) I long ago conjectured (as did Bekker also) the true reading to be δή, taken in the sense which the particle bears at ch. 37, namely, really. Accordingly in my former edition I affixed an obelus to the μή, and the same has since been done by Dr. Arnold. Now, however, I have removed it; because εἰ μή τι αὐτῶν may justly be supposed to constitute one of the many unusual forms of expression occurring in Thucydides, for εἰ μηδὲν αὐτῶν, or rather a somewhat stronger expression for, 'and if not any thing of them or theirs (said by them) is true.'

ὥσπερ οὐκ οἴομαι] This can only mean, 'as I think it is not true:' a sense, however, so harsh that I suspect (with Franz on Lys. p. 253) the true reading to be ὥσπερ οὖν, and in this view would compare Plato, p. 242, εἰ δ' ἔστιν, ὥσπερ οὖν ἐστι, θεὸς, and Cosmas de Magn. Sol. vi. (cited in Hoogev. de Part. p. 594.) Εἰ τοῦτο ἀληθές; ὥσπερ οὖν καὶ ἀληθές ἐστιν, &c. Synes. Epist. 31, εἴ τινές εἰσι ψυχαὶ, τῶν πολέων ὥσπερ οὖν εἰσιν,—ἔφοροι θεῖαι, &c. Accordingly the sense here intended will be, 'as I am certainly of opinion is the case.'

αὐθαίρετον δουλείαν ἐπιβαλεῖται] Literally, 'will not put on [as a yoke about αὐτὴ δ' ἐφ' αὑτῆς σκοποῦσα, τούς τε λύγους ἀφ' ὑμῶν ὡς ἔργα δυναμένους κρινεῖ, καὶ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν ἐλευθερίαν οὐχὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἀκούειν ἀφαιρεθήσεται, ἐκ δὲ τοῦ ἔργῳ φυλασσομένη μὴ ἐπιτρέπειν, πειράσεται σώζειν."

XLI. Τοιαῦτα μὲν Ἀθηναγόρας εἶπε. τῶν δὲ στρατηγῶν εἷς ἀναστὰς ἄλλον μὲν οὐδένα ἔτι εἴασε παρελθεῖν, αὐτὸς δὲ πρὸς τὰ παρόντα ἔλεξε τοιάδε. 2. "Διαβολὰς μὲν οὐ σῶφρον οὔτε λέγειν τινὰς ἐς ἀλλήλους, οὔτε τοὺς ἀκούοντας ἀποδέχεσθαι· πρὸς δὲ τὰ ἐσαγγελλόμενα μᾶλλον ὁρᾶν, ὅπως εἷς τε ἕκαστος καὶ ἡ ξύμπασα πόλις καλῶς τοὺς ἐπιόντας † παρασκευασόμεθα ἀμύνεσθαι. 3. καὶ, ἢν ἄρα μηδὲν δεήσῃ, οὐδεμία βλάβη τοῦ * γε τὸ κοινὸν κοσμηθῆναι καὶ ἵπποις καὶ ὅπλοις καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις, οἷς ὁ πόλεμος ἀγάλλεται.

the neck] a voluntary slavery:' a metaphor also observable in a passage of the Old Testament, Jerem. xxvii. 8, (where mention is made of 'the nation that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon.') and 11, 12. Compare also Deut. xxviii. 48, ἐπιθήσει κλοιὸν σιδηροῦν ἐπὶ τὸν τράχηλον σὸν, where the term ἐπιθήσει means, 'will lay on,' 'clap on;' whereas ἐπιβάλλεσθαι signifies, 'to put on as a dress:' and so it is used in Aristoph. Eccl. 536, and not unfrequently elsewhere.

ἐφ' αὑτῆς] per se; for καθ' ἑαυτήν. Ὡς ἔργα δυναμένους, 'as having the force of, equivalent to, works.' Ἀφ' ὑμῶν. Render, 'proceeding from you.' Ἐκ δὲ τοῦ ἔργῳ φυλασσομένη, &c. for φυλάσσεσθαι. Render, 'by being on its guard in action, and not putting up with this conduct,' i. e. not suffering it to pass with impunity. In this absolute sense, 'to put up with,' ἐπιτρέπειν occurs elsewhere in our author, supra i. 71. 82. 95, and in the Attic writers generally.

Ch. XLI. 1. τῶν δὲ στρατηγῶν εἷς ἀναστάς, &c.] For εἷς, one good MS. has τις. But this is evidently a mere gloss; εἷς standing here for τις, aliquis, as in Xenoph. Cyr. ii. 1, 5, (Thiem.) εἷς αὐτῶν ἔλεξε, and elsewhere not unfrequently in that writer, and in certain passages of the New Testament, as Mark v. 22, ἔρχεται εἷς τῶν ἀρχισυναγώγων, and Acts xi. 28, ἀναστὰς δὲ εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν—ἐσήμανε. In the words ἄλλον οὐδένα ἔτι εἴασε there may be an Attic idiom, (found in the best writers from Homer downwards. See Hom. Od. ix. 468, and xix. 25. Xen. Cyr. ii. 2, 2. iii. 1, 6.) by which the sense is, 'did not let,' i. e. forbad any one to approach. But I am by no means sure that there may not be rather an elegant litotes for dehortatus est, dissuasit, as at ii. 21. vi. 72. vii. 48, and not unfrequently in Herodotus, as ii. 30. v. 96. Πρὸς τὰ παρόντα is well explained by Dukas to mean, ἀποτεινόμενος πρὸς τὴν προκειμένην ὑπόθεσιν.

2. ἀποδέχεσθαι] 'to admit, entertain,' as iii. 3, ἀποδέχεσθαι τὰς κατηγορίας. At πρὸς δὲ, &c. repeat σῶφρον, scil. ἐστι, 'but it is the part of prudence.' It is doubtful whether παρασκευασώμεθα, found in eleven MSS. and the early editions (to which I add the authority of Clar. and Cantab.) be the true reading, or παρασκευασόμεθα, found in seven MSS., including three of the best. The former is edited by Haack and Poppo; the latter, by Bekker and Goeller, whom I have chosen to follow, because the construction is thus more Attic.

3. ἢν μηδὲν δεήσῃ] 'if nothing [that we provide] be needed.' Οὐδεμία βλάβη τοῦ, &c. 'there will be no harm for the city to be furnished with,' &c. Κοσμεῖσθαι, for παρασκευάζεσθαι, like the Latin adornare. For vulg. τε, which can here have no propriety, I have, with Poppo, Goeller (second edition), and Bekker (second edition), adopted the conjecture of Abresch, γε, which yields a sense quite apposite; the term βλάβη being emphatic. Render, 'there is at any rate no harm.' Vain is it to urge, with Dr. Arnold, (who retains and defends the τε,) that to read γε is but cutting the knot. That would be true in case of cancelling τε, whereas to suppose the word (as in numerous instances elsewhere) a mere error of the scribes for γε, is untying the knot; and the great appositeness of the word tends to show that it is rightly untied.

Ὅπλοις is, in one MS., put before instead of after ἵπποις; but wrongly. The

4. τὴν δ' ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ ἐξέτασιν αὐτῶν ἡμεῖς ἕξομεν, καὶ τῶν πρὸς τὰς πόλεις διαπομπῶν ἅμα, ἔς τε κατασκοπήν, καὶ ἤν τι ἄλλο φαίνηται ἐπιτήδειον. τὰ δὲ καὶ ἐπιμεμελήμεθα ἤδη, καὶ ὅ τι ἂν αἰσθώμεθα, ἐς ὑμᾶς οἴσομεν." 5. καὶ οἱ μὲν Συρακόσιοι, τοσαῦτα εἰπόντος τοῦ στρατηγοῦ, διελύθησαν ἐκ τοῦ ξυλλόγου.

XLII. Οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι ἤδη ἐν τῇ Κερκύρᾳ, αὐτοί τε καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, ἅπαντες ἦσαν· καὶ πρῶτον μὲν ἐπεξέτασιν τοῦ στρατεύματος

speaker, doubtless, put it first, because it was of great importance that the Syracusans should be as strong as possible in cavalry. And the taking this wise counsel afterwards gave them a considerable advantage over the Athenians; who, as we learn from vi. 71, 'had to send for horsemen (and horses) from home, and from their allies,' μὴ παντάπασιν ἱπποκρατῶνται.

Ἀγάλλεται, a little after, is well explained by the Scholiast χαίρει. And such was the view of the sense adopted by Isidor. Pelus. Ep. ii. 146, who, in a passage evidently imitated from the present, has, τά τε ἄλλα, οἷς χαίρει ὁ πόλεμος, καὶ οἷς ἀγάλλεται. παρασκευάσαι. Duk., indeed, maintains that ἀγάλλεσθαι is not unfrequently used in the sense gaudere, se efferre, jactare; and he subjoins as examples several passages of Thucydides and other writers. But in only one of these is the signification in question really found,—namely, Aristæn. Ep. i. 15, οἷς ἀγάλλεσθαι τὸ θῆλυ πέφυκε γένος. In the other passages of our author where the word occurs, namely, iv. 95. ii. 63. iii. 62 & 82, it signifies to glory in, boast of. Yet here it cannot well bear any other sense than that of χαίρει. The Scholiast, indeed, (or rather another Scholiast,) adds, ὧν χρήζει. And such, it is true, is all that the argument requires: and a plain individual, like the Syracusan στρατηγὸς, would go no further. But Thucydides has, suo more, ventured on one of those daring forms of expression, which it is easier to account for than to justify. For certainly this use of ἀγάλλεσθαι, by which war is personified, is scarcely allowable any where except in poetry, and that lyric; war being thus, in poetic language, represented under the image of a warrior fully armed and accoutred, and mounted on a prancing war-horse. And so in a passage of the Old Testament, Job xxxix. 21, the war-horse is represented as pawing the valley, and rejoicing (rather exulting) in his strength. I know of no other example of this bold imagery, except in a passage which, being of a high-wrought poetic character, fully admits of it, namely, Ps. xix. 4, 5, 'In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun, which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.' Or rather, as it should be rendered, 'And he is (καὶ αὐτὸς, Sept.) as a bridegroom going forth from his chamber: he exulteth (Sept. ἀγαλλιάσεται) as a strong man to run his course' (ὁδὸν αὐτοῦ, Sept.). This sense of ἀγάλλεσθαι, (subsequently transmitted to ἀγαλλιᾶσθαι, which is found in the later writers, the Septuagint, and the New Testament writers,) namely, 'to rejoice or exult for joy' in any thing, however rare, was, I suspect, the primary signification of the word. For I agree with Lennep ap. Etym., that the term ἀγάλλεσθαι signifies properly to make oneself shine; whence (like the Latin renidere as used for lætari, gaudere) it came to bear the sense rejoice, exult. On the other hand, from ἀγάλλεσθαι, 'to make oneself shine,' came the signification to adorn oneself, set oneself off; whence the figurative sense to boast oneself, &c.

4. ἔς τε κατασκοπὴν—ἐπιτήδειον] Render, 'both as regards observation [of what is going on], and as to any thing else that may appear expedient [to be done].'

Ch. XLII. 1. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι—ἦσαν] I have so pointed, as, I conceive, propriety requires; the words αὐτοί τε καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι being an insertion intended to explain the import of the term ἅπαντες. And similarly I would propose to point in a passage of the Old Testament, Daniel vi. 24, καὶ εἰς τὸν λάκκον τῶν λεόντων ἐνεβλήθησαν,—αὐτοὶ καὶ οἱ υἱοὶ αὐτῶν καὶ αἱ γυναῖκες αὐτῶν,—καὶ οὐκ ἔφθασαν, &c.

ἐπεξέτασιν] Meaning, as Portus, Abresch, Dukas, and Arnold are agreed, 'a further review,' with allusion to a former one, which probably took place at Piræus, before the armament set out. And this, after the allies had all joined, would be no more than necessary. Poppo, indeed, remarks, that there is nothing said in Thucydides of this previous review. But this, we may suppose, being a thing usual and a matter of course, was, as such, not necessary to be mentioned. By ξύνταξις is meant, a disposition and arrangement of the armament, both vessels and men, as to the mode in which they should ὁρμιεῖσθαι καὶ στρατοπεδεύεσθαι, 'both come to port, and take up their naval encampment (on shore).'

τρία μέρη νείμαντες] 'having divided the forces into three divisions.' On the syntax see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 419, 1. Ἓν ἑκάστῳ ἐκλήρωσαν, 'assigned one by lot to each of the generals,' as was the custom to do on casting lots in such a case. Compare Polyb. vi. 20, 30, κληροῦσι ('tribuni') τὰς φυλὰς κατὰ μίαν, καὶ προσκαλοῦνται τὴν ἀεὶ λαχοῦσαν. See on viii. 31. For vulg. ἐν, I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, adopted the conjecture of Reiske and Valcken., ἕν; and am enabled to further support this by the authority of Cod. Clarend. Valla, too, seems to have had it in his MS.; and it is written above in the Cod. Aug.

καταγωγαῖς] 'navium appulsis, subvectionibus in portum,' or the places where the ships should take port. See note supra ch. 34, 5.

2. ἐπιστάμενοι] i. e. 'knowing whither they might go with the prospect of being received.' Καταπλέωσι, i. e. 'make the land.' See my Lexicon of the New Testament, in voc.

Ch. XLIII. 1. ἐκ καταλόγου] See note on iii. 87. vi. 26, and Wachsm. Ant. Gr. ii. 1, p. 397. Ἐπιβάται τῶν νεῶν. Answering to the marines on board of our ships of war. See Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 12. Polyb. i. 51, 2, and 60, 3. Arrian, E. A. ii. 17, 6, and especially two passages of Hdot. vii. 16, and vi. 12, and (as showing the number usually on board of a trireme) another at vi. 15, 6, where the number per ship is stated to be ten. To account for only seven per ship on the present occasion, we may suppose, with Dr. Arnold, that the number was lessened because the large force of heavy-armed ἐκ καταλόγου would be always ready to supply any deficiency.

ἱππαγωγῷ] 'horse-transport.' On this and the other vessels employed, see Wachsm. Antiq. The number of regular troops, of which this first expedition was composed, consisted, according to Thucydides' account, of 6430, thus:

ἀγούσῃ ἱππέας. XLIV. Τοσαύτη ἡ πρώτη παρασκευὴ πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον διέπλει. τούτοις δὲ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια ἄγουσαι ὁλκάδες μὲν τριάκοντα σιταγωγοί, καὶ τοὺς σιτοποιοὺς ἔχουσαι, καὶ λιθολόγους καὶ τέκτονας, καὶ ὅσα ἐς τειχισμὸν ἐργαλεῖα, πλοῖα δὲ ἑκατὸν [ἃ] ἐξ ἀνάγκης μετὰ τῶν ὁλκάδων, ξυνέπλει· πολλὰ δὲ καὶ ἄλλα πλοῖα καὶ ὁλκάδες ἑκούσιοι ξυνηκολούθουν τῇ στρατιᾷ ἐμπορίας ἕνεκα· ἃ τότε πάντα ἐκ τῆς Κερκύρας ξυνδιέβαλλε τὸν Ἰόνιον κόλπον. 2. καὶ προσβαλοῦσα ἡ πᾶσα παρασκευὴ πρός τε ἄκραν Ἰαπυγίαν καὶ πρὸς Τάραντα, καὶ ὡς ἕκαστοι εὐπόρησαν, παρεκομίζοντο τὴν Ἰταλίαν, τῶν μὲν πόλεων οὐ δεχομένων αὐτοὺς ἀγορᾷ οὐδὲ ἄστει, ὕδατι δὲ καὶ ὁρμῳ, Τάραντος δὲ καὶ Λοκρῶν οὐδὲ τούτοις· ἕως ἀφίκοντο ἐς Ῥήγιον τῆς Ἰταλίας ἀκρωτήριον. 3. καὶ ἐνταῦθα ἤδη ἠθροίζοντο· καὶ ἔξω

Archers, Athenian . . .	400

Plutarch, Vit. Alcib., mentions 6400, namely, of heavy-armed 5100, archers, slingers, and light-armed, 1300. But it is because he passes over the 30 horse.

Ch. XLIV. 1. τούτοις] 'for these,' (dat. commodi,) namely, the men who composed the παρασκευή, or armament, just mentioned: for the word is by Bauer rightly understood to refer to παρασκευὴ per synesin: a principle which may very well be admitted, since παρασκευή, being here used as a noun of multitude, in the sense armament, (as supra vi. 31.) necessarily comprehends both ships and men. Σιτοποιούς: namely, those mentioned supra ch. 22. Λιθολόγους: literally, stone-layers, (as we say, bricklayers,) equivalent to οἰκοδόμους; for it is shown by Ruhnken on Tim. Lex. Plat., that the word λέγειν (answering to our verb to lay, derived from it) bears the sense to build with. Τέκτονας. The term is often in Xenophon and other writers joined, as here, with λιθοτόμοι, λιθολόγοι, οἰκοδόμοι, &c.; and hence, although denoting an artizan, in whatever line, whether as a worker in wood, or stone, (so Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 13, τέκτονας εἰς τὰ ὀχυρὰ πυργοῦσθαι, it signifies a stone-mason,) yet when joined with the above terms, must mean a carpenter: and walls of circumvallation were (as appears from what we read supra l. iii.) formed chiefly of wood. However, as iron also was employed in such walls, smiths may be included.

By ἐργαλεῖα are meant the tools, of all kinds, which the workmen would want. So Jos. Bell. iii. 5, 1, καὶ τεκτόνων πλῆθος ἔρχεται, τά τε πρὸς δόμησιν ἐργαλεῖα. By πλοῖα understand the barks, or skiffs, attendant on the ὁλκάδες, or vessels of burden, transports loaded with provisions, stores, &c. The ἃ, just after, I have now, with Poppo and Arnold, placed in brackets, because it is not found in some of the best MSS., and is better away.

The phrase following, ἐξ ἀνάγκης, must, as Duk. saw, be understood of the necessity of the impressment for the public service, like that of the bread-makers adverted to supra ch. 22, σιτοποιοὺς ἐκ τῶν μυλώνων—ἠναγκασμένους ἐμμίσθους.

μετὰ τῶν ὁλκάδων] Render, 'as well as the ships of burden;' for, as Dr. Arnold says, from what follows, ὁλκάδες ἑκούσιοι, it is clear that both the πλοῖα and ὁλκάδες first spoken of were employed by the government.

2. ὡς ἕκαστοι εὐπόρησαν] I would now supply, with Duk. and Poppo, the word προσβάλλειν from the preceding—'as they were each enabled to make the coast [of Italy].' The term εὐπορεῖν signifies, 'to have εὐπορία, facultas, of doing any thing.' See note supra ch. 34, 2, and my Lexicon of the New Testament, in voc.

οὐ δεχομένων αὐτοὺς ἀγορᾷ οὐδὲ ἄστει] Meaning, as Jacobs and Arnold explain, 'neither allowing a market for the sale of provisions, (see on viii. 40.) nor permitting them to enter their walls,' but only allowing them the use of water and anchorage.

Ῥήγιον τῆς Ἰταλίας ἀκρωτήριον] By the promontory of Rhegium is meant, Mannert thinks, that angular ness where there is the Torre del Lupo.

3. ἤδη] demum, tandem; namely, after the separation which had taken place in τῆς πόλεως, ὡς αὐτοὺς εἴσω οὐκ ἐδέχοντο, στρατόπεδόν τε κατεσκευάσαντο ἐν τῷ τῆς Ἀρτέμιδος ἱερῷ—οὗ αὐτοῖς καὶ ἀγορὰν παρεῖχον—καὶ τὰς ναῦς ἀνελκύσαντες ἡσύχασαν· καὶ πρός [τε] τοὺς Ῥηγίνους λόγους ἐποιήσαντο, ἀξιοῦντες, Χαλκιδέας ὄντας, Χαλκιδεῦσιν οὖσι Λεοντίνοις βοηθεῖν. οἱ δὲ οὐδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων ἔφασαν ἔσεσθαι. ἀλλ' ὅ τι ἂν καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις Ἰταλιώταις ξυνδοκῇ, τοῦτο ποιήσειν. 4. οἱ δὲ πρὸς τὰ ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ πράγματα ἐσκόπουν ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ἄριστα προσοίσονται· καὶ τὰς πρόπλους ναῦς ἐκ τῆς Ἐγέστης ἅμα προσέμενον, βουλόμενοι εἰδέναι περὶ τῶν χρημάτων, εἰ ἔστιν, ἃ ἔλεγον ἐν ταῖς Ἀθήναις οἱ ἄγγελοι.

XLV. Τοῖς δὲ Συρακοσίοις ἐν τούτῳ πολλαχόθεν τε ἤδη καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν κατασκόπων σαφῆ ἠγγέλλετο, ὅτι ἐν Ῥηγίῳ αἱ νῆες εἰσι· καὶ ὡς the voyage to Corcyra. Ὡς, for ἐπεί. Στρατόπεδον κατεσκευάσαντο. Render, sibi parabant, 'formed for themselves a camp.' Ἱερῷ: meaning, of course, the outer court of the temple, as opposed to the ναῷ, or fane. Another instance of this encamping in a court of a temple occurs at iii. 96, 1, where we have, αὐλισάμενος—ἐν τοῦ Διὸς τῷ ἱερῷ. In the present instance we are by στρατόπεδον to understand, not a regular camp, but a temporary encampment for a night or two, equivalent to αὐλις in Hom. Il. ix. 232, where we have, Ἔγγὺς γὰρ νηῶν καὶ τείχεος αὖλιν ἔθεντο, 'a form of expression (Heyne says) standing for ἐστρατοπέδευσαν;' rather ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντο, equivalent to αὐλίζεσθαι elsewhere in our author, iii. 96. vi. 7 & 24. vii. 29.

The τε, just after, is not found in two of the best MSS. (Clar. and Venet.) and is suspected by Poppo and Goeller; though defended by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 626, and also by Arnold, who thinks that our author meant to write πρός τε τοὺς Ῥηγίνους—ἐποιήσαντο—καὶ πρὸς τὰ πράγματα ἐσκόπουν, and then changed the construction of the latter clause, because of the words οἱ δὲ οὐδὲ—ποιήσειν. He in like manner defends the τε at v. 10, 9. But such a mode is any thing but satisfactory. As to the τε at v. 10, it can scarcely be said to be superfluous (and hence I have retained it, though within brackets); while here it is worse than superfluous, since it perturbs the construction, and obscures the sense. Accordingly I have double bracketed it, especially since I suspect it to have arisen from an abbreviation of the following τούς.

λόγους ἐποιήσαντο] agebant, paciscebantur, as at ii. 101, 1, πρὸς Περδίκκαν λόγους ἐποιεῖτο. Of οὐδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων ἔσεσθαι, a little after, the sense is, 'would be neutral.' By the Ἰταλιώταις understand the Greek colonists in Italy, as distinguished from the Ἰταλοὶ or indigenous inhabitants; the same distinction as that which subsists between the Σικελιῶται and the Σικελοί. Ξυνδοκῇ. The term here, as not unfrequently in Xenophon, bears the sense communiter placere vel comprobare.

4. οἱ δὲ πρὸς τὰ—προσοίσονται] Construe, οἱ δὲ ἐσκόπουν ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ἄριστα προσοίσονται πρὸς τὰ ἐν τῇ Σικ. πράγματα, and render, 'how they should best deal with, or manage, the affairs in Sicily.' In this sense προσφ. occurs also at iv. 18, 4, ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς—ἂν προσφέροιντο. By τὰς πρόπλους ναῦς understand simply the 3 ships (i. e. swift-sailing triremes) which had been sent forwards from Corcyra, to procure intelligence. Of the rare term πρόπλους examples are found elsewhere in Dio Cass. 610, 55. Appian, ii. 824 & 827. And the word ought to be restored (on the authority of the early editions and the MSS.) in a passage of Xen. Hist. v. 1, 27.

Ch. XLV. 1. σαφῆ ἠγγέλλετο, ὅτι, &c.] Here σαφῆ is used adverbially for σαφῶς, as σάφα not unfrequently is, especially when joined with verbs of knowing, and sometimes of telling, as Hom. Od. xvii. 106, νόστον σοῦ πατρὸς σάφα εἰπέμεν—ἀκούσας. Pind. Pyth. ii. 104. Plut. vi. 103, σάφα εἰπεῖν. So rare, however, is the idiom in question as regards σαφῆ, that one might suspect some corruption of the text here, were it not that σαφέστατα is found so used, as in Soph. Œd. Tyr. 286. And that σαφῆ is not without precedent elsewhere, appears from its occurrence in Soph. El. 1223, ἔκμαθ' εἰ σαφῆ λέγω, and perhaps at v. 40, ὅπως ἂν εἰδῶς, ἡμῖν ἀγγείλῃς σαφῆ.

ὡς ἐπὶ τούτοις] scil. πράγμασι. Here, ἐπὶ τούτοις παρεσκευάζοντο πάσῃ τῇ γνώμῃ, καὶ οὐκέτι ἠπίστουν. 2. καὶ ἐς τε τοὺς Σικελοὺς περιέπεμπον, ἔνθα μὲν φύλακας, πρὸς δὲ τοὺς πρέσβεις· καὶ ἐς τὰ περιπόλια τὰ ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ φρουρὰς ἐσεκόμιζον· τά τε ἐν τῇ πόλει ὅπλων ἐξετάσει καὶ ἵππων ἐσκόπουν εἰ ἐντελῆ ἐστι· καὶ τἆλλα, ὡς ἐπὶ ταχεῖ πολέμῳ καὶ ὅσον οὐ παρόντι, καθίσταντο.

XLVI. Αἱ δ' ἐκ τῆς Ἐγέστης τρεῖς νῆες αἱ πρόπλοι παραγίγνονται τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐς τὸ Ῥήγιον, ἀγγέλλουσαι ὅτι τἆλλα μὲν οὐκ ἔστι χρήματα ἃ ὑπέσχοντο, τριάκοντα δὲ τάλαντα μόνα φαίνεται. 2. καὶ οἱ στρατηγοὶ εὐθὺς ἐν ἀθυμίᾳ ἦσαν, ὅτι αὐτοῖς τοῦτό τε πρῶτον ἀντεκεκρούκει, καὶ οἱ Ῥηγῖνοι οὐκ ἐθελήσαντες ξυστρατεύειν, as Duker observes, we have a use of ὡς ἐπὶ similar to that found in the phrase παρασκευάζεσθαι ὡς ἐπὶ μάχῃ, &c. They prepared themselves to meet the circumstances in which they were placed. Πάσῃ τῇ γνώμῃ, toto animo, i. e. omni studio, as Portus and Poppo explain.

2. ἔνθα μὲν—πρὸς δὲ τοὺς] An irregular collocation, on which see note at iii. 61. Περιπόλια. So Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller rightly edit, from three MSS. and the margins of five others, (to which I am enabled to add the Cantab.) for vulg. περίπλοια, which is manifestly corrupt. With respect to the sense to be assigned to περιπόλια, it may justly be supposed to be, guard-forts, garrisoned by περίπολοι, or patroles, (a sort of national guards,) not by φρουροί, or regular troops in garrison. So, I would observe, Dionys. Hal. must have both read, and understood the term, since in his Antiq. ix. 56, he employs it to denote the guard-forts in the Roman territories, which were used for the same purpose as that of the towers on the borders of England and Scotland, and other situations exposed to danger from an enemy, namely, as places of refuge, during the incursions of enemies, or foragers. Finally, of this term two examples are found elsewhere in our author, iii. 99, and vii. 48.

ἐντελῆ] 'complete, in condition for service.' So viii. 29. 50. 78. Polyb. xxv. 7, 1, δεκαναῖαν ἐντελῆ, and viii. 36, 1, παρασκευαὶ ἐντελεῖς.

Ch. XLVI. 1. φαίνεται] scil. εἶναι or ὄντα, 'are found forthcoming.' So Livy, xxxii. 10, 'iis redderet res, quæ comparerent; ceterorum æquo arbitrio æstimatio fieret.' In this sense, which is very rare, φαίν. also occurs in Xen. Anab. vii. 5, 10, Thiem. μισθὸς οὐδείς πω ἐφαίνετο, and 6, 26.

2. ὅτι αὐτοῖς τοῦτό τε] A transposition of collocation, for ὅτι τε αὐτοῖς τοῦτο. By αὐτοῖς ἀντεκεκρούκει is meant, 'had crossed (i. e. happened contrary to) them,' viz. their hopes. Evidently imitated from which is the expression in Appian, i. 438, τοῦτο αὐτοῖς πρῶτον ἀντεκεκρούκει, and ii. 543. Demosth. de Cor. p. 294, ἀντέκρουσέ τι, καὶ γέγονεν οἷον οὐκ ἐᾶσι. Of the term ἀντικ. (which is somewhat rare) examples are found also in Aristot. Rhet. ii. 2, 4. Plut. ix. 10, 6. Jos. Ant. ii. 4, 3, τοῖς πρώτοις ἀντέκρουσε λογισμοῖς, where, for λογισμοῖς, I conjecture should be read λόγοις. Parallel to this is the use of our phrase to clash with; there being in both a metaphor taken from solid bodies, which, by colliding, hinder each other's motion. Or as κρούω signifies also to row, it may here, by a nautical metaphor, bear the sense to shove or row against, i. e. to thwart.

At οἱ Ῥηγῖνοι οὐκ ἐθελήσαντες ξυστρατεύειν there exists a certain irregularity of construction, which the commentators endeavour to remedy by various supplementa, the least objectionable of which is that by which is supplied the word ἀντεκεκρούκεισαν, taken from ἀντεκεκρούκει preceding. This method, however, has something too artificial and factitious to be entirely approved. Better is it to reject the idea of ellipsis altogether, and suppose the phraseology to fall under one of those many forms of the Anacoluthon so common in our author, (and of which many examples are found in the New Testament, especially the Apocalypse,) by which for the words as they now stand, exactness of composition would rather have required καὶ τὸ Ῥηγίνους οὐκ ἐθελῆσαι, i. e. 'the circumstance of the Rhegines not having been willing to,' &c. Such being the case, I have (as I formerly did in my smaller edition of Thucydides) removed the comma after Ῥηγῖνοι. Had Poppo seen the true nature of the phraseology, he would not οὓς πρῶτον ἤρξαντο πείθειν, καὶ εἰκὸς ἦν μάλιστα, Λεοντίνων τε ξυγγενεῖς ὄντας καὶ σφίσιν ἀεὶ ἐπιτηδείους. καὶ τῷ μὲν Νικίᾳ προσδεχομένῳ ἦν τὰ παρὰ τῶν Ἐγεσταίων, τοῖν δὲ ἑτέροιν καὶ ἀλογώτερα. 3. οἱ δὲ Ἐγεσταῖοι τοιόνδε τι ἐξετεχνήσαντο τότε, ὅτε οἱ πρῶτοι πρέσβεις τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἦλθον αὐτοῖς ἐς τὴν κατασκοπὴν τῶν χρημάτων. ἔς τε τὸ ἐν Ἔρυκι ἱερὸν τῆς Ἀφροδίτης ἀγαγόντες αὐτούς, ἐπέδειξαν τὰ ἀναθήματα, φιάλας τε καὶ οἰνοχόας, καὶ θυμιατήρια, καὶ ἄλλην κατασκευὴν οὐκ ὀλίγην· ἃ, ὄντα ἀργυρᾶ, πολλῷ πλείω τὴν ὄψιν ἀπ' ὀλίγης δυνάμεως χρημάτων παρείχετο· καὶ ἰδίᾳ ξενίσεις ποιούμενοι τῶν τριηριτῶν, τά τε ἐξ αὐτῆς Ἐγέστης have so magisterially pronounced, 'Nihil refert, utrum desit an adsit virgula.'

ἤρξαντο πείθειν] In ἤρξαντο there is no occasion, with some, to recognise a periphrasis. We may take ἤρξαντο πείθειν to signify simply, 'first set about to persuade:' a sense which ἄρχεσθαι bears frequently both in the classical writers and also the scriptural ones. Thus wholly unnecessary will it be to suppose here a pleonasm; though πρῶτον is of frequent occurrence in Xenophon, (as Cyr. i. 5, 6. Hist. vii. 4, 25. Œcon. vii. 9. ix. 6.) because that would tend to weaken the sense. The force here of the term ἄρχεσθαι is that of setting about, taking in hand, any thing, as in Acts i. 1, ὧν ἤρξατο, &c. At εἰκὸς ἦν supply πείθειν αὐτούς.

The construction at τῷ Νικίᾳ προσδεχομένῳ ἦν is like that at ii. 60, προσδεχομένῳ μοι τὰ τῆς ὀργῆς ὑμῶν—γεγένηται, where see note, and compare ii. 3. iv. 80. See also Matth. Gr. Gr. § 388, e.

ἀλογώτερα] literally, 'more unreckoned on,' i. e. less calculated on, (less agreeable to λόγος, or calculation,) more unexpected: of which sense of the word (extremely rare) the only examples I have noted elsewhere are in Demosth. 672, 14, ἀλόγου καὶ ἀπροσδοκήτου σωτηρίας τυγχάνειν, (where καὶ ἀπροσδοκήτου is added for explanation-sake,) and Dio Cass. 1321, 4, ἀλογώτατα Μάρκιον—ἐς Δακίαν ἔπεμψε, where I doubt not the writer had in view the present passage of our author, and probably had in his copy of Thucydides ἀλογώτατα, which the Scholiast also seems to have read.

3. οἱ δὲ Ἐγεσταῖοι — ἐξετεχνήσαντο] Render, 'though the Egestæans had devised (literally, struck out in device or thought) something of this sort,' i. e. such a device or trick as the following. Ἐπέδειξαν, ostentaverunt: a sense which, however opposed by Bauer, is required by the context, and found in Xen. Cyrop. v. 5, 2, and a passage of the New Testament, Matth. xxiv. 1. Compare also 2 Kings xx. 13, καὶ ἔδειξεν αὐτοῖς τὸ ἀργύριον καὶ τὸ χρυσίον, &c. (where, for ἔδειξεν, I conjecture ἐπέδειξεν). On the subject of the ἀναθήματα, further on, (i. e. gifts deposited in a temple, and consecrated to the god worshipped therein,) see my note on Luke xxi. 5. And on the φιάλας, οἰνοχόας, and θυμιατήρια belonging to the temple, see Wachsm. Antiq. Gr. On the sense of κατασκευὴν see note at i. 10, and ii. 11.

ἃ, ὄντα ἀργυρᾶ — παρείχετο] 'which, being of silver [only], made a greater show [than] according to their actual value in money, which was but small.' So the Scholiast explains by ὀλίγα τῇ δυνάμει ὄντα μεγάλην φαντασίαν παρεῖχε. This, however, is passing over the thing compared; which (as is pointed out by Jacobs, cited in Poppo) is inherent in the words ἀπ' ὀλίγης δυνάμεως, as much as to say, ἃ ὀλίγην δύναμιν ἔχοντα, πολὺ πλείω [τῆς δυνάμεως] ὄψιν (i. e. φαντασίαν) παρεῖχε. The ἀπὸ denotes state or condition, as at ii. 62. iv. 18. v. 89. 103. From the words following, ἰδίᾳ ξενίσεις, it would seem that by τῶν τριηριτῶν must be meant, not,—according to the acceptation of the word elsewhere, (e. g. Hdot. v. 85. Xen. Anab. vi. 6, 7.)—the common sailors, who manned the triremes, but the officers; which is, Bauer thinks, the sense had in view by the person who formed the gloss (which found its way into the Moscow MS.) τριηραρχῶν. But the term τριηρῖται can never of itself signify more than, according to its use elsewhere,—'those on board of the triremes;' and hence we must suppose, that, as by τριηρ. it cannot be denoted that the whole of those on board were invited, (so § 4 we have, τοῖς ἐκ τῶν τριήρων,) since only some of them would be so invited; so those would be the principal persons, officers and others, and those ἐκπώματα [καὶ] χρυσᾶ καὶ ἀργυρᾶ ξυλλέξαντες, καὶ τὰ ἐκ τῶν ἐγγὺς πόλεων καὶ Φοινικικῶν καὶ Ἑλληνίδων αἰτησάμενοι, ἐσέφερον ἐς τὰς ἑστιάσεις, ὡς οἰκεῖα, ἕκαστοι. 4. καὶ πάντων ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ τοῖς αὐτοῖς χρωμένων, καὶ πανταχοῦ πολλῶν φαινομένων, μεγάλην τὴν ἔκπληξιν τοῖς ἐκ τῶν τριήρων Ἀθηναίοις παρεῖχε· καὶ ἀφικόμενοι ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας, διεθρόησαν ὡς χρήματα πολλὰ ἴδοιεν. 5. καὶ οἱ μὲν, αὐτοί τε ἀπατηθέντες, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους τότε πείσαντες, ἐπειδὴ διῆλθεν ὁ λόγος, ὅτι οὐκ εἴη ἐν τῇ Ἐγέστῃ τὰ χρήματα, πολλὴν τὴν αἰτίαν εἶχον ὑπὸ τῶν στρατιωτῶν. XLVII. Οἱ δὲ στρατηγοὶ πρὸς τὰ παρόντα ἐβουλεύοντο, καὶ Νικίου μὲν ἦν γνώμη πλεῖν ἐπὶ Σελινοῦντα πάσῃ τῇ στρατιᾷ, ἐφ' ὅπερ μάλιστα ἐπέμφθησαν, καὶ ἢν μὲν παρέχωσι χρήματα παντὶ τῷ στρατεύματι Ἐγεσταῖοι, πρὸς ταῦτα βουλεύεσθαι· εἰ δὲ μὴ, ταῖς ἑξήκοντα ναυσὶν, ὅσασπερ ᾐτήσαντο, ἀξιοῦν διδόναι αὐτοὺς τροφὴν, καὶ παραμείναντας, Σελινουντίους, ἢ βίᾳ ἢ ξυμβάσει, διαλλάξαι αὐτοῖς, καὶ οὕτω παραπλεύσαντας τὰς ἄλλας πόλεις, καὶ ἐπιδείξαντας μὲν τὴν δύναμιν τῆς Ἀθηναίων πόentertained by the principal persons among the Egestæans.

Of the term ξένισις (which is here used, according to its explanation by Photius Lex., for ξενοδοχία) I know of no example elsewhere. For, as to Xen. Mem. iii. 5, 10, there the word has only been introduced, on the unauthorized and unsuitable conjecture of Schütz, for vulg. γένεσιν, which would have been better retained till some preferable reading had been found.

αἰτησάμενοι] 'having borrowed.' So Polyæn. vi. 21, (a passage containing an evident reference to the present,) χρησάμενοι ἐκ τῶν πλησίον πόλεων ἄργυρον καὶ χρυσόν. Compare iii. 22, αἰτήσει γύνη παρὰ γείτονος σκεύη ἀργυρᾶ καὶ χρυσᾶ.

4. τοῖς ἐκ τῶν τριήρων] 'those from the triremes,' i. e. those who had gone, by invitation, from the triremes. Ἔκπληξιν τοῖς — παρεῖχε. Compare Arrian, E. A. vi. 3, 8, ἔκπληξιν παρεῖχε τοῖς θεωμένοις. In fact, the phrase falls under that use of παρέχειν by which it is used with nouns denoting a passion, or affection of the mind, as ἡδονὴν or τέρψιν παρέχειν, and γέλωτα or φόβον, or ἐλπίδα, &c., all occurring in Xenophon, and ἀπορίαν πολλὴν in Lucian, ii. 766. Pol. i. 4, 2,—in which several cases the verb may be rendered afferre, gignere, 'to occasion:' and such is the use of the Latin præbere in the phrase ludos præbere, 'to occasion sport.' Διεθρόησαν, for διελάλησαν, as Suidas explains; or διεθρύλλησαν (as Jacobs), divulgarunt, 'spread abroad rumours.' Of this word (which is rare) see examples elsewhere infra viii. 91. Xen. Hist. i. 6, 4. Dio Cass. 53, 19. 61, 8. 13, 14.

CH. XLVII. This chapter contains the opinion of Nicias in the council of war.

1. ἐφ' ὅπερ] scil. πρᾶγμα: on which use see note at i. 59, 4. Ταῖς ἑξήκοντα—τροφὴν, 'to require them to give support (i. e. pay) to the sixty ships, which they requested [for themselves].' Of this use (far from frequent) of τροφὴ to denote a soldier's pay, examples are found in Xenophon and Demosthenes. And this permutation of sense from the food itself to the money wherewith to procure it, is such as occurs in the case of the term ὀψώνιον; which, though originally denoting support, came at last to signify a soldier's pay. This use of the plural τροφὰς (which is far from common, except in the sense education) is found also in Eurip. Hec. 20. Ion 52 & 1013, and a passage of the New Testament, John iv. 8, ἵνα τροφὰς ἀγοράσωσι.

παραπλεύσαντας τὰς ἄλλας πόλεις] 'after having coasted along the other states.' The term παραπλεύσαντας is used, because the states in question, being entirely maritime, could best be visited by sea, being taken as they occurred by the coast-line. Plutarch, in his Life of Nicias, 14, relating this transaction, says, παρὰ τὴν Σικελίαν κομιζομένους, and adds, καὶ περιπλέοντας, scil. αὐτὴν, because in so doing (the states lying all round the coast-λεως, δηλώσαντας δὲ τὴν ἐς τοὺς φίλους καὶ ξυμμάχους προθυμίαν, ἀποπλεῖν οἴκαδε,—ἢν μή τι δι' ὀλίγου καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδοκήτου, ἢ Λεοντίνους οἷοί τε ὦσιν ὠφελῆσαι, ἢ τῶν ἄλλων τινὰ πόλεων προσαγαγέσθαι,—καὶ τῇ πόλει δαπανῶντας τὰ οἰκεῖα μὴ κινδυνεύειν. Ἀλκιβιάδης δὲ οὐκ ἔφη χρῆναι τοσαύτῃ δυνάμει ἐκπλεύσαντας, αἰσχρῶς καὶ ἀπράκτως ἀπελθεῖν, ἀλλ' ἐς τε τὰς πόλεις ἐπικηρυκεύεσθαι, πλὴν Σελινοῦντος καὶ Συρακουσῶν, τὰς ἄλλας, καὶ πειρᾶσθαι καὶ τοὺς Σικελοὺς τοὺς μὲν ἀφιστάναι ἀπὸ τῶν Συρακοσίων, τοὺς δὲ φίλους ποιεῖσθαι, ἵνα σῖτον καὶ στρατιὰν ἔχωσι· πρῶτον δὲ πείθειν Μεσσηνίους (ἐν πόρῳ γὰρ μάλιστα καὶ προσβολῇ εἶναι αὐτοὺς τῆς Σικελίας, καὶ λιμένα καὶ ‡ ἐφόρμησιν τῇ στρατιᾷ

καὶ τῇ πόλει—κινδυνεύειν] On the construction, and consequently the sense, of these words, a difference of opinion exists. I am now inclined to think that Abresch was right in maintaining that the infinitive κινδυνεύειν depends on the words γνώμη ἦν at the beginning of the chapter; according to which view, the sense will be, 'His opinion was,—that they should not put to hazard the safety of the state by wasting its own resources,' the domestica (i. e. reipublicæ) bona. In κινδυνεύειν τῇ πόλει we have a very unusual form of expression, though, as Dukas points out, it has already occurred supra ch. 10.

Ch. XLVIII. This chapter contains the opinion of Alcibiades.

1. ἐπικηρυκεύεσθαι] i. e. 'to open negociations by embassies.' Ἵνα σῖτον καὶ στρατιὰν ἔχωσι, 'that they may have provisions and forces [supplied from thence].' The δὲ after πρῶτον is continuative, (answering to the Latin porro or cæterum,) and may be rendered, 'but first of all;' in which case (especially where a μὲν corresponding to δὲ has just preceded) a colon should be placed at the end of the foregoing clause. Πείθειν Μεσσηνίους, 'to gain them over,' conciliare, as Hom. Il. i. 100, τότε κέν μιν ἱλασσάμενοι πεπίθοιμεν, and 132. Eurip. Med. 960. Of course the endeavour in this case is alone to be understood, as often in Xenophon, and similarly in our verb to sway.

ἐν πόρῳ γὰρ—ἔσεσθαι] Render, 'on what grounds it was so expedient to bring over the Messenians,'—namely, from the importance of its commanding situation, being as it were the tête du pont of the passage from Greece to Sicily: for such is the force of the expression ἐν πόρῳ καὶ προσβολῇ, where there is a hendiadys, πόρῳ being equivalent to περαιώσει, passage, as the Scholiast explains; and προσβολῇ denoting the immediate approach. Similarly at iv. 1, Messana is said to have τὴν προσβολὴν τῆς Σικ. And of the expression προσβ. τ. Σικ. another example occurs infra vii. 4. The words καὶ λιμένα καὶ ἐφόρμησιν τῇ στρατιᾷ advert to its importance in another point of view,—namely, as supplying to the armament a port, and ἐφόρμ. ἱκανωτάτην. Here, however, the question is, whether the true reading be ἐφόρμησιν, which is the common one, retained by Haack, Bekker, Arnold, and Goeller (second edition), or ἐφόρμισιν, which is edited, from five MSS., by Poppo and Goeller (first edition), and Haack (second edition). I have chosen to adopt the former, 1. because there is no proof that ἐφόρμισις can have the sense assigned by Poppo, namely, 'stationis adversus hostem capiendæ facultatem,' or opportunitatem;—2. because the weight of MS. authority is all in favour of ἐφόρμησιν; only five among the worst MSS. having ἐφόρμισιν, and of these perhaps some altered from ἐφόρμησιν; which I have, on collation, found to be the case in the Cod. Clar., and ἐφόρμησιν in Mus. Br. Indeed I (with Dr. Arnold) doubt whether ἐφόρμισιν can express any thing more than is already done in the preceding term λιμένα (see iv. 8, 5): and yet that our author meant something not the same with it, plainly appears from his writing καὶ λιμένα καὶ ἐφόρμησιν. And what can that something more be, but, as Dr. Arnold expresses, a convenient position for attacking the enemy, or watching his movements? a sense which the context demands, and which ἐφόρμησιν very well supplies (see note on ii. 89, 10); but of which ἐφόρμισιν is by no means susceptible.

ἱκανωτάτην ἔσεσθαι)· προσαγαγομένους δὲ τὰς πόλεις, εἰδότας μεθ' ὧν τις πολεμήσει, οὕτως ἤδη Συρακούσαις καὶ Σελινοῦντι ἐπιχειρεῖν, ἢν μὴ οἱ μὲν Ἐγεσταίοις ξυμβαίνωσιν, οἱ δὲ Λεοντίνους ἐῶσι κατοικίζειν. XLIX. Λάμαχος δὲ ἄντικρυς ἔφη χρῆναι πλεῖν ἐπὶ Συρακούσας, καὶ πρὸς τῇ πόλει ὡς τάχιστα τὴν μάχην ποιεῖσθαι, ἕως ἔτι ἀπαράσκευοί τέ εἰσι καὶ μάλιστα ἐκπεπληγμένοι. 2. τὸ γὰρ πρῶτον πᾶν στράτευμα δεινότατον εἶναι· ἢν δὲ χρονίσῃ, πρὶν ἐς ὄψιν ἐλθεῖν, τῇ γνώμῃ ἀναθαρσοῦντας ἀνθρώπους, καὶ τῇ ὄψει καταφρονεῖν

Of ἱκανωτάτην the sense is here idoneam, 'convenient,' literally, 'what is competent for any purpose.' On the term προσαγαγομένους, 'having brought over,' see note at v. 83. The τις, just after, stands for ἡμεῖς: a very rare use, passed over in Matth. and Kuhn. Gr. Gr., but of which examples are found elsewhere, as supra iii. 55.

Ch. XLIX. 1. The word ἄντικρυς is to be construed, not with ἔφη, but with πλεῖν, in the sense rectà, 'straightforward,' which it bears also at ii. 4, 5. Xen. Cyr. vii. 1, 29, ἀντικρὺ δι' αὐτῶν εἰς τὴν φάλαγγα ἐμβάλλει. Dio Cass. 119, 21, ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἄντικρυς ἠπείχθη, and 266, 68, ἐπ' αὐτὴν ἄντικρυς τὴν Ῥώμην ἤλασε. In this sense, too, the word occurs in Hom. Il. xiii. 137, ἦρχε δ' ἄρ' Ἕκτωρ, Ἀντικρὺ μεμαώς: where render, 'right against them;' the expression answering to another just before, οἱ δ' ἰθὺς φρόνεον, μέμασαν δὲ μάχεσθαι. In both cases there is an ellipsis of ἴέναι: q. d. 'they had a mind, or were fully bent, to go straight against them,' as we should say, 'right at them.' It may, indeed, be thought difficult to account for this sense of ἀντικρύ, especially as frequent in the most ancient writers. But this difficulty is only to be removed by previously removing a yet greater,—namely, to trace the true etymology of ἀντικρύ, which may be derived from ἀντὶ and κάρα, i. e. per syncopen for ἀντικάρα, which means literally, 'headlong against;' where by headlong (which means head-along) must simply be denoted a motion by the straightest course, and bear the sense rectà. Perhaps, however, ἄντικρυ derives its origin from ἀντὶ and κὰρ (for κάρα, which is found in Hom. Il. xvi. 392, ἐπὶ κάρ); or rather from ἀντὶ and κὰρ was formed the adjective ἀντικαρὺς, whence the adverb ἀντικαρύ; though the adjective form ἀντικρὺς was sometimes used by the poets, for the metre-sake. With this compound ἀντικαρὺς we may compare the very rare form (though preserved by Hesych.) ἀντόφρις.

πρὸς τῇ πόλει—ποιεῖσθαι] Strange is it that μάχην should have been, as it has by many commentators, taken to bear the sense oppugnationem, or at any rate bellum. It might, indeed, mean the latter; but not in the phrase μάχην ποιεῖσθαι, which can only signify 'come to battle' (literally, 'do battle,' a phrase frequent in our older writers). Nor will the presence of the article prove μάχην is to be taken as standing for πόλεμον: for there is no reason to regard it as very significant: and indeed Plutarch, in a passage written with an evident view to the present, Nic. 14, passes it over, expressing the sense of πρὸς τῇ πόλει μάχην ποιεῖσθαι by μάχην ἐγγύτατα τῆς πόλεως τιθέναι. It is, however, not without its use; any more than the article τῆς at i. 71, as joined with ἐπιτεχνήσεως and πολυπειρίας,—which nouns may be said to fall under the class noticed in Bp. Middleton, Gr. Art. i. 5, of 'abstract nouns taken in their most abstract sense.' Here, I apprehend, the article is best accounted for on the supposition that it has (like many others in our author) a reference, however obscure; which will here appear by filling up the sense as follows: 'Lamachus was of opinion that the battle, which was to be fought, should be fought close by the city itself.' The same force is observable in the article at iv. 68, 6, εἴτε μὴ πείσεταί τις αὐτοῦ τὴν μάχην ἔσεσθαι, and v. 91, τοὺς λ. ἐροῦμεν. It is meant, then, that the battle which they came to fight should be fought as near as possible to the city they came to subdue.

2. τῇ γνώμῃ—καταφρονεῖν μᾶλλον] I see no reason to adopt, with Poppo and Haack (second edition), the punctuation of Krueger, by which the comma is removed after ἀνθρώπους, and placed after τῇ ὄψει. As to the passages adduced in favour of this view from supra iv. 34, τῇ ὄψει τοῖ θαρσεῖν πλεῖστον εἰληφότες, and vi. 31, τῇ ὄψει ἀνεθάρσουν, they are, as Goeller says, quite dissimilar in cast to the present: and he truly observes, 'Præsentis μᾶλλον. * αἰφνίδιοι δὲ ἦν προσπέσωσιν, ἕως ἔτι περιδεεῖς προσδέχονται, μάλιστ' ἂν * σφεῖς περιγενέσθαι, καὶ κατὰ πάντα ἂν αὐτοὺς ἐκφοβῆσαι, τῇ τε ὄψει (πλεῖστοι γὰρ ἂν νῦν φανῆναι) καὶ τῇ προσδοκίᾳ ὧν πείσονται, μάλιστα δ' ἂν τῷ αὐτίκα κινδύνῳ τῆς μάχης. 3. εἰκὸς δὲ εἶναι καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀγροῖς πολλοὺς ‡ἀπολειφθῆναι ἔξω, διὰ loci hæc est ratio: Si Athenienses tergiversentur, prius animis firmiores fore, postea etiam, quum viderint, contempturos apparatum Atheniensium.' And so Dr. Arnold expresses the sense as follows: 'Men recovering confidence in their minds, when they see the armament with their eyes, are inclined rather to despise it.' Vain are the arguments against the above view urged by Poppo; for certain it is that Dr. Arnold's reason why τῇ ὄψει should not be joined with ἀναθαρσοῦντας greatly outweighs in strength those which Poppo advances against its being taken with καταφρονεῖν μᾶλλον. That τῇ ὄψει may stand for ἐν τῇ ὄψει, (quum viderint,) or that its meaning is, 'at the sight,' does not need the proof which Poppo says is wanting. It is for him to prove that it cannot bear that sense. As to the other reasons he alleges, they are too frivolous to deserve attention.

I must not omit to observe, that the construction of χρονίζειν with an infinitive, ushered in by πρίν, has, as far as I know, no precedent elsewhere. The nearest approach to it is in a passage of the Old Testament, 2 Sam. xx. 5, Sept. ἐχρόνισεν ἀπὸ τοῦ καιροῦ οὗ ἐτάξατο, scil. ἐλθεῖν, i. e. until the set time was past.

αἰφνίδιοι] This I have chosen, with Poppo and Goeller (second edition), to retain, for the reading, supported though it is by almost all the best MSS. (to which add Clarend.) αἰφνίδιον. For (as Poppo and Arnold have shown) it is according to the usage of Thucydides and the earlier writers generally, to employ the adjective in preference to the adverb; and in so minute a variation, MSS. have far less weight than the usus linguæ and the custom of any age.

A little after, I have ventured, with Bekker and Goeller, to edit, for vulg. σφᾶς, σφεῖς, though without the authority of MSS.; the nominative being required by the context, and the variation thus arising so small as to make the testimony of MSS. in this instance little considerable. Easier, indeed, is it to imagine how σφεῖς might, from the occurrence of accusatives before and after, and from the comparative rareness of σφεῖς, pass into σφᾶς, than to imagine any sufficient excuse for the accusative. For as to those alleged by Poppo and Arnold, they seem not to have carried conviction to their own minds.

3. ἀπολειφθῆναι] This (the reading found in A. B. N. R. V. c. d. e. h. m.) I must still, as formerly, regard as the true one, and not the common one, ἀποληφθῆναι, retained by Poppo and Arnold. For even admitting, what Arnold affirms, that the two words are often confounded in MSS., yet the most correct MSS. so generally present the true reading, that their authority is far from being what he asserts, 'hardly worth any thing on the occasion.' True it is that their testimony will not of itself be sufficient to establish the reading; which must, after all, be decided by the context: and that is, I apprehend, in the present case, quite in favour of the reading of the best MSS., ἀπολειφθῆναι; for though ἀποληφθῆναι would be very suitable, yet ἀπολειφθῆναι is no less so, though somewhat unusual. Again, as to the objection urged by Dr. Arnold, that 'ἀπολειφθῆναι, "to be left behind," would rather apply to those who, endeavouring to get in the city, came too late, and found the gates closed,'—this has little force; since the term ἀπολείπεσθαι may, and doubtless does, mean simply to be absent, to remain behind; namely, from inability caused by occupation, detention, &c.; and so it is used in a passage of Xen. Mem. iv. 2, 32, οἱ μὲν μετασχόντες — οἱ δὲ δι' ἀσθένειαν ἀπολειφθέντες — δι' ἀσθένειαν ἀπολείπονται: i. e., as the interpreters explain, absunt, domi manent. And Sturz in his Lex. Xen. affirms this sense to be one frequent in that writer, especially where the verb occurs with οὐκ, in the sense 'to remain or lag behind,' as opposed to ἕπεσθαι. Finally, as to the objection urged by Poppo, that ὑπολείπεσθαι would thus be required, and not ἀπολ., that carries even less force than the foregoing, since although ὑπολείπεσθαι is more usual, yet ἀπολ., as being the less common and the less obvious term, is to be preferred, especially in a writer like Thucydides, who so often employs unusual phraseology. And that it is used by our author, is certain from a passage infra vii. 75, 4, οὐκ ἄνευ ὀλίγων ἐπιθειασμῶν καὶ οἰμωγῆς ἀπολειπόμενοι (where, for ἀπολ., τὸ ἀπιστεῖν σφᾶς μὴ ἥξειν· καὶ, ἐσκομιζομένων αὐτῶν, τὴν στρατιὰν οὐκ ἀπορήσειν χρημάτων, ἣν πρὸς τῇ πόλει κρατοῦσα καθέζηται. 4. τούς τε ἄλλους Σικελιώτας οὕτως ἤδη μᾶλλον καὶ ἐκείνους οὐ ξυμμαχήσειν καὶ σφίσι προσιέναι, καὶ οὐ διαμελλήσειν περισκοποῦντας ὁπότεροι κρατήσουσι. 5. ναύσταθμον δὲ, ἐπαναχωρήσαντας καὶ ‡ἐφορμηθέντας, Μέγαρα ἔφη χρῆναι ποιεῖσθαι· ἃ ἦν ἔρημα, ἀπέχοντα Συρακουσῶν οὔτε πλοῦν πολὺν οὔτε ὁδόν.

L. Λάμαχος μὲν ταῦτα εἰπὼν, ὅμως προσέθετο καὶ αὐτὸς τῇ Ἀλκιβιάδου γνώμῃ. μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο Ἀλκιβιάδης, τῇ αὑτοῦ νηΐ διαπλεύσας ἐς Μεσσήνην, καὶ λόγους ποιησάμενος περὶ ξυμμαχίας πρὸς αὐτούς, ὡς οὐκ ἔπειθεν,—ἀλλ' ἀπεκρίναντο πόλει μὲν ἂν οὐ δέξασθαι, ἀγορὰν δ' ἔξω παρέξειν,—ἀπέπλει ἐς τὸ Ῥήγιον. 2. καὶ εὐθὺς ξυμone MS. has ὑπολ.). And it occurs several times in Plato, e. g. p. 243, εἴτ' ἐπακολουθοῦμεν αὐτοῖς εἴτε ἀπολειπόμεθα.

καὶ ἐσκομιζομένων αὐτῶν] 'and although they should have removed themselves and their effects [into the city].' Ἐσκομιζομένων is, as Goeller observes, an accustomed term on this subject; and hence, as he says, ἐσκομ. stands for ἐσκομ. τὰ χρήματα. And he compares another passage of our author, supra ii. 5, ἐπειδὴ τὰ ἐκ τῆς χώρας ἐσεκομίσαντο: and (what is still more to the present purpose) ii. 18, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐσεκομίζοντο—καὶ ἐδόκουν οἱ Πελ. ἐπελθόντες ἂν διὰ τάχους, πάντα ἔτι ἔξω καταλαβεῖν. Here there is the less harshness in supplying the word χρήματα, since χρημάτων occurs just after; not, however, in the sense money, but goods of all kinds, (especially such as would be necessary to a besieging army,) namely, food, clothing, furniture, &c. Κρατοῦσα, 'having the upper hand,' being master of the field.

4. σφίσι προσιέναι] 'would come over to them,' 'join their standard;' as iv. 85. vi. 20, et al.

5. I have chosen, with Bekker and Arnold, to retain the common reading ἐφορμηθέντας, (which, on collation, I have found in Codd. Clar. and Cantab.) for which ἐφορμισθέντας has been edited, on the conjecture of Schaefer, by Poppo; but not on good grounds; nay, as Arnold says, 'from a complete misconception of the whole passage, the meaning of which is, as he points out, that "they should make Megara their naval station, to retire to when needful, and to advance from when they moved against the enemy."' Moreover, I have pointed off, for greater clearness sake, the participles ἐπαναχ. and ἐφορμηθέντας. And although in construing, we must take them with the infinitive χρῆναι, yet they, in effect, serve to introduce a circumstance, as though genitives absolute. At the same time, the Leyden Scholiast is right in regarding ἐπαναχωρήσαντας καὶ ἐφορμ. as equivalent to ἐν τῷ ἐπαναχωρεῖν, καὶ ἐν τῷ ἐφορμᾶσθαι. Comp. vi. 97, 4, ὁπότε προΐοιεν.

Finally, the same kind of reasoning which, supra ch. 48, proved ἐφόρμισιν to be a false reading, and ἐφόρμησιν the true one, will here equally apply; for considering that Lamachus did not expect the war to last till winter, there was no need of a port to winter at; which Megara, though on the sea-coast, did not afford, (having merely a roadstead, or petty bay, at the mouth of the Alabus; if, at least, Cluverius be right in fixing it there,) but only as a station for a naval camp during the siege, as Malea had done during the siege of Mitylene, as recorded iii. 6. Cluverius has, I doubt not, ascertained the true site of Megara, as at the mouth of the southernmost of two rivulets running into the Megarus Sinus; but he has laid them, in his map, much too near to Syracuse. I find the distance (measured in Capt. Smyth's map) to be 12 miles; which, however, will not be discordant with the words of our author.

CH. L. 1. προσέθετο] See note on i. 20. Τῇ αὐτοῦ νηΐ, meaning that which he had himself equipped, &c., according to law; and of which, consequently, he was trierarch. Ἀλλ' ἀπεκρίναντο, 'but they, on the contrary, answered;' αὐτὸν being left understood, as αὐτοῖς just before.

2. ξυμπληρώσαντες] The prep. ξὺν is πληρώσαντες ἑξήκοντα ναῦς ἐκ πασῶν οἱ στρατηγοὶ, καὶ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια λαβόντες, παρέπλεον ἐς Νάξον, τὴν ἄλλην στρατιὰν ἐν Ῥηγίῳ καταλιπόντες καὶ ἕνα σφῶν αὐτῶν. 3. Ναξίων δὲ δεξαμένων τῇ πόλει, παρέπλεον ἐς Κατάνην. καὶ, ὡς αὐτοὺς οἱ Καταναῖοι οὐκ ἐδέχοντο, (ἐνῆσαν γὰρ αὐτόθι ἄνδρες τὰ Συρακοσίων βουλόμενοι) ἐκομίσθησαν ἐπὶ τὸν Τηρίαν ποταμόν. καὶ αὐλισάμενοι, τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ ἐπὶ Συρακούσας ἔπλεον ἐπὶ κέρως, ἔχοντες τὰς ἄλλας ναῦς· δέκα δὲ τῶν here used in order to intimate that the number was drafted from all three of the squadrons, into which the fleet had been divided. This term is one frequent in Xenoph. Hist.

3. τὰ Συρακ. βουλόμενοι] Poppo remarks, that for this, φρονοῦντες (occurring in the next chap.) is the more usual expression; and, he might have added, the somewhat stronger. In the present passage, βούλεσθαι bears the sense 'to wish well to any person,' or the interests of any person. The persons here spoken of were probably secret well-wishers to the Syracusan interests, though professing, with the rest of the citizens, a desire to be neutral,—receiving neither of the belligerents into the city. Otherwise I see not why our author should not have used the expression οἱ φρονοῦντες, especially considering that the phrase is so rare, that examples of it elsewhere are, as far as I know, not to be found: though something nearly approaching to it occurs, Stephens says, elsewhere in this book, namely, οἱ ταῦτα βουλόμενοι. Compare also Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1855, 9, ἐλαττόνων ὄντων τῶν μὴ ταῦτα βουλομένων. Such, too, is the use in Latin of velle for benè velle, i. e. 'to wish well to any one's affairs.'

Τηρίαν ποταμὸν] Rightly fixed by Cluverius at the present Fiume di Santo Leonardi; on which see Capt. Smyth's Survey of Sicily, p. 158. At the mouth of this river, though there is no harbour, there is an open roadstead, where the ships might be moored for the night; while the crews doubtless passed the night in tents on shore, as the term αὐλισάμενοι suggests.

In the words following, ἔπλεον ἐπὶ κέρως ἔχοντες, I have adopted the punctuation of Bekker and Poppo; though Arnold agrees with Dobree in thinking the older commentators right in placing the comma after ἔπλεον, as if those ten ships sent forward did not sail ἐπὶ κέρως. But why, it may be asked, should they not? Certain it is that ἐπὶ κέρως connects most naturally with ἔπλεον. And the opinion above adverted to may be ascribed to a misconception of the import of ἔχοντες, of which the sense is simply, 'accompanied by,' having under their command the other ships, viz. the fifty, all except the ten sent forward. The idiom is one frequent both in classical and scriptural writers. Thus the sense of δέκα δὲ τῶν νεῶν may be expressed by, 'but ten of the ships they had sent forward.' Dr. Arnold expresses surprise that Plut. Nic. 14, should understand the ἐπὶ κέρως of our author as signifying a line, not a column. But though κέρας may and does sometimes denote a column, yet it is only a side column or wing of a fleet or army, as in Hist. vi. 2, 16. Nor does the phrase ἐπὶ κέρως ever, I apprehend, denote any thing else than in line. Consequently ἐπὶ κέρως πλεῖν, or πορεύεσθαι, must mean to move in line, (whether one or two deep, as the case may be,) since when a fleet or army moves by a flank motion in the direction of one of the wings, it can move in no other way. Of the phrase in question examples occur, besides the present passage, elsewhere, vi. 32, and ii. 90, in Xenoph. Laced. xi. 8, and Hist. i. 7, 31, ἀναχθέντας ἐπὶ κέρως. vi. 2, 30, τότε μὲν ἐπὶ κέρως ἦγε, τότε δὲ ἐπὶ φάλαγγος, which latter expression denotes a motion in front, from the φάλαγξ or centre, as opposed to one in flank. Thus Schwebel on Onosand. p. 69, says, that ἐπὶ κέρως (in its military use) means à la file, εἰς πρόσωπον or μέτωπον, (equivalent to the expression ἐπὶ φάλαγγος in the above passage of Xenophon,) de front. Finally, for ἐπὶ κέρως, Herodotus uses ἐπὶ κέρας, (see Valcken. and Schweigh. on Herodot. vi. 12.) as does also Xenophon, Cyr. vi. 3, 11, ed. Th. In another passage of our author, ii. 90, 4, we have the plainer expression κατὰ μίαν ἐπὶ κέρως παραπλέοντας, (denoting, no doubt, the order pursued on the present occasion,) as opposed to μετωπηδὸν ἔπλεον, just after. In short, to have sailed in column, in this instance, would have involved a waste of labour and time to no purpose.

νεῶν προὔπεμψαν, ἐς τὸν μέγαν λιμένα πλεῦσαί τε, καὶ κατασκέψασθαι εἴ τι ναυτικὸν ἐστι καθειλκυσμένον, καὶ κηρῦξαι ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν, προσπλεύσαντας, ὅτι Ἀθηναῖοι ἥκουσι Λεοντίνους ἐς τὴν ἑαυτῶν κατοικιοῦντες κατὰ ξυμμαχίαν καὶ ξυγγένειαν· τοὺς οὖν ὄντας ἐν Συρακούσαις Λεοντίνων ὡς παρὰ φίλους καὶ εὐεργέτας Ἀθηναίους ἀδεῶς ἀπιέναι. 4. ἐπεὶ δ' ἐκηρύχθη, καὶ κατεσκέψαντο τήν τε πόλιν καὶ τοὺς λιμένας, καὶ τὰ περὶ τὴν χώραν, ἐξ ἧς αὐτοῖς ὁρμωμένοις πολεμητέα ἦν, ἀπέπλευσαν πάλιν ἐς Κατάνην. I should have thought it unnecessary to dilate thus much on the above point, but that I find Bp. Thirlwall has unwarily followed Dr. Arnold by expressing the sense 'sailed in a column.'

προὔπεμψαν, ἐς τὸν μέγαν, &c.] I have here ventured to deviate from the punctuation of all former editors, since, by a sort of transposition very common in our author, the words ἐς τὸν μέγαν λιμένα are meant to be joined, not with προὔπεμψαν, but with πλεῦσαι. Otherwise, πλεῦσαι, taken by itself, would be at once flat and unmeaning. And to supply, as does Portus, the word illuc, would by no means help the sense; for the squadron was not sent forward to sail in the great harbour, (a sense, indeed, which would require, for πλεῦσαι, περιπλεῦσαι,) but simply to reconnoitre the harbour, and to ascertain whether the enemy's ships were hauled down, and ready for sea.

προσπλεύσαντας] Not 'sailing by,' as Smith renders; but 'sailing up to [the city].' The participle is put in the accusative, from its being in apposition with the words δέκα τῶν νεῶν; and the masculine is used πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον; the ships here, as often, being for the men on board.

ἀπιέναι] scil. παρ' Ἀθηναίους, 'to come over to the Athenians.' Of this rare sense of ἀπιέναι examples occur elsewhere in Xen. Anab. i. 9, 29, παρὰ Κύρου οὐδεὶς ἀπῄει πρὸς βασιλέα, and Cyr. v. 1, 19.

For vulg. Ἀθηναίων, I have, with Bekker and Poppo, received Ἀθηναίους, though only found in one third-rate MS. and in Valla. Vainly does Goeller defend the former, since it involves a construction (ἀδεῶς Ἀθηναίων) intolerably harsh, and only to be admitted in lyric poetry. We may suppose it to have arisen from an error in decyphering the termination, and from a misapprehension of the construction, which is, as Krueger points out, κηρῦξαι ὥστε αὐτοὺς ἀδεῶς ἀπιέναι παρὰ Ἀθηναίους, ὡς παρὰ φίλ. καὶ εὐεργ. 'quâ structurâ (observes Goeller) ita utuntur Græci, ut quod explicatur, postponant verbis, quibus id explicant, hæc verba præmittant et repetitionem præpositionis negligant.' See on i. 84, and Kuhn. Gr. § 650, Jelf.

4. πολεμητέα ἦν] 'bellandum erat.' Αὐτοῖς, for ὑπ' αὐτῶν.

CH. LI. 1. πρὸς τὴν ἐκκλ. τετρ.] 'being occupied with the assembly,' i. e. their attention being turned to that object; a sense which the verb bears also in Xen. Hier. ix. 7, τοῖς εἰς τοῦτο τρεπομένοις, and Mem. ii. 3, 18, ἐς—τράποιντο πρὸς τὸ διακωλύειν ἀλλήλους.

ἐνῳκοδομημένην κακῶς] Render, 'badly walled up.' The term κακῶς may be supposed to have reference both to the materials and the work itself; and, as regards the former, be equivalent to the term by which one of the Scholiasts explains the present, σαθρῶς, badly; (and so the term is applied in Polyæn. Strat. i. 40, 4,) or to the word employed by another Scholiast, ἀτέχνως, and as probably Josephus took the expression of our author, since he so employs it at Bell. v. 6, 3, ἐχρῶντο κακῶς τοῖς ὀργάνοις. Of ἐνοικ., in the sense it here bears, examples occur elsewhere in Arrian, E. A. vi. 29, 10, τὴν θυρίδα δὲ (speaking of the monument of Cyrus) ἀφανίσαι, τὰ μὲν αὐτῆς λίθῳ ἐνοικοδομήσαντα, τὰ δὲ πηλῷ, 'having stopped it up with mortar' (what in Herodot. ii. 74, is expressed by ἐμπλάσαντα δὲ, κομίζειν).

τὴν πόλιν. 2. τῶν δὲ Καταναίων οἱ μὲν τὰ τῶν Συρακοσίων φρονοῦντες, ὡς εἶδον τὸ στράτευμα ἔνδον, εὐθὺς περιδεεῖς γενόμενοι ὑπεξῆλθον, οὐ πολλοί τινες· οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι ἐψηφίσαντό τε ξυμμαχίαν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα ἐκέλευον ἐκ Ῥηγίου κομίζειν. 3. μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο διαπλεύσαντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς τὸ Ῥήγιον, πάσῃ ἤδη τῇ στρατιᾷ ἄραντες ἐς τὴν Κατάνην, ἐπειδὴ ἀφίκοντο, κατεσκευάζοντο τὸ στρατόπεδον.

LII. Ἐσηγγέλλετο δὲ αὐτοῖς ἔκ τε Καμαρίνης ὡς, εἰ ἔλθοιεν, προσχωροῖεν ἄν· καὶ ὅτι Συρακόσιοι πληροῦσι ναυτικόν. ἁπάσῃ οὖν τῇ στρατιᾷ παρέπλευσαν, πρῶτον μὲν ἐπὶ Συρακούσας· καὶ ὡς οὐδὲν εὗρον ναυτικὸν πληρούμενον, παρεκομίζοντο αὖθις ἐπὶ Καμαρίνης, καὶ σχόντες ἐς τὸν αἰγιαλὸν, ἐπεκηρυκεύοντο. οἱ δ' οὐκ ἐδέχοντο, λέγοντες σφίσι † τὰ ὅρκια εἶναι, μιᾷ νηὶ καταπλεόντων Ἀθηναίων,

ἐσελθόντες ἠγόραζον ἐς τὴν πόλιν Goeller and Arnold regard as equivalent to ἐς τὴν πόλιν ἐσελθόντες ἠγόραζον ἐν αὐτῇ. But to thus supply ἐν αὐτῇ is little necessary; such being implied in the term ἀγοράζειν, which here bears the sense in foro versari, or, as it is explained by Hesych., ἐν ἀγορᾷ διατρίβεσθαι. And such is its use in Herodot. iii. 137, εὑρόντες μιν ἀγοράζοντα, and ii. 35, αἱ μὲν γυναῖκες ἀγοράζουσι (where see Valcken.); as also in Aristophanes not unfrequently. Upon the whole, ἀγοράζειν here does not express, what Dr. Arnold supposes it to do, the flocking to the market-place, but simply the using it for the purpose it was intended to serve, — namely, either to stand (in which view compare the words of Matth. xx. 3, εἶδεν ἑστῶτας ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ) or to walk about, doing business or hearing news, &c. Here much stress is laid on the word. The persons in question having entered undesignedly, they proceeded quietly to the market-place,—probably to purchase provisions, and to learn what was going on at the ἐκκλησία.

2. οἱ τὰ τῶν Συρακ. φρονοῦντες] Meaning the partizans of Syracuse. In οὐ πολλοί τινες (with which compare τινὲς οὐ πολλοί, infra ch. 94.) we have a cautious form of expression, by which, however, is meant rather more than would be denoted by our some few. It is here employed to intimate, that the partizans of the Syracusans were but few as compared with the opposite party of Athens, composed chiefly of the people at large; the other, of the higher ranks.

3. διαπλεύσαντες] So I have chosen to read, with Bekker and Goeller, instead of vulg. πλεύσαντες, retained, though not on good grounds, by Poppo and Arnold. The deficiency of external evidence in favour of the former is amply compensated by the superiority of internal, as existing in the circumstance, that we may easily imagine that διαπλεύσαντες might, from inadvertence of the scribes, pass into πλεύσαντες, but not the contrary. Now, the Athenians must, in going from Catana to Rhegium, cross the Siculum Fretum somewhere (probably in a slanting direction); and consequently διαπλ. is a term highly appropriate (and so supra i. 50, 1, we have, διαπλεύσας ἐς Μεσσήνην); though such, we may suppose, would never occur to any negligent copyist. As to the petty objection which Dr. Arnold here urges against διαπλ., that would apply, in a far greater degree, to διέπλευσε πρὸς αὐτὸν in Xen. Hist. i. 5, 11, and διέπλευσε πρὸς Ἔφεσον, i. 5, 14: insomuch that the critics there propose to take the compound as standing for the simple; which is, however, but cutting the knot, which may be untied if we bear in mind that the expressions in question are not to be tried by the measure of geographical exactness, though a kind of crossing might be shown to exist.

Ch. LII. 1. παρεκομίζοντο αὖθις] Here αὖθις bears the sense demum or porro; the meaning being, as Poppo explains, that 'they again coasted along, as they had before done.' Λέγοντες σφίσι τὰ ὅρκια εἶναι, 'alleging the oaths by which they were bound,' namely, (as Haack points out,) by the old compact contained in the treaty with Lamachus. See iii. 86, and compare vi. 75 & 82. So little, however, do I see the force of the article here, that I suspect the τὰ to be a corruption δέχεσθαι, ἢν μὴ αὐτοὶ πλείους μεταπέμπωσιν. 2. ἄπρακτοι δὲ γενόμενοι ἀπέπλεον· καὶ ἀποβάντες κατά τι τῆς Συρακοσίας, καὶ ἁρπαγὴν ποιησάμενοι, καὶ τῶν Συρακοσίων ἱππέων βοηθησάντων, καὶ τῶν ψιλῶν τινας ἐσκεδασμένους διαφθειράντων, ἀπεκομίσθησαν ἐς Κατάνην. LIII. Καὶ καταλαμβάνουσι τὴν Σαλαμινίαν ναῦν ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἥκουσαν ἐπί τε Ἀλκιβιάδην,—ὡς κελεύσοντας ἀποπλεῖν ἐς ἀπολογίαν ὧν ἡ πόλις ἐνεκάλει,—καὶ ἐπ' ἄλλους τινὰς τῶν στρατιωτῶν τῶν μετ' αὐτοῦ μεμηνυμένων περὶ τῶν μυστηρίων ὡς ἀσεβούντων, τῶν δὲ καὶ περὶ τῶν Ἑρμῶν. 2. οἱ γὰρ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐπειδὴ ἡ στρατιὰ ἀπέπλευσεν, οὐδὲν ἧσσον ζήτησιν ἐποιοῦντο τῶν περὶ τὰ μυστήρια καὶ τῶν περὶ τοὺς Ἑρμᾶς δρασθέντων, καὶ οὐ δοκιμάζοντες τοὺς μηνυτάς, ἀλλὰ ‡ πάντα ὑπόπτως ἀποδεχόμενοι, διὰ πονηρῶν for καὶ, even; a conjecture not a little confirmed by the circumstance, that some MSS. have καὶ τὰ, which may be supposed to be two readings blended together, as is also the case in the reading of one other MS., κατὰ τό. Certain it is, the abbreviations for τὰ and καὶ are very similar; and καὶ might easily be mistaken for τὰ, as coming before ὅρκια, especially considering that the καὶ does not seem necessary. If this be not admitted, we may suppose the present to be a brief mode of expression, in which the verb (εἶναι) is to be taken twice,—q. d. 'alleging that the oaths with them (i. e. the Athenians) were, to receive them,' &c.

Ch. LIII. 1. ὡς κελεύσοντας] 'for the purpose of summoning him.' The reference in κελεύσοντας, though grammatically to ναῦν, is really (by the figure πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον) to the men on board of the ships, as at i. 110. ii. 83 & 91. viii. 91. At μεμηνυμένων—ἀσεβούντων the construction is, μεμ. περὶ τῶν μυστηρίων ὡς ἀσεβούντων, scil. ἐς αὐτά (so Xen. Hist. i. 4, 6, ἀσεβ. εἰς τὰ μυστήρια); not μεμην. ὡς ἀσεβ. περὶ τῶν μυστ., for that would require περὶ τὰ μυστήρια, as just after and in Plato, p. 910 & 888, and Xen. Apol. 22, where we have ἀσεβ. περὶ Θ., and Xen. Cyr. v. 2, 3, ἀσεβ. περὶ ξένους.

2. ζήτησιν ἐποιοῦντο τῶν—δρασθέντων] 'made strict inquiry respecting' (i. e. legal investigation into); as Herodot. vi. 118, ζήτησιν ἐποιέετο τῶν νεῶν (where, had Valcken. remembered this passage of our author, he would not have proposed to read ἐξέτασιν). Joseph. Ant. xix. 1, 15, μὴ ποιησομένων τὴν ζήτησιν αὐτοῦ (scil. ἔργου, which is expressed in Procop. p. 205, 10, ζήτησις τοῦ ἔργου οὐδεμία). Plato, p. 389. Ζήτησις is a very strong term, and when used, as here, in a forensic sense, it corresponds to the Latin inquisitio, and is used with a genitive of object, i. e. into. Οὐ δοκιμάζοντες τοὺς μηνυτὰς, 'making no examination into the informers,' i. e. their persons, whether as worthy of credit. So Xen. Athen. iii. 4, ἀρχὰς δοκιμάσαι καὶ διαδικάσαι. Cyr. iii. 4, 13, τοὺς ἰδιώτας δοκ. denoting an examination of their life, morals, and credit.

ἀλλὰ πάντα ὑπόπτως ἀποδεχ.] Previously to determining the sense, it will be necessary to ascertain the true reading, of this clause. For the lect. vulg. πάντας, retained by Bekker, Didot, and Arnold, I have, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, received into the text the reading of many of the best MSS. (to which add Clarend., Cantab., Mus. Br., and Valla) πάντα; this being strongly supported by the preponderance not only of external but of internal evidence, as existing in the great probability that the scribes should, after μηνυτὰς, expect a masculine form to follow, and that the υ in ὑπόπτως, just after, might easily be read with it, and pass for a c. Dr. Arnold, indeed, in defence of the common reading, urges that 'the sense of ἀποδέχεσθαι is not simply to take, but to allow or approve; and that the term is fitly opposed to δοκιμάζοντες; q. d. 'not sifting the character of the informers, but, in their suspicious humour, listening to (allowing as credible) all who came forward.' Compare i. 44. iii. 57. vi. 29, διαβολὰς ἀποδέχεσθαι.' I must confess that to me this defence is any thing but solid and satisfactory; and I must entirely acquiesce in the critical decision of Poppo, as follows: 'Præterquam quod in vulg. parum subtilem esse sermonem ipse Arnoldius concedit, extrema capitis verba nobis ad hæc apertius respicere videntur, quam ut neutrum spernere liceat. Conf. etiam ἀνθρώπων πίστιν πάνυ χρηστοὺς τῶν πολιτῶν ξυλλαμβάνοντες κατέδουν, χρησιμώτερον ἡγούμενοι εἶναι βασανίσαι τὸ πρᾶγμα καὶ εὑρεῖν, ἢ, διὰ μηνυτοῦ πονηρίαν, τινὰ καὶ χρηστὸν δοκοῦντα εἶναι, αἰτιαθέντα, ἀνέλεγκτον διαφυγεῖν. 3. ἐπιστάμενος γὰρ ὁ δῆμος ἀκοῇ τὴν Πεισιστράτου καὶ τῶν παίδων τυραννίδα χαλεπὴν τελευτῶσαν γενομένην, καὶ προσέτι οὐδ' ὑφ' ἑαυτῶν καὶ Ἁρμοδίου καταλυθεῖσαν ἀλλ' ὑπὸ Λακεδαιμονίων, ἐφοβεῖτο ἀεί, καὶ πάντα ὑπόπτως ἐλάμβανε.

LIV. Τὸ γὰρ Ἀριστογείτονος καὶ Ἁρμοδίου τόλμημα δι' ἐρωτικὴν

c. 27, τὸ πνεῦμα μειζόνως ἐλάμβανον. Ἀποδέχεσθαι autem etsi sæpe est probare, tamen, quum nec proprie nec semper illam vim habeat, ex notionibus admittendi, percipiendi, audiendi, intelligendi, (quarum exempla Platonica præbet Ast. Lex. Plat.) æque ac hoc et Græcum λαμβάνειν in vim interpretandi videtur transire posse.' After all, however, the learned critic is, I should say, more successful in disproving the reading and interpretation of Arnold, than in establishing his own view of the sense, which he has not raised beyond this, that the term might bear that acceptation. It remains, then, to consider whether some other sense more capable of proof, and equally suitable, may not be discovered. Now πάντα may very well mean, not only whatever came from the informers in evidence, as regarded the matters in question (the profaning of the mysteries, and the mutilation of the Hermæ) ; but also the occurrences themselves, and all of a similar nature. These the Athenians are described as ὑπόπτως ἀποδ., by which seems meant accipientes, entertaining them (in other words, giving them harbour in their minds) in a suspicious spirit, (ἐν ὑποψίᾳ : see note on ch. 54, 2.) as sufficient to establish the treasonable designs in question. Compare infra viii. 66, ἀλλήλοις ἅπαντες ὑπόπτως προσῆσαν. Now 'it is (as Bp. Thirlwall observes) the nature of such suspicion to find food in the most trivial and indifferent occurrences, such as those in question. Every proof (continues he) that convicted Alcibiades of an offence against religion, was held to confirm the reality of his treasonable designs ; while on the other hand all discoveries which tended to strengthen the popular prejudice with regard to the affair of images, were considered as additional evidence against him.' That this sense is inherent in the word, cannot be denied, such being established by the very passage so confidently alleged by Dr. Arnold in proof of his own interpretation, namely, vi. 29, (speaking of Alcibiades,) ἐπεμαρτύρετο μὴ ἀπόντος περὶ αὐτοῦ διαβολὰς ἀποδέχεσθαι. And such may fairly be presumed to be the sense had in view by the critic from whom proceeded the gloss (for such it is) which has found its way into two MSS. not among the worst, namely, ὑποδεχ. Suffice it to say, that the sense of the words thus drawn forth, being, as it is, so strong, and agreeable to the manner of our author, would of itself decide the controverted points of reading and interpretation, even were they left (which is far from being the case) in æquilibrio.

πονηρῶν ἀνθρώπων] Meaning, according to the moral sense of πονηρός, (also found in Æschyl. Ch. 1041. Eurip. Hec. 594. Aristot. Lys. 350. Jos. Ant. xviii. 9, 7.) 'worthless persons.' Βασανίσαι τὸ πρᾶγμα, 'to scrutinize the affair.'

3. τελευτῶσαν] 'at last.' I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, in cancelling the τῶν before Λακεδαιμονίων, on the authority of several MSS., to which I am enabled to add the Clar., Cantab., and Mus. Brit. : though, considering how often our author omits the article where strict propriety would call for its use, (as, for instance, just before, § 2, πανὺ χρηστοὺς τῶν πολιτῶν,) little authorized should we be to assign that peculiar sense which the absence of the article in writers who are careful in its use, would warrant,—much less that which Dr. Arnold lays down as the sense intended, namely, 'their worst enemies, and the worst enemies of freedom ;' a sense which, wherever it has place, arises not from the absence of the article, but from something in the context. And as to the passage to which Dr. Arnold appeals in proof of this view, (namely, supra iii. 57, 2, διὰ Θηβαίους,) that supplies, in effect, no proof,—since, as I have shown, there the sense in question may be said to arise from the context, and especially from the opposition to Λακεδαιμονίους.

Ch. LIV. Now follows (from this chapξυντυχίαν ἐπεχειρήθη, ἣν ἐγὼ ἐπὶ πλέον διηγησάμενος, ἀποφανῶ οὔτε τοὺς ἄλλους οὔτε αὐτοὺς Ἀθηναίους περὶ τῶν σφετέρων τυράννων, οὐδὲ περὶ τοῦ γενομένου, ἀκριβὲς οὐδὲν λέγοντας. 2. ter to ch. 59) one of those digressions, of no unfrequent occurrence in our author, wherein he takes occasion to correct some popular errors in the history of his country, as to two points of great interest,—the conspiracy of Harmodius and Aristogeiton, and the age and seniority among the sons of Pisistratus. As to the propriety of its introduction here, see my observations in Translation, and those of Dalmann in his Herodotea, p. 226, as also those of Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, p. 63. It is the final opinion of the commentator last mentioned, (in which I entirely myself coincide,) that the best defence is to suppose (as we are warranted in doing from a passage of Aristoph. Lys. 619, καὶ μάλιστ' ὀσφραίνομαι τῆς Ἱππίου τυραννίδος : also v. 630, and Vesp. 488.) that the Athenians had at that time an almost present memory of the domination of the Pisistratidæ ; that there was much talk about it, and, which is highly probable, that they entertained no little fear lest some similar despotism should be brought about. Moreover, unimportant as some circumstances introduced into this digression may seem, they are, however, not wholly such, but serve to supply an example in proof of the position of our author, I. i. c. 20, fin., as to 'the inability of the generality of persons in discovering historical truth, and their proneness to acquiesce in the ordinary opinions entertained thereon.'

1. ἐπὶ πλέον] i. e. 'at a greater length than barely adverting to its main features.' Τοῦ γενομένου, 'the fact itself' (literally, what actually took place).

2. ἀνὴρ τῶν ἀστῶν, μέσος πολίτης] 'a person of the city, a middle-rank citizen,' what is in Herodot. i. 107, expressed by μέσος ἀνήρ. Of this very rare phrase the only examples that I have noted elsewhere are in Aristot. Pol. iv. 11 & 12, where he places the μέσοι πολῖται between the rich and the poor, and accounts them the happiest. Pind. Pyth. xi. 78, seqq. Similarly, too, in Eurip. Suppl. 238—245, we have, Τρεῖς γὰρ πολιτῶν μερίδες· οἱ μὲν ὄλβιοι——· οἱ δ' οὐκ ἔχοντες. Τριῶν δὲ μοιρῶν ἡ 'ν μέσῳ σώζει πόλεος. And the phrase οἱ ἐν μέσῳ occurs also in Appian, t. ii. 544, 17, and δημόται ἐν μέσῳ at ii. 31, 5. Compare also Jos. Ant. p. 82, ἀνὴρ τῶν ἐν μέσῳ πολιτῶν. Plut. Camill. 15, οἱ μέσοι πολῖται. The present form is, as I have said, so rare, that no example of it elsewhere is found except in a passage of Aristotle. Perhaps, however, it should be restored in a corrupt passage of Alciphron, Epist. iii. 34, οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ τῶν Ἀθήνῃσι μεσοπλούτων φειδῶντές εἰσι καὶ γνίφωνες μικροπρεπέστεροι, where, for μεσοπλούτων, read μεσοπολιτῶν, and, for μικροπρεπέστεροι, read μικροπρεπέστατοι.

3. ἐπιβουλεύει — κατάλυσιν τῇ τυραννίδι] Poppo remarks that ἐπιβουλεύει here bears the sense insidiosè struere. But though the sense of plotting be usually, it is not invariably, inherent in the term ; and here, as the word can only be used with reference to the view of the thing taken by Aristogiton, it must be supposed to bear simply the sense moliri aliquid, consilium agitare ; in which use it is followed not only by an infinitive, but also, as here, by a substantive in the accusative of thing, followed by a dative of person. So Herodot. iii. 122, ἐμοὶ Κ. ἐπιβουλεύει θάνατον, and viii. 132, ἐπεβούλευον θάνατον Στράτ. : and so occasionally in Plato and other of the early and best writers. In such cases the idea intended is, not plotting, but the secrecy of deep heart-counsel that is denoted, as sometimes in the Latin meditor, and which always implies λυσιν τῇ τυραννίδι. 4. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ ὁ Ἵππαρχος ὡς αὖθις πειράσας οὐδὲν μᾶλλον ἔπειθε τὸν Ἁρμόδιον, βίαιον μὲν οὐδὲν ἐβούλετο δρᾶν, ἐν * τρόπῳ δέ τινι ἀφανεῖ, ὡς οὐ διὰ τοῦτο δή, παρεσκευάζετο προπηλακιῶν αὐτόν. 5. οὐδὲ γὰρ τὴν ἄλλην ἀρχὴν ἐπαχθὴς ἦν ready preparation to carry thought into action, and sometimes the idea of harm to the object, as in Virg. Georg. iii. 154, 'Inachiæ Juno pestem meditata juvencæ.'

The interposed words, ὡς ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπαρχούσης ἀξιώσεως, from the extent of signification in ἀξιώσεως, admit of more than one sense, and accordingly have been variously interpreted. The Scholiast, Portus, Haack, and Goeller, suppose it to be equivalent to ὡς κατὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν αὐτῷ δύναμιν, 'quantum suâ auctoritate poterat:' while Haack (first edition) and Dobree explain ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπαρχούσης ἀξιώσεως to signify, 'on the strength of this notion, or surmise,' referring to other passages of our author, supra ii. 88. iii. 9 & 82. Poppo pronounces no opinion. To determine, indeed, the precise sense, is a matter of no little difficulty; for while the signification assigned to ἀξιώσεως, according to the latter view, is borne out by the passages of our author referred to,—yet the words ὡς ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπαρχούσης ἀξιώσεως would thus have little or no meaning (a thing most unusual in our author); not to say that the sentiment thus conveyed were somewhat forced and jejune. On the other hand, the view first mentioned has the advantage of drawing forth the full sense of all the words, and, while in itself more natural, is liable to no serious objection. Aristogiton, it seems, planned destruction to the tyranny, and laid his plans for effecting his purpose ὡς ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπαρχούσης ἀξιώσεως, i. e. 'as well as the condition of life which he occupied (as a citizen of middle rank) would enable him;' in other words, he employed all the credit or influence he possessed, to bring it about. The conjunction ὡς refers to his slender influence as only a μέσος πολίτης: having here, as often, that peculiar force by which it serves to limit a proposition by adverting to the circumstances which attend the actions in question. Thus the expression here, ὡς ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπαρχούσης ἀξιώσεως, is similar to that infra ch. 76, ὡς ἐκ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων, and another elsewhere, ὡς ἐκ τῶν δυνατῶν; signifying, 'as far as possible, under existing circumstances.' Compare iv. 96, ὡς διὰ ταχέων, and other passages adduced in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 628, 3. The power he possessed for this effect could not but be inconsiderable; yet from ch. 56 it appears that it sufficed to procure him some trusty supporters in his attempt: though, had his influence been less, and his supporters fewer in number, he would probably, hurried on by desire of revenge, have ventured on the attempt.

4. ἐν τρόπῳ δέ τινι ἀφανεῖ] I have not thought proper, with Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, to retain the reading τόπῳ; this admitting of no sense permitted by the context, or by the norma loquendi of the age of our author: for, taking it in the sense which the word bears in certain passages of the New Testament, (as Acts xxv. 16.) to signify occasion, (q. d. on an occasion that should be unobserved,) we are encountered by the objection, urged by Poppo, that the signification in question seems to have been one merely derived from the Latin. Accordingly I have ventured to receive into the text the conjecture of Levêque and Dobree, (approved of, though not received by, Pop. and Goell.) τρόπῳ, which is confirmed by a parallel expression at viii. 66, ἐκ τρόπου τινὸς ἐπιτηδείου ἐτεθνήκει, 'he was despatched in some convenient way.' Compare also τρόπῳ τινὶ in Xen. Cyr. ii. 2, 17, and τρόπῳ γέ τινι in Plato. Finally, the above conjecture may be said to be placed beyond doubt by a passage which Poppo has adduced from Dio Cass. xliii. 13, ἐν τρόπῳ δή τινι ἀφανεῖ ὑπεξῄρει, where the writer had evidently in mind this passage of our author, as also another at viii. 66. As to the circumstance that the MSS. have all either τόπῳ, or a corruption thereof, τούτῳ, that is not decisive against τρόπῳ, since few words are there more generally interchanged than τόπος and τρόπος; (see the critics referred to in Steph. Thes. in voc.) and no wonder, since the MS. abbreviation for τρόπος differs little from one form of the τ; and, at any rate, when the tail of the ρ has faded away, τρόπος becomes τόπος.

προπηλακιῶν αὐτὸν] 'throwing public disgrace upon him,' literally, 'throwing him into public disgrace' (for προπηλακίζειν signifies properly to throw any one into the mire or kennel). Poppo remarks

ἐς τοὺς πολλούς, ἀλλ' ἀνεπιφθόνως κατεστήσατο· καὶ ἐπετήδευσαν ἐπὶ πλεῖστον δή, τύραννοι, οὗτοι ἀρετὴν καὶ ξύνεσιν, καὶ Ἀθηναίους εἰκοστὴν μόνον πρασσόμενοι τῶν γιγνομένων, τήν τε πόλιν αὐτῶν καλῶς διεκόσμησαν καὶ τοὺς πολέμους διέφερον, καὶ ἐς τὰ ἱερὰ ἔθυον. 6. τὰ δὲ ἄλλα αὐτὴ ἡ πόλις τοῖς πρὶν κειμένοις νόμοις ἐχρῆτο, πλὴν that the term occurs in a passage of Aristot. Polit. iv. 11 & 12, to denote disgrace of the very kind here mentioned. And in illustration of the force of this προπηλακισμὸς, (on which Goeller refers to Schoemann de Att. Proz. p. 327, 550.) Poppo cites a passage of Demosth. de Corona, § 12, ἐπήρειαν ἔχει, καὶ ὕβριν καὶ λοιδορίαν καὶ προπηλακισμόν. And he might have added another, of Aristot. Eth. Nic. v. 2, οἷον αἰκία, δεσμὸς, θάνατος, ἁρπαγὴ, πήρωσις, κακηγορία, προπηλακισμός.

5. ἀνεπιφθόνως κατεστήσατο] scil. τὴν ἀρχὴν, (which is to be repeated from the foregoing,) 'so conducted the government as not to incur envy or hatred.' Ἀνεπιφθόνως is for ἀνεγκλήτως, as in Dio Cass. 661, 21, ἀνεπιφθόνως καὶ ἀκινδύνως πάνθ' ὅσα ἐθέλουσι καρποῦνται, 'citra invidiam vel odium.' See note on i. 75. vi. 83. Ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, a little after, is best explained, not by diutissimè, but quam maximè (which sense the expression bears also at ii. 35, δόξης τυχεῖν ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, and i. 4, θαλάσσης ἐπὶ πλεῖστον. Dio Cass. 147, 6, ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, cum maximè); and taken with the δὴ, signifies, 'to a very considerable degree indeed.' In ἐπιτηδεύειν ἀρετὴν there is a strong form of expression, of which the sense is, 'to cultivate the practice of virtue habitually.' Comp. Herodot. ii. 129, ταῦτα ἐπιτηδεύων. Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 26, τὰ καλὰ καὶ τὰ ἀγαθὰ ἐπιτηδεύων, and Laced. x. 4, ἐπιτηδ. τὴν καλοκἀγαθίαν, and Plato, p. 613, ἐπιτηδ. ἀρετήν.

I have not ventured, with Poppo, to introduce οἱ before τύραννοι, because, although Poppo says the article is here required by propriety, he does not prove the point; and the fact that the article is in certain passages of our author elsewhere not found, though seemingly called for by strict propriety as to its use, ought to forbid its obtrusion in any passage in opposition to the united evidence of the MSS. Here we may fairly presume that Thucydides did not use the article, for what reason is another question. As to Dr. Arnold's query, whether τύραννοι οὗτοι signifies the same thing as οἱ τύραννοι οὗτοι, I would answer, certainly not: though on the exact force of τύραννοι οὗτοι, we are not, I think, enabled to pronounce positively. Yet that cannot be what Dr. Arnold supposes, οὗτοι δὴ τύραννοι ἐπικαλούμενοι, for that is to suppose an ellipsis most harsh; and no good reason can be imagined why our author should not, as on other occasions, have subjoined ἐπικαλούμενοι. I have little doubt that Goeller is right in the distinction he makes between what the sense would be with the article, and what without; it being, he says, in the latter case, equivalent to καίπερ τύραννοι ὄντες οὗτοι. But no reason do I see to supply, as he proposes to do, the word καίπερ, such being, of course, implied in the participle ὄντες. The sense, then, is, 'tyrants though they were,' i. e. though they governed under a despotic form of government; language evidently intended to lessen the prejudice of the public mind against the persons in question: in which view compare § 6, αὐτὴ ἡ πόλις, i. e. 'nihil a tyrannis impedimenti experta.' Here we have a brief form of expression for καὶ οὗτοι τύραννοι (ὄντες αὐτοὶ) ἐπετήδευσαν, and accordingly, harsh as it may seem, I have pointed off the word τύραννοι.

πρασσόμενοι] for ἀπαιτοῦντες. Τῶν γιγνομένων, meaning 'the revenues.' The word καλῶς, a little after, belongs to διεκόσμησαν, and the force of the expression will appear from ii. 15. Τοὺς πολέμους διέφερον, for διήνυον, as the Scholiast explains. The phrase occurs also at i. 11, where see note. Ἐς τὰ ἱερὰ ἔθυον, 'sacrificed at the temples,' i. e. went to the temples to sacrifice. So Lysias, (cited by Hemst. on Aristoph. Plut. 1169.) θύειν εἰς ταύτην τὴν πανήγυριν βουλόμενοι.

6. αὐτὴ] ipsa per se, i. e. 'nihil a tyrannis impedimenti experta' (Haack): a sense required by the context, § 5, ἐπετήδευσαν—ἀρετὴν καὶ ξύνεσιν, where by ξύν. is meant, the talent of governing prudently and ably; and by ἀρετὴ, that part of moral virtue which is especially required of governors, namely, what the Scholiast here well explains ἀρετὴ to mean, δικαιοσύνη. This sense, however, will require αὐτὴ to be read, and not, what the editors adduce from four of the best MSS. (to which add Clar. and Cantab.) αὕτη. The former, I find, has place in Mus. Brit.

πλὴν καθ' ὅσον] 'except so far as:' a form of expression occurring also at vi. 82 & 88. Ἐπεμέλοντο σφῶν αὐτῶν ἐν ταῖς ἀρχαῖς εἶναι, 'they took care for some of themselves to be in the magistracies:' of which construction of ἐπιμελ., followed by accus. and infin., examples are adduced by Poppo from Xen. Mem. iv. 7, αὐταρκεῖς αὐτοὺς εἶναι ἐπεμ., and Appian, Civ. K. 73. For vulg. ἐνιαύσιον I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, received the reading of many of the best MSS. (to which I am enabled to add the testimony of Mus. Brit.) for though the former derives some support from other passages of our author, supra iv. 117, and v. 1, yet in the latter passage certain MSS. of Thucydides and T. Mag. have ἐνιαυσίαι, which is there very probably the true reading; the usage of the writers of the age of Thucydides, (and, indeed, those a little after,) such as Xenophon, Plato, Theophrastus, Pseudo-Herodotus, Vit. Hom., being quite in its favour. That the later writers, as Polybius, Dionys. Hal., Plutarch, Lucian, and Herodian, use ἐνιαύσιοι in the common gender, is rather against than for the common reading here, from the greater likelihood of ἄν being, on account of this later use, altered to ὄν, than the reverse. Finally, supposing the common reading in the above passages, iv. 117, and v. 1, to be such as Thucydides wrote, the circumstance will merely serve to prove that in the ordinary prose of conversation and narration, the ος, for masculine and feminine, was in use, (whence arose the later use, which, like many other idioms, had always prevailed in the common dialect,) and there followed by our author; though here he has followed the more exact idiom of the best Attic writers of his age.

7. προσοικοδομήσας] The term has here a significatio prægnans, namely, 'having lengthened the work by building something to it.' I have, with Poppo and Goeller, received δὲ, from almost all the best MSS., to which I add Clar., Cantab., and Mus. Brit.

ἀμυδροῖς] i. e. 'faded away from damp and mould,' from α (pr. ἅμα, 'very') and μύδρος, from μύδερος, madidus, or what is beginning to be wet. Of the word used, as here, in the physical sense, examples occur in Demosth. 370, ἀμυδροῖς γράμμασι δηλοῦσα τὰ γεγραμμένα, and Dio Cass. 117, 33, γράμματα συνεχύθη καὶ ἀμυδρὰ ἐγένετο. And in the metaphorical sense, to signify obscure, it occurs several times in Plato, and once or twice in Ælian, Lucian, and Plutarch. The later writers generally use in preference to ἀμυδρὸς, the term ἀμαυρὸς, even in its proper sense, as Pollux, v. 130, as said of the letters of inscriptions on columns, συγκεχυμένα, ἀμυδρὰ, ἀμαυρὰ, ἐξίτηλα.

Ch. LV. 1. Here Abresch and Poppo, very properly, conjoin the words εἰδὼς and ἀκοῇ, comparing the expressions ἀκοῇ ἴσμεν at i. 4, and ἀκοῇ ἐπίστασθαι at vi. 53. 60. iv. 126, and the kindred phrase ἐξ ἀκοῆς εἶναι. Ἰσχυρίζομαι, pro certo affirmo, or affirmare possum; in which sense the term occurs also at iii. 41. iv. 68. v. 26. vii. 48. And such is occasionally the use of firmare in Latin. For vulg. μόνῳ, most of the best MSS. (to which I add Mus. Brit.) have μόνον, which has been received by Poppo; while Bekker and Goeller retain the former, and with good reason; for the authority of MSS. in such a minute difference as that existing between the iota adscriptum and the ν, is but slender; and quite overbalanced by the proprietas linguæ, which here, as regards the early Attic writers, is in favour of the adjective rather than the adverb. I have here, in deference to the judgment of Bekker, after στήλη inserted (though within brackets) ἡ, which is required by propriety of language, and the omission of which in the MSS. is easily accounted for from the probability that the word was lost after the final η in στήλη preceding.

ὡς ὅ τε βωμὸς σημαίνει, καὶ ἡ στήλη [ἡ] περὶ τῆς τῶν τυράννων ἀδικίας, ἡ ἐν τῇ Ἀθηναίων ἀκροπόλει σταθεῖσα, ἐν ᾗ Θεσσαλοῦ μὲν οὐδὲ Ἱππάρχου οὐδεὶς παῖς γέγραπται, Ἱππίου δὲ πέντε, οἳ αὐτῷ ἐκ Μυρρίνης τῆς Καλλίου τοῦ Ὑπερεχίδου θυγατρὸς ἐγένοντο· εἰκὸς γὰρ ἦν τὸν πρεσβύτατον πρῶτον γῆμαι. 2. καὶ ἐν τῇ [πρώτῃ] στήλῃ πρῶτος γέγραπται μετὰ τὸν πατέρα, οὐδὲ τοῦτο ἀπεικότως, διὰ τὸ πρεσβεύειν τε ἀπ' αὐτοῦ καὶ τυραννεῦσαι. 3. οὐ μὴν οὐδ' ἂν κατασχεῖν μοι δοκεῖ ποτε Ἱππίας τὸ παραχρῆμα ῥᾳδίως τὴν τυραννίδα, εἰ Ἵππαρχος μὲν ἐν τῇ ἀρχῇ ὢν ἀπέθανεν, αὐτὸς δὲ αὐθημερὸν καθίστατο· ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὸ πρότερον ξύνηθες τοῖς μὲν πολίταις φοβερὸν, ἐς δὲ τοὺς ἐπικούρους ἀκριβὲς, πολλῷ τῷ περιόντι τοῦ ἀσφαλοῦς κατεκράτησε, καὶ οὐχ, ὡς ἀδελφὸς νεώτερος ὢν, ἠπόρησεν,

'Υπερεχίδου] So I have edited, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, for vulg. Ὑπεροχίδου (retained by Haack); and in support of this reading am enabled to adduce the testimony of the MSS. Mus. Brit. and Cantab.

2. πρώτῃ] This word is by the editors admitted to be corrupt; and as the MSS. in this case afford no aid, (for I find the word in the MSS. Clar. and Mus. Brit.) we are left wholly to critical conjecture. Poppo proposes, for πρώτῃ, to read αὐτῇ, which is written under πρώτῃ in the Cod. Cass., and is supposed to have had place in the copy of Valla. But αὐτῇ, I should say, adds nothing but what is jejune to the sense already contained in ἐν τῇ στήλῃ. And how αὐτῇ could have been altered to πρώτῃ, it is not easy to see. I suspect that αὐτῇ, if it had place in any MS. (as that of Valla,) arose from a mistake in decyphering ἐν τῇ, and consequently we have still to account for the perplexing word πρώτῃ, which was, I doubt not, in Valla's MS., though his version titulari presents no vestige of it. But doubtless the word is corrupt, and for titulari the true reading may be supposed to be capitulari, meaning the chapter of the column. In short, he made out his MS. to read thus, κἀν αὐτῇ πρώτῃ στήλῃ, and accordingly rendered, 'et in ipso capitulari lapide.' And then ca having been eaten away by a worm, in some ancient copy, the remaining pitulari was taken for titulari. Of course, neither the version nor the reading itself can be admitted; and consequently we are still left in the dark as to how the πρώτῃ arose from the πρῶτος, which having been accidentally omitted, in transcribing, was afterwards brought in at a wrong place; and so was altered to πρώτῃ, in order to agree with the τῇ and στήλῃ; while πρῶτος afterwards obtained place where it now is, from other MSS. Under these circumstances, and regarding any attempt to emend πρώτῃ as no other than prescribing medicines to one defunct, or non-existent, I forbear.

οὐδὲ τοῦτο ἀπεικότως] 'neque id immerito (literally, consentaneè) dixeris.' Διὰ τὸ πρεσβεύειν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, 'because he was the eldest [descendant] from him,' eldest of those descended from him; a negligent mode of expression, in which τῶν — which is required by strict propriety—is omitted.

3. αὐτὸς δὲ αὐθημερὸν καθίστατο] scil. ἐπ' ἀρχῆς, 'had established himself [in the seat of government].' Bauer well points out, that ξύνηθες belongs both to φοβερὸν and to ἀκριβές; τὸ ξύνηθες and τὸ ἀκριβὲς standing for τὸν συνήθη φόβον καὶ τὴν ἀκρίβειαν. Compare vi. 34, διὰ τὸ ξύνηθες ἥσυχον. Render, 'by reason of his being long accustomed to make the people afraid of him, and to his keeping a strict watch [over them] by his body-guards.'

κατεκράτησε] Supply τῆς ἀρχῆς, from τῇ ἀρχῇ in the preceding context. Of this ἐν ᾧ οὐ πρότερον ξυνεχῶς ὠμιλήκει τῇ ἀρχῇ. 4. Ἱππάρχῳ δὲ ξυνέβη τοῦ πάθους τῇ δυστυχίᾳ ὀνομασθέντα καὶ τὴν δόξαν τῆς τυραννίδος ἐς τὰ ἔπειτα προσλαβεῖν.

LVI. Τὸν δ' οὖν Ἁρμόδιον ἀπαρνηθέντα τὴν πείρασιν, ὥσπερ διενοεῖτο, προϋπηλάκισεν· ἀδελφὴν γὰρ αὐτοῦ, κόρην, ἐπαγγείλαντες ἥκειν κανοῦν οἴσουσαν ἐν πομπῇ τινι, ἀπήλασαν, λέγοντες οὐδὲ ἐπαγγεῖλαι τὴν ἀρχήν, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἀξίαν εἶναι. 2. χαλεπῶς δὲ ἐνεγκόντος τοῦ Ἁρμοδίου, πολλῷ δὴ μᾶλλον δι' ἐκεῖνον καὶ ὁ Ἀριστογείτων παρωξύνετο· καὶ αὐτοῖς τὰ μὲν ἄλλα πρὸς τοὺς ξυνεπιθησομένους τῷ ἔργῳ ἐπέπρακτο, περιέμενον δὲ Παναθήναια τὰ μεγάλα, ἐν ᾗ μόνον ἡμέρᾳ οὐχ ὕποπτον ἐγίγνετο ἐν ὅπλοις τῶν very phrase the only example I have noted elsewhere is in Theophr. C. Plant. ii. 14, 4, κατακρατεῖν τῆς ἀρχῆς οὐ δύναται, where, as in the present, there is a sensus prægnans, including the two significations obtinere and tenere, i. e. getting hold and keeping hold, thoroughly mastering. So in Polyb. i. 8, 1, we have, κατακρατεῖν ἀσφαλῶς τῆς πόλεως, a passage very similar to the present, except that here τοῦ ἀσφ. must be taken with πολλῷ τῷ περιόντι, which is, as Bauer says, for πολλῇ τῇ περιουσίᾳ τῆς ἀσφαλείας, 'with a superabundance of security,' in other words, 'with superabundant security.' See v. 7, 3. Ἠπόρησε, 'was at a loss what to do.' Ἐν ᾧ, 'in which case,' or state of things. On the phrase following, οὐ πρότερον ξυνεχῶς ὠμιλήκει τῇ ἀρχῇ, 'he would not have been continually conversant with governing,' see notes on v. 55, and vi. 70.

4. τοῦ πάθους τῇ δυστυχίᾳ] Equivalent, as Poppo points out, to τῇ δυστυχίᾳ τούτου, ὃ ἔπαθε, 'quod calamitosus erat casus, qui ei acciderat.' Ὀνομασθέντα, 'celebratum,' for ὀνομαστὸν γενόμενον.

Ch. LVI. 1. ἀπαρνηθέντα] 'as having utterly repulsed.' Compare the Epistle to Titus, ii. 12, ἀρνήσασθαι τὰς κοσμικὰς ἐπιθυμίας. At κόρην there is an ellipsis of οὖσαν, as in 1 Cor. ix. 5, ἀδελφὴν, γυναῖκα περιάγειν. Ἐπαγγείλαντες is for προστάξαντες. The word is indeed used here in the forensic sense of denunciare, i. e. 'to notify by the order of some law-officer, that something is required to be done:' of which unusual sense examples occur in Demosth. p. 1041, καὶ ἐπαγγείλας ἐπὶ τὰ ἱερὰ Φιλίππῳ κατὰ τὸν νόμον ἀπαντᾷν, and 1181, ἐγὼ γὰρ αὐτῷ ἐπήγγειλα ἥκειν ἔχοντι τὰς συνθήκας, 'served him with a subpœna.' Lysias, p. 50, ἐμεμψάμην ἂν τοῖς ἐπαγγείλασιν ἐπ' αὐτοῖς—λέγειν. An allusion to this forensic sense is also found in Dionys. Hal. 962, 3, ταύτῃ (πόλει) οὐκ ἐπήγγειλαν παρεῖναι, and in Aristoph. Lysist. 1049, ἀλλ' ἐπαγγελλέτω Πᾶς ἀνὴρ καὶ γυνὴ, Εἴ τις ἀργυρίδιον Δεῖται λαβεῖν—ὡς πόλλ' ἔσω 'στὶν Κἄχομεν βαλάντια, 'let him, or her, command my best services.'

κανοῦν οἴσουσαν] i. e. 'to be one of the κανηφόροι,' or maidens, who, at the feasts of Minerva, Juno, &c., used to walk in solemn procession with baskets in their hands containing articles pertaining to the sacrifices, such as cakes, fruits, the sacrificial knife, &c. Compare Aristoph. Lys. 646, Κἀκανηφόρουν ποτ' οὖσα Παῖς καλὴ, σχοῦσ' ἰσχάδων ὁρμαθὸν, and Theocr. Idyll. ii. 66.

ἀπήλασαν] scil. αὐτήν. Portus renders, abegerunt eam, 'drove her away.' But that sense is one almost confined to passages where ἀπελ. is followed by ἀπὸ, as ἀπελ. ἀπὸ τοῦ βήματος in Æschin. p. 4, 36. 5, 26. Demosth. 1373, 12, ἀπελ. ἀπὸ τοῦ συνεδρίου. Aristoph. Lys. 1001. Without the ἀπ. it usually signifies arcere, or summovere, as in Xen. Cyr. iii. 1, 4, Th. τὰς γυναῖκας οὐκ ἀπήλασε, and Hist. iii. 2, 2, τοῦ Διὸς ἱεροῦ οὐκ ἀπήλασεν αὐτούς. Here the term rather bears the sense repellere, rejicere, repudiare. Render, 'would not allow her to bear the basket' (οὐκ ἔασε, as Ælian expresses it). And such is its sense in Xen. Anab. iii. 1, 32, τοῦτον ἀπήλασαν. Dem. p. 272, 11, οὐκοῦν ὅτε, τούτου μέλλοντος λέγειν, ἀπήλασεν αὐτὸν ἡ βουλὴ, 'would not allow him to speak.' The οὐδὲ, just after, is to be construed with τὴν ἀρχὴν, and bears the sense omnino non.

2. ἐπέπρακτο πρὸς] 'had been concerted with;' a somewhat rare idiom. On the phrase πομπὴν πέμπειν Goeller refers to Meinek. on Fragm. Menand. p. 166, and Poppo, to Jacobitz on Lucian, Jup. Frag. c. 22. For πέμψαντας the true reading πολιτῶν τοὺς τὴν πομπὴν ‡ πέμψαντας ἀθρόους γενέσθαι· καὶ ἔδει ἄρξαι μὲν αὐτοὺς, ξυνεπαμύνειν δὲ εὐθὺς, τὰ πρὸς τοὺς δορυφόρους, ἐκείνους. ἦσαν δὲ οὐ πολλοὶ οἱ ξυνομωμοκότες, ἀσφαλείας ἕνεκα· ἤλπιζον γὰρ καὶ τοὺς μὴ προειδότας, εἰ καὶ ὁποσουοῦν τολμήσειαν, ἐκ τοῦ παραχρῆμα—ἔχοντάς γε ὅπλα—ἐθελήσειν σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ξυνελευθεροῦν. LVII. Καὶ ὡς ἐπῆλθεν ἡ ἑορτὴ, Ἱππίας μὲν ἔξω ἐν τῷ Κεραμεικῷ καλουμένῳ μετὰ τῶν δορυφόρων διεκόσμει, ὡς ἕκαστα ἐχρῆν τῆς πομπῆς προϊέναι· ὁ δὲ Ἁρμόδιος καὶ ὁ Ἀριστογείτων, ἔχοντες ἤδη τὰ ἐγχειρίδια, ἐς τὸ ἔργον προῆσαν. 2. καὶ ὡς εἶδόν τινα τῶν ξυνωμοτῶν σφίσι διαλεγόμενον οἰκείως τῷ Ἱππίᾳ, (ἦν δὲ πᾶσιν εὐπρόσοδος ὁ Ἱππίας), ἔδεισαν, καὶ ἐνόμισαν μεμηνῦσθαί τε, καὶ ὅσον οὐκ ἤδη ξυλληφθήσεσθαι. 3. τὸν λυπήσαντα οὖν σφᾶς, καὶ δι' ὅνπερ † πάντα ἐκινδύνευον, ἐβούλοντο πρότερον, εἰ δύναιντο, seems to be that found in five MSS., πέμψοντας.

ἕνεκα] This I have followed Poppo and Goeller in receiving, from three MSS., instead of vulg. οὕνεκα, retained by Bekker, but not on good grounds; since the word οὕνεκα, besides that it is no where else found in our author, bears a sense here any thing but suitable. Moreover, the authority of Bekker is, in the present instance, the less to be yielded to, since it is (as Dr. Arnold points out) at variance with the rule he had himself laid down for his practice in the preface to his small edition, namely, 'Grammaticis sine controversia obtemperandum esse duxi.' Again, as to the authority of MSS. in a case like this, it is inconsiderable; since, owing to the negligent use occasionally in the later prose writers of οὕνεκα for ἕνεκα,—a use first borrowed by some Attic writers from the poets, and hence gradually transmitted to the common dialect,—the scribes would easily be led to mistake one word for the other. Finally, the very phrase ἀσφαλείας ἕνεκα occurs at iii. 22, where one MS. has οὕνεκα, while two of the worst have the Ionic poetic εἵνεκα.

ἤλπιζον γὰρ καὶ τοὺς—ξυνελευθεροῦν] Render, 'For they hoped that even those who had not been privy [to the design], if any number, however small, should venture on the attempt, would, especially having arms in their hands, be immediately disposed to co-operate in freeing themselves and their country.'

ὁποσουοῦν] This I have received, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, from several MSS. (to which add Clarend., Cantab., and Mus. Brit.) instead of vulg. ὁπωστιοῦν, which yields a sense neither good in itself nor suitable to the context.

τολμήσειαν] By Bauer and Poppo this is taken as standing for τόλμαν ἔχοιεν, τολμηροὶ εἶεν: and, in proof of this, they appeal to the use of τολμῶντες for τολμηροὶ supra v. 76, and τολμᾷ in 2 Cor. xi. 21: and indeed such is the use in Latin of audeo.

In σφᾶς αὐτοὺς, a little after, we have an instance of that use of words denominated by critics the παρὰ προσδοκίαν, and on which Mr. Mitchell occasionally treats in his Aristophanes. Here we should have expected τὴν πόλιν ξυνελευθεροῦν, but, instead of it, we have σφᾶς αὐτοὺς, q. d. 'I do not say their country, but themselves.'

Ch. LVII. 2. μεμηνῦσθαι] scil. ἑαυτοὺς, 'that they were informed against.' Of this use (which is rare) of the verb an example occurs elsewhere in Xen. Hist. iii. 3, πρὶν αἰσθέσθαι ὅτι μεμήνυται.

3. δι' ὅνπερ] This I have edited, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, on the authority of several MSS. (to which add that of Cant. and Mus. Br.) instead of vulg. δι' οὕπερ, which yields a sense quite irrelevant. Render, 'on whose account.' Of πάντα ἐκινδύνευον, just after, the sense is, 'they were in all this danger;' if, at least, πάντα be correct; but I suspect it to be corrupt, and conjecture the true reading to be ταῦτα, used as τάδε is after verbs of suffering, &c.; according to which the construction will be equally correct as according to the received reading. So Eurip. Hel. 1213, τάδ' εὐτυχεῖν.

In πρότερον—προτιμωρήσεσθαι (for so I have edited, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, on the authority of several MSS., to which add Clar. and Cantab., for vulg. προτιμωρήσασθαι) there is supposed to be a pleonasm, examples of which are adduced προτιμωρήσεσθαι, καὶ ὥσπερ εἶχον, ὥρμησαν εἴσω τῶν πυλῶν, καὶ περιέτυχον τῷ Ἱππάρχῳ †παρὰ τὸ Λεωκόριον καλούμενον· καὶ εὐθὺς, ἀπερισκέπτως προσπεσόντες, καὶ ὡς ἂν μάλιστα δι' ὀργῆς,—ὁ μὲν ἐρωτικῆς, ὁ δὲ ὑβρισμένος, —ἔτυπτον· καὶ ἀποκτείνουσιν αὐτόν. 4. καὶ ὁ μὲν τοὺς δορυφόρους τὸ αὐτίκα διαφεύγει, ὁ Ἀριστογείτων, ξυνδραμόντος τοῦ ὄχλου, καὶ ὕστερον ληφθεὶς, οὐ ῥᾳδίως διετέθη· Ἁρμόδιος δὲ αὐτοῦ παραχρῆμα ἀπόλλυται. LVIII. Ἀγγελθέντος δὲ Ἱππίᾳ ἐς τὸν Κεραμεικὸν, οὐκ ἐπὶ τὸ γενόμενον, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τοὺς πομπέας τοὺς ὁπλίτας, πρότερον ἢ αἰσθέσθαι αὐτούς—ἄποθεν ὄντας —εὐθὺς ἐχώρησε· καὶ, ἀδήλως τῇ ὄψει πλασάμενος πρὸς τὴν ξυμfrom supra i. 3, and v. 84. Soph. Aj. 108. Virg. Æn. iv. 23. But in the passage of our author, v. 84, there is, in effect, no pleonasm; since πρῶτον differs from πρὶν, and means 'in the first place.' Again, in the passage of Sophocles no pleonasm exists; since the construction there, interrupted by ver. 109, is resumed and completed at ver. 110. Finally, as to the prius antequam in the passage of Virgil, that, in effect, involves no more of pleonasm than the Greek πρὶν—πρὶν ἤ, which generally comes under the head of repetition for pathos sake.

ὥσπερ εἶχον] 'forthwith:' on which form of expression see note at iii. 30. Τῶν πυλῶν: meaning the gate called Dipylum; on the position of which see Col. Leake's Athens, pp. 223 & 436, second edition.

παρὰ] For this, which is quite indefensible, the true reading is doubtless περὶ, found in one good MS., and confirmed as it is by a parallel passage at i. 20, where all the MSS. have περὶ τὸ Λεωκόριον. How perpetually the two words παρὰ and περὶ are confounded by the scribes, it is scarcely necessary to observe.

ἀπερισκέπτως] Equivalent to ἀλογίστως at ch. 59, where see note. At ὡς ἂν μάλιστα Schaefer supplies τύπτοιεν; but Matthiæ (Gr. § 461) and Poppo, προσπέσοιεν, because when a verb is to be supplied, it must be from the principal verb. In order, however, to ascertain the principal verb, the reference has first to be determined,—which here is, from the contortness of the construction, far from clear. But from the καὶ it would seem to be to προσπεσόντες, the sense being, 'and the very way that men would fall upon persons in a passion;' δι' ὀργῆς being taken, as at ii. 11, 4, where we have, δι' ὀργῆς αἱ ἐπιχειρήσεις γίγνονται. The verb so supplied must be in the optative (so Xen. Hipp. ix. 1, ὡς ἂν ἥκιστα ἐξεπατῶτο); and consequently the principal verb ought properly to be in the indicative. Hence I agree with Schaefer, that in the passage of Demosth. Olynth. i. p. 15, adduced by Matthiæ, the true reading is ἔχει (not, what Bekker edits, ἔχοι). The principal design of Thucydides in the words καὶ ὡς —ὑβρισμένος was to advert to the moving principle which set the assessors to work, —namely, not that of patriotism, but solely passion, arising from private and personal interests and feelings.

I have placed a colon after ἔτυπτον, because the verbs, being in tenses so different, cannot be united in the same assertion, q. d. 'they struck and killed him.' Indeed, ἔτυπτον signifies, 'they so struck as to hit,' thus differing from παιειν, which only means to strike or make a blow at, whether hitting or missing. This is plain from a passage of Xen. Cyr. v. 4, 5, ὁ ἐπιβουλεύων τῷ Γαδάτᾳ, παίει αὐτὸν ('makes a blow at him') καὶ—τύπτει αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν ὦμον, καὶ τιτρώσκει. So Xen. Hist. vi. 4, 22, Th. τύπτων τὸν Ἰάσονα, 'hitting Jason.'

4. ξυνδραμόντος τοῦ ὄχλου] Meaning, 'through the great concourse of the people,' who flocked together, indeed, to apprehend the assassins, but thereby hindered rather than helped. Διετέθη means, 'was treated, was dealt with;' a sense which the word bears not unfrequently in the best writers. In οὐ ῥᾳδίως there is an Attic meiosis for κακῶς or χαλεπῶς, though so rare that I have not met with an example of the same elsewhere. However, as ῥᾳδίως often signifies moderatè, 'with moderation and equanimity,' as in bearing what befals one, so it may mean, 'with moderation,' i. e. mildness, as in inflicting punishment.

Ch. LVIII. 1. ἀδήλως — ξυμφορὰν] A certain difficulty here exists, arising (as often) from the bold and harsh condensation of expression, by which two things are blended together, (namely, the means φορὰν, ἐκέλευσεν αὐτοὺς, δείξας τι χωρίον, ἀπελθεῖν ἐς αὐτὸ ἄνευ τῶν ὅπλων. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀνεχώρησαν, οἰόμενοί τι ἐρεῖν αὐτόν· ὁ δὲ τοῖς ἐπικούροις φράσας τὰ ὅπλα ὑπολαβεῖν, ἐξελέγετο εὐθὺς οὓς ἐπηρώτατο, καὶ εἴ τις εὑρέθη ἐγχειρίδιον ἔχων· μετὰ γὰρ ἀσπίδος καὶ δόρατος εἰώθεσαν τὰς πομπὰς ποιεῖν.

Ἱππόκλου γοῦν τοῦ Λαμψακηνοῦ τυράννου Αἰαντίδῃ τῷ παιδὶ θυγατέρα ἑαυτοῦ μετὰ ταῦτα Ἀρχεδίκην, Ἀθηναίοις ὢν Λαμψακηνῷ, ἔδωκεν, αἰσθανόμενος αὐτοὺς μέγα παρὰ for effecting the device, and its object,) which ought to have been expressed separately. As it is, the translators and expositors have better succeeded in conveying the general sense, than showing how that sense arises. The construction, however harsh, must not be made more so; which would be the case if ἀδήλως were (as Dukas, Goeller, and Gail propose) taken as referred to πρὸς ξυμφοράν. Dr. Arnold assigns as the sense, 'without betraying any thing in his countenance;' i. e. having composed it upon the news of his loss: a view also adopted by Goeller, and not rejected by Poppo; but in such a dissevering of words which go together, and supplying of αὐτὴν without any warrant, there is involved something too arbitrary to be confidently acquiesced in; not to say that there is somewhat feeble and jejune in the sense, 'upon the news of his loss.' Whatever else be doubtful, one thing is, I apprehend, certain, that ἀδήλως is not to be referred to πρὸς τὴν ξυμφ., but to be regarded as a condensed form of expression, parallel to ἀπίστως at i. 21, τὰ πολλὰ ὑπὸ χρόνου αὐτῶν ἀπίστως ἐπὶ τὸ μυθῶδες ἐκνενεκικότα. As respects the other words, πλασ. τῇ ὄψει πρὸς τὴν ὄψιν, there the difficulty complained of will be best removed by supposing the expression to bear a sensus prægnans. And as πλάσσειν signifies fingere, 'to form any thing according to a pattern (as the potter does his clay);' so πλάσασθαι may mean either 'to form oneself, i. e. one's manner, to certain circumstances or feelings;' or, 'to play the counterfeit,' to feign. So Dem. 389, 9, πλάττομαι καὶ προσποιοῦμαι. Herodian, v. 3, 18, εἴτε πλασαμένη, εἴτε ἀληθεύουσα. Here, however, I apprehend, both acceptations are intended; the sense being, 'having composed himself (i. e. his countenance) suitably to the calamity,' counterfeiting by his looks, dissembling the tranquillity which he did not really feel. This use of the dative after πλάσασθαι is, indeed, rare; but one example elsewhere is found, — namely, in Lysias, p. 659, ed. Reiske, ἐνθυμεῖσθε δὲ ὅτι ὀλίγον μὲν χρόνον δύναιτ' ἄν τις πλάσασθαι τὸν τρόπον τὸν αὑτοῦ, ἐν ἐβδομήκοντα δὲ ἔτεσιν οὐδ' ἂν εἷς λάθοι πονηρὸς ὤν· where, until I am made to comprehend how any one can counterfeit his own disposition, I shall feel persuaded that Lysias there wrote τῷ τρόπῳ, and then that the ι adscript was, as is perpetually the case, mistaken for ν. Thus the sense is, 'to play the counterfeit in his disposition, or in the visage.'

2. ὑπολαβεῖν] 'to carry off.' See note at i. 68. For vulg. εἰώθησαν and προπομπὰς, I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, adopted the readings εἰώθεσαν and πομπὰς, which I have found also in Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.

Ch. LIX. 1. λύπην] 'grievance.' Ἡ ἀλόγιστος τόλμα, audacia inconsulta. Ἐκ τοῦ παραχρῆμα περιδεοῦς, 'from this fright on the nonce.' So infra viii. 1.

2. χαλεπωτέρα κατέστη] A fact attested by Herodot. vi. 123, (where it is said of the Alcmæonidæ,) καὶ οὕτω τὰς Ἀθήνας οὗτοι ἔσαν οἱ ἐλευθερώσαντες πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἤπερ Ἁρμόδιός τε καὶ Ἀριστογείτων, ὡς ἐγὼ κρίνω. οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἐξηγέρισαν τοὺς λοιποὺς Πεισιστρατιδέων Ἵππαρχον ἀποκτείναντες, οὐδέ τι μᾶλλον ἔπαυσαν τοὺς λοιποὺς τυραννεύοντας.

ἤρθη νοῦν] 'was puffed up in mind.' Compare Æschyl. Ag. 575, ἡ κάρτα πρὸς γυναικὸς αἵρεσθαι κέαρ.

ἀτασθαλίην] for ἀλαζονείαν.

Ch. LX. 1. ἦν ὑπόπτης ἐς τοὺς, &c.] 'was suspicious of them:' a metaphor taken from shy horses, as the Schol. points out; who tells us that the term is one expressly applied to such: and so, indeed, it is used in Xen. Hippag. iii. 9, and Pollux, i. 197, where, among the terms of censure as applied to a horse, he joins καταδεὴς and ὕποπτος, where, for ὕποπτος, should undoubtedly be read ὑπόπτης. The term is very rare, and the only examples I have noted elsewhere are in Ælian, V. H. iv. 18, ὑπόπτης ὢν ἐς πάντας ὁ Διονύσιος. Aristot. Hist. Anim. p. 298, Bekker, ἔστι δὲ τὸ ἦθος οὐχ ὑπόπτης οὐδενὸς, οὐδὲ ὑφορώμενος οὐδέν, and Soph. Phil. 136, Τί χρή με—Στέγειν, ἢ τί λέγειν πρὸς ἄνδρ' ὑπόπταν (where one of the Scholiasts rightly explains by τὸν ὑφορώμενον ἡμᾶς). It appears, then, that the metaphor in question is one derived from a SHY horse, which looks down or under, ὀπτεύει ὑπὸ, from fear or suspicion; and the term is one especially applied to wild beasts. So Theocr. Id. xxiii. 10, οἷα δὲ θὴρ ὑλαῖος ὑποπτεύῃσι κυναγὸς, &c., where ὑποπτεύῃσι signifies, 'looks down or askance.' In short, this sense of ὑποπτεύω is (though the lexicographers have failed to observe it) the primary signification of the term.

τὴν αἰτίαν λαβόντας] 'who had incurred the accusation,' 'been accused:' an Attic forensic term, on which Poppo refers to Schaef. on Demosth. iv. p. 532. Πάντα αὐτοῖς—πεπρᾶχθαι. This suspicious temper of the Athenians, especially in whatever had any supposed connexion with the suppression of democracy, is well depicted in Aristoph. Vesp. 488, Ὡς ἅπανθ' ὑμῖν τυραννὶς ἐστι καὶ ξυνωμόται, Ἥν τε μεῖζον, ἢν τ' ἔλαττον πρᾶγμά τις κατηγορῇ, Ἧς ἐγὼ οὐκ ἤκουσα τοὔνομ' οὐδὲ πεντήκοντ' ἐτῶν· Νῦν δὲ πολλῷ τοῦ ταρίχους ἐστὶν ἀξιωτέρα.

2. οὐκ ἐν παύλῃ ἐφαίνετο] scil. τὸ πρᾶγμα. See on i. 7. iii. 33. Of the words following, ἐπεδίδοσαν — ξυλλαμβάνειν, the construction will best appear from Poppo's version: 'proficiebant in sævitiâ, et proficiebant ita ut plures etiam comprehendebant.' By εἷς τῶν δεδεμένων understand Andocides, the orator, whose speech de Mysteriis is here to be carefully

ὕσπερ ἐδόκει αἰτιώτατος εἶναι, ὑπὸ τῶν ξυνδεσμωτῶν τινος, εἴτε ἄρα καὶ τὰ ὄντα μηνῦσαι, εἴτε καὶ οὔ· ἐπ' ἀμφότερα γὰρ εἰκάζεται, τὸ δὲ σαφὲς οὐδεὶς οὔτε τότε οὔτε ὕστερον ἔχει εἰπεῖν περὶ τῶν δρασάντων τὸ ἔργον. 3. λέγων δὲ ἔπεισεν αὐτὸν ὡς χρὴ, εἰ †μὴ † καὶ δέδρακεν, αὑτόν τε ἄδειαν ποιησάμενον σῶσαι, καὶ τὴν πόλιν τῆς παρούσης ὑποψίας παῦσαι· βεβαιοτέραν γὰρ αὐτῷ σωτηρίαν consulted, for illustration of this whole account of the prosecution of Alcibiades; though, of course, it must be received with much caution. On the discrepancies between the accounts of Thucydides and Andocides, see Bp. Thirlwall's Appendix No. IV. to the second volume of his History of Greece.

ἐπ' ἀμφότερα γὰρ εἰκάζεται] 'it is matter of conjecture both ways.' Imitated from this is the expression in Jos. Ant. xix. 2, 4, ἐπ' ἀμφότερα δὲ οὗτος ὁ λόγος—καὶ τότε εἰκάζετο καὶ νῦν, &c. I have here, in deference to the authority of Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, edited οὐδεὶς instead of vulg. οὐθεὶς, found in almost all the MSS., which is later Attic. I suspect, however, that οὐθ' εἷς (for οὐδὲ εἷς), which I have found in Cod. Mus. Brit., is the true reading here and at vi. 66. The stronger sense contained in οὐδὲ εἷς is here highly suitable; and the existence of vulg. οὐθεὶς tends not a little to confirm the above conjecture οὐθ' εἷς. The words, a little after, οὔτε τότε—ἔχει, are, as Poppo remarks, equivalent to οὔτε τότε εἶχεν, οὔτε ὕστερον [καὶ μέχρι τοῦ νῦν] ἔχει.

3. εἰ μὴ καὶ δέδρακεν] Arnold agrees with Poppo that this cannot be the right order of the words, since thus the sense expressed would be, not that required by the scope of the words, 'even if he had not done it,' but 'unless he had done it.' Hence he professes it to be his decided opinion that the true reading is εἰ καὶ μὴ δὲ δέδρακεν, as found in one MS. I would add, that this same error, if such it be, is found in all the MSS. and earlier editions of Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 30, εἰ μὴ καὶ τοσαῦτα: though there εἰ καὶ μὴ τοσαῦτα has been edited, from the conjecture of Sylburg, by Hudson and Reiske. After all, however, taking into consideration the occurrence of εἰ μὴ καὶ, supra ch. 18, and ii. 11, 6, together with the passages adduced by Schwebel on Onosand. p. 22, some reason is there to doubt whether this εἰ μὴ καὶ was not one of those somewhat harsh transpositions of particles occasionally found in the best writers, (especially those, like our author, little attentive to petty niceties of style,) and of which various instances are adduced in the Paris edition of Steph. Thes. t. iii. p. 191. To advert to the present case, though in our own language elegance of style would require 'even if he had not done it,' yet it would not be ungrammatical to write, 'if he had even not done it.' Now such harsh positions of words are cast aside as language advances to perfection, but only gradually; and consequently they may be expected to occasionally appear in the older and less polished writers.

παῦσαι] For this, one of the best MSS. has σῶσαι; but evidently by a mere gloss. The present use of παύειν with an accusative of thing and genitive of thing, is founded on that more usual one, an accusative of person and genitive of thing,—'to make any one desist from any action or practice,' generally some bad one. Here, however, the thing is put for the person, (namely, the citizens,) the sense being, deducere, abstrahere (to withdraw), vel verbis vel re, as iii. 65, 2, τῆς ἔξω ξυμμαχίας ὑμᾶς παῦσαι. Xen. Cyr. v. 5, 9, Th. τούτου παύσῃς αὐτ., and Hist. Mem. i. 2, 2. Plato, p. 396, αὐτὸς ἂν ὑμᾶς ἐπειρώμην παύειν τῆς διαφορᾶς. Sometimes the term bears the sense liberare and sedere as applied to disorders of the body, (as Xen. Mem. iii. 8, ἐάν τι ἐνοχλῇ ἡμᾶς, δεόμεθα τοῦ παύσοντος, scil. ἡμᾶς τούτου. Eurip. Hipp. 512, ἃ σε παύσει νόσου τῆσδε,) or as said of evil dispositions of the mind; sometimes, also, that of sedere, both as said of disorders, and of violent passions of the mind, as grief, &c. (so Eurip. Bacch. 280, ὃ παύει τοὺς ταλαιπώρους βρότους λύπης,) also, to quell anger or fury, as Diod. Sic. t. vi. 307, τοῦ πολλοῦ θράσους ἔπαυσαν τοὺς βαρβάρους. I know not any example elsewhere of the term as applied to suspicions, except in Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 1, π. τὰς ὑποψίας, and none of the word used, as here, with accusative and genitive. We may here best express the sense by the Latin amovere, since in Plaut. Trin. iii. 3, 54, we have, 'suspicionem amovere ab aliquo.'

βεβαιοτέραν] This was rightly edited by Bekker and others, though only on the authority of one indifferent MS. (to which add Clar. and Mus. Br.) instead of vulg. βεβαιωτέραν. Render, 'a surer chance of safety.' In διὰ δίκης ἐλθεῖν τινὶ, 'to be at legal issue with,' 'to be impleaded with,' we have a somewhat rare phrase, formed on the model of διὰ μάχης ἐλθεῖν τινι, occurring at iv. 92, and elsewhere, διὰ φιλίας εἶναι, and others to be seen in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 680.

Ch. LXI. 1. ἐπέθεντο] aggressi erant, 'had attacked him.' Such is the use of our old English to set on, as understood both in a physical and a metaphorical sense. The latter is here intended; and so Hesych. explains by ἐπέκειντο. Of this somewhat rare use of the term examples occur occasionally in Plato, and one is found in a passage of the New Testament, Acts xviii. 10, οὐδεὶς ἐπιθήσεταί σοι τοῦ κακῶσαί σε.

μετὰ τοῦ αὐτοῦ λόγου, καὶ τῆς ξυνωμοσίας] Vainly have Bredow, Haack, and Arnold sought to adjust the construction here by referring the καὶ to τοῦ αὐτοῦ λόγου, — of course repeating the word μετά. The sense which they assign,—namely, 'with the same meaning, and connected with the plot against,'—is one that does too much violence to the words to be safely admitted. I must still adhere to the view of the sense propounded in my former edition, by which the καὶ is regarded as here used, as often, for δηλονότι, scilicet, 'namely.' And this view has since been supported by the opinion of Dobree, and seemingly of Poppo, who observes, however, that the meaning may be et quidem. Be that as it may, λόγου must mean intent, or 'purpose,' and thus the article will refer to the words at ch. 60, καὶ πάντα αὐτοῖς ἐδόκει ἐπὶ ξυνωμοσίᾳ—πεπρᾶχθαι. Of course this conspiracy (to which allusion is made in ἐδόκει) was all purely imaginary.

ἐπὶ τῷ δήμῳ] adversus statum popularem. Πρὸς Βοιωτούς τι πράσσοντες, 'had been concocting some [scheme] with the Bœotians,' i. e. against the Athenians, their common enemy. See on iv. 132.

3. ἐκείνου πράξαντος] 'at his contrivance.' Καὶ οὐ Βοιωτῶν ἕνεκα, 'and not on account of any plan with the Bœotians.' Ἀπὸ ξυνθήματος, 'from some agreement [between the parties].' Κατέδαρθον is to be understood, not of sleeping, but of couching down, as if for slumber. Ἐν Θησείῳ. On this temple (now converted to a Christian church) it must suffice to refer to Col. Leake's Athens, p. 498, second edition. Τῷ ἐν πόλει is added, because there was a temple of Theseus in Peiræus. See Col. Leake's Athens, p. 392, second edition.

4. οἵ τε ξένοι τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου οἱ ἐν Ἄργει κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον ὑπωπτεύθησαν τῷ δήμῳ ἐπιτίθεσθαι· καὶ τοὺς ὁμήρους τῶν Ἀργείων τοὺς ἐν ταῖς νήσοις κειμένους οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τότε παρέδοσαν τῷ Ἀργείων δήμῳ διὰ ταῦτα διαχρήσασθαι. 5. πανταχόθεν τε περιεστήκει ὑποψία ἐς τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην· ὥστε βουλόμενοι αὐτὸν ἐς κρίσιν ἀγαγόντες ἀποκτεῖναι, πέμπουσιν οὕτω τὴν Σαλαμινίαν ναῦν ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν ἐπί τε ἐκεῖνον καὶ ὧν πέρι ἄλλων ἐμεμήνυτο. 6. εἴρητο δὲ προειπεῖν αὐτῷ ἀπολογησομένῳ ἀκολουθεῖν, ξυλλαμβάνειν δὲ μή, θεραπεύοντες τό τε πρὸς τοὺς ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ στρατιώτας τε σφετέρους καὶ πολεμίους μὴ θορυβεῖν, καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα τοὺς Μαντινέας καὶ Ἀργείους βουλόμενοι παραμεῖναι, δι᾽ ἐκείνου νομίζοντες πεισθῆναι † σφᾶς ξυστρατεύειν. 7. καὶ ὁ μὲν, ἔχων τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ναῦν, καὶ οἱ

4. οἵ τε ξένοι, &c.] The matter is more perspicuously narrated in Diod. xiii. 5, συνελάβετο δ᾽ αὐτῶν (τῶν Ἀλκιβιάδου ἐχθρῶν) ταῖς διαβολαῖς τὸ πραχθὲν παρὰ τοῖς Ἀργείοις· οἱ γὰρ ἰδιόξενοι συνθέμενοι καταλῦσαι τὴν ἐν Ἄργει δημοκρατίαν πάντες ὑπὸ τῶν πολιτῶν ἀνῃρέθησαν. 'Alcibiades' enemies at home magnified the danger of a revolution, to overturn democracy at Argos, and obtained a decree by which those Argive citizens whom Alcibiades himself had carried away (and deposited in the islands of the Ægean: see v. 24.) for the security of the democratical government, were consigned to the discretion of the opposite, who put them all to death.' (Bp. Thirlwall.) Many of the best MSS. (to which add Clarend. and Cantab.) have διαχρήσεσθαι, which, however, is by no means to be defended. The common reading (very properly retained by the later editors) I find confirmed by the Cod. Mus. Brit.

5. πανταχόθεν περιεστήκει ὑποψία] Περιεστήκει is not well rendered by Portus and others circumstabat; for thus the ἐς, found in every MS., is passed over. The sense is better conveyed by the version of Dr. Arnold, 'suspicion gathered round against Alcibiades.' Yet even this too much suffers the force of the metaphor to evaporate (as does also that of Poppo, conversa est); while the former altogether mistakes its nature. The metaphor is one derived, not from a storm which gathers round and threatens to burst on any one's head; but, from insidious foes starting up from ambush all around, gradually closing in and directing their attacks at (for such is the force of the ἐς) some person or persons, and endeavouring obruere eum. Thus fear, danger, &c., are not unfrequently said to gather round and close in any one. A similar figure is found in Eurip. Sisyph. frag. i. 37, τοῖσδε περιέστησαν ἀνθρώπους φόβου στοίχους. But not only are fear and danger represented as gathering round and closing in, but also calamity, (as Demosth. 1470, 11.) necessity, and also shame; and so, as in the present passage, suspicion. Finally, no sufficient reason was there for Poppo to suspect the ἐς to be not genuine; for the construction of περιέστ. followed by ἐς, though without precedent elsewhere, may, however, very well be accounted for from the significatio prægnans inherent in the term περιέστ. The ἐς does not signify contra, (as it is interpreted by Arnold and Poppo,) but simply denotes direction or the termination of motion at any object.

6. θεραπεύοντες] cautè curantes; on which force of the word see note at iv. 67, and vii. 70. The σφᾶς, a little further on, is justly suspected by Bekker to be not genuine; since to take it, as we must, in the sense of αὐτοὺς, involves what is quite inadmissible. The true reading is, by Lindau and Dobree, with great probability, supposed to be σφίσι, which might very well be mistaken for σφᾶς, from the abbreviation of σφίσι in the MSS. Strong confirmation is derived to this conjecture from an altogether parallel construction at vii. 35, 1, συστρατεύειν αὐτοῖς οἱ Θούριοι παρεσκευάσθησαν.

7. ἔχων τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ναῦν] 'occupying his own ship,' i. e. the ship which he had equipped and commanded; though it is probable that he furnished the ship itself. Thus it is said of his father by Plut. Alcib. ἰδιοστόλῳ τριήρει περὶ Ἀρτεμίσιον ἐνδόξως ἐναυμάχησεν. And so Hdot. v. 47, 5, of another person, συνέσπετο οἰκηΐῃ τε τριήρει καὶ οἰκηΐῃ ἀνδρῶν δαπάνῃ, and of the father of Alcibiades, viii. 17, 6, ὃς δαπάνην

In the words, a little after, οὐ φανεροὶ ἦσαν, there is a peculiarity of expression, though not noticed by the commentators. Exactly corresponding to this idiom φανερὸς εἶναι is that in Latin, non comparere, 'not to be forthcoming' when called for or sought. The phrase was especially used in a forensic sense. So Paulus, Digest. xxix. 5, 6, 'Si unus è dominis non compareat,' i. e. shall not be found forthcoming, as we should say of any one who has absconded. Of this idiom the only examples that I have met with elsewhere in a Greek writer, are the following: Demosth. p. 1190, 4, προσκληθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς οἰκίας ('having been summoned from his house') οὐδὲ γὰρ ἦν φανερὸς ('for he was not forthcoming,' namely, to give evidence) ἔλιπε τὴν μαρτυρίαν.

ἐπὶ διαβολῇ] 'at, or under, examination.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 586.

8. πλοίου] Meaning a vessel of burden; what is at ch. 88 more distinctly expressed by πλ. φορτικοῦ. Τῆς Θουρίας: meaning, not the town, but, as Poppo shows, the country; while Θουρίοις must be understood of the inhabitants, so called infra vii. 35.

ἐρήμῃ δίκῃ] deserto vadimonio. See Matth. de Jud. Athen. p. 266. (Goeller.) See also Herm. Antiq. § 144, referred to by Poppo. Such a trial was called ἐρήμη, from the person indicted being not forthcoming for trial, having absconded, and thereby forfeiting his recognizances.

Ch. LXII. 2. Ὕκκαρα] So called, as we learn from Athenæus, from the ὕκκη, (or red-mullet: see Hesych. in voc. ὖκος,) which the first colonists found there abundantly. It was situated at the bottom of a small bay, and at the mouth of a petty river. Its ruins yet remain near a plain called Garbilangi; and the ancient site is called Muro di Carini (meaning d'Icarini), i.e. 'the wall of the Icarines.' Our author subjoins πόλισμα Σικανικὸν, &c., because, from the circumstance of the town being of Sicanian origin, it might be expected that the Hyccarines should be on friendly terms with Egesta, which was of the same origin, or nearly such.

4. τἆλλα χρηματίσας] 'having despatched their affairs.' See on v. 61.

5. I have followed Poppo and Arnold in obelizing the word ἀπέδοσαν, because I entirely agree with them that we are not authorized to assign to the active voice the sense of selling,—a sense which belongs only to the middle. Hence Bekker thinks we should, for ἀπέδοσαν, read ἀπέδοντο: in which opinion I am inclined to agree. If, however, the text should, after all, be genuine, (and it so stands, I find, in Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) I would by no means, with Arnold, assign to the word the sense, 'he produced, gave them up,'—a sense equally unauthorized as that of sell, above adverted to, and both partaking of what is harsh and jejune. Considering, too, that the town was taken by storm, and the whole population carried off by the army, there could be no private captors, nor consequently any captives to be produced or given up. Now, not improbably might we here suppose the existence of one of those negligent expressions, derived from the inexact language of common life, of which not a few instances occur elsewhere in our author. Perhaps, however, the difficulty in question may be removed without our being obliged to resort to what, after all, must be pronounced a somewhat precarious principle: for though the active ἀποδιδόναι cannot, it appears, bear the sense to sell, it may that of set to sale. And since the generals are here meant, they might be said to set the captives to sale, by ordering them to be sold by auction to the best bidder, by the common crier. See the Vitarum Auctio of Lucian. Accordingly we may regard ἀπέδοσαν as standing for the more exact term ἀπεκήρυξαν. And so in the humorous description just referred to, Jupiter is represented as saying, ἀποκηρύξομεν βίους φιλοσόφους παντὸς εἴδους. Compare also Herodot. i. 194, ἀπεκήρυξαν, where Valck. explains by 'vendenda voci subjecere præconis;' and adduces other examples of this use. Had the editors seen the true subject of the verb ἀπέδοσαν, they would have been better able to remove the difficulty. That they did not see it, is plain from their joining the words καὶ τἀνδράποδα ἀπ. with the words preceding, whereas they must belong to those following; and thus ἀπέδοσαν consorts well with the following περιέπλευσαν, the words καὶ ἐγένοντο ἐξ αὐτῶν εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατὸν τάλαντα being parenthetical. I have pointed accordingly. Finally, I would observe, περιέπλευσαν ἐς—Σικελῶν ξυμμάχους is said, because, as the Siculi chiefly inhabited the mountainous chain which skirts the north coast of the island, the most convenient mode of reaching them was to go by sea, doubling the Pelorum promontory.

Ch. LXIII. 2. πλέοντες τά τε ἐπέκεινα τῆς Σικελίας] A certain perplexity here exists, which has given rise to a variety of conjectural emendations; though not one of these is countenanced by a single MS. The editors and critics in general agree in desiderating an ἐς; but it is, in reality, not needed; since, as Poppo observes, our author does not mean to say, 'navigare in partem ulteriorem Siciliæ,' but, 'præternavigare oram Siciliæ ulteriorem;' what is here said corresponding to the words at καὶ πρὸς τὴν Ὕβλαν ἐλθόντες καὶ πειράσαντες, οὐχ εἷλον βίᾳ, ἔτι πλέον κατεφρόνησαν, καὶ ἠξίουν τοὺς στρατηγοὺς—οἷον δὴ ὄχλος φιλεῖ θαρσήσας ποιεῖν—ἄγειν σφᾶς ἐπὶ Κατάνην, ἐπειδή [γε] οὐκ ἐκεῖνοι ἐφ' ἑαυτοὺς ἔρχονται. 3. ἱππῆς τε προσελαύνοντες ἀεὶ κατάσκοποι τῶν Συρακοσίων πρὸς τὸ στράτευμα τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐφύβριζον ἄλλα τε καὶ, 'εἰ ξυνοικήσοντες σφίσιν *αὐτοὶ μᾶλλον ἥκοιεν ἐν τῇ ἀλλοτρίᾳ, ἢ Λεοντίνους ἐς τὴν οἰκείαν κατοικιοῦντες.' ch. 62, παραπλέοντες τὴν Σικελίαν, τὸ μέρος τὸ πρὸς τὸν Τυρσηνικὸν κόλπον. And he adds, with great truth, that in this signification the words πλεῖν τὰ ἐπέκεινα τῆς Σικελίας seem to make equally good Greek as περιορμίζεσθαι τὸ πρὸς νότον, περιορμεῖν τὰ πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος, and such-like forms of expression, on which see note at iii. 6: and so in my smaller edition of our author, 'on the further parts or coasts of Sicily;' a sense which I have there illustrated from Herodot. iii. 115, θάλασσα ἔστι τὰ ἐπέκεινα Εὐρώπης (scil. μέρη). Æschyl. Suppl. 254, Πίνδου τὰ ἐπέκεινα, scil. μέρη. Arrian, Ind. 43, 6, τὰ ἐπέκεινα. Lucian, Ver. Hist. ii. 47, ἀνεσκόπουν τὰ ἐπέκεινα ὅπως ἔχοι: and, finally, a passage of our author, vii. 58, ἐν τῷ ἐπέκεινα. The literal sense thus meant to be conveyed is, 'towards those parts,' and then at the other or yonder part of any place, as compared with that where the speaker or writer is. Of course ἐπέκ. here is not governed of πλέοντες, but of some preposition understood, as κατὰ or such-like.

ἐφαίνοντο] This I have, with all the recent editors, received instead of vulg. ἐφαίνετο; and the same, I find, has place in MSS. Cantab. and Mus. Brit. Again, I have chosen after ἐπειδή to restore (though within brackets) the particle γε, which had been cancelled by all the recent editors, on the authority of most of the best MSS., yet on any thing but good grounds; since the word is strongly supported by internal evidence, as existing in the far greater likelihood of its being omitted than inserted in the MSS. Again, the propriety (nay, even elegance) of its use here sufficiently appears from the several examples of the form ἐπειδή γε occurring in Plato (e. g. p. 348, ἐπειδή γε καὶ λέγω ἀδικίαν—λυσιτελεῖν, &c.) and other Attic writers. Finally, I would observe, the word has place in Cod. Mus. Brit.

3. αὐτοὶ] This (the correction of Bekker, in his second edition) I have ventured, with Goeller and Arnold, to receive instead of vulg. αὐτοῖς, which, though found, it would seem, in all the MSS., involves an intolerable harshness, since, as Poppo points out, the dative is to be referred to the more remote name of the Syracusans. Poppo, indeed, urges that examples of σφῶν αὐτῶν for the simple σφῶν are not altogether wanting; referring, for proofs, to another passage of our author, infra viii. 48, 3, and a passage of Plato, Gorg. 519, b. But, waiving the passage of Plato, that of Thucydides is any thing but calculated to supply evidence to this effect, since there the αὐτῶν leads to a confusion in the sense quite intolerable, and hence has been justly rejected by Bekker. Finally, as to the use of σφῶν αὐτῶν for σφῶν, if the passages where it seems to have place were rigidly scrutinized, the few would, I suspect, become none. In short, while the αὐτοῖς were here worse than useless, the αὐτοὶ is little less than indispensable.

CH. LXIV. 1. Ἃ γιγνώσκοντες, &c.] On the construction of this lengthened period,—embarrassed as it is by parenthesis upon parenthesis,—see the Scholiast and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 631, 2. I have, with Poppo and Goeller, bracketed the καὶ, because (as they show) it can here bear no sense but one quite inadmissible. Of the two modes they propose — either (with Reiske) to cancel the καὶ, or to change it into εἰ, and the εἰ itself into ἢ—the former is preferable, on the ground of its being κατὰ γῆν ἰόντες γνωσθείησαν· τοὺς γὰρ ἂν ψιλοὺς τοὺς σφῶν καὶ τὸν ὄχλον, τῶν Συρακοσίων τοὺς ἱππέας, πολλοὺς ὄντας,—σφίσι δ' οὐ παρόντων ἱππέων,—βλάπτειν ἂν μεγάλα· οὕτω δὲ λήψεσθαι χωρίον ὅθεν ὑπὸ τῶν ἱππέων οὐ βλάψονται ἄξια λόγου (ἐδίδασκον δ' αὐτοὺς περὶ τοῦ πρὸς τῷ Ὀλυμπιείῳ χωρίου—ὅπερ καὶ κατέλαβον—Συρακοσίων φυγάδες, οἳ ξυνείποντο)· τοιόνδε τι οὖν, πρὸς ἃ ἐβούλοντο, οἱ στρατηγοὶ μηχανῶνται. 2. πέμπουσιν ἄνδρα σφίσι μὲν πιστὸν, τοῖς δὲ τῶν Συρακοσίων στρατηγοῖς τῇ δοκήσει οὐχ ἧσσον ἐπιτήδειον· ἦν δὲ Καταναῖος ὁ ἀνήρ, καὶ ἀπ' ἀνδρῶν ἐκ τῆς Κατάνης ἥκειν ἔφη, ὧν ἐκεῖνοι τὰ ὀνόματα ἐγίγνωσκον, καὶ ἠπίσταντο ἐν τῇ πόλει ἔτι ὑπολοίπους ὄντας τῶν σφίσιν εὐνόων. 3. ἔλεγε δὲ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους αὐλίζεσθαι ἀπὸ τῶν ὅπλων ἐν τῇ πόλει, καὶ εἰ βούλονται ἐκεῖνοι πανδημεὶ ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ῥητῇ ἅμα ἔῳ ἐπὶ τὸ στράτευμα ἐλθεῖν, αὐτοὶ μὲν ἀποκλήσειν ‡ αὐτοὺς παρὰ σφίσι, καὶ τὰς ναῦς ἐμπρήσειν, ἐκεί-

the more simple, and being supported by the authority of Valla, who seems not to have had καὶ in his copy. The word may very possibly have been accidentally brought in from the copyists mistaking εἰ for the abbreviated mark to denote καὶ: and this would cause εἰ to be lost (as it is in the Cod. Mosq. and Mus. Brit. primâ manu); and when afterwards introduced, as indispensable to the sense, the καὶ was, we may suppose, inadvertently retained.

The πρὸς before παρεσκευασμένους signifies 'in the face of.' At ἢ, a little after, is to be repeated εἰ; and of ἢ γνωσθείησαν the sense is, 'or if they should be found out or perceived [by them] while going by land.' This signification of γιγνώσκεσθαι, deprehendi, is one frequent in Plato and Xenophon. Now the Athenians could not hope to escape observation while on the way by land, since the distance (about thirty-five miles) was far too great for a night-march, however forced; though by sea the passage itself might be achieved by night, and a landing effected, and a suitable position taken up before the Syracusan forces could return from Catana.

τοὺς γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ adverts to the reason why this, being discovered, was viewed with alarm,—namely, because then the Syracusan cavalry would greatly annoy them, and especially the less defensive part of them, &c. Τὸν ὄχλον: meaning the mob of camp-followers; which must have been great, judging from what is said infra vii. 75, 5. This sense the expression bears also in Xen. Cyr. iv. 2, 3, and Anab. iii. 2, 36, & 3, 6. iv. 3, 15: and answering to this is the use in Latin of 'turba castrensis.'

ἄξια λόγου] Corresponding to the term μεγάλα (adj. neut. plur. for adverb); except that here it is a phrase for ἀξιόλογα, (probably in the archetype of the Codd. Clarend. and Venet.) taken as equivalent to adv. ἀξιολόγως. Πρὸς ἃ ἐβούλοντο. Render, 'for the accomplishment of the object they wished for,' namely, the withdrawing of the Syracusans away from the city.

2. τῇ δοκήσει] 'in their opinion.' Of this use (which is rare) an example occurs supra iii. 45, 2, ἥσσω τῇ δοκήσει ἔχουσα τὴν παρασκευήν. Hence is confirmed the masterly emendation of H. Steph. on a line of Simonides cited by the Scholiast on Eurip. Orest. 235, Τὸ δοκεῖν (for ἡ δόκησις) καὶ τὰν ἀλάθειαν (for τὰ μάλα θεῖα) βιᾶται: from a comparison of which passage with the present I am inclined to think that by ἡ δόκησις here is denoted simply opinion as opposed to truth. And so in another passage of Eurip. frag. incert. xxviii. 2, we have, Ζητῶμεν ἡ δόκησις ἀνθρώποις κακὸν, Καὶ τοὐπιχειρεῖν ἐξαμαρτάνειν φιλεῖ: for so I would point there. Moreover, for τοὐπιχειρεῖν, which cannot be right, I propose to read προὐπιχειρεῖν, i. e. to first attack, to strike the first blow. Of this word, though rare, an example occurs in Thucyd. vi. 34, and Plut. Galb.

3. ἀπὸ τῶν ὅπλων] 'apart from their place d'armes, or encampment:' for such is, I apprehend, the sense of τῶν ὅπλων, as at i. 111. This name was given because it was, as Dr. Arnold observes, the place where the spears and shields were kept piled.

ἀποκλήσειν αὐτοὺς παρὰ σφίσι] I have, νους δὲ ῥᾳδίως, [τὸ στράτευμα] προσβαλόντας τῷ σταυρώματι αἱρήσειν· εἶναι δὲ ταῦτα τοὺς ξυνδράσοντας πολλοὺς Καταναίων, καὶ ἡτοιμάσθαι ἤδη ἀφ' ὧν αὐτὸς ἥκειν. LXV. Οἱ δὲ στρατηγοὶ τῶν Συρακοσίων, μετὰ τοῦ καὶ ἐς τὰ ἄλλα θαρσεῖν, καὶ εἶναι ἐν διανοίᾳ καὶ ἄνευ τούτων ἰέναι ‡ παρασκευάσασθαι ἐπὶ Κατάνην, ἐπίστευσάν τε τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ πολλῷ ἀπερισκεπτότερον, καὶ εὐθὺς ἡμέραν ξυνθέμενοι with Bekker (second edition), received αὐτούς, the reading of the greater part of the MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar. primâ manu, and Mus. Brit.) instead of vulg. τοὺς, retained by Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, but which cannot be right, since it was just before said of the whole of the army lodged in the city; where τοὺς παρὰ σφίσι (ὄντας) would mean, 'those that were with them.' The term ἀποκλήειν may be explained to signify here, as often, 'to hinder persons from egress,' i. e. to shut up, as v. 80, ἀποκλ. τὰς πύλας (where see note). and Herodot. ii. 133, ἀποκλ. τὰ ἱερά. If, however, the above explanation be thought too harsh, the words παρὰ σφίσι, meaning, 'with themselves. so as to be within the city,' may be supposed to have been added by way of explanation.

ῥᾳδίως, τὸ στράτευμα—αἱρήσειν] The editors are agreed that there is here some corruption; though, on the mode of emending it, they are divided in opinion. That the words τὸ στράτευμα are, as Poppo suspects them to be, false and insititious, I consider little less than certain. I cannot, however, agree with him, that, for σταυρώματι, should be read, from several MSS., στρατεύματι: for, not to mention that the MSS. where that reading has place, are of the worst class, the expression προσβαλ. τῷ σταυρ. is surely too apt and forcible a one to be here dispensed with. Upon the whole, I doubt not that our author wrote ῥᾳδίως, προσβαλόντας τῷ σταυρώματι, αἱρήσειν, scil. αὐτό, meaning τὸ στράτευμα occurring before, which word the Scholiasts put down in the margin; and which to others seemed so necessary to the sense, that they brought it into the text. In short, the reading στρατεύματι may be supposed to have arisen from negligence on the part of the copyists, who inadvertently wrote, for the somewhat rare word σταύρωμα, the more ordinary term, and that twice before occurring, στράτευμα.

I will only add, that the term προσβαλ., while not unfrequently used with τείχει, τειχίσματι, or such like, is never, as far as I know, used with στρατεύματι. Finally, that Dio Cass. in his copy of Thucydides read σταυρώματι, may, I think, justly be concluded from a passage p. 228, 50, (apparently written with a view to the present,) τό τε σταύρωμα—προσβολῇ βιαίᾳ ἐκλιπεῖν ἠνάγκασε.

ξυνδράσοντας] For this some MSS. have ξυμπρασσ.: but the common reading is confirmed by a passage of Liban. Orat. p. 736, τοὺς ξυνδράσοντας πολίτας. Of this word, which is one somewhat rare, I have noted examples in Eurip. Andr. 40, ὁ συνδρῶν τάδε, and Orest. 406. Aristoph. Conc. 16.

CH. LXV. 1. μετὰ τοῦ—θαρσεῖν] 'together with (meaning, besides) the courage which they otherwise felt:' a sense of μετὰ far from usual. In εἶναι ἐν διανοίᾳ, 'to be of a mind or intention to any thing,' meaning here to go any where,—we have a form of expression so rare, that I have met with no other example of it. It is equivalent to the more usual ἔχειν διάνοιαν or διανοεῖσθαι, 'to have a mind, or intention:' and we may compare the use of the Latin in mente, or animo, habere.

παρασκευάσασθαι] This I have thought proper to adopt in the place of vulg. παρεσκευάσθαι (which has been retained by Bekker, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold); since, while yielding the very sense here required, se præparare, 'to make preparation,' it has the authority of four good MSS., and the support of four others, which, while they present παρασκευάσθαι, point at παρασκευάσασθαι as existing in their archetypes. More external evidence than this were here unnecessary; since the two forms in question are found frequently confounded. Moreover, the existence of the word in question may, I think, be said to be strongly attested by the evident reference to it which we may recognise in the article τῆς employed in the words, a little further on, ἐπεὶ δὲ ἑτοῖμα ἦν τὰ τῆς παρασκευῆς: a reference which is further confirmed by what forms no other than an exact case in point, supra vi. 29, ἤδη γὰρ τὰ τῆς παρασκευῆς ἐπεπόριστο· where, in like manner, the article τῆς has reference to what was said at ch. 26, 2, namely, καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἡ παρασκευὴ ἐγίγνετο.

inconsiderately.' Αἱ ἡμέραι. The plural is used with allusion to the two periods previously arranged in their plan of operations; namely, that of their setting out, and that of their arrival at Catana, on the second day early in the morning.

3. τό] So I have edited, with Poppo and Goeller, for vulg. τὸν, (retained by Bekker,) which is quite indefensible, since to suppose here, with the Scholiast and others, an ellipsis of τόπον, were in the highest degree objectionable; while at τὸ we may very well, with Duker, understand the word χωρίον, which is expressed supra ch. 64, περὶ τοῦ πρὸς τῷ Ὀλυμπιείῳ χωρίῳ. The κατὰ, just after, bears the sense over-against;' i. e. near where it was situated. So Herodot. i. 80, κατὰ Φωκαίην πόλιν, and i. 76, κατὰ Σινώπην πόλιν—κειμένη. and iii. 14, παρῆσαν αἱ παρθένοι κατὰ τοὺς παρθένους, i. e. near where their fathers were seated.

I have finally followed Poppo, Bekker (second edition), and Goeller (second edition), in receiving before στρατόπεδον the word τὸ, which is found in many of the best MSS. (to which add Codd. Cant. and Mus. Brit.) The article has reference to the words of the preceding chapter, βουλόμενοι στρατόπεδον καταλαβεῖν ἐν ἐπιτηδείῳ.

CH. LXVI. 1. καθῖσαν] So I have edited, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, for vulg. ἐκάθισαν, on the authority of Cod. Palat., to which add Mus. Brit. and Clarend. à I manu. This reading also derives strong confirmation from another found in several of the best MSS., καθισαν. That καθῖσαν is the regular old Attic form of the augment of καθίζω, has been shown by Buttm. Gr. § 114. On this sense of the term καθίζω see note at ii. 71, 1.

λυπήσειν] Render, 'should annoy.' Poppo compares the use of the word at iv. 53, λῃσταὶ τὴν Λακ. ἐλύπουν. But there the word rather stands for ἐκακούργουν, 'devastated,' as appears from the term κακουργεῖσθαι just afterwards subjoined. On the peculiar idiom in παρὰ δὲ τὸ, a little after, see note at iii. 61, 1, and compare iii. 82, ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ, ἀγάλλονται.

2. ἐφοδώτατον] Render, 'most approachable.' So I have edited, with Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, from most of the MSS., to which add Mus. Brit., for vulg. εὐεφ., which, however supported by certain passages of Dio Cass.,

ἦν τοῖς πολεμίοις λίθοις λογάδην καὶ ξύλοις διὰ ταχέων ὤρθωσαν, καὶ τὴν τοῦ Ἀνάπου γέφυραν ἔλυσαν. 3. παρασκευαζομένων δὲ, ἐκ μὲν τῆς πόλεως οὐδεὶς ἐξιὼν ἐκώλυε, πρῶτοι δὲ οἱ ἱππῆς τῶν Συρακοσίων προσεβοήθησαν· ἔπειτα δὲ ὕστερον καὶ τὸ πεζὸν ἅπαν ξυνελέγη. καὶ προσῆλθον μὲν ἐγγὺς τοῦ στρατεύματος τῶν Ἀθηναίων τὸ πρῶτον, ἔπειτα δὲ ὡς οὐκ ἀντιπροήεσαν αὐτοῖς, ἀναχωρήσαντες καὶ διαβάντες τὴν Ἑλωρινὴν ὁδὸν, ηὐλίσαντο.

LXVII. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι παρεσκευάζοντο ὡς ἐς μάχην, καὶ ξυνετάξαντο ὧδε. δεξιὸν μὲν κέρας Ἀργεῖοι εἶχον καὶ Μαντινῆς, Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ τὸ μέσον, τὸ δὲ ἄλλο οἱ ξύμμαχοι οἱ ἄλλοι. καὶ τὸ μὲν ἥμισυ αὐτοῖς τοῦ στρατεύματος ἐν τῷ πρόσθεν ἦν, τεταγμένον ἐπὶ ὀκτώ, τὸ δὲ ἥμισυ ἐπὶ ταῖς εὐναῖς ἐν πλαισίῳ, ἐπὶ ὀκτὼ καὶ τοῦτο τεταγμένον· οἷς εἴρητο, ἢ ἂν τοῦ στρατεύματός τι πονῇ μάλιστα, ἐφορῶντας παραγίγνεσθαι. καὶ τοὺς σκευοφόρους ἐντὸς τούτων τῶν ἐπιτάκτων ἐποιήσαντο. 2. οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι ἔταξαν τοὺς μὲν ὁπλίτας ἐφ' ἑκκαίδεκα, ὄντας πανδημεὶ Συρακοσίους καὶ ὅσοι ξύμμαχοι παρῆσαν (ἐβοήθησαν δὲ αὐτοῖς Σελινούντιοι μὲν μάλιστα, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ Γελῷων ἱππῆς, τὸ ξύμπαν ἐς διακοσίους, καὶ Καμαριναίων ἱππῆς ὅσον εἴκοσι, καὶ τοξόται ὡς πεντήκοντα)· τοὺς δὲ ἱππέας ἐπετάξαντο ἐπὶ τῷ δεξιῷ, οὐκ ἔλασσον ὄντας ἢ διακοσίους

Diod., and Procop., adduced in my smaller edition, is, for the reasons assigned by Abresch, and others also that might be alleged, quite indefensible. And vain is it to maintain, as does Didot, that ἐφοδώτατον is not Greek, since ἔφοδος is an adjective no where occurring; for, as Goeller observes, we have substantives whence comparatives and superlatives are formed, which same are substantives and adjectives; e. gr. ἔφορμος. In short, the reading εὐεφ. arose, we may suppose, not from accident, but from ignorance on the part of those who did not comprehend the force of the superlative, and hence supposed an εν to be wanted. Still more objectionable than εὐεφ. is the conjecture of Bekker in his second edition, εὐοδώτατον.

3. Ἑλωρινὴν] So I have edited, with Poppo and Goeller, from several MSS., for vulg. Ἑλωρίνην. Bekker has edited, from several of the best MSS., Ἑλοριήν. I have preferred the former, (which also, I find, has place in Cod. Mus. Brit.) for the reasons urged by Poppo in his Proleg. i. 2. p. 515.

Ch. LXVII. 1. ἐν τῷ πρόσθεν] 'in the front [of their position].' Ἐπὶ ταῖς εὐναῖς, 'at the tents,' as iii. 112, and iv. 32. Thus ranged in the rear of the first column, this other half acted both as a defence to the camp-followers, and a rear-guard and corps de reserve to the front line. The πλαίσιον was of an oblong form, (resembling a brick or tile,) and, of course, hollow. See more in Ælian, Tactic., Lex. Pol., and Xenophon.

πονῇ] laboret, 'should be in distress.' Compare Sall. Jug. 103, cited by Wasse. Τοὺς σκευοφόρους—τῶν ἐπιτάκτων ἐποιήσαντο. I must still adhere to the opinion propounded in my translation, (to which, I find, Dr. Arnold and Poppo, and at length Goeller, have acceded,) that by ἐντὸς τῶν ἐπιτάκτων ἐποιήσαντο is meant, 'placed within, in the middle of the corps de reserve;' which, as being a hollow square, could easily contain the baggage-bearers and other non-combatants. In this manner ἐντὸς is used infra ch. 75, and not unfrequently in Xen. See Sturz, Lex. Xen. The expression οἱ ἐπίτακτοι is explained by Suid. and Zonaras (of whom the former may be supposed to have in view the present passage) οἱ προτεταγμένοι τὴν μάχην, καὶ τῷ πονοῦντι μέρει βοηθεῖν (where, for προτετ., read προστ.). On the term, a little after, πανδημεί, see note at ch. 68, 2.

3. ἐπιπαριών] See note at iv. 94. 2.

Ch. LXVIII. A most soldier-like and spirit-stirring harangue, in which, however encouraging as to its general character, the judicious commander thinks fit to remind his troops, that they were about to engage on ground where defeat would be their utter destruction,—since retreat would be effectually cut off by the enemy's formidable cavalry.

1. πολλῇ μὲν—ἀγῶνα;] 'What need, my men, of much exhortation to such as, like ourselves, are come hither unto the same contest?' Meaning, that, however various might be the people composing the army, (comp. ch. 67, κατά τε ἔθνη ἐπιπαριὼν ἕκαστα,) the contest was the same to all: and for this reason, namely, that, (as Bauer remarks) 'unum omnibus discrimen et commune propositum inuit eandem omnium conditionem.'

αὐτὴ γὰρ—στρατοπέδου] Comp. a similar sentiment at v. 69, fin. and Xen. Cyr. vi. 4, 5, and Onosand. p. 65, 5.

2. ὅπου γὰρ—νίκης ἔχειν] 'For where (as now) Argives, Mantineans, Athenians, and the flower of the islanders, are present—how is it possible that we should not (associated with so many and so brave allies) feel every one of us a full hope of victory?' With respect to the construction, here again, (as at οἳ πάρεσμεν, § 1.) there is a blending of two modes of expression: and we are to take the words as though they were written, ὅπου γαρ Ἀ. καὶ Μ. καὶ Ἀ. καὶ νησιωτῶν οἱ πρῶτοί εἰσι (for πάρεισι) ὡς ἡμεῖς ἐσμέν. Comp. Lucian, Dial. Mort. xv. 3, ἀλλως τε ὁρᾷς, τῶν ἑταίρων ὅσοι περὶ σὲ ἐσμὲν οἵδε, where Gesner would read, for οἵδε, ὧδε: an ingenious conjecture, but which alters without any necessity; since while οἵδε imparts to the words no little spirit, ὧδε may very well be dispensed with, as in a passage of the New Testament, Acts x. 33, νῦν οὖν πάντες ἡμεῖς ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ πάρεσμεν, ἀκοῦσαι, &c. Ὅπου is here used as in Jos. Bell. ii. 16, 4, (a passage evidently written in imitation of the present,) καὶ τί δεῖ πολλὰ λέγειν, ὅπου καὶ Πάρθοι καὶ, &c. The term πανδημεὶ is meant, as at ch. 67, 2, to represent them as a promiscuous mass, and thus opposed to ἀπόλεκτοι, chosen troops.

3. παραστητω δέ τινι καὶ τόδε] 'let this, too, occur to the mind of each of you.' Comp. Lesbon. p. 174, 12, παραστήτω οὖν ὑμῶν ἑκάστῳ τοῦτο, ὡς, &c.

ἤντινα μὴ—κτήσεσθε] 'except such as ye may yourselves acquire in fight.'

4. οἱ μὲν γὰρ—ἀγὼν] Comp. Æschyl. Theb. 13, & Pers. 400, seq. Of the words following, ὅτι οὐκ ἐν—ἀποχωρεῖν, the full sense is: 'But I, that the contest [with you] will be in what is not your country, but in that wherein you must conquer; or [from which] you cannot easily get away.' The construction here,—from extreme bre-

LXIX. Ὁ μὲν Νικίας τοιαῦτα παρακελευσάμενος, ἐπῆγε τὸ στρατόπεδον εὐθύς. οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι ἀπροσδόκητοι μὲν ἐν τῷ καιρῷ τούτῳ ἦσαν ὡς ἤδη μαχούμενοι· καί τινες αὐτοῖς, ἐγγὺς τῆς πόλεως οὔσης, καὶ ἀπεληλύθεσαν (οἱ δὲ, καὶ διὰ σπουδῆς προσβοηθοῦντες δρόμῳ, ὑστέριζον μὲν, ὡς δὲ ἕκαστός πη τοῖς πλείοσι προσμίξειε, καθίσταντο· οὐ γὰρ δὴ προθυμίᾳ ἐλλιπεῖς ἦσαν οὐδὲ τόλμῃ, οὔτ' ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ μάχῃ οὔτ' ἐν ταῖς ἄλλαις, ἀλλὰ τῇ μὲν ἀνδρείᾳ οὐχ ἥσσους, ἐς ὅσον ἡ ἐπιστήμη ἀντέχοι, τῷ δὲ ἐλλείποντι αὐτῆς καὶ τὴν βούλησιν ἄκοντες προὐδίδοσαν)· ὅμως δὲ οὐκ ἂν οἰόμενοι σφίσι τοὺς Ἀθηναίους προτέρους ἐπελθεῖν, καὶ διὰ τάχους ἀναγκαζόμενοι ἀμύνασθαι, ὅμως ἀναλαβόντες τὰ ὅπλα εὐθὺς ἀντεπῄεσαν. 2. καὶ πρῶτον μὲν αὐτῶν ἑκατέρων οἵ τε λιθοβόλοι καὶ σφενδονῆται καὶ τοξόται vity, not a little harsh,—is as follows: ἐγὼ δὲ [παρακελεύομαι] ὅτι οὐκ ἐν πατρίδι [ἀγὼν ἔσται, ἀλλ' ἐν γῇ] ἐξ ἧς [ὁρμωμένους ὑμᾶς] κρατεῖν δεῖ, ἢ [ἐξ ἧς] μὴ ῥᾳδίως ἀποχωρεῖν [ἔσται]. The transposition here of the negation is, however harsh, yet unavoidable. Again, the ellipsis of ὁρμωμένους (which occurred also to the Scholiast) involves, indeed, a certain harshness; but that ὁρμ. was in the mind of the writer, is probable from a kindred passage supra ch. 50, κατεσκέψαντο τὰ περὶ τὴν χώραν, ἐξ ἧς αὐτοῖς ὁρμωμένοις πολεμητέα ἦν. As to the change of sense, per dilogiam, in ἐξ ἧς, it is, though harsh, quite Thucydidean. What an exact interpreter would most here stumble at, is the ellipsis supposed by Dr. Arnold of the word ἀλλὰ—an ellipsis, however, quite inadmissible, since no good reason can be given why Thucydides should not have expressed what, from its very nature, does not admit of being left understood. Hence I cannot but suspect that the words ἀλλ' ἐν χώρᾳ, 'but in a situation,' have been eaten away by a worm in some very early archetype. Such lacunæ occur occasionally in most writers; but, except where they are very short, can only be safely filled up by a reference to MSS. more ancient than the omission. Now here the context almost determines that these must have been the words lost, since it seems to have been the intention of Nicias to advert, not to the country in which they were going to carry on war, namely, Syracusia; but, to the situation, or position, they had taken up, and thus deduce an argument for maintaining it strenuously.

5. ἀνάγκην καὶ ἀπορίαν] Meaning, by hendiadys, a situation which left them no alternative, but to maintain their post, or perish.

Ch. LXIX. 1. καὶ ἀπεληλύθεσαν] 'had gone [thither].' I have edited, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, ἀπελ., from two MSS. and Valla, instead of vulg. ἐπελ., which cannot be tolerated. In the next words, which are somewhat confused, the connexion is traced by Goeller as follows: οὐκ ἂν οἰόμενοι δὲ σφίσι τοὺς Ἀθηναίους προτέρους ἐπελθεῖν, καὶ διὰ τάχους ἀναγκαζόμενοι ἀμύνασθαι, ὅμως ἀναλαβόντες τὰ ὅπλα εὐθὺς ἀντεπῄεσαν. I have thought proper to follow the punctuation of Poppo.

τῷ δὲ ἐλλείποντι—προὐδίδοσαν] ejus vero defectu, voluntatem etiam, inviti, prodebant. Meaning, that they were disposed to fight, wanted not the mind or heart; but when their military skill fell short, they, however unwillingly, gave up the will; or, in other words, their will abandoned them, their courage failed them.

ὅμως δὲ οὐκ ἂν οἰόμενοι] quamvis autem non opinarentur, &c. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 566. (Poppo.)

καὶ διὰ τάχους ἀναγκαζόμενοι, &c.] 'though they were obliged to withstand them at short notice, yet they immediately took up their arms and advanced against them.'

2. οἵ τε λιθοβόλοι καὶ σφενδονῆται] 'the stone-flingers and slingers.' Of the former, mention is found in Hom. Od. K. 121. Æschyl. Pers. 466; and of both, in Eurip. Phœn. 1158, and other passages cited by Wasse. See also Pollux, i. 131, and Polyb. viii. 7. 2. ix. 41. 8.

προὐμάχοντο, καὶ τροπὰς, ‡οἷα εἰκὸς ψιλοὺς, ἀλλήλων ἐποίουν· ἔπειτα δὲ μάντεις τε σφάγια προὔφερον τὰ νομιζόμενα, καὶ σαλπιγκταὶ ξύνοδον ἐπώτρυνον τοῖς ὁπλίταις. 3. οἱ δ' ἐχώρουν, Συρακόσιοι μὲν περί τε πατρίδος μαχούμενοι καὶ τῆς ἰδίας ἕκαστος, τὸ μὲν αὐτίκα σωτηρίας, τὸ δὲ μέλλον ἐλευθερίας· τῶν δὲ ἐναντίων Ἀθηναῖοι μὲν περί τε τῆς ἀλλοτρίας οἰκείαν σχεῖν, καὶ τὴν οἰκείαν μὴ βλάψαι ἠσσώμενοι, Ἀργεῖοι δὲ καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων οἱ αὐτόνομοι ξυγκτήσασθαί τε ἐκείνοις ἐφ' ἃ ἦλθον, καὶ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν σφίσι πατρίδα, νικήσαντες, πάλιν ἐπιδεῖν· τὸ δ' ὑπήκοον τῶν ξυμμάχων μέγιστον μὲν περὶ τῆς αὐτίκα ἀνελπίστου σωτηρίας, ἢν μὴ κρατῶσι, τὸ πρόθυμον εἶχον, ἔπειτα δὲ, ἐν παρέργῳ, καὶ εἴ τι ἄλλο ξυγκαταστρεψαμένοις ῥᾷον αὐτοῖς †ὑπακούσεται. LXX.

I have followed Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, in editing, from 9 MSS., (to which add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) οἷα, instead of vulg. οἵας, retained by Bekker, but on insufficient grounds; such being by no means agreeable to the usage of our author, and being opposed by internal evidence no less than external authority.

μάντεις τε σφάγια προὔφερον] Duk. cites Pollux i. 162, as introducing among military expressions, προὔθυσαν οἱ μάντεις, ἱερεῖα ἐθύσαντο. But I suspect that the lexicographer wrote, instead of the words as they now stand, προὔθεσαν οἱ μάντεις ἱερεῖα, ἐθύσαντο. And such, indeed, is found in one MS.; and some support to the reading is supplied by another.

In ξύνοδον ἐπώτρυνον τοῖς ὁπλίταις, concursum instigabant, 'urged on the charge to,' (equiv. to, 'urged them to the charge,') we have a certain form of expression, somewhat too bold indeed for the plain prose of narrative, but which seems to have been formed on a similar expression in Hom. Od. viii. 30, Ὁμπὴν δ' ὀτρύνει καὶ λίσσεται ἔμπεδον εἶναι. Ἡμεῖς δ', ὡς τοπάρος περ, ἐποτρυνώμεθα πομπὴν, 'let us urge on the sending away.' Moreover, with this use of the terms ὀτρύνω and ἐποτρύνω we may compare that of ἐγείρω in the Homeric ἔγειρε δὲ φύλοπιν αἰνὴν, and for the hypallage here, it is sufficient to compare Pind. Ol. ix. 72, ἔγειρ' ἐπέων σφιν οἶμον (cantum) λιγὺν, 'rouse to them the song,' i. e. excite them to the song. And so the phrases ἐγείρειν ἀοιδὴν, λύραν, &c.

3. τὸ πρόθυμον εἶχον] 'had a promptitude, or alacrity, [for the combat.]' Comp. Eurip. Iph. T. 939, τὸ μὲν πρόθυμον ἔχω, and iv. 85, πᾶν τὸ πρόθυμον παρεχόμενοι. The phrase occurs also in Plato.

ἔπειτα δὲ — ὑπακούσεται] In these words it is easier to perceive the general sense intended (which is, that 'by having aided in the subjugating of others, their own yoke would be the lighter') than to show how that sense arises. However, one or two points being made certain, will enable us to determine others in themselves doubtful. And, first, the participle must, it should seem, have reference to the allies, and is, as Dr. Arnold observes, a dative of the agent. The αὐτοῖς might be referred to the Athenians; but the context, and other matters adverted to by Poppo, rather determine it to the subject allies of Athens. With respect to the ἄλλο, no need is there to adopt the conjecture of Dr. Arnold, ἄλλους, since this is no other than the idiom, so frequent in our author, of neut. sing. for masc. plur. In the εἰ we are to suppose an ellipsis of πειρώμενος, i. e. to try whether, equiv. to 'if haply.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 526. The sense, then, may be well expressed, as it is by Poppo, 'deinde vero, secundo loco, (meaning, as a by-purpose or object. Comp. i. 142, fin. ἐν παρέργῳ,) etiam [alacres erant, ut experirentur] an forte futurum esset, ut a se, si alios quosdam una subegissent, facilius [a se] obediretur.' The only difficulty that remains is that which regards the use of ὑπακούσεται, for ὑπακουσθήσεται, mid. for pass.; a use at variance with the rule laid down in Buttm. Gr. § 113, note 10, that 'those future middles, which either always, or most commonly, are employed for datives, are not readily found in a passive sense.' But it is sufficient to say, that in a writer so abounding in rare usages as our author the objection is one far from formidable. Moreover, it has been shown by Poppo, de Verb. Med. p. 5, seq., that the idiom in question is not so rare as to be unpre-

Γενομένης δ' ἐν χερσὶ τῆς μάχης, ἐπὶ πολὺ ἀντεῖχον ἀλλήλοις· καὶ ξυνέβη βροντάς τε ἅμα τινὰς γενέσθαι καὶ ἀστραπὰς, καὶ ὕδωρ πολὺ,—ὥστε τοῖς μὲν πρῶτον μαχομένοις, καὶ ἐλάχιστα πολέμῳ ὡμιληκόσι, καὶ τοῦτο ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι τοῦ φόβου, τοῖς δ' ἐμπειροτέροις τὰ μὲν γιγνόμενα καὶ ὥρᾳ ἔτους περαίνεσθαι δοκεῖν, τοὺς cedented. Upon the whole, in this mode of removing the difficulty (which has, I find, been finally adopted by Goeller) I feel enabled fully to acquiesce. And supposing the grammatical demur above stated to be not wholly overruled, there would be little difficulty in admitting the possibility that our author, for ὑπακούσεται, wrote ὑπακουσθήσεται; and that, as in various other cases, the longer termination, being expressed by abbreviation, had been mistaken for the shorter one. Of course, αὐτοῖς stands for ὑπ' αὐτῶν: and ὑπακ. is (as Duk. and Goeller are agreed) to be taken impersonally. Thus, as observes Dukas, we say ὑπακούω σοι ῥᾷον, and ὑπακούετέ μοι ῥᾷον πρός σε. Accordingly ῥᾷον ὑπακούσεται αὐτοῖς is equivalent to ῥᾷων αὐτῶν ἡ ὑπακοὴ ἔσται πρὸς Ἀθηναίους.

Ch. LXX. 1. πολέμῳ ὡμιληκόσι] 'conversant with war:' of which rare phrase see examples in Plato, p. 410, γυμναστικῇ ὁμ. Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 65. The origin of the phrase may be accounted for by bearing in mind that the term ὁμιλεῖν is properly, by its very derivation, (which is from ὁμοῦ and ἴλη,) a military one, meaning, 'to engage with;' and thus is, as Eustath. says, equiv. to ὁμοῦ ταῖς στρατιωτικαῖς ἴλαις γενέσθαι. Accordingly it is not unfrequently used with a genitive of person, in the sense to fight: but when used, as here, with a genitive of thing, the phrase seems to bear the sense, 'to engage with by handling arms,' &c.; a view confirmed by a passage of the Antiope of Eurip. frag. xlii. 5, οὔτ' ἐν ἀσπίδος κύτει ὁμιλήσῃς, &c., where, for ἐν, I propose to read, on the conjecture of Valckenaer, ἄν: and ἀσπίδος κύτει I would explain to mean, by a poetic boldness, the hollow shield. To which purpose I would comp. Æschyl. Theb. 492, περὶ δρόμον κύτος Προσηδάφισται κοιλογάστορος κύκλου, where κοιλογ. serves as a mere epithet of ornament (like cavo in Virg. Æn. iii. 286, 'Ære cavo clipeum, magni gestamen Abantis:') and the terms περὶ ἔρ., κοιλογ., and κύκλου are meant to be graphic.

τοῦτο ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι τοῦ φόβου] Abresch, stumbling at this, what he terms, strange use of the term, as applied to a thing unpleasant, which one desires not to be increased, but from which to be freed, (the term otherwise bearing the sense to help or alleviate,) proposes, for ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι, to read ξυνεπιβαλέσθαι: a conjecture which has been approved by Bauer, and received into the text by Goeller; who, by way of illustration and confirmation, refers to another passage of our author supra iii. 36; but in vain—for I have there completely established the existence of this sense of helping, as said of increasing any thing, even evil; comparing iv. 47, ξυνελάβοντο τοιούτου, 'helped to bring about this state of things;' and viii. 26, ξυν. τῆς Ἀθηναίων καταλύσεως. Dio Cass. p. 375, 6, προσσυνελάβετο γὰρ τοῦ λόγου τοιούτου, ὅτι, &c. Here, then, the sense intended is, lit., 'helped their fear,' namely, by contributing to bring it about, or increase it. Dr. Arnold aptly compares the similar use of the term help in a passage of Milton, Parad. Lost, bk. vi. 656, 'Their armour help'd their harm.' And he might have added another instance equally parallel in a passage of the Old Testament, Zech. i. 15, 'I was but a little displeased; and they helped forward the evil (τῷ κακῷ) of my displeasure.'

τοῖς δ' ἐμπειροτέροις—δοκεῖν] 'whereas to the more knowing and better-informed (like the Athenians, who are at vi. 36 described as πολλῶν ἔμπειροι) what happened was thought to be brought about even by the season of year.' Compare Arrian E. A. i. 17, 6, ὥρας ἔτους χειμὼν (a tempest) ἐπιγίγνεται καὶ βρονταὶ σκληραὶ, καὶ ὕδωρ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ πίπτει. Appian, i. 399, 85. Hdian viii. 4, 6, τὰς δι' ὅλου τοῦ χειμῶνος παγείσας χιόνας λύουσα ἡ τοῦ ἔτους ὥρα, παμμεγέθη τὸν χειμάῤῥουν εἰργάζετο. Hence in a passage of Joseph. Ant. iii. 1, 6, (on the subject of the Manna) καὶ περιπηγνυμένας ταῖς χερσὶ. Μωϋσῆς—γεύεταί τε, καὶ ἡσθεὶς, τοῦ πλήθους ἀγνοοῦντος καὶ νομίζοντος νίφεσθαι, καὶ τῆς ὥρας εἶναι τοῦ ὑετοῦ τὸ γινόμενον, an evident corruption exists, which, though unnoticed by the editors, involves absolute nonsense. Wrongly did Hudson and Havercamp there introduce, from MSS., ὑετοῦ in the place of the old reading ἔτους, which is quite right, and from which an excellent sense will arise, if for τῆς ὥρας we read τῇ ὥρᾳ—a conjecture strongly supported by the present passage of Thucydides, which Josephus may be presumed to have had in view while writing the above.

The season of year here spoken of was Autumn, as we find from another passage infra vii. 79, βρονταί τινες—καὶ ὕδωρ, οἷα τοῦ ἔτους πρὸς μετόπωρον ἤδη ὄντος, φιλεῖ γίγνεσθαι.

That fear, even a superstitious fear, (as though evil were portended,) was not unfrequently felt by the ancients in such circumstances, might be shown by various examples. See Polyæn. i. 32, 2.

2. παρεῤῥήγνυτο] See note at iv. 96.

3. προδιώκοντας] 'going forward in pursuit:' for so I have edited, with Haack, Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, on the authority of 12 MSS., instead of vulg. προσδ. Of this very rare word I have noted an example elsewhere in Xen. An. iii. 3, 10.

4. τὴν Ἑλωρινὴν ὁδὸν] 'the Helorine Causeway.'

μὴ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τῶν χρημάτων—κινήσωσι] 'lest they should meddle with,' i. e. remove and apply to their own use. So i. 143, κινήσαντες τῶν Ὀλυμπίασιν ἢ Δελφοῖς χρημάτων, and ii. 24. The genitive is a genitivus partitivus; the sense being, 'some of the money,' or, rather, valuable effects. For we find from Plut. Nic., that they consisted of golden and silver ἀναθήματα.

Ch. LXXI. 1. ξυγκομίσαντες τοὺς ἑαυτῶν νεκροὺς] congestis suorum cadaveribus, i. e. for burial. Compare Xen. An. vi. 5, 6, συνενεγκόντες αὐτοὺς, ἔθαψαν, and vi. 4, 9. Plut. Ages. c. 19, τοὺς νεκροὺς—συγκεκομισμένους. Soph. Aj. 1068, τόνδε τὸν νεκρὸν χεροῖν μὴ συγκομίζειν. After all, however, it may be doubted whether the sense be not, colligere or componere ad funus. The idea arises from implication; the taking up and collecting together of corpses for interment implying the discharge of the previous duties of washing, laying out, &c. Insomuch that the Scholiast on Æschyl. Theb. 930, says that συγκομίζειν is equiv. to ἡ πρὸ τοῦ τάφου πᾶσα ἐπιμέλεια. And undoubtedly this sense exactly suits the passage of Sophocles above cited.

In τὰ ὀστᾶ συνέλεξαν there is reference to the custom of collecting the bones of those dying in foreign warfare, for burial in their native country, (see ii. 34.) with such simple pathos alluded to in Æschyl. Ag. 434, ἀντὶ δὲ φωτῶν Τεύχη καὶ σποδὸς εἰς ἑκάστου ξόμνυς ἀφικνεῖται.

δὲ ἀνθεστῶτας πολὺ μείζω ἔκπληξιν μὴ νικωμένους παρέχειν. 2. ὡσαμένων δὲ τῶν Ἀργείων πρῶτον τὸ εὐώνυμον κέρας τῶν Συρακοσίων, καὶ μετ' αὐτοὺς τῶν Ἀθηναίων τὸ κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς, παρεῤῥήγνυτο ἤδη καὶ τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα τῶν Συρακοσίων, καὶ ἐς φυγὴν κατέστη. 3. καὶ ἐπὶ πολὺ μὲν οὐκ ἐδίωξαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι (οἱ γὰρ ἱππῆς τῶν Συρακοσίων, πολλοὶ ὄντες καὶ ἀήσσητοι, εἶργον, καὶ ἐσβαλόντες ἐς τοὺς ὁπλίτας αὐτῶν, εἴ τινας προδιώκοντας ἴδοιεν, ἀνέστελλον), ἐπακολουθήσαντες δὲ ἀθρόοι, ὅσον ἀσφαλῶς εἶχε, πάλιν ἐπανεχώρουν, καὶ τροπαῖον ἵστασαν. 4. οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι, ἀθροισθέντες ἐς τὴν Ἑλωρινὴν ὁδὸν, καὶ ὡς ἐκ τῶν παρόντων ξυνταξάμενοι, ἔς τε τὸ Ὀλυμπιεῖον ὅμως σφῶν αὐτῶν παρέπεμψαν φυλακὴν,—δείσαντες μὴ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τῶν χρημάτων, ἃ ἦν αὐτόθι, κινήσωσι,—καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ ἐπανεχώρησαν ἐς τὴν πόλιν.

LXXI. Οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι πρὸς μὲν τὸ ἱερὸν οὐκ ἦλθον, ξυγκομίσαντες δὲ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν νεκροὺς, καὶ ἐπὶ πυρὰν ἐπιθέντες, ἠλίσαντο αὐτοῦ. τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ τοῖς μὲν Συρακοσίοις ἀπέδοσαν ὑποσπόνδους τοὺς νεκροὺς, (ἀπέθανον δὲ αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων περὶ ἑξήκοντα καὶ διακοσίους) τῶν δὲ σφετέρων τὰ ὀστᾶ ξυνέλεξαν (ἀπέθανον δὲ αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων ὡς πεντήκοντα), καὶ τὰ τῶν πολεμίων σκῦλα ἔχοντες ἀπέπλευσαν ἐς Κατάνην. 2. χειμών τε γὰρ ἦν, καὶ τὸν πόλεμον αὐτόθεν ποιεῖσθαι οὔπω ἐδόκει δυνατὸν εἶναι, πρὶν ἂν ἱππέας τε μεταπέμψωσιν ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν, καὶ ἐκ τῶν αὐτόθεν ξυμμάχων ἀγείρωσιν, ὅπως μὴ παντάπασιν ἱπποκρατῶνται, καὶ χρήματα δὲ ἅμα αὐτόθεν τε ξυλλέξωνται, καὶ παρ' Ἀθηναίων ἔλθῃ, τῶν τε πόλεών τινας προσαγάγωνται, ἃς ἤλπιζον μετὰ τὴν μάχην μᾶλλον σφῶν ὑπακούσεσθαι, τά τε ἄλλα καὶ σῖτον, καὶ ὅσων δέοι παρασκευάσωνται, ὡς ἐς τὸ ἔαρ ἐπιχειρήσοντες ταῖς Συρακούσαις.

LXXII. Καὶ οἱ μὲν ταύτῃ τῇ γνώμῃ ἀπέπλευσαν ἐς τὴν Νάξον καὶ Κατάνην διαχειμάσοντες· Συρακόσιοι δὲ τοὺς σφετέρους αὐτῶν νεκροὺς θάψαντες, ἐκκλησίαν ἐποίουν. 2. καὶ παρελθὼν αὐτοῖς Ἑρμοκράτης ὁ Ἕρμωνος, ἀνὴρ καὶ ἐς τἆλλα ξύνεσιν οὐδενὸς λειπόμενος, καὶ κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον ἐμπειρίᾳ τε ἱκανὸς γενόμενος καὶ ἀνδρείᾳ ἐπιφανὴς, ἐθάρσυνέ τε καὶ οὐκ εἶα τῷ γεγενημένῳ ἐνδιδόναι· τὴν μὲν γὰρ γνώμην αὐτῶν οὐχ ἡσσῆσθαι, τὴν δὲ ἀταξίαν βλάψαι. οὐ μέντοι τοσοῦτόν γε λειφθῆναι ὅσον εἰκὸς εἶναι ἄλλως τε τοῖς πρώτοις τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἐμπειρίᾳ, ἰδιώτας, ὡς εἰπεῖν, χειροναυσος, a bungler. That it may here bear the latter sense, is not to be denied; but that it may, as far as the usus loquendi is concerned, bear the former, I must strenuously maintain; and this fully appears from the following passages—infra ch. 27. Dio Cass. p. 615, where Antony thus addresses his soldiers: καὶ παντὸς εἴδους μάχης χειροτέχναι ἐστέ: besides others adduced by Goeller from Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 32. iv. 17. vii. 59. ix. 12. Finally, so in Aristot. Eth. iii. 11, it is said that disciplined soldiers fighting with undisciplined ones are like ἀθληταὶ ἰδιώταις μαχόμενοι. In answer to the objection, that χειροτέχνης is continually opposed to a soldier, as signifying a mere artisan, (so Herodot. ii. 167.) it is well observed by Dr. Arnold, that ἰδιώτης being 'a person not trained to the business,' let that business be what it will, χειροτέχνης is taken simply as 'a workman,' or one who has had practice in the use of his hands, distinguished from one who has not. Such is the use of the expression τεχνίτας τῶν πολεμικῶν in Jos. 861, 41, and in Xen. de Repub. Laced. 13, where it is opposed to αὐτοσχεδιασταί. And so ἐργάτης μάχης in Suidas v. Δεινός. Poppo aptly compares the same use of our word workman in a passage of Shakspeare, Mark Antony, iv. 4, 'O Love, that thou couldst see my wars to-day; And knew'st the royal occupation! thou Shouldst see a workman in it.'

As to the external evidence in favour ὅπως μὴ—ἱπποκρατῶνται] 'that they might not be beaten out of the field by the enemy's cavalry.' Ἱπποκρατέω occurs in Arrian E. A. v. 6, 14. Polyb. iii. 66, 2. and 92, 7. iii. 117, 3. Appian i. 761. In the passive I have only met with it in Synes. p. 265, B. ἱπποκρατεῖται ἅπαντα, for so it should be read, from 2 MSS., for ἱπποκροτεῖται.

Ch. LXXII. 1. θάψαντες] compositis rogis cremantes. See note on ii. 34, 1.

2. οὐκ εἶα τῷ γεγενημένῳ ἐνδιδόναι] 'was not for having them give way at what had happened.'

τὴν μὲν γὰρ γνώμην αὐτῶν οὐχ ἡσσῆσθαι] 'for that their minds were not vanquished;' and hence they need not be daunted. Comp. ii. 87, οὐδὲ δίκαιον, τῆς γνώμης τὸ μὴ κατὰ κράτος νικηθὲν—τῷ ἀποβάντι ἀμβλύνεσθαι. In the next words, τὴν δὲ ἀταξίαν βλάψαι we have a brief form of expression for, 'but it was disarray that had done the mischief.'

χειροτέχναις] So I have, as in my sm. ed., edited, (with Dobree, Goell., and Arn.) instead of vulg. χειροτέχνας, retained by Poppo and Bekker; the sense yielded by which, (namely, 'mere bungling mechanics,') though tolerable in itself, is by no means so natural and apt as that which arises from the former. Render: 'being, so to speak, mere raw-hands, as opposed to regular workmen.' Of course, the question as to the reading depends, as Goeller observes, on this—whether χειροτέχνης may be supposed to mean artifex, or βάτέχναις, ἀνταγωνισαμένους. 3. μέγα δὲ βλάψαι καὶ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν στρατηγῶν καὶ τὴν πολυαρχίαν (ἦσαν γὰρ πεντεκαίδεκα οἱ στρατηγοὶ αὐτοῖς), τῶν τε πολλῶν τὴν ἀξύντακτον ἀναρχίαν. 4. ἢν δὲ ὀλίγοι τε στρατηγοὶ γένωνται ἔμπειροι, καὶ ἐν τῷ χειμῶνι τούτῳ παρασκευάσωσι τὸ ὁπλιτικὸν, οἷς τε ὅπλα μὴ ἔστιν, ἐκπορίζοντες,—ὅπως ὡς πλεῖστοι ἔσονται,—καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ μελέτῃ προσαναγκάζοντες, ἔφη κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς κρατήσειν σφᾶς τῶν ἐναντίων, ἀνδρείας μὲν σφίσιν ὑπαρχούσης, εὐταξίας δὲ ἐς τὰ ἔργα προσγενομένης· ἐπιδώσειν γὰρ ἀμφότερα αὐτά, τὴν μὲν μετὰ κινδύνων μελετωμένην, τὴν δ' εὐψυχίαν αὐτὴν ἑαυτῆς μετὰ τοῦ πιστοῦ τῆς ἐπιστήμης θαρσαλεωτέραν ἔσεσθαι. 5. τούς τε στρατηγοὺς καὶ ὀλίγους καὶ αὐτοκράτορας χρῆναι ἑλέσθαι, καὶ ὁμόσαι αὐτοῖς τὸ ὅρκιον ἢ μὴ ἐάσειν ἄρχειν ὅπη ἂν ἐπίστωνται· οὕτω γὰρ ἅ τε κρύπτεσθαι δεῖ, μᾶλλον ἂν στέγεσθαι, καὶ τἆλλα κατὰ κόσμον καὶ ἀπροφασίστως παρασκευασθῆναι.

LXXIII. Καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι αὐτοῦ ἀκούσαντες, ἐψηφίσαντό τε πάντα ὡς ἐκέλευε, καὶ στρατηγὸν αὐτόν τε εἵλοντο τὸν Ἑρμοκράτην, καὶ Ἡρακλείδην τὸν Λυσιμάχου, καὶ Σικανὸν τὸν Ἐξηκέστου, τούτους τρεῖς. 2. καὶ ἐς τὴν Κόρινθον καὶ ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα πρεσβεῖς ἀπέστειλαν, ὅπως ξυμμαχία τε αὐτοῖς παραγένηται, καὶ τὸν πρὸς Ἀθηναίους πόλεμον βεβαιότερον πείθωσι ποιεῖσθαι ἐκ τοῦ προφανοῦς of the reading χειροτέχναις, Valla seems to have had it in his copy, and probably Pollux i. 156; it occurs as a marginal reading in the Cod. Aug. And as I have ascertained that in the Cod. Clarend. the a is upon rasure, there can be no doubt that the original reading there was χειροτέχναις. Though indeed, in so minute a variation as the present, the authority of MSS. has no great weight.

3. μέγα δὲ βλάψαι—πολυαρχίαν] No wonder; since true, in all ages, is the Homeric dictum, (Il. ii. 204.) οὐκ ἀγαθὴ πολυκοιρανίη, which has been verified by the frequent testimony of historians and narrators of political events. (See the passages adduced in my Translation.) The thing is the more strongly put by the opposition between τῶν στρατηγῶν πολυαρχίαν and τῶν πολλῶν ἀναρχίαν, 'disorderly anarchy arising from insubordination.'

4. παρασκευάσωσι] The term is here, I apprehend, to be taken in its most extensive sense,—namely, that of making ready for action, both by unsparing levies, by personal training, and by seeing the men properly provided with arms and accoutrements. Thus παρασκευάζειν bears in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 5, the sense to provide with arms and armour: and such is not unfrequently the use of the passive. Accordingly it corresponds to præparare in Latin, which is sometimes so used; e. g. Sallust. ap. Veget. i. 9, 'suos milites præparare ad prœlia,' 'to train to battle.' Such, too, is the view of the sense propounded by the Schol., who explains by παιδεύωσιν εἰς παρασκευήν (preparatory training). Finally, these two ideas of arming and training are especially adverted to in the words following.

ἐπιδώσειν γὰρ—μελετωμένην] Comp. supra ii. 87, and i. 18, μετὰ τοῦ πιστοῦ τῆς ἐπιστήμης. Meaning, that 'their courage would grow bolder than before (αὐτὴν ἑαυτῆς), when united with the confidence of skill.' Comp. Veget. i. 1, (cited by Acacius,) 'scientia rei bellicæ dimicandi nutrit audaciam. Nemo facere metuit, quod se bene fecisse confidit.'

5. τὸ ὅρκιον] Render, 'the oath,' meaning, the customary, and accordingly well-known, oath in such a case as the present.

Ch. LXXIII. 2. ὅπως ξυμμαχία—παραγένηται] ut auxilia (meaning auxiliary troops) sibi mitterentur. Abstract for concrete, by a use frequent in our author, and on which see Matth. Gr. § 429, 1. On the term ὠφέλεια in this peculiar use, to signify auxilium, see note at i. 3.

Ch. LXXIV. 1. ἃ μὲν ἐπράσσετο] lit. 'the things which were being practised,' or clandestinely managed, for delivering up the city to the Athenians. Of πράσσω in this sense examples occur also at ii. 79. iv. 89 and 132. v. 85. vi. 10. Οὐκ ἐγένετο, 'were not brought to pass.' Ξυνειδὼς τὸ μέλλον, lit. 'having come to a knowledge (namely, by being in the secret) of the projected betrayal of the city,' which was going to be carried into execution. Ἐπεκράτουν, 'prevailed, carried their point.' The words οἱ ταῦτα βουλόμενοι are (like many other similar forms of expression in our author) introduced ad epexegesin.

ἡμέρας δὲ μείναντες] The δὲ here corresponds to the μὲν at ἃ μὲν ἐπράσσετο, οὐκ ἐγένετο: the intermediate words being parenthetic, and intended to explain the cause of the failure in question.

καὶ Θράκας] This,—justly regarded by Heilm. and Bredow as the true reading,—I have edited, on the authority of Codd. Cant., Clarend. (à pr. manu), Mus. Brit., (further supported by the reading of the Cod. Lugd. Θράκην,) instead of vulg. Θρᾷκας, which cannot be tolerated,—if at least this be (as it seems a name of place) called Θράκαι, like the Θράκων noticed, as Heilm. observes, by Steph. Byz. as a town near Antioch, though mentioned, it is believed, by no other writer. Thus the Θράκαι here spoken of was, we may suppose, a village in the immediate vicinity of Naxos; probably on the bay, about 3 miles N.E. from Naxos, and very possibly on the site afterwards occupied by new Naxus, or Tauromenium. Now this would be a very commodious spot for the naval station; and the camp, for the land-forces, was doubtless on the beach immediately above. See Capt. Smyth's Map of Sicily. Bekker, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold have, indeed, cancelled the obnoxious name; but quite uncritically, since it has place in perhaps every known MS. (for as to the Paris, Duk. and Gail differ in their account;) and if we were to admit that the word originated in χάρακας, meant as a gloss on χαρακώματα, (though how a gloss should be wanting to so plain a term, it is difficult to see,) it exceeds belief that it should have found its way into all the MSS.

σταυρώματα] This I have, with Poppo, admitted into the text, instead of vulg. σταύρωμα, which has been retained by Bekker, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold, but not on good grounds; since the external authority in favour of σταυρώματα is too strong to be resisted; and it is supported by a no inconsiderable weight of internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance of the singular form being common, while the plural is comparatively rare; though I have noted it in Xen. Anab. v. 2, 15 & 19. Ages. ii. 22. Diod. Sic. t. i. 190. Dio Cass. p. 345, 55, σταυρώμασι καὶ ταφρεύμασι διχῇ διαλαβόντες ἀνταπ. τειχισαι, (a passage probably written with a view to the present,) and Polyæn. p. 266, 267, ed. Coray. The word is also introduced together with the singular by J. Pollux ix. 14, among other military terms. Finally, the above reading is, as Poppo points out, supported by another passage of our author, vii. 53; for I agree with him, that the term here has reference, not to the palisading about the ships, (as ch. 66.) but to the fortified line drawn round the Athenian camp, like that mentioned at Catana, supra ch. 64: and here there would be several. To which purpose is a passage of Lycophr. Cass. 290, τότ' οὔτε τάφρος, οὔτε ναυλόχων σταθμῶν Πρόβλημα, καὶ σταυροῖσι κορσωτὴ πτέρυξ, Οὐ γεῖσα χραίσμησσιν, οὐδ' ἐπάλξεις. This kind of work was, I suspect, something like that of the stockades, or wooden lines of fortification, in use among the Birmans.

Ch. LXXV. 1. This τέμενος, or tract consecrated to Apollo, hence called Temenitis, was that belonging to a temple of Apollo, or perhaps only a statue of the god; if, at least, the famous statue of Apollo, mentioned by Cicero and Suetonius, was then in being; which is doubtful. It is also doubtful whether our author does not speak by anticipation, when he seems to regard the Temenitis as a quarter of the city. We may rather suppose that it was at the time he speaks of, properly speaking, only a strip of land forming the τέμενος to the temple of Apollo; but that being then brougnt within the city wall, it became soon afterwards a new quarter of the city itself. As to Epipolæ, it was not then a quarter of the city, but was merely, as is intimated, ch. 96, the name given to a tract which was on the crown of the height above the city, to the NE., and was so called as being ἐπιπολῆς τοῦ ἄλλου, above the rest of the country.

δι' ἐλάσσονος] 'by a shorter cut.' Τὰ Μέγαρα φρούριον. Repeat ἐτείχιζον, 'they fortified Megara,' i. e. made a fort there.

4. προδιαβάλλειν] So I have edited, with Poppo and Goeller, for vulg. προσδιαβάλλειν, this yielding a sense far more apt in itself, and suitable to the occasion. For it was usually thought politic to ensure the first hearing of an assembly, in order thereby to pre-occupy their favourable opinion by prejudicing them against the opposite party. The term προδ. is one of rare occurrence; the only example of it, that I have noted elsewhere, being in Dionys. Hal. t. v. 45, Reiske.

Finally, I have edited προδιαβάλλειν in preference to προδιαβαλεῖν, (adopted by Bekker and Dr. Arnold.) partly from its

LXXVI. "Οὐ τὴν παροῦσαν δύναμιν τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ὦ Καμαριναῖοι, μὴ αὐτὴν καταπλαγῆτε, δείσαντες ἐπρεσβευσάμεθα, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον τοὺς μέλλοντας ἀπ' αὐτῶν λόγους, πρίν τι καὶ ἡμῶν ἀκοῦσαι, μὴ ὑμᾶς πείσωσιν. 2. ἥκουσι γὰρ ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν προφάσει μὲν ᾗ πυνθάνεσθε, διανοίᾳ δὲ ἣν πάντες ὑπονοοῦμεν· καί μοι δοκοῦσιν οὐ Λεοντίνους βούλεσθαι κατοικίσαι, ἀλλ' ἡμᾶς μᾶλλον ἐξοικίσαι. οὐ γὰρ δὴ εὔλογον τὰς μὲν ἐκεῖ πόλεις ἀναστάτους ποιεῖν, τὰς δὲ ἐνθάδε κατοικίζειν, καὶ Λεοντίνων μὲν Χαλκιδέων ὄντων κατὰ τὸ ξυγγενὲς κήδεσθαι, Χαλκιδέας δὲ τοὺς ἐν Εὐβοίᾳ, ὧν οἵδε ἄποικοί εἰσι, δουλωσαμένους ἔχειν. 3. τῇ δὲ αὐτῇ ἰδέᾳ ἐκεῖνά τε ἔσχον καὶ τὰ ἐνθάδε νῦν πειρῶνται. ἡγεμόνες γὰρ γενόμενοι, ἑκόντων τῶν τε Ἰώνων καὶ ὅσοι ἀπὸ σφῶν ἦσαν ξύμμαχοι, ὡς ἐπὶ τοῦ Μήδου τιμωρίᾳ, τοὺς μὲν ‡ λιποστρατίαν, τοὺς δὲ ἐπ' ἀλλήλους greater grammatical propriety, but chiefly from the preponderance of MS. authority in favour of the former.

Ch. LXXVI. In the present speech (which is marked by the same characteristics as the two preceding,—namely, single-minded patriotism, penetrating acuteness, and convincing eloquence) the speaker commences, ch. 76, with exposing the shallowness of the pretext by which the Athenians sought to cover their designs on the liberties of all Sicily. He contrasts their hollow professions of sympathy towards the Chalcidians of Leontium with their conduct towards the Chalcidians of Eubœa, whom they had enslaved, and held in strict subjection, though both were alike kinsmen of the Athenians, as being Ionians.

Hermocrates commences with showing why he has sought to speak first,—namely, as fearing the words of the Athenians, if heard before the representations that might proceed from him, rather than any effect which the present display of power by the Athenians might have in working on their minds.

1. οὐ τὴν παροῦσαν—ἐπρεσβευσάμεθα] 'Non ideo, quod veriti simus, ne præsentibus Atheniensium copiis terreremini, legati ad vos venimus. Sicut sæpe, id quod notissimum est, subjectum enunciationis alteri subjectæ in objectum primariæ mutatur, ita hic objectum illius in hanc relatum, sed simul illic pronomine αὐτὴν indicatum.' (Poppo.)

2. προφάσει μὲν—διανοίᾳ δὲ] Compare Hdot. ii. 100, τῷ λόγῳ—νόῳ δέ. At ἣν the attraction is neglected, (as at i. 50 & 52,) and that, we may suppose, in order to fix the attention of the hearers on the intention so suspected. Worthy of observation is the paronomasia at κατοικίσαι and ἐξοικίσαι, as imparting vigour to the sentiment.

3. ἰδέᾳ] for διανοίᾳ, motive, purpose. See note at iii. 62.

ἐκεῖνα] for τοὺς ἐκεῖ (neuter for masculine), meaning, the Chalcidians of Eubœa, and other Grecian states enslaved by the Athenians. Τὰ ἐνθάδε. Meaning, the Sicilian states generally. At πειρῶνται is left to be supplied (from ἔσχον in the context) the word ἔχειν; of which idiom the only examples I have noted elsewhere are the following: Xen. Cyr. i. 5, 7, Th. μεγάλα—καὶ μικρὰ πειρώμενον. Eurip. Tr. 979, ἢ γάμον Ἀθάνα θεῶν τινος πειρωμένη. Hom. Od. xxiv. 237, ἢ πρῶτ' ἐξερέοιτο, ἕκαστα τε πειρήσαιτο, singula exploravit interrogando. Compare with the present a phrase occurring in another passage of our author, ii. 19, 1, πᾶσαν ἰδέαν πειράσαντες, 'trying at,' i. e. attempting every mode of assault: for the two ideas of attempting and attacking are cognate; and the latter naturally springs from the former. Similarly the Latin attentare is used both in the sense aggredi and adoriri.

ὅσοι ἀπὸ σφῶν ἦσαν ξύμμαχοι] Of these words the sense, which is far from clear, has been variously explained. It seems best, with the Scholiast, Portus, Bredow, Haack, and Poppo, to understand σφῶν of the Athenians, rendering: 'all who being descended from the Athenians, became their allies.' Haack aptly compares here the words of the Athenian orator at ch. 82, οὐδὲ ἀδίκως καταστρεψάμενοι τούς τε Ἴωνας καὶ νησιώτας, οὓς ξυγγενεῖς φασιν ὄντας ἡμᾶς Συρακόσιοι δεδουλῶσθαι.

λιποστρατίαν] So I have edited, with στρατεύειν, τοῖς δ' ὡς ἑκάστοις τινὰ εἶχον αἰτίαν εὐπρεπῆ, ἐπενεγκόντες, κατεστρέψαντο. 4. καὶ οὐ περὶ τῆς ἐλευθερίας ἄρα, οὔτε οὗτοι τῶν Ἑλλήνων οὔθ' οἱ Ἕλληνες τῆς ἑαυτῶν, τῷ Μήδῳ ἀντέστησαν, περὶ δὲ οἱ μὲν σφίσιν, ἀλλὰ μὴ ἐκείνῳ, καταδουλώσεως, οἱ δ' ἐπὶ δεσπότου μεταβολῇ, οὐκ ἀξυνετωτέρου, κακοξυνετωτέρου δέ.

Bekker (2nd edition), and Dr. Arnold, instead of vulg. λειποστρατίαν, retained by Goeller and Poppo, but which is later Greek; while the form λιποστρατίαν is earlier. (See Poppo in loc.) Nor will the ει be demanded by the passages which I have, in my smaller edition, adduced from Herodot. v. 27, and Dionys. Hal. Ant. xi. 22, since the former merely presents the Ionic, and the latter, the later Greek form, which Dionys. employed, though he chose to employ the Thucydidean phrase. So strikingly similar to the present is the passage of Herodotus, that one can hardly avoid supposing our author to have had it in view. But that he wrote λιποστρατίαν, is attested by the existence of the word in several of the best MSS., to which add Mus. Brit.

4. οὐκ ἀξυνετωτέρου, κακοξυνετωτέρου δέ] The exact sense here intended is far from clear; partly from the pointed character of the phraseology, and partly from the uncertainty as to the precise import of the term κακοξυνετωτέρου, a term of which no example elsewhere is found, and which may be supposed to have been coined for the occasion, to suit ἀξυνετωτέρου, and complete the point. Towards determining the sense, two things are to be considered, 1. the force of the formula οὐκ—δὲ, and, 2. the import of κακοξυνετωτέρου. Now the formula οὐκ—δὲ is nearly equiv. to that of οὐκ—ἀλλά, non tam—quam, though somewhat stronger; q. d. 'I do not say—but,' &c. Comp. iv. 86, οὐκ ἐπὶ κακῷ, ἐπ' ἐλευθερώσει δὲ τῶν Ἑλλ. παρελήλυθα. On this use of δὲ for ἀλλὰ discretiva, see Hoogev. de Part. It is of frequent occurrence in Xen., and is occasionally found in other writers, as in the New Testament, Hebr. iv. 15, οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν—πεπειρασμένον δὲ, &c. The sense, then, may be thus expressed: 'a master, not one more foolish than the former, but one,' &c. With respect to the term κακοξυνετωτέρου, it is explained by the Schol. πανουργότερος, and by the translators and expositors, 'more astute and crafty.' But considering that the Athenians were not noted for craft, but rather the Lacedæmonians, such a sense would surely be here little suitable. The import of the term is rather, I apprehend, what might be expressed by a compound coined for the occasion,—namely, evil-wise: meaning, clever, sagacious, knowing, though for evil, not for good. Thus understood, κακοξυνετωτέρου has an exact parallel to the expression σοφὸς τοῦ κακοποιῆσαι in a passage of the Old Testament, Jerem. iv. 22, where of the Israelites it is said, υἱοὶ ἄφρονές εἰσι καὶ οὐ συνετοί. And then there is added, by way of explanation, σοφοί εἰσι τοῦ κακοποιῆσαι, τὸ δὲ καλῶς ποιῆσαι (I conj. καλοποιῆσαι, an emendation confirmed by another passage of the Old Testament, Levit. v. 4) οὐκ ἐπέγνωσαν, intimating that they are fools and unwise, because they only show their talent in evil-doing. Similarly Demodeus, as we learn from Aristot. Ethic. vi. 8, said of the Milesians: Ἀσύνετοι μὲν οὐκ εἰσί· δρῶσι δὲ οἷαπερ οἱ ἀσύνετοι.

Finally, with good reason is it said οὐκ ἀξυνετωτέρου, since the Persians are never spoken of as συνετοί, but the Athenians are continually. So supra ch. 36, 3, the latter are styled even by the Syracusan orator as ἄνθρωποι δεινοὶ καὶ πολλῶν ἔμπειροι, where the term δεινοί is well explained by the Schol. συνετοί. And so, supra i. 70, we have ἐπινοῆσαι ὀξεῖς. Here then, by the words οὐκ ἀξυνετωτέρου, κακοξυνετωτέρου δὲ, the speaker means to say of the Athenians, that 'they are only clever for evil;' the very character in Scripture ascribed to the great Enemy of mankind, into whose thoughts, as says the poet, 'good never enters,' or at least dwells; since, as being the Evil One, he is only wise for evil. And such is the idea intended by Milton, Paradise Lost, bk. ix. 465, when he represents Satan as almost bereaved for the moment of his love of evil on the first view of Eve: 'That space the Evil One abstracted stood From his own evil, and for the time remain'd Stupidly good.' For it seems to have been the thought of the great poet, in the above expressive lines, that if a being, κακοξύνετος, only wise for evil, could by any possibility be bereaved of the principle of evil, he would become, what Satan is there represented, as being for a little space, stupidly good.

One difficulty alone remains to be removed; and that is, to account for the use of the comparative in κακοξυνετωτέρου; for, in point of fact, the Persians were rather stupidly good, than cleverly evil. We may suppose the comparative form to have been here employed rather for the purpose of completing the antithesis, than for any other reason; and consequently the present will fall under that extensive class of passages (on which see Buttm., Matth., and Kuhn. Gr.) in which the compar. is used for the positive, and some adverb equiv. to our too, or too much, i. e. more than one should be. So Herodot. iii. 145, ὑπομαργότερος. vi. 38, ὑποθερμότερος. vi. 92, αὐθαδέστεροι. i. 116, ὑπόκρισις ἐλευθεριωτέρη, justo liberior.

Ch. LXXVII. In this chapter the speaker proceeds to say, that he is not come there to animadvert on the confessedly criminal ambition of the Athenians, (who rather followed the impulse of a natural passion,) but to complain of the arrant folly of the Sicilian Greeks, who had by their disunion encouraged the forming of projects such as the present against their liberty; and which, should they suffer themselves,—in spite of warning,—to be deceived by flimsy pretexts, would expose them all to the danger of being separately subdued.

1. ἀποφανοῦντες ἐν εἰδόσιν] Duker here compares another passage of our author, supra ii. 36, μακρηγορεῖν ἐν εἰδόσιν οὐ βουλόμενος, and others also, ii. 43. iv. 59. iii. 53; and Wasse compares passages highly to the present purpose, of Æschyl. Prom 450, Blomfield, Ἀλλ᾽ αὐτὰ σιγῶ· καὶ γὰρ εἰδυίαισιν ἂν Ὑμῖν λέγοιμι, and Eurip. Hec. 658, Οὐ καινὸν εἶπας, εἰδόσιν δ᾽ ὠνείδισας.

τ᾽] So I have edited, with Poppo and Goeller, (second edition,) instead of vulg. τε. In three MSS., but those least valuable, the word is not found, and, as such, was formerly cancelled by Bekker and Goeller, who, however, in their second editions, have restored the word; and rightly, since it may very well be supposed to have been omitted from the circumstance adverted to by Poppo and Dr. Arnold, of the conjunction being here used a little out of its place; the construction being: ἔχοντες παραδείγματά τε τῶν ἐκεῖ Ἑλλήνων, καὶ νῦν ἐφ᾽ ἡμᾶς ταὐτὰ παρόντα σοφίσματα.

For vulg. ἐκεῖ, several good MSS. have ἐκεῖσε, which has been edited by Poppo, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold; but I have chosen to retain the former, because, as Poppo now acknowledges, all the examples by which the critics (as Krueger and Lobeck) defend ἐκεῖσε for ἐκεῖ are from writers not Attic.

ταὐτὰ] So I have edited, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, for vulg. ταῦτα: and to the authority of the four MSS. adduced in favour of this reading, I add that of Mus. Brit., and also Dionys. Hal.

κατοικίσεις—ἐπικουρίας] Plurali utitur, quasi genera et modos notaturus τῶν σοφισμάτων, qualia sint; qua ratione et nos utimur, quum indignabundi loquimur, in propriis quoque nominibus. (Poppo.) Ξυστραφέντες, just after, is not well explained by the Schol. συνταχθέντες, and by Hesych. συνελθόντες. As to the examples adduced by Abresch, in support of the former sense, they are, as Bauer points out, for the most part, merely examples of the sense conglobari, which were here little suitable, since the meaning intended to be expressed is simply, conjuncti, consociati, 'uniting for defence.'

2. μένομεν] Render, 'are we waiting.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 516, 2. Ἐπὶ τοῦτο τὸ εἶδος τρεπ., 'resorting to this kind of policy.' Compare viii. 56, τρέπεται ἐπὶ τοιόνδε εἶδος. Aristoph. Plut. 317, ἐπ᾽ ἄλλ᾽ εἶδος τρέπεσθ᾽. See more in note on viii. 89, 3.

εἶδος τρεπομένους, ὥστε τοὺς μὲν λόγοις ἡμῶν διϊστάναι, τοὺς δὲ ξυμμάχων ἐλπίδι ἐκπολεμοῦν πρὸς ἀλλήλους, τοῖς δὲ ὡς ἑκάστοις τι προσηνὲς λέγοντες; δύνανται κακουργεῖν; καὶ οἰόμεθα, τοῦ ἄποθεν ξυνοίκου προαπολλυμένου, οὐ καὶ ἐς αὐτόν τινα ἥξειν τὸ δεινόν, πρὸ δὲ αὐτοῦ μᾶλλον τὸν πάσχοντα καθ᾽ αὑτὸν δυστυχεῖν; LXXVIII. Καὶ εἴ τῳ ἄρα παρέστηκε τὸν μὲν Συρακόσιον, ἑαυτὸν δ᾽ οὐ πολέμιον εἶναι τῷ Ἀθηναίῳ, καὶ δεινὸν ἡγεῖται ὑπέρ γε τῆς ἐμῆς κινδυνεύειν, ἐνθυμηθήτω οὐ περὶ τῆς ἐμῆς μᾶλλον, ἐν ἴσῳ διϊστάναι] Meaning, 'to set [them] at variance, and dissever them [one from another].' Compare Xen. Hist. ii. 4. 35, διῖστησι τοὺς ἐν ἄστει. Lucian. t. i. 396, διαστήσας αὐτούς. Aristoph. Vesp. 41, διϊστάνειν τὸν δῆμον. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1726, 3, διαστῆσαι τὴν πόλιν. And such is the use of dissociare in Latin. In τοὺς δὲ ἐκπολεμοῦν πρὸς ἀλλήλους, 'to set them at variance with each other,' we have a construction quite unusual, and of which the only example (at least as regards the use of the verb in the active) that I have noted elsewhere is in Polyb. xx. 4, 4. (though in another passage, Xen. Hist. v. 4, 20, ἵν᾽ ἐκπολεμήσειε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, I suspect that, for ἐκπολεμήσειε, the true reading is ἐκπολεμώσειε.) In the passive, the same construction is found at Herodot. v. 73. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 998, 1783, 2227.

τι προσηνὲς λέγοντες] Meaning, not, as Hobbes and others render, 'by saying somewhat falling in as favourable;' but, as Portus, 'aliquid blandi,' something pleasant and agreeable: προσηνὴς here being, like blandus in Latin, (which has this sense in the expression of Petron. blanda oratio,) used for ἄρεσκος or χρηστόλογος, 'grateful to the ear.' So Plutarch vi. 169, προσηνεῖς—ὁμιλίας, and Lucian, t. ii. 471, ὁ τόνος τοῦ φθέγματος — προσηνής. The nearest approach that I have noted to the present phrase is in Jos. Ant. viii. 8, 2, φύσει τῶν ὑπηκόων ἀγαπώντων τὸ προσηνὲς, where I suspect Josephus (with the present passage in view) to have written, for τὸ προσ., τι προσηνὲς, to which a parallel is found in an expression occurring in the Septuagint, λέγειν λόγους ἀγαθούς.

At τοῖς δὲ—κακουργεῖν there exists a certain difficulty, which is best encountered by supposing (with Haack, Krueger, and Poppo) that the words 'attractionis causa trajecta esse,' the construction being, τοῖς δὲ λέγοντες, ὡς ἑκάστοις τι προσηνὲς δύνανται [λέγειν] κακουργεῖν.

ξυνοίκου] Render, 'fellow-countryman,' as at ii. 68. iv. 64. Its proper signification is, 'a fellow-inmate of any house:' and hence it is applied in a figurative sense to one living in the same country, and so implying the idea of neighbour. Accordingly in iv. 64, the same states are spoken of as γείτονες ὄντες καὶ ξύνοικοι μιᾶς χώρας.

οὐ καὶ] So I have edited, with Haack, Poppo, and Bekker, (second edition,) for vulg. οὐκ; and to the 15 MSS., which are adduced to support this reading, am enabled to add that of Codd. Cant. and Mus. Brit. The οὐ καὶ may very well be supposed to have passed into οὐκ from the mark of abbreviation for καὶ being, as it might easily be, mistaken for a κ, especially by one who did not perceive the force here of the conjunction, which is, 'to him also.' Compare with the present a similar sentiment at i. 120, 3, προσδέχεσθαι δέ ποτε—κἂν μέχρι σφῶν τὸ δεινὸν προελθεῖν.

πρὸ δὲ αὐτοῦ—δυστυχεῖν] Render, 'but that the sufferer before him is unfortunate for himself alone.'

Ch. LXXVIII. The speaker now proceeds to remind those who were jealous of the power of Syracuse, that her strength, which exposed her to the first attack of a foreign enemy, was likewise a rampart to the weaker states; and that it was idle to wish that this barrier might be strong on one side and weak on the other; or that Syracuse might continue to protect her neighbours from aggression, and yet be so humbled as not to excite their pity.

1. καὶ εἴ τῳ ἄρα παρέστηκε, &c.] 'And if, indeed, it has occurred to any one that,' &c. Poppo compares with this a parallel sentiment at iv. 61, παρεστάναι δὲ μηδενὶ ὡς οἱ μὲν, &c. At τὸν Συρακ. and τῷ Ἀθηναίῳ we have the use of singular for plural, as at vi. 84, ὁ Χαλκιδεύς. This idiom is not, however, as Dionysius thinks, confined to our author; but is, as Do-

δὲ καὶ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ ἅμα ἐν τῇ ἐμῇ μαχούμενος, τοσούτῳ δὲ καὶ ἀσφαλέστερον, ὅσῳ, οὐ προδιεφθαρμένου ἐμοῦ, ἔχων δὲ ξύμμαχον ἐμέ, καὶ οὐκ ‡ ἔρημος, ἀγωνιεῖται· τόν τε Ἀθηναῖον μὴ τὴν τοῦ Συρακοσίου ἔχθραν κολάσασθαι, τῇ δ' ἐμῇ προφάσει τὴν ἐκείνου φιλίαν οὐχ ἧσσον βεβαιώσασθαι βούλεσθαι. 2. εἴ τέ τις φθονεῖ μὲν, ἢ

ὅσῳ, οὐ προδιεφθαρμένου—ἀγωνιεῖται] Render, 'inasmuch as, by me not being previously destroyed, he will fight not destitute of aid, but having me as his helper.'

For ἔρημος almost all the MSS. have ἔρημον, which has been received into the text by Haack and Poppo, while Bekker and Goeller retain the common reading; and very properly, for ἔρημον, if not absolutely indefensible, admits only of a sense very forced and jejune, (namely, 'he will have me as his ally, and an ally not destitute of funds,') and which is so very inferior to that yielded by ἔρημος, that one cannot for a moment hesitate as to which deserves the preference. In vain is it to urge even the strongest external authority for one reading, when internal evidence of every kind exists in favour of another. And such is certainly the case here, when we consider how very likely it was that ἔρημος should be mistaken for ἔρημον, as seeming to belong to ἐμέ; not to mention that the internal evidence of truth, arising from far greater suitableness as to sense, is very strong.

Of the term ἔρημος, in this absolute use, (corresponding to that of Lat. destitutus in Sueton. Galb. 11, and our forlorn, helpless,) examples are found in Xen. Cyr. vii. 4, 5, and 5, 18, (edit. Thiem.) εἰ καταλείψει ἐρήμους, οἷς ἦλθε σύμμαχος, and iv. 5, 5, καταλιπόντας αὐτὸν ἔρημον. Œcon. xi. 5. Hist. ii. 4, 14; besides two other passages of our author, ii. 90, and iii. 11. Finally, if any doubt should still exist, it must be effectually removed by an example of this very use of ἔρημος, and that in conjunction with the term ἀγωνίζεσθαι, in Xenoph. Cyrop. vii. 1, 15, οὐκ ἐάσοντες ἐρήμους ὑμᾶς ἀγωνίζεσθαι.

τόν τε Ἀθηναῖον—βεβαιώσασθαι] It is plain that the first words τόν τε Ἀθηναῖον, &c. depend, in construction, upon ἐνθυμηθήτω preceding, here repeated, but to be taken as standing for its equivalent νομιζέτω. Of τόν τε Ἀθην.—κολάσασθαι the sense is: 'And let him reckon, that the Athenian does not mean to chastise the enmity of the Syracusan [against him],' i. e. it is not the intention of the Athenians to chastise the Syracusans for their enmity against them; meaning, that they are not actuated by the desire of avenging hostility.

But to turn to the other clause of the sentence, τῇ δ' ἐμῇ προφάσει—βούλεσθαι, nothing is there to warrant the suspicion of corruption: and accordingly the conjectures of Reiske and Poppo (in themselves, I apprehend, liable to greater objection than the common reading) might have been spared. It is truly remarked by Goelier, that 'the common reading is not inexplicable, since the speaker means to say, "meum odium prætexens illius (i. e. aliorum Siceliotarum, qui Syracusanos oderunt) amicitiam maximè firmare Atheniensis studet." Nimirum (he adds) qui quem communiter oderunt, eos consentaneum est, eo firmiorem inter se amicitiam colere:' a remark, the truth of which is strongly borne out by the profound dictum of Aristotle, (Ethic. Nicom. lib. viii.) that 'it contributes much to the formation of friendship to either love or hate the same person.' Οὐχ ἧσσον has here the not unfrequent sense of maximè. Of βεβαιώσασθαι the sense is, (as in Polyb. ii. 5, 5, and iii. 31, 3.) 'firmare sibi, in suam rem.' And so Dr. Arnold renders, 'to secure for ever the friendship of him who is their friend now:' a version to which Poppo demurs, with the query, how βεβ. can be made out to mean in perpetuum aliquid sibi firmum reddere? But it is sufficient to observe, that although so much is not expressed, it may be said to be implied in the term βεβ.; since if any thing be made really secure, it will, of course, continue in perpetuity. Not but that the idea of permanence thus implied in that of firmness, would, as far as regards perspicuity, be better expressed, as it is in a passage of the Old Testament, Ps. xl. 12, Sept. ἐμοῦ δὲ, διὰ τὴν ἀκακίαν, ἀντελάβου, καὶ ἐβεβαίωσας με ἐνώπιόν σου εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα (in perpetuum). And so in another passage of the Old Testament, Isaiah xxxii. 17, where it is said that 'the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness shall be quiet, and assurance καὶ φοβεῖται (ἀμφότερα γὰρ τάδε πάσχει τὰ μείζω), διὰ δὲ αὐτὰ τὰς Συρακούσας κακωθῆναι μὲν, ἵνα σωφρονισθῶμεν, βούλεται,—περιγενέσθαι δὲ ἕνεκα τῆς αὐτοῦ ἀσφαλείας, οὐκ ἀνθρωπίνης δυνάμεως βούλησιν ἐλπίζει· οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τε ἅμα τῆς τε ἐπιθυμίας καὶ τῆς τύχης τὸν αὐτὸν ὁμοίως ταμίαν γενέσθαι. 3. καὶ εἰ γνώμῃ ἁμάρτοι, τοῖς αὐτοῦ κακοῖς ὀλοφυρθεὶς τάχ' ἂν ἴσως καὶ τοῖς ἐμοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ποτε βουληθείη αὖθις φθονῆσαι. ἀδύνατον δὲ προεμένῳ, καὶ μὴ

(rather, security) for ever.' Not so easy is it to justify the concluding words in the above version, 'who is their friend now.' But something tantamount to this is here implied, which is well expressed in the version of Portus, 'amicitiam sibi conciliatam.'

2. ἵνα σωφρονισθῶμεν] 'that we may be brought to a better mind,' (as we say, brought to our sober senses,) i. e. may be cured of the folly of ambition and love of rule; brought back to the path of duty. Compare Xen. Cyr. iii. 1, 12, Th. δοκεῖ ἡ τοιαύτη ἥττα σωφρονίζειν — ἀνθρώπους. Eurip. Tr. 350, οὐδέ σ' αἱ τύχαι, τέκνον, Σεσωφρονίκασιν. The Schol., indeed, explains σωφρονισθῶμεν by ταπεινωθῶμεν, as Suidas does σωφρονισθέντας by ταπεινωθέντας: but I have not found this signification in any writer earlier than Plutarch,—and the former interpretation is sufficiently borne out by another passage of our author, supra iii. 65, 3, σωφρονισταὶ ὄντες τῆς γνώμης: and especially by ch. 87, μηθ', ὡς σωφρονισταὶ ἀποτρέπειν πειρᾶσθε.

In the words, a little after, οὐκ ἀνθρωπίνης δυνάμεως βούλησιν ἐλπίζει, there is a phraseology somewhat unusual, and which may be said to be suited to poetry rather than to prose, though it may be tolerated in oratorical prose. Ἐλπίζειν has here, as not unfrequently in our author and in other writers, the sense to expect, look for: and by βούλησιν is denoted, not the act of willing or wishing, but the object thereof, namely, the thing wished for or desired,—votum, which is not unfrequently used for voluntas, and sometimes for the thing wished for, as frui, or potiri, votis. In οὐκ ἀνθρωπίνης δυνάμεως we have a form of expression somewhat recondite to signify 'supra humanas vires,' or what is conveyed by the plainer expression, μακρότερα ἀνθρ. δυν., 'beyond the power of man to accomplish,' in a similar passage of our author supra iii. 39, 3, ἐλπίσαντες μακρότερα μὲν τῆς δυνάμεως, ἐλάσσω δὲ τῆς βουλήσεως. Compare also Lucian, Hermot. 51. i. 792, ἀνέλπιστα ἐλπίζων.

τῆς ἐπιθυμίας] Meaning, the object desired,—namely, that Syracuse should be humbled, and the Siceliot states generally should be saved. Τῆς τύχης is well explained by the Schol. τῆς ἐκβάσεως τῶν πραγμάτων. The term ταμίας just after signifies here disposer, manager. As applied to τῆς ἐπιθυμίας, it denotes regulator or manager of the desire, namely, so as to desire, or not, or so far as he pleases. Compare Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 6, καὶ ὀργῆς ταμίαι. As joined with τύχης, it signifies disposer, one who suo arbitratu sua constituit. And such is the use of the verb ταμιεύεσθαι at ch. 18, 3, οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμῖν ταμιεύεσθαι ἐς ὅσον βουλόμεθα ἄρχειν. So also in Hom. Il. iv. 84, we have, Ζεὺς, ὅστ' ἀνθρώπων ταμίης πολέμοιο τέτυκται. Here, then, it is meant, that 'the same person cannot be at once the arbiter or regulator of his own wishes, (so as to have them in his own power,) and at the same time of the event of the actions resulting from those wishes.' And accordingly with the present we may compare a similar sentiment at iv. 64, 1, μηδὲ μωρίᾳ φιλονεικῶν ἡγεῖσθαι τῆς τε οἰκείας γνώμης ὁμοίως αὐτοκράτωρ εἶναι, καὶ, ἧς οὐκ ἄρχω, τύχης.

3. εἰ γνώμῃ ἁμάρτοι, &c.] Here we have another argument to induce the Camarinæans to co-operate in driving out the Athenians,—namely, that any error in judgment or opinion, as to what shall take place, being biassed by the wish that it should take place, must make them feel that grief for themselves which they would be ready to feel for humbled, but not ruined, Syracuse. In the next words, τάχ' ἂν ἴσως—φθονῆσαι, we have a refined turn, occasionally resorted to by rhetoricians, of which the purpose is to set forth the value of any thing present, by adverting to its absence or loss. And the general sense intended is, that 'they would be glad to recall their present state of safety, even at the expense of again envying the good of their fortunate neighbour.' For, as Poppo points out, in the words τοῖς ἐμοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ποτε αὖθις φθο- τοὺς αὐτοὺς κινδύνους, οὐ περὶ τῶν ὀνομάτων ἀλλὰ περὶ τῶν ἔργων, ἐθελήσαντι προσλαβεῖν· λόγῳ μὲν γὰρ τὴν ἡμετέραν δύναμιν σώζοι ἄν τις, ἔργῳ δὲ τὴν αὐτοῦ σωτηρίαν. 4. καὶ μάλιστα εἰκὸς ἦν ὑμᾶς, ὦ Καμαριναῖοι, ὁμόρους ὄντας, καὶ τὰ δεύτερα κινδυνεύσον-

νῆσαι, there is contained the consequent, 'to see any one again in a prosperous condition.' A similar turn is found in Dionys. Hal. vi. 71, εἰ δὲ παρήσετε τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον, εὕξαισθε ἂν πολλάκις ὅμοιον εὑρεῖν ἕτερον, and in a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke xvii. 22, Ἐλεύσονται ἡμέραι, ὅτε ἐπιθυμήσετε μίαν τῶν ἡμερῶν τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἰδεῖν, καὶ οὐκ ὄψεσθε. The words, just after, ἀδύνατον δέ answer to those in the above passage; καὶ οὐκ ὄψεσθε meaning, that the thing so irrationally desired will not, *can*not be.

But to advert to the clausula τοῖς αὐτοῦ κακοῖς ὀλοφυρθεῖς, here it has been disputed whether a passive or an active sense is intended in ὀλοφυρθεῖς. Portus and Elmsley assign the former; and certainly, as Poppo points out, 'considering that this verb is a deponent middle, as well in other writers as in Thucydides himself infra vii. 30, one would naturally expect in ὀλοφυρθεῖς a passive form, ὀλοφύρεσθαι being reckoned by the grammarians (see Rost Gr. § 143, note 5. Buttm. § 113, note 7. and Kuhn. § 368, 6) among those deponent verbs of which the passive aorist has a passive sense.' Accordingly the import of the words will be, as Portus understands them, 'ob sua ipsius mala deploratus.' Yet thus the dative would have a very unusual force; and, what is more, the sense thus yielded would be any thing but suitable; for, as Bauer queries, by whom are we to understand the individual to be deplored? or what is it to the purpose that others should deplore him? Hence it is better, with the Schol., Acac., Valla, Stephens, Bauer, and indeed expositors in general, to assign the active sense, suis malis dolens. Render, 'suis malis illacrimans,' and compare Ovid, Trist. v. 6, 'Nostra (scil. mala) quibus possint illacrimare feræ.' Now the sense thus arising is as suitable as can be desired; and any petty objection on the score of minute grammatical exactness is surely in a writer like Thucydides (so attached to the unusual and peculiar) any thing but cogent. We have only to suppose that as in δέχομαι and its compounds, though the rule is for the passive aorist to bear a passive sense, yet in Eurip. Heracl. 757, ὑποδεχθεὶς is used for the middle, i. e. taken in an active sense, ἱκέτας ὑποδεχθείς.

οὐ περὶ τῶν ὀνομάτων ἀλλὰ περὶ τῶν ἔργων] Here ὀνομάτων bears the sense, not words or names, but, like tituli in Latin, pretences, as opposed to real deeds: and so titulo and re are opposed in Justin iii. 3. 1. That such is the true meaning meant to be conveyed may be argued from what is said supra ch. 75, of the want of zeal on the part of Camarina; the Camarinæans having only sent 120 horse and 50 archers; a force so paltry as to cover a real neutrality under the titulus of alliance, prepared to desert the Syracusans, if suffering defeat. It was plain, then, that they were no true friends; for, as says Eurip. Orest. 448, Ὄνομα γάρ, ἔργον δ' οὐκ ἔχουσιν οἱ φίλοι, Οἱ μὴ ἐπὶ ταῖσι συμφοραῖς ὄντες φίλοι.

In the next words, λόγῳ γὰρ—σωτηρίαν, the λόγῳ and ἔργῳ bear the sense of the Latin nomine, as used in opp. to re ipsa, and our phrase in word as opposed to in deed. In the twofold application of σώζοι both to δύναμιν and to σωτηρίαν, there may be what the grammarians term a zeugma, i. e. a sort of brachylogia where two or more objects depend on one verb, which can strictly be applied to only one of them. (See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 634, 3, and Kuhn. Gr. § 895, d.) Perhaps, however, σωζ. may, in strictness, apply to σωτηρίαν: and if so, there will be no occasion to suppose the existence of any such zeugma. Certainly, as Bauer says, 'there is no reason why we should not say salutem servare;' especially considering that salus, being used as a nominative to servare, may surely without impropriety follow it as an accusative. In fact, Cicero himself, in his Epist. Famil. xi. 7, has, 'conservare salutem populi Romani.'

4. τὰ δεύτερα κινδυνεύσοντας] Of this use (not a little rare) of τὰ δεύτ. for τὸ δεύτερον, examples are found elsewhere in Soph. Œd. Tyr. 282, τὰ δεύτερ' ἐκ τῶνδ' ἂν λέγοιμ', and Lucian ii. 205, τὰ δεύτερα μετὰ τὸν Θεὸν τιμώμεθα. That it is not a mere Atticism appears from its being found in Hom. Il. xxiii. 537, Ἀλλ' ἄγε δὴ οἱ δῶμεν ἀέθλιον, ὡς ἐπιεικὲς, Δεύτερ', where Heyne so stumbles at the expression as to be ready to reject the whole verse as spurious: but the difficulty which seems to the learned editor so formidable will at once vanish if the word ἀέθλιον, τας, προορᾶσθαι αὐτὰ, καὶ μὴ μαλακῶς, ὥσπερ νῦν, ξυμμαχεῖν, αὐτοὺς δὲ πρὸς ἡμᾶς μᾶλλον ἰόντας, ἅπερ, εἰ ἐς τὴν Καμαριναίαν πρῶτον ἀφίκοντο οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, δεόμενοι ἂν ἐπεκαλεῖσθε, ταῦτα ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου καὶ νῦν παρακελευομένους, ὅπως μηδὲν ἐνδώσομεν, φαίνεσθαι. ἀλλ' οὔθ' ὑμεῖς νῦν γέ πω, οὔθ' οἱ ἄλλοι, ἐπὶ ταῦτα ὥρμησθε. LXXIX. Δεινὰ δὲ ἴσως τὸ δίκαιον πρός τε ἡμᾶς καὶ πρὸς τοὺς ἐπιόντας θεραπεύσετε, λέγοντες ξυμμαχίαν εἶναι ὑμῖν πρὸς Ἀθηναίους· ἦν γε οὐκ ἐπὶ τοῖς φίλοις ἐποιήσασθε, τῶν δὲ ἐχθρῶν ἧν before occurring, be but mentally repeated, by which the sense will be, as conveyed in a free version, 'But come let us give him, as is right, a reward, a second-rate [reward];' literally, one in the second place: δεύτερα being used for δευτερεῖα in Hdot. i. 32, εὐδαιμονίης δευτερεῖα ἔνεμε τούτοισι, or for τὰ δεύτερα in another passage of Herodot. viii. 104, φερόμενον—τὰ δεύτερα. But most of all to the present purpose is the passage of Lucian above cited, where the expression τὰ δεύτερα τιμᾶσθαι signifies, 'to be honoured with the second rate [of honours],' similarly as is in Thucydides iii. 39, 2, we have τιμώμενος ἐς τὰ πρῶτα, or, simply, 'in the next degree [after the God].' Here, however, τὰ δεύτ. means the second or next in place or account, the next turn. And accordingly the exact sense intended to be conveyed by this peculiar expression, κινδυνεύειν τὰ δεύτερα, is, 'to take the next turn of danger,' as said of those whose turn of danger comes next. Thus the Camarinæans are here spoken of as neighbours, whose turn of danger will come next to the Syracusans: and, in point of fact, Camarina was the very next Grecian city to Syracuse in situation: and hence, by the term ὁμόρους, which signifies next-door neighbour, is meant to be suggested the truth so happily expressed in the well-known lines of Horace: 'ecquid Ad te post paulo ventura pericula sentis? Nam tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet.'

προορᾶσθαι αὐτὰ] 'to forecast for these matters.' Compare i. 17, τὸ ἐφ' ἑαυτῶν προορ. Μαλακῶς ξυμμαχεῖν, i. e. 'to render aid remissly, or faintly;' μαλ. standing for ἀπροθύμως. So Plut. t. vi. 274, 2, μαλακῶς καὶ ἀπροθύμως ἔχειν πρὸς τὰ καλά. Aristot. Rhet. i. 10, μαλακὸς περὶ τὰ ῥάθυμα. And so in another passage of our author, viii. 50, we have, μαλακωτέρως ἀνθήπτετο, meaning what is expressed at viii. 29, by μαλακὸς ἦν περὶ τοῦ μισθοῦ. And so supra ii. 18, we have the use of μαλακῶς for ἀπρόθυμως. Finally, this use of μαλακὸς has an exact parallel in that of mollis in Latin.

CH. LXXIX. The speaker now proceeds to anticipate the objection that might be made, as regarded their treaty with Athens, which demanded at least neutrality: and he shows that it would be alike unjust and impolitic.

1. τὸ δίκαιον πρός τε ἡμᾶς—θεραπεύσετε] The term θεραπεύω has here a sense far from usual, but which has an exact parallel in the Latin colere justitiam, and our phrase to cultivate, i. e. practise, justice or virtue: except that in the present case there is (as the Scholiast well points out) implied in the sarcastic use of the expression, that this cultivation of justice will be a mere pretence to cloak their cowardice under a show of equity and impartiality. Moreover, in the expression 'what is just to either party,' is implied the rendering no aid to either against the other, what may emphatically be called neutrality.

ἦν γε οὐκ ἐπὶ τοῖς φίλοις, &c.] This is one of those cases (of no rare occurrence in our author, and indeed found more or less in the best writers of all ages) in which the pron. relative is employed as serving to denote purpose, result, cause, &c., in short, any thing that would more properly be expressed by a conjunction, or a conjunction and pronoun demonstrative. Thus ἦν γε—ἐποιήσασθε is equivalent to καίπερ—ταύτην, 'though ye made it:' and similar is the use of the relative ὃς in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1461, 14. The force of the ἐπὶ in ἐπὶ τοῖς φίλοις ἐποιήσ. is, not that conveyed by the usual rendering 'adversus amicos,' 'against your friends,' but rather, what is required by the use of the dative, 'to the injury of your friends;' a signification of ἐπὶ also found supra iii. 93, 2, ὧν ἐπὶ τῇ γῇ ἐκτίζετο, and i. 142. v. 51. Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 19, μηχανὰς ἐπὶ τοῖς μικροῖς θηρίοις ἐμηχάνω. Comp. also Hdot. iv. 154, πᾶν (scil. κακὸν) ἐπ' αὐτῇ μηχανωμένη, and vi. 88, τὸ πᾶν μηχανήσασθαι ἐπ' Αἰγινήτῃσι. In short, these several τις ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἴῃ, καὶ τοῖς γε Ἀθηναίοις βοηθεῖν, ὅταν ὑπ' ἄλλων, καὶ μὴ αὐτοί, ὥσπερ νῦν, τοὺς πέλας ἀδικῶσιν· ἐπεὶ οὐδ' οἱ Ῥηγῖνοι, ὄντες Χαλκιδῆς, Χαλκιδέας ὄντας Λεοντίνους ἐθέλουσι ξυγκατοικίζειν. 2. καὶ δεινόν, εἰ ἐκεῖνοι μέν, τὸ ἔργον τοῦ καλοῦ δικαιώματος ὑποπτεύοντες, ἀλόγως σωφρονοῦσιν, ὑμεῖς δ' εὐλόγῳ προφάσει τοὺς μὲν φύσει πολεμίους βούλεσθε ὠφελεῖν, τοὺς δὲ ἔτι μᾶλλον φύσει passages are to be regarded as falling under that class of passages in which ἐπί is employed with the dative, by what Kuhner, Gr. § 634, calls the use causal, or that by which the preposition denotes the object or purpose of any action considered as the motive thereof, (mostly with verbs which do not imply motion, for with them the accusative is commonly used,) a purpose generally hostile, and directed to the harm of another.

Of the words following, τῶν δὲ ἐχθρῶν ἦν τις ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἴῃ, the construction is, ἦν δέ, i. e. ἀλλὰ [ἐποιήσασθε αὐτὴν] ἤν τις τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἴῃ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς. Τοὺς πέλας, for τοὺς ἄλλους. See note on i. 32.

The words ἐπεὶ οὐδὲ — ξυγκατοικίζειν are wrongly thrown by Bauer, Poppo, and Dr. Arnold, to the next section. They plainly belong to the present; being meant to introduce a sort of under-reason why the Camarinæans should not aid the Athenians now attacking others; namely, that not even the Rhegines, though themselves Chalcidians, had aided their hostile attacks on others, to, forsooth, restore the Leontines. The ἐπεὶ may thus be rendered siquidem, etenim; and this regarded as one of those cases (treated on by Hoogev. de Part. p. 214, who refers to Aristoph. Ran. 673) in which the thing whereto the causative ἐπεὶ applies, 'latet in contextu.'

2. καὶ δεινὸν, εἰ ἐκεῖνοι — διαφθεῖραι] This is meant to further press the argument against the Camarinæans aiding the Athenians,—and that deduced from the case of the Rhegines. The general cast of thought is very similar to that at i. 35, 2, καὶ δεινὸν, εἰ τοῖσδε—ἡμᾶς δὲ, &c., but there are two or three particular forms of expression to which it is proper to advert: 1. τὸ ἔργον τοῦ καλοῦ δικαιώματος ὑποπτεύοντες, where by τὸ ἔργον is meant, as Bauer explains, the work or thing itself, namely, the coming to Sicily to re-instate the Leontines; and τὸ καλὸν δικαίωμα signifies, as Poppo explains it, speciosa æquitatis asseveratio: and, again, ὑποπτεύοντες τὸ ἔργον, as Bauer explains, suspicate frandem hoc obtentu tegi, literally, 'suspecting the deed, or action, of (i. e. connected with) this fair show or pretence of equity:' a view of the sense borne out by what is said at ch. 80, 2, (where the words ἔργον and δικαίωμα are similarly opposed,) οὐ γὰρ ἔργῳ ἴσον, ὥσπερ τῷ δικαιώματι, ἐστιν.

Of the expression following, ἀλόγως σωφρονοῦσιν, the sense is, 'are wise without any [seeming good] reason,' ἀλόγως being used as ἄλογον at i. 32. In order, however, to perceive the exact import of the term, it is proper to carefully compare the context, and in particular the antithetical phrase just after, εὐλόγῳ προφάσει, from which it appears that ἀλόγως here signifies, 'devoid of any reasonable pretext.' Σωφρονοῦσι Bauer explains to mean, 'cautè agunt utut, ἄνευ λόγου, i. e. carentes prætextu et excusatione [qua amoliantur a se Atheniensium subdolam postulationem].' And such is the view of the sense taken by Haack and Goeller, of whom the latter explains the expression ἀλόγως σωφρονεῖν to mean, 'cautè agere, ita tamen ut rationem [agendi] tuam defendere non possis.' Arnold proposes two modes of rendering the expression: 1. 'they are wise even against what is natural;' 2. 'they are wise without reason.' Of these the former can by no means be defended, since the word ἀλόγως is not susceptible of any such signification. As to the latter, it proceeds on much the same view of the sense as that adopted, except as regards the term σωφρ., which here must be supposed to mean (as often) not so much, 'to be wise,' as 'to be prudent or discreet.' Suffice it to say, that the true purpose of the words seems to be to express that 'in acting thus discreetly, what they did was devoid of that excuse which the contrary course would have carried with it,' because of their close affinity to the Leontines; or, that so acting, they acted without that reason which might have been assigned for the opposite course. Such is the use of ἀλόγως at ch. 84, 3, ἀλόγως—ἐλευθεροῦν, and v. 104, ἀλόγως θρασύνεσθαι, and viii. 27, ἀλόγως διακινδυνεύειν, and of the adjective ἄλογος at i. 32, ἐπιτήδευμα—ἄλογον, and v. 105, fin. τῆς ἀλόγου σωτηρίας, where ἀλ. is equivalent to ἢ ἄνευ λόγου ἐστὶ, or ἢ λόγον οὐκ ἔχει, 'which ξυγγενεῖς μετὰ τῶν ἐχθίστων διαφθεῖραι. ἀλλ' οὐ δίκαιον· ἀμύνειν δέ. 3. καὶ μὴ † φοβεῖσθαι τὴν παρασκευὴν αὐτῶν· οὐ γὰρ ἢν ἡμεῖς ξυστῶμεν πάντες δεινή ἐστιν, ἀλλ', ἢν (ὅπερ οὗτοι σπεύδουσι) τἀναντία διαστῶμεν· ἐπεὶ οὐδὲ πρὸς ἡμᾶς μόνους ἐλθόντες, καὶ μάχῃ περιγενόμενοι, ἔπραξαν ἃ ἠβούλοντο, ἀπῆλθον δὲ διὰ τάχους.

LXXX. Ὥστε οὐκ, ἀθρόους γε ὄντας, εἰκὸς ἀθυμεῖν, ἰέναι δὲ ἐς τὴν ξυμμαχίαν προθυμότερον· ἄλλως τε καὶ ἀπὸ Πελοποννήσου παρεσομένης ὠφελείας, οἳ τῶνδε κρείσσους εἰσὶ τὸ παράπαν τὰ πολέμια· καὶ μὴ ἐκείνην τὴν προμήθειαν δοκεῖν τῳ ἡμῖν μὲν ἴσην has no reason to be offered why it should be expected.' So also in Eurip. Prot. frag. vi. we have, ἐλπίδες ἄλογοι, and in Ælian V. H. ii. 8, 3, ἀλόγου ἐλπίδος. In the antithetic clause ὑμεῖς δὲ—διαφθεῖραι the point of antithesis is εὐλόγῳ, as opposed to ἀλόγως. No correspondent point is there to σωφρονοῦσι, as would have been the case if instead of τοὺς μὲν—διαφθεῖραι our author had written ἀφρονεῖ τε κακῶς φρονεῖτε. But instead of this, he chose to express in what respects they were acting foolishly, with however reasonable a pretext: and the sense of the words as they stand may be laid down as follows: 'ye are disposed to aid (ὠφ. bearing here the sense juvare, adjuvare, as it does also in Xen. Anab. v. 1, 7, ὅπως ὠφελοῦντες οἱ ξύμμαχοι καὶ ὠφελῶνται. And such is the sense which the noun ὠφέλεια bears not unfrequently in Thucydides) those who are by nature your enemies, (viz. as being of a different race, Ionians,) and to destroy in conjunction with their bitterest foes those who are yet more by nature your kinsmen.'

ἀλλ' οὐ δίκαιον — παρασκευήν] The punctuation which I have adopted seems called for by the elliptical nature of the position, the sense of which, expressed in full, is, 'But this were not just; just it would be for you to render us assistance, and not to fear their force, or armament.' Ἀμύνειν cannot mean, as it is interpreted by Hobbes, 'to fight with'—a sense which were little suitable—but, 'to render us aid,' the word ἡμῖν being understood. At μὴ φοβεῖσθαι, Bauer suggests, the word δίκαιον is to be repeated, and that, as understood in a modified sense, for εἰκός. Yet no little harshness is incurred in thus repeating again a word which has already been repeated; and the sentiment conveyed is any thing but forcible; not to mention that thus the expectation to courageous resistance in opposition to the δειλία or faintheartedness, a little before spoken of, is not made sufficiently prominent; and, moreover, not μὴ, but οὐ would be required. Hence I venture, with some confidence, to propose that, for φοβεῖσθαι, should be read φοβεῖσθε; reforming the punctuation as follows: ἐχθ. διαφθεῖραι. ἀλλ' οὐ δίκαιον· ἀμύνειν δέ. Καὶ μὴ φοβεῖσθαι τὴν παρασκευὴν αὐτῶν. This emendation is, I apprehend, placed beyond doubt by a kindred passage at ch. 17, 1, which was formerly read as follows: καὶ ὀργῇ πίστιν παρασχομένη, ἔπεισε καὶ νῦν μὴ πεφοβῆσθαι αὐτὴν, where, in my smaller edition, I received into the text the conjecture of Reiske and Bekker, ὀρ. π. παρασχομένη, ἔπεισε. Καὶ νῦν μὴ πεφοβῆσθε αὐτὴν: a conjecture subsequently adopted by Haack and Dr. Arnold. In either passage the copyists may have fallen into error, from the great similarity in MS. abbreviations of the two terminations σθαι and σθε.

The next words, οὐ γὰρ ἢν ἡμεῖς ξυστῶμεν, &c. serve to show why they ought not to be afraid. Render, 'for if we unite together, that will not be formidable; but [only] if, on the contrary, we [which they strive to bring about] (see Herodot. i. 38) split into parties.' Here, then, we have the first reason; namely, that there is no cause for fear, if they do but hold all together. In the next words, ἐπεὶ οὐδὲ, &c. we have the second reason; which is, that even when they attacked the Syracusans alone, and came off victors, they did not do what they wished, (i. e. besiege Syracuse,) but went off in haste. Ἐπεὶ has here the same sense as at § 1, ἐπεὶ οὐδ' οἱ Ῥηγῖνοι, where see note.

CH. LXXX. 1. ὥστε οὐκ — πολέμια] These words ought to have been thrown to the former chapter, and chap. 80 should have commenced at καὶ μὴ ἐκείνην; the scope of the passage being to deduce the inference from the sentence immediately preceding. Render, 'accordingly, it is not fitting for us [if at least all together] to be afraid, but [it is fitting] for us to enter into alliance with the more zeal and alacrity.' By οὐκ εἰκὸς (which bears here, as at iii. 10, the sense, 'non consentaneum est') it is meant that no reasonable ground is there for being discouraged, but rather to, &c. The οἷ is to be referred to Πελοποννήσιοι inherent in Πελοποννήσον. (See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 434, 1, 6.)

καὶ μὴ ἐκείνην τὴν προμήθειαν δοκεῖν] The construction here depends on οὐκ εἰκὸς, to be repeated from the preceding context. I have here, with Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, adopted the correction of Duker, τῳ for τῷ, this being absolutely required by propriety, and, besides, being borne out by the ἐοκείτω of the Scholiast, having, as I find, the support of the Cod. Clar. I have also followed Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing, from many MSS. (to which add Mus. Br.) instead of vulg. προθυμίαν, which is quite indefensible, προμήθειαν. How often the two words are confounded by the copyists it is scarcely necessary to observe. The article τὴν (at which Bauer stumbles) has here no little force, q. d. 'this discretion of yours.' Render, 'Nor ought it to seem to any one, that this prudent circumspection of yours is on the one hand fair to us, and on the other safe to you,'—this aiding, forsooth, of neither party, and being allies of both.

Of τῷ δικαιώματι, as opp. to ἔργῳ a little after, the sense is, in allegatione, i. e. speciosa asseveratione æquitatis, meaning, a justificatory plea, as supra ch. 79, and v. 97. The γὰρ in εἰ γὰρ, &c. is explanatory, as in a passage of Xenophon, cited by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 615, fin. In such a case, the first γὰρ serves to introduce the cause; the second, the illustration of the cause, by showing its nature, grounds, &c. Render, 'since if, by your not having given succour, the suffering party shall be ruined.'

In the next words, the antithesis in ὅ τε παθὼν and ὁ κρατῶν is remarkable; and here ὁ παθὼν does not stand, as the Scholiast takes it, for ὁ κακῶς παθὼν, nor does ὁ παθὼν mean, 'qui oppugnatus fuerit,' as Portus renders; nor, strictly speaking, 'qui victus fuerit,' as Bauer. But there is here an ellipsis of τι, the phrase being the same with παθεῖν τι occurring in Herodot. viii. 21, ἦν τι πάθῃ scil. κακὸν or ἀνήκεστον. Thus its sense is, 'suffer utter defeat,' equivalent to σφαλῆναι: and the general meaning of the words is, 'if the party that is utterly defeated comes to ruin by you, and if the victorious party shall obtain the superiority through you,' &c. Of this phrase (which is far from usual) examples are found in Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 2. ii. 1, 2. iv. 4, 5. And in Hier. ii. 13, we have the complete phrase, ἄν τι πάθωσι κακὸν, ἡττηθέντες. The peculiarity in the present instance is, that τι as well as κακὸν or ἀνήκεστον is omitted; of which I have noted certain examples elsewhere; for at vii. 75, 4, not τι but μεῖζω is understood; though, I suspect, one exists in Herodot. viii. 21, τῷ προσετέτακτο, εἰ παλήσειε ὁ ναυτικὸς στρατὸς, σημαίνειν τοῖσι ἐν Θερμ. ἐοῦσι, where παλήσειε, the reading of almost every MS., is confessedly corrupt, and the conjecture proposed by Portus, Reiske, and Valcken., wholly inadmissible. The only conjecture deserving of attention is that characterized by Valcken. as minimè absurda, namely, εἴ τι παθήσειε, which being admitted, the present will fall under the same class with the passages of Xen. above noted, forming. as Valcken. remarks, one of those euphemisms of which the purpose is to save the mention of the sad consequences of defeat in war. The only objection that exists to the above conjecture is, that no probable reason can be alleged for the circumstance of the τι having been lost in all the MSS.: but the truth is, there is, as appears from the passage of Thucydides under consideration, no absolute need of the τι: and I doubt not that Herodotus wrote, for the words as they now stand, τῷ προσετέτακτο, εἰ παθήσειε ὁ ναυτικὸς στρατὸς, &c. As to the objection of Valcken., forma quidem paulo insolentior, it carries little weight in a case like the present, where παθήσειε is so strongly borne out by the internal evidence to its truth existing in the circumstance that the two letters, λ and θ, are, from being so very similar, continually confounded: and the two words would be the more likely to be mistaken, from the circumstance of the one being of far less usual occurrence than the other.

τί ἄλλο ἢ] See note at iii. 85. At σωθῆναι, a little after, supply ὥστε. The construction in the words following, ἐκώ-

ἠμύνατε σωθῆναι, τοὺς δὲ οὐκ ἐκωλύσατε κακοὺς γενέσθαι; 2. καίτοι κάλλιον τοῖς ἀδικουμένοις, καὶ ἅμα ξυγγενέσι, προσθεμένους τήν τε κοινὴν ὠφέλειαν τῇ Σικελίᾳ φυλάξαι, καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, φίλους δὴ ὄντας, μὴ ἐᾶσαι ἁμαρτεῖν. 3. ξυνελόντες τε λέγομεν οἱ Συρακόσιοι, ἐκδιδύσκειν μὲν οὐδὲν ἔργον εἶναι σαφῶς, οὔτε ὑμᾶς οὔτε τοὺς ἄλλους, περὶ ὧν αὐτοὶ οὐδὲν χεῖρον γιγνώσκετε· δεόμεθα δὲ—καὶ μαρτυρόμεθα ἅμα, εἰ μὴ πείσομεν—ὅτι ἐπιβουλευόμεθα μὲν ὑπὸ Ἰώνων ἀεὶ πολεμίων, προδιδόμεθα δὲ ὑπὸ ὑμῶν Δωριῆς Δωριέων. καὶ, εἰ καταστρέψονται ἡμᾶς Ἀθηναῖοι, ταῖς μὲν ὑμετέραις γνώμαις κρατήσουσι, τῷ δ' αὐτῶν ὀνόματι τιμηθήσονται, καὶ τῆς νίκης οὐκ ἄλλον τινὰ ἆθλον, ἢ τὸν τὴν νίκην παρασχόντα, λήψονται· καὶ, εἰ αὖ ἡμεῖς περιεσόμεθα, τῆς αἰτίας τῶν κινδύνων οἱ αὐτοὶ τὴν τιμωρίαν ὑφέξετε. 4. σκοπεῖτε οὖν, καὶ αἱρεῖσθε ἤδη ἢ τὴν αὐτίκα ἀκινδύνως δουλείαν, λύσατε κακοὺς γενέσθαι, (which is that of infin. without the article,) is found also supra ch. 70, where we have, κωλῦσαι αὐτοὺς, 'to prevent their escaping.' Another example, too, occurs in Xenoph. Cyr. vi. 2, 7.

2. καίτοι κάλλιον τοῖς ἀδικουμένοις, &c.] 'And yet (or, whereas) it were more honourable to you, by joining the wronged party,' lit. 'adding your aid to them.' So supra v. 62, 1. καὶ προσέθεντο οἱ Ἀργεῖοι —τοῖς Μαντινεῦσι.

τήν τε κοινὴν ὠφέλειαν τῇ Σικελίᾳ φυλάξαι] Render, 'to defend and preserve to Sicily the common weal.'

3. Now comes the ἐπίλογοι, or conclusion of the speech, commencing with what may be called briefly giving the gist of the whole argument; and that introduced by earnest entreaty and strong protestation, followed up by warning as to the consequences of their present determination.

οὐδὲν ἔργον εἶναι] for οὐ χρείαν εἶναι, οὐδὲν ὄφελος, 'no use,' i. e. nothing to be gained by doing it. So Eurip. Hipp. 911, σιωπῶν οὐδὲν ἔργον εἶναι. Aristoph. Plut. 1154, ἔργον οὐδέν ἐστι σ. This use of the term ἔργον has its origin in that peculiar use, (found in Demosth. 819, 2, and of no unfrequent occurrence elsewhere,) by which it denotes the profit or interest made by money put out in trade, or what is obtained by labour, as in Xen. de Vectig. iv. 44.

δεόμεθα δὲ—Δωριέων] Constr. δεόμεθα δὲ, καὶ, εἰ μὴ πείσομεν, μαρτυρόμεθα. At δεόμεθα Abresch supplies from the context πεισθῆναι; Bauer, μὴ ἐπιβουλεύεσθαι. But there is no occasion to supply either word; since δεόμεθα may better be taken absolutely, in the sense, 'we entreat you,' 'we use entreaty.' And so the term is used in Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 4, ἥδιον μὲν ἔρχῃ πρὸς τοὺς θεοὺς δεησόμενος, and παρακαλεῖν in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Cor. iv. 13, βλασφημούμενοι παρακαλοῦμεν. Thus used as a term of deprecation, it possesses a certain pathos, (similar to that observable in another passage, supra iii. 59, 2, ἐπισκήπτομεν—ἱκέται ὄντες, &c.) which is enhanced by the added words, καὶ μαρτυρόμεθα ἅμα, 'and withal we protest,' i. e. call on gods and men to witness that,' &c. Comp. Plut. de Superst., ch. 8, μαρτυρομένων, καὶ βοώντων, ὅτι, &c. I have placed no comma after ὑμῶν, because the words Δωριῆς Δωριέων are in apposition with ἡμεῖς and ὑμῶν.

I have not, with Poppo and Dr. Arnold, commenced a new section at καὶ εἰ, because the words καὶ εἰ—ὑφέξετε form part of, i. e. the second part of, the protestation, —namely, that which respects the future, as ὅτι ἐπιβουλευόμεθα—Δωριέων preceding did the present. At καὶ εἰ the ὅτι just before is to be repeated, thus: καὶ ὅτι, εἰ. Ταῖς ὑμετέραις γνώμαις. Render, 'your resolves,' i. e. the course you now determine on. Τῷ δ' αὐτῶν ὀνόματι, 'in their own person,' or character; meaning, that they will themselves have it, and not those by whom they have gained the victory.

οὐκ ἄλλον τινὰ ἆθλον] Here ἆθλον is, as Goeller points out, of the neuter gender, and is not to be joined with ἄλλον τινὰ, the sense being, 'non alium quemque præmium (or, pro præmio) accipient.'

τῆς αἰτίας τῶν κινδύνων, &c.] Meaning, 'you will have to suffer the penalty of being the cause of our danger,' namely, by keeping aloof and not helping them.

4. σκοπεῖτε οὖν—ξιαφυγεῖν] The sense is well expressed by the Scholiast, as folἢ κἂν, περιγενόμενοι μεθ' ἡμῶν, τούσδε τε μὴ αἰσχρῶς δεσπότας λαβεῖν, καὶ τὴν πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἔχθραν, μὴ ἂν βραχεῖαν γενομένην, διαφυγεῖν."

LXXXI. Τοιαῦτα μὲν ὁ Ἑρμοκράτης εἶπεν· ὁ δ' Εὔφημος, ὁ τῶν Ἀθηναίων πρεσβευτὴς, μετ' αὐτὸν τοιάδε.

LXXXII. "Ἀφικόμεθα μὲν ἐπὶ τῆς πρότερον οὔσης ξυμμαχίας ἀνανεώσει· τοῦ δὲ Συρακοσίου καθαψαμένου, ἀνάγκη καὶ περὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς εἰπεῖν, ὡς εἰκότως ἔχομεν. 2. τὸ μὲν οὖν μέγιστον μαρτύριον αὐτὸς εἶπεν, ὅτι οἱ Ἴωνες ἀεί ποτε πολέμιοι τοῖς Δωριεῦσίν εἰσιν. ἔχει δὲ καὶ οὕτως· ἡμεῖς γὰρ Ἴωνες ὄντες Πελοποννησίοις Δωριεῦσι, καὶ πλείοσιν οὖσι καὶ παροικοῦσιν, ἐσκεψάμεθα ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ἥκιστ' ἂν † αὐτῶν ὑπακουσόμεθα· καὶ, μετὰ τὰ Μηδικὰ ναῦς κτησάlows: Σκεψάμενοι οὖν ἔλεσθε ἢ εὐθὺς δουλεύειν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις χωρὶς κινδύνων, ἢ μεθ' ἡμῶν στάντες καὶ κρατήσαντες, μήτε ὑπ' ἐκείνων ἀτίμως δουλωθῆναι, τήν τε πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἔχθραν ἐκφυγεῖν, μὴ ἂν μικρὰν γενομένην, εἰ Ἀθηναίοις συμμαχήσετε. In τὴν αὐτίκα ἀκινδύνως δουλείαν Poppo notices the uncommonness of an adverb of quality being used for its cognate adjective; which is by no means unusual in adverbs of place and time, and inconsiderable particles. He compares the ὁ ἀληθῶς οὐρανὸς καὶ τὸ ἀληθῶς φῶς in Plato Phæd. ch. 58. The words αἱρεῖσθε κἂν μὴ λαβεῖν are to be taken together. Render, 'choose even,' or, 'even choose the chance (for that is the force of the καί) of not having the Athenians for your masters.' The words σκοπεῖτε καὶ αἱρεῖσθε ἤδη, 'take now your choice,' have considerable force; as urging one or other of two alternatives. Thus in a passage of the Old Testament, Josh. xxiv. 15, 'Choose ye this day whom ye will serve.' Compare also 1 Kings xviii. 21.

CH. LXXXII. Euphemus commences his justificatory address by urging, that although the Athenians might defend the ambition laid to their charge on the ground of justice, yet it were enough to plead for it on the score of its necessity; self-defence being the motive of their acquiring dominion in Greece, and the same cause rendering it needful for them to maintain their power, both there and in Sicily.

1. ἀφικόμεθα μέν, &c.] Section 1 contains the proem of the speech; which is well imagined, forming a sort of captatio benevolentiæ, or excuse for any imperfection in the address, on the ground of its being wholly unpremeditated and unprepared for; q. d. 'We came not here to make a speech, but for important state-business; nevertheless, as a speech has been made by the Syracusan, in which we have been assailed with invective as holding rule unjustly, we are compelled to address you, in order to vindicate the justice of our dominion.' Καθάπτεσθαι is used as at ch. 16, and in Herodot. vi. 69. Hom. Od. ii. 240, καθαπτόμενοι ἐπέεσσιν: and such is the use occasionally of tangere in Latin; as Terent. Eun. iii. 1, 30, 'Rhodium tetigerim.'

2. τὸ μὲν οὖν—εἰσιν] A condensed form of expression, of which the full sense is: 'Now the greatest testimony [in proof of this position] he has himself mentioned,—namely, that the Ionians are always at hostilities with the Dorians;' meaning, in other words, 'the fact in question affords the strongest evidence to the position, that we hold the dominion we have on just grounds.' The next words ἔχει δὲ καὶ οὕτως are merely meant to show how the proof can be deduced from the fact; hence their sense cannot be that expressed in the versions of Hobbes, Smith, Levêque, Gail, and others, 'and the fact is true;' for that fact no one disputed. The true sense is, 'now the case stands thus.' We have here, as Bauer points out, a transposition for καὶ ἔχει δὲ οὕτω; and also the not unfrequent ellipsis of πρᾶγμα. See note on iv. 94, 4, ὡς αὐτοῖς διάκειται, scil. τὰ πράγματα, where, I suspect, should be read ὡς αὐτοῖς δὴ (forsooth, as in vi. 80, 1) κεῖται, 'how the case stands with them.' So Xen. An. vii. 3, 17, ἄμεινον ὑμῖν κεῖσεται, scil. τὰ πράγματα.

ἥκιστ' ἂν] I have followed Krueger and Poppo in receiving the above reading, partly because I am enabled to adduce, in addition to the testimony already alleged in its favour, that of two good MSS. (the Clarend. primâ manu, and Cantabr.) but μενοι, τῆς μὲν Λακεδαιμονίων ἀρχῆς καὶ ἡγεμονίας ἀπηλλάγημεν, οὐδὲν προσῆκον μᾶλλόν τι ἐκείνους ἡμῖν, ἢ καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐκείνοις, ἐπιτάσσειν, πλὴν καθ' ὅσον ἐν τῷ παρόντι μεῖζον ἴσχυον· αὐτοὶ δὲ τῶν ὑπὸ βασιλεῖ πρότερον ὄντων ἡγεμόνες καταστάντες οἰκοῦμεν, νομίσαντες ἥκιστ' ἂν ὑπὸ Πελοποννησίοις οὕτως εἶναι, δύναμιν ἔχοντες ᾗ ἀμυνούμεθα, καὶ, ἐς τὸ ἀκριβὲς εἰπεῖν, οὐδὲ ἀδίκως καταστρεψάμενοι chiefly from its being so strongly supported by internal evidence, as existing in the greater probability that ἥκιστ' ἄν would be mistaken by the scribes for ἥκιστα, than ἥκιστα for ἥκιστ' ἄν. Moreover, although the use of ἄν with the indic. fut. is rare in Attic phraseology, yet for its existence it is sufficient to refer to Matth. Gr. § 598, 2. Kühn. Gr. § 424, and Poppo, Proleg. i. 1. p. 160. Finally, if the propriety of this use of ἄν depends on the condition implied in the future being expressed, that is precisely the case here, the sense being, 'how we should least be subject to them.'

It remains, however, to advert to a certain difficulty still attaching to the sentence, and existing whether the one or other of the above readings be adopted,—namely, in the pronoun αὐτῶν being repeated after the subject, which had preceded at Πελοποννησίοις, with which Goeller compares, as instances of the same, iv. 93, τῷ Ἰπφ. ὄντι—ὡς αὐτῷ ἠγγέλθη, &c. i. 114, καὶ ἐς αὐτὴν, διαβεβηκότος ἤδη Περικλέους στρατιᾷ Ἀθ. ἠγγέλθη αὐτῷ: and true it is, that, as Goeller points out, ὑπακούειν, like πειθεσθαι, admits of either construction, a genitive or a dative. But the question is, why was the genitive of the pronoun here added? It was, Dr. Arnold says, 'for the purpose of making more clear what is the object to which the verb ὑπακουσ. refers.' 'When the sentence (continues he) was begun, the dative Πελοποννησίοις was intended to be made dependent on some word similar in sense to ὑπακουσόμεθα, and it is only owing to the length of the sentence that the pronoun αὐτῶν was inserted.' Yet this is insufficient to explain one difficulty; which is, that if Thucyd. wished to make more prominent the object of the verb ὑπακουσόμεθα, why did he not write αὐτοῖς, rather than introduce a variation of construction which was only calculated to obscure the sense? That would surely argue a negligence of composition, such as it would be difficult on any principle to justify. Again, as to what our author intended, with this we have nothing to do, because on this we are surely not enabled to pronounce. Upon the whole, I cannot but suspect that a corruption here exists; and that resting on the words ἂν αὐτῶν, for which I have little doubt was originally written, what Mr. G. Burges has very ably conjectured to be the true reading, ἥκιστα πάντων. According to this, the construction will be at once cleared, and the sense strengthened. The construction with the dative, though less frequent, is yet found in the earlier writers. See supra v. 98, and Xen. Cyr. ii. 4, 5. iii. 3, 8. Of the phrase ἥκιστα πάντων (answering to which is minimè gentium in Latin) examples occur in Xen. Cyr. viii. 4, 9, ἢ οὐχ ἡδομένως πράττοντά με κατέγνως; Τοῦτο δὴ πάντων ἥκιστα, ἔφη ὁ Κῦρος. Aristoph. Plut. 440, Οὐ παραμένεις; Ἥκιστα πάντων. Plato, p. 130, 380, and 792. Demosth. de Cor. οὐδεὶς ἀγνοεῖ, καὶ πάντων ἥκιστα σύ. Lucian de Calumn. cited by Steph. Thes. p. 4114, ὡς μειρακιῶδες καὶ ταπεινὸν, καὶ, πάντων οὐχ ἥκιστα, ἄδικον: for so the passage should be pointed; whence may be emended a passage of Xen. Mem. iii. 4, 11, οὐχ ἥκιστα δὲ τούτων, ἐὰν ἀπαράσκευος ᾖ, φυλάξεται συνάπτειν μάχην, where, for τούτων, which makes nonsense, and cannot be (what the editors account it) redundant, read πάντων. How easily there πάντων might by mistake be altered to τούτων, as in the passage of our author it might pass into ν αὐτῶν, is obvious.

οὐδὲν προσῆκον μᾶλλόν τι] 'there being no more cause,' (as iii. 40. iv. 95. vi. 84.) or, 'it being no more proper,' according to that use by which προσῆκον bears in Demosth. p. 832, 59, the sense quum decet. On this use of accusatives absolute in the place of participles of impersonal verbs, (such as ἐξὸν, ἐνὸν, δέον, παρὸν, δοκοῦν, δόξαν, &c.) see Jelf's Kühn. Gr. § 700.

καταστάντες οἰκοῦμεν] for καταστάντες μένομεν or διάγομεν, 'we continue to go on so.' In ἐς τὸ ἀκριβὲς we have a phrase for the adverb ἀκριβῶς, (as in like manner ἐς τὸ παντελὲς, 'to the uttermost,' is used for παντελῶς, utterly, in the New Testament, Luke xiii. 11.) the sense being exactly, i. e. plainly, or, as we should say, bluntly. Render, 'and to speak the τούς τε Ἴωνας καὶ νησιώτας—οὓς ξυγγενεῖς φασιν ὄντας ἡμᾶς Συρακόσιοι δεδουλῶσθαι—ἦλθον γὰρ ἐπὶ τὴν μητρόπολιν, ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, μετὰ τοῦ Μήδου, καὶ οὐκ ἐτόλμησαν ἀποστάντες τὰ οἰκεῖα φθεῖραι, ἅσπερ ἡμεῖς ἐκλιπόντες τὴν πόλιν, δουλείαν δὲ αὐτοί τε ἐβούλοντο καὶ ἡμῖν τὸ αὐτὸ ἐπενεγκεῖν. LXXXIII. Ἀνθ' ὧν ἄξιοί τε ὄντες ἅμα ἄρχομεν, ὅτι τε ναυτικὸν πλεῖστόν τε καὶ προθυμίαν ἀπροφάσιστον παρεσχόμεθα ἐς τοὺς Ἕλληνας, καὶ διότι καὶ τῷ Μήδῳ ἑτοίμως τοῦτο δρῶντες οὗτοι ἡμᾶς ἔβλαπτον, ἅμα δὲ τῆς πρὸς Πελοποννησίους ἰσχύος ὀρεγόμενοι. 2. καὶ οὐ καλλιεπούμεθα, ὡς ἢ τὸν βάρβαρον μόνοι καθελόντες, εἰκότως ἄρχομεν, ἢ ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ τῇ τῶνδε μᾶλλον ἢ τῶν ξυμπάντων τε καὶ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ αὐτῶν κινδυνεύσαντες. πᾶσι δὲ ἀνεπίφθονον τὴν προσήκουσαν σωτηρίαν ἐκπορίζεσθαι. καὶ νῦν, τῆς ἡμετέρας ἀσφαλείας ἕνεκα καὶ ἐνθάδε

ἐφ' ἡμᾶς] 'namely, against us.' On this use of the preposition, repeated before an apposition, see Matth. Gr. § 595, 4. Ἀποστάντες τὰ οἰκεῖα φθεῖραι, 'to abandon our city and destroy our property.' Οὐκ ἐτόλμησαν, 'could not bring themselves.' See Monk on Eurip. Alc. 285.

Ch. LXXXIII. 1. ἀνθ' ὧν ἄξιοί—ὀρεγόμενοι] Of this perplexed passage the sense seems to be: 'For these causes we exercise dominion, both as being worthy thereof,—since we furnished for the service of Greece the greatest fleet, and evinced the most unhesitating alacrity,—and because they, by readily doing this for the Mede, injured us; and, moreover, as being actuated by a wish to thereby furnish ourselves with strength against the Peloponnesians.' The orator urges two claims to the dominion of Athens over the Ionians: 1. That it was for the good of Greece that they should be held in subjection; and that none were so worthy of the addition to dominion as the Athenians, by whose means the whole that any possessed was preserved. 2. That they had a sort of right of conquest, as over enemies and injurers. So much for the right; then comes the inducement by which they were to be led to take it, and now hold it,—namely, their own security, and defence against the Peloponnesians.

πρὸς Πελοποννησίους ἰσχύος] i. e. 'strength to oppose the Peloponnesian aggressors.' Dukas lays down the general sense meant to be expressed, as follows: Ἅμα μὲν ἄξιοι ὄντες, ἅμα δὲ καὶ τῆς πρὸς Πελοποννησίους ἰσχύος ὀρεγόμενοι, ἄρχομεν· τὸ μέν, ὅτι πλεῖστον ναυτικὸν—παρεσχόμεθα, καὶ ὅτι αὐτοὶ (οἱ Ἴωνες) ἡμᾶς ἔβλαπτον, τῷ Μήδῳ ἑτοίμως τοῦτο δρῶντες· τὸ δὲ ἵνα μὴ ἄλλῳ ἐπώμεθα. On the subject itself compare the similar course of argument pursued by the Athenian ambassadors, i. 75, seq.

2. οὐ καλλιεπούμεθα] 'we do not use fine speeches.' For vulg. οὐκ ἄλλῳ ἐπόμεθα I have, with Haack, Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, adopted the reading of three MSS. as above; and to the testimony of those MSS. am enabled to add that of the Cod. Cantabr. and Lugd., which have οὐκ ἄλλο ἐπούμεθα, evidently copied from originals which had οὐ καλλοεπούμεθα, a mere slip of the scribes for οὐ καλλιεπούμεθα. That this reading is the true one, there can be no doubt; it being absolutely required by the connexion of ideas, and moreover borne out by a similar expression at v. 89, ἡμεῖς—οὔτε αὐτοὶ μετ' ὀνομάτων καλῶν, ὡς ἢ δικαίως, τὸν Μῆδον καταλύσαντες, ἄρχομεν, ἢ, &c. Of this rare term καλλιεπούμεθα, examples elsewhere (besides the one already adduced) occur in Theophr. Sim. p. 76, and Schol. on Eurip. Hec. 382.

τῶνδε] Meaning the Ionians; the argument hinted at being, that 'having delivered them from bondage, they had a right to rule over them.'

πᾶσι δὲ ἀνεπίφθονον—ἐκπορίζεσθαι] This is said in justification of the motive or inducement, above adverted to, to claim and maintain the right in question. Render: 'it is irreprehensible for all [who are in danger] to provide means for their own preservation.' The same sentiment, more fully evolved, is found at viii. 10, 5. Of the phrase ἀνεπίφθονόν ἐστι an example παρόντες, ὁρῶμεν καὶ ὑμῖν * * * * ταὐτὰ ξυμφέροντα. 3. ἀποφαίνομεν δὲ ἐξ ὧν οἵδε τε διαβάλλουσι, καὶ ὑμεῖς μάλιστα ἐπὶ τὸ φοβερώτερον ὑπονοεῖτε,—εἰδότες τοὺς περιδεῶς ὑποπτεύοντάς τι, λόγου μὲν ἡδονῇ τὸ παραυτίκα τερπομένους, τῇ δ' ἐγχειρήσει ὕστερον τὰ ξυμφέροντα πράσσοντας,—τήν τε γὰρ ἐκεῖ ἀρχὴν εἰρήκαμεν διὰ occurs supra i. 75, and another in Aristoph. Eq. 1233, λοιδορῆσαι τοὺς πονηροὺς οὐδὲν ἔστ' ἐπιφθονον. Similar, too, is the use of ἀνεμέσητον in Æschin. p. 50, 31. 63, 8, and the Homeric sentiment, (probably the foundation of all,) οὐ γάρ τις νέμεσις. By τὴν προσήκουσαν σωτηρίαν is meant not merely 'suam salutem,' but 'the self-preservation which pertains to them as a duty.' Compare iv. 92. 7, τὰς προσηκούσας ἀρετάς. Plato p. 985, τιμὰς μὴ δεχομένους τὰς προσηκούσας αὐτοῖς. 'which pertained to them by right.'

ὁρῶμεν] animadvertimus, lit. 'we see and know,' invenimus. Καὶ ὑμῖν . . . ταὐτὰ ξυμφέροντα, lit. 'that the same things are expedient to you [as to us].' For vulg. ταῦτα, which cannot be defended, I have, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, edited ταὐτά; a reading recommended at once by suitableness as to sense, and propriety of language; which, in a case like this, possess more weight than the authority of MSS. Accordingly, the meaning will be, that their interests are the same, both being interested in the same event,—the humbling of Syracuse. Certain it is that the two words ταῦτα and ταὐτὰ are very frequently interchanged; an instance of which occurs at v. 36, ταὐτὰ γιγνώσκειν, as the late editors read, though almost every MS. has ταῦτα. the sentiment intended to be expressed (which is the well-known idem velle atque idem nolle, answering to what is at v. 31, denoted by τὸ αὐτὸ λέγοντες) absolutely requiring ταὐτά. Such, however, is the harshness involved, in words so essential to the sense being left to be understood, that I cannot but suspect, that after καὶ ὑμῖν the words καὶ ἡμῖν have been lost: a suspicion not a little countenanced by the existence in 7 MSS. of the var. lect. ἡμῖν. Insomuch that I doubt not some of the ancient archetypes had καὶ ὑμῖν καὶ ἡμῖν, and that here, as not unfrequently, the repetition of καὶ caused the omission of καὶ ὑμῖν; and then, in other copies, the ἡμῖν was altered to ὑμῖν, as the context would require.

3. ἀποφαίνομεν δὲ] Render, 'now we demonstrate this fact,'—namely, ὅτι καὶ ὑμῖν καὶ ἡμῖν ξυμφερόντως πάρεσμεν. And how? why, ἐξ ὧν οἵδε διαβάλλουσι, καὶ ὑμεῖς—ὑπονοεῖτε: meaning, that 'he can prove the accusations of the Syracusans, and the suspicious fears of those whom he is addressing, to be false,' even on the very grounds whereon the accusations in question proceed; namely, the self-interested and domineering policy of Athens. Even if tried by this test, their professions, as to the design of their coming to Sicily, might be credited. Accordingly, the speaker proceeds to say generally, 'The same principle of fear for their own safety that had caused them to hold dominion there, had induced them to come here; and not the design of enslaving any, but rather of preventing any from suffering oppression.' Καταστησόμενοι is for ὡς καταστησόμενοι. At τὰ ἐνθάδε understand πράγματα, scil. τῆς ἀρχῆς, from ἀρχὴν preceding. The complete phrase occurs at ch. 55, τὰ τῆς ἀρχῆς πράγματα καθίστατο. Highly significant is the expression ἐπὶ τὸ φοβερώτερον ὑπονοεῖν, ('to make matter of very fearful surmise;') the nearest approach to which is in Dio Cass. xlvii. 24, ἀγγέλλεσθαι ἐπὶ τὸ φοβερώτερον. Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 57, p. 144, ἀγγέλλεται τὰ γινόμενα ἐπὶ τὸ φοβερώτατον: where, however, for φοβ. the true reading is doubtless φοβερώτερον, the neuter being used in this kind of phrase, (as πλεῖον, μεῖζον, &c.) not the masculine. So also in Appian t. ii. 115, μαντευμάτων παλαιῶν ἐπιφοβωτέρων ἐμνημόνευον: for ἐπιφοβ. ought undoubtedly to be read ἐπὶ φοβερώτερον.

Finally, in the words εἰδότες, scil. ἡμεῖς. οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, which are parenthetical, is contained a profound political maxim; the speaker intimating it as his full persuasion, that, 'however, through fearful suspicions, men may be seduced by the charms of oratory, yet, when they afterwards come to action, they will act as interest draws them;' which interest, he proceeds to show, will lead them to alliance with the Athenians, not the Syracusans. Of the phrase πράσσειν τὰ ξυμφέροντα the sense is, 'to practically pursue or practise the profitable,' as opposed to theoretically approving the just or good, τὰ δίκαια or τὰ καλά. Of this phrase I have noted no example elsewhere: but Plato, p. 172 and 339, has τὰ συμφέροντα τίθεσθαι, and p. 116, τὰ δίκαια ἆρα—συμφέροντά ἐστιν. Compare also δέος ἔχειν, καὶ τὰ ἐνθάδε διὰ τὸ αὐτὸ ἥκειν μετὰ τῶν φίλων ἀσφαλῶς καταστησόμενοι, καὶ οὐ δουλωσόμενοι, μὴ παθεῖν δὲ μᾶλλον τοῦτο κωλύσοντες. LXXXIV. Ὑπολάβῃ δὲ μηδεὶς ὡς, οὐδὲν προσῆκον, ὑμῶν κηδόμεθα,—γνοὺς ὅτι, σωζομένων ὑμῶν, καὶ διὰ τὸ μὴ ἀσθενεῖς ὑμᾶς ὄντας ἀντέχειν Συρακοσίοις, ἧσσον ἂν, τούτων πεμψάντων τινὰ δύναμιν Πελοποννησίοις, ἡμεῖς βλαπτοίμεθα. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ προσήκετε ἤδη ἡμῖν τὰ μέγιστα. 2. διόπερ καὶ τοὺς Λεοντίνους εὔλογον κατοικίζειν μὴ ὑπηκόους, ὥσπερ τοὺς ξυγγενεῖς αὐτῶν τοὺς ἐν Εὐβοίᾳ, ἀλλ' ὡς δυνατωτάτους, ἵνα ἐκ τῆς σφετέρας, ὅμοροι ὄντες, τοῖσδε ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν λυπηροὶ ὦσι. 3. τὰ μὲν γὰρ ἐκεῖ, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀρκοῦμεν πρὸς τοὺς πολεμίους, καὶ ὁ Χαλκιδεὺς—ὧν ἀλόγως ἡμᾶς φησι δουλωσαμένους τοὺς ἐνθάδε ἐλευθεροῦν—ξύμφορος ἡμῖν ἀπαράσκευος ὢν καὶ χρήματα μόνον φέρων, τὰ δὲ ἐνθάδε, καὶ Λεοντῖνοι καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι φίλοι, ὅτι μάλιστα αὐτονομούμενοι. LXXXV. Ἀνδρὶ δὲ τυράννῳ, ἢ πόλει ἀρχὴν ἐχούσῃ, οὐδὲν ἄλογον ὅ τι ξυμφέρον, οὐδ' οἰκεῖον ὅ τι μὴ πιστόν· πρὸς ἕκαστα δὲ

Xen. Ath. i. 13, τοῦ δικαίου αὐτοῖς μέλει, μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ συμφέροντος.

Ch. LXXXIV. The speaker now enters more at large on the proof; showing that it was as much their interest to maintain the independence of their Sicilian allies, for a counterpoise to the power of Syracuse, as it was to deprive their Asiatic subjects of the power to resist them. He commences with anticipating an objection to the above view, which was not unlikely to occur to his hearers,—namely, that this is but taking anxious care about those who are nothing to us. This he refutes, by showing, that the safety of the Camarinæans will be no other than the safeguard of Athens. The words καὶ ἐν τούτῳ—μέγιστα contain the inference from the foregoing proof.

2. διόπερ καὶ—ὦσι] This is meant as an answer to what was urged by Hermocrates, ch. 76, on the inconsistency of subverting the Chalcidæans in Eubœa, and resettling them here, or the holding in servitude of the former, but proposing to restore in independent settlement the latter. To the argument, οὐ γὰρ δὴ εὔλογον τὰς μὲν ἐκεῖ πόλεις ἀναστάτους ποιεῖν, τὰς δὲ ἐνθάδε κατοικίζειν, Euphemus replies: Διόπερ εὔλογον, &c. 'Wherefore (i. e. on the score of self-preservation and self-interest) it is colourable and reasonable to resettle the Leontines, not in political dependence, but in state as powerful as possible.'

ἵνα ἐκ τῆς—λυπηροὶ ὦσι] 'that from their territory (being borderers) they may, on our behalf, annoy those.' So ch. 12, ἵνα τοῖς ἐκεῖ ἐχθροῖς ἡμῶν λυπηροὶ ὄντες, &c. and viii. 46.

3. What is said in this section is meant to further evince, by example, that what was said as to the Athenians being interested to foster the power and preserve the independence of their allies, is perfectly true.

At ὃν ἀλόγως—ἐλευθεροῦν Poppo rightly points out, that ἀλόγως coheres, not with ἐλευθεροῦν, but with the whole sentiment, thus: ὃν ἡμῶν δουλώσασθαι καὶ τοὺς ἐνθάδε ἐλευθεροῦν ἄλογόν φησι. This use of ξύμφορος put personally (in the sense useful, beneficial) is, Poppo observes, 'contra morem nostri sermonis;' and he refers to his note on vi. 33, 4. He might have said the same of almost any other author; since it is so rare, that the only example of it I have noted elsewhere, is in Xen. Ath. ii. 19, τοὺς σφίσιν αὐτοῖς συμφόρους φιλοῦσι. And such is the use in Latin of utilis, as Hor. Od. i. 12, 42: and the poet would also, I suspect, have used the term, had the metre permitted it, in his Od. iii. 26, 1, 'Vixi puellis nuper idoneus, Et militavi non sine gloriâ.' As it is, idoneus, which answers to Gr. ἐπιτήδειος, is used, like that word, in the sense χρήσιμος. So Hesychius explains ἐπιτήδειον by ὠφέλιμον.

ὅτι μάλιστα αὐτονομούμενοι] 'in as great independence as possible.'

Ch. LXXXV. 1. ἀνδρὶ δὲ τυράννῳ—γίγνεσθαι] What is here said is meant to be a reply in refutation of the charge of inconsistency; and that couched in the form

δεῖ ἢ ἐχθρὸν ἢ φίλον μετὰ καιροῦ γίγνεσθαι. καὶ ἡμᾶς τοῦτο ὠφελεῖ ἐνθάδε,—οὐκ, ἢν τοὺς φίλους κακώσωμεν, ἀλλ', ἢν οἱ ἐχθροὶ διὰ τὴν τῶν φίλων ῥώμην ἀδύνατοι ὦσιν. 2. ἀπιστεῖν δὲ οὐ χρή· καὶ γὰρ ‡τοὺς ἐκεῖ‡ ξυμμάχους, ὡς ἕκαστοι χρήσιμοι, ἐξηγούμεθα,—Χίους μὲν καὶ Μηθυμναίους νεῶν παροχῇ αὐτονόμους, τοὺς δὲ πολλοὺς χρημάτων, βιαιότερον, φορᾷ, ἄλλους δὲ καὶ πάνυ ἐλευθέρως of a political maxim, similar to which are several occurring in the course of the celebrated discussion at the end of lib. v. Compare especially ch. 89, εἰδότας ὅτι δίκαια μὲν ἐν τῷ ἀνθρωπείῳ λόγῳ ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης ἀνάγκης κρίνεται, δυνατὰ δὲ οἱ προὔχοντες πράσσουσι, καὶ οἱ ἀσθενεῖς ξυγχωροῦσιν. The sense of the present passage is as follows: 'But [indeed] to any individual holding despotic rule, or to any state-swaying empire, nothing is absurd or inconsistent that is profitable; nor is any thing kindred, unless it be trustworthy (i. e. it is of no value); though, as respects each case, it is needful that any one be friend or foe in season.' Of which three several clauses, the first contains a sentiment similar to that found at v. 89. In the second there is an allusion to the Chalcidians of Eubœa, who, through the kindred of the Athenians, (for such is the sense here of οἰκεῖος, which stands for ξυγγενής, as at i. 9, 3, κατὰ τὸ οἰκεῖον, 'on account of relationship,') were not to be relied on, and therefore were not to be trusted with arms. The third clause contains a political maxim.

πρὸς ἕκαστα the Scholiast and Portus explain to mean pro singulis rebus [quæ geruntur]. But that sense would require καθ' ἕκαστα for πρὸς ἕκαστα. Hence it is better, with Dukas and Poppo, to take it as standing for πρὸς ἑκάστους, neut. for masc., as the context requires; thus rendering, 'as respects either party.' In μετὰ καιροῦ (which is equiv. to σὺν καιρῷ, cum opportunitate, 'with seasonableness,' so as to time the thing) we have an exceedingly rare phrase—so rare, indeed, that I have noted no example of it elsewhere; though I suspect that it should, in a passage of Arrian, E. A. iv. 5, 2, be read instead of the present κατὰ καιροῦ; being used there as a phrase for adj. καίριον, seasonable. How often κατὰ and μετὰ are in the MSS. confounded, is well-known.

καὶ ἡμᾶς τοῦτο ὠφελεῖ ἐνθάδε] These words serve to illustrate the foregoing. Render, 'and [accordingly],' &c. adeoque nobis hic commodum est, &c. Κακώσωμεν, 'should endamage, wear down the strength of;' as is implied by the antithetic words διὰ τὴν ῥώμην ἀδύνατοι. Compare ch. 18. viii. 22.

2. Here is subjoined what further serves to prove that the representations which the Athenians made of their intentions and policy in the expedition to Sicily, were credible and trustworthy.

For τοὺς ξυμμάχους, many MSS. (including Clarend. pr. manu, Cantab., and Mus. Brit.) have τοῖς ξυμμάχοις, which latter is edited by Poppo and Goeller; while Haack and Bek. retain the common reading;—and rightly, for in so minute a variation, the authority of MSS. is but slender. The accusative is found at i. 71, though the genitive would be more agreeable to general use. Thus in Hom. Il. ii. 806, we have τῶν δ' ἐξηγεῖσθαι: and so in another passage of our author, supra i. 19, οὐχ ὑποτελεῖς ἔχοντες φόρου τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἡγοῦντο, a passage altogether similar to the present, αὐτονόμους here corresponding to φόρου ὑποτελεῖς there. Duker determines that the dative here cannot be admitted on account of the accusatives following: but this Poppo pronounces to be no sufficient reason, referring to ch. 91, fin. and other passages adduced by him in Proleg. i. 1, p. 131. Thus there will be a variation of construction, as not unfrequently; and Goeller remarks: 'Dativum pariter atque accusativum h. l. adjunctum habet, quia utroque modo verbum construi licebat.' Yet no proof, I apprehend, exists that ἐξηγεῖσθαι in the old Attic writers ever took the dative in the strict sense to govern or rule. As to the passage adduced by Poppo, in proof of ἐξηγ. carrying the dative, namely, supra iii. 55, ἃ δὲ ἑκάτεροι ἐξηγεῖσθε τοῖς ξυμμάχοις, it is any thing but conclusive, the verb there carrying an accusative of thing as the principal regimen, and the dative of person only as a secondary one; the sense being, 'as to the things which you enjoin, or dictate to the allies [to do].'

ὡς ἕκαστοι χρήσιμοι] 'in the way that each may be useful to us.' In νεῶν παροχῇ the dative is one of circumstance, (see Kühn. Gr. § 603, ed. Jelf,) as in another passage supra i. 84, εὐπραγίαις, 'at (or 'under') payment of tribute;' implying ξυμμαχοῦντας, καίπερ νησιώτας ὄντας καὶ εὐλήπτους, διότι ἐν χωρίοις ἐπικαίροις εἰσὶ περὶ τὴν Πελοπόννησον. 3. ὥστε καὶ τανθάδε εἰκὸς πρὸς τὸ λυσιτελοῦν, καὶ, ὃ λέγομεν, ἐς Συρακοσίους δέος, καθίστασθαι. ἀρχῆς γὰρ ἐφίενται ὑμῶν· καὶ βούλονται ἐπὶ τῷ ἡμετέρῳ ξυστήσαντες ὑμᾶς ὑπόπτῳ βίᾳ, ἢ καὶ κατ' ἐρημίαν, ἀπράκτων ἡμῶν ἀπελθόντων, αὐτοὶ ἄρξαι τῆς Σικελίας. 4. ἀνάγκη δὲ, ἢν ξυστῆτε πρὸς αὐτούς· οὔτε γὰρ ἡμῖν ἔτι ἔσται ἰσχὺς τοσαύτη ἐς ἓν ξυστᾶσα εὐμεταχείριστος, οὔθ' οἵδ' ἀσθενεῖς ἂν, ἡμῶν μὴ παρόντων, πρὸς ὑμᾶς εἶεν. LXXXVI. Καὶ, ὅτῳ ταῦτα μὴ δοκεῖ, αὐτὸ τὸ ἔργον ἐλέγχει. τὸ γὰρ πρότερον ἡμᾶς ἐπηγάγεσθε, οὐκ ἄλλον τινὰ προσείοντες φόβον, ἢ, εἰ περιοψόμεθα ὑμᾶς ὑπὸ Συρα-liability thereto, as expressed by our preposition under. Βιαιότερον is to be referred, not, as some have supposed, and as the collocation of the words would suggest, to φορᾷ, but to ἐξηγούμεθα, as the construction of the context demands: for, as Poppo remarks, 'considering that in the first clause we have ἐξηγούμεθα αὐτονόμους, (i. e. ὥστε εἶναι αὐτούς,) and in the third ἐξηγούμεθα ἐλευθέρως ξυμμαχοῦντας, so in the second, ἐξηγούμεθα βιαιότερον ought, of course, to correspond thereto.'

3. πρὸς τὸ λυσιτελοῦν] 'to our advantage.' So τὸ λυσιτελ. is used in Isæus, p. 44, 31, and Æschin. p. 13, 41. Καὶ ὃ λέγομεν—δέος is, as Æmil. Port., Bauer, and Poppo explain, equivalent to καὶ τὸ δέος, ᾧ τοὺς Συρ. φοβούμεθα, ὃ λέγομεν ὑμῖν. With this use, δέος ἐς, timor in or erga, compare αἰδὼς ἐς Μυκ. in Eurip. Orest. 101. Ἐπὶ τῷ ἡμετέρῳ—ὑπόπτῳ, for ἐπὶ τῷ ὑπόπτῳ ἐς ἡμᾶς.

Between ἢ and κατ' several MSS. (including Clar., Cant., and Mus. Br.) add καὶ, which has been adopted by Poppo, and, though rejected in their first editions, received in their second ones, by Bekker and Goeller. I have thought proper to do the same, from the greater likelihood of the word, in such a position, being omitted than inserted. Its sense, however, is not also, but even.

4. ἀνάγκη δὲ] 'but this must [be the case].' Ἢν ξυστῆτε πρὸς αὐτούς, 'if you join their party:' a peculiar syntax of ξυνίστ., of which examples elsewhere occur, i. 1, 1. viii. 83; and Dio Cass. 424, 86. 426, 67. 699, 33. Of the words following, οὔτε γὰρ ἡμῖν—εὐμεταχείριστος, the sense is that which I laid down in my smaller edition, as follows: 'for neither will so great a force, when drawn together, be any longer manageable by us,' (literally, easy to be handled or managed,) so as to cope or deal with it. And such is the use of εὐμετ. in Xen. An. ii. 6, 18, ἐπεβούλευον, ὡς εὐμεταχειριστῳ ὄντι. Plato, p. 240, οὔτε εὐάλωτον—οὔτε ἀλόντα εὐμεταχείριστον ἡγήσεται. Plut. Pomp. 20, εὐμεταχείριστος ἀνταγωνιστής. Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 5, p. 1515, ἀπ' ἐμοῦ τοῦ νεωτέρου τε καὶ εὐμεταχειριστοτέρου ἀρξάμενοι. This view of the sense has, I find, been adopted by Dr. Arnold, who aptly compares a passage of Herodot. vii. 236, ἁλὸς δὲ ἐὼν ὁ ναυτικὸς στρατὸς, δυσμεταχείριστος αὐτοῖσι γίνεται.

Ch. LXXXVI. 1. ὅτῳ] For the antecedent to this is to be supplied the pronoun αὐτόν. At ἐλέγχει supply either γνώμης, or δόξης ἁμαρτίας, 'convicteth him of error:' examples of which ellipsis occur in Xen. Mem. iii. 8, 1. iv. 4, 8, and Symp. iv. 3 & 4. Plato, p. 166. 349. 467, and not unfrequently in the New Test. The word left understood is expressed in a passage of the New Test., St. John viii. 46, Τίς ἐξ ὑμῶν ἐλέγχει με περὶ ἁμαρτίας; and xvi. 8. By τὸ ἔργον is meant the fact, namely, of the case in question. Of the words οὐκ ἄλλον προσείοντες φόβον, the sense must depend on the nature and force of the metaphor, which some, as Ruhnk. on Tim. p. 136, Casaub. on Athen. i. 19, and Goeller, suppose to be derived from the phrase προσείειν θαλλὸν, 'to shake forward a green bough, for the purpose of alluring cattle.' And in proof of this view they adduce certain passages, of Plato, Phæd. ch. 10. p. 30, ὥσπερ οἱ τὰ πεινῶντα θρέμματα, θαλλὸν—προσείοντες, ἄγουσι, and Lucian, Herm. 68, (where the same thing is alluded to,) θαλλῷ προδειχθέντι ἀκολουθεῖν ὥσπερ τὰ πρόβατα. Admitting, then, the metaphor to be that above mentioned, the sense will be, as Duk. explains it, metu ostenso aliquo compel- κοσίοις γενέσθαι, ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ κινδυνεύσομεν. 2. καὶ νῦν οὐ δίκαιον, ᾧπερ καὶ ἡμᾶς ἠξιοῦτε λόγῳ πείθειν, τῷ αὐτῷ ἀπιστεῖν· οὐδ', ὅτι δυνάμει μείζονι πρὸς τὴν τῶνδε ἰσχὺν πάρεσμεν, ὑποπτεύεσθαι,—πολὺ δὲ μᾶλλον τοῖσδε ἀπιστεῖν. 3. ἡμεῖς μέν γε οὔτε ἐμμεῖναι δυνατοὶ μὴ μεθ' ὑμῶν, εἴ τε καὶ, γενόμενοι κακοὶ, κατεργασαίμεθα,—ἀδύνατοι κατασχεῖν, διὰ μῆκός τε πλοῦ, καὶ ἀπορίᾳ φυλακῆς πόλεων μεγάλων καὶ τῇ παρασκευῇ ἠπειρωτίδων· οἵδε δὲ, οὐ στρατοπέδῳ, πόλει δὲ μείζονι τῆς ἡμετέρας παρουσίας ἐποικοῦντες ὑμῖν, ἀεί τε lere. Yet the idea of drawing others on by holding some attractive object is one here little to the purpose; and notwithstanding what Ruhnken and Poppo urge, the occurrence of ἐπηγάγεσθε, just before, will by no means oblige us to adopt that view of the sense; for the term ἐπηγ. there may be supposed to mean, not, 'ye drew us over,' 'prevailed on us,' but, as often in our author, 'ye called us in to your aid.' Accordingly, I must still continue to prefer the other mode of explaining the metaphor proposed by Duker, namely, as one derived from those who shake swords or spears at an enemy in terrorem. In proof of which I am enabled to adduce—besides the passage of Ælian, V. H. xii. 23, cited by Duk.—the following from Eurip. Herc. Fur. 1209, Τί μοι προσείων χεῖρα, σημαίνεις φόνον; and hence, I would observe, may be emended a very corrupt passage of Ælian ap. Suid. voce Γοργών, frag. p. 1015, ed. Gron. καὶ ἐνέκειντο τὴν ἐξ αὐτοῦ προφέροντες, καὶ προσιόντες, ὡς εἰπεῖν, Γοργόνα κατεσίγασαν, ἀλλ' ὡς πρόλαλον ὄντα καὶ ἰταμὸν, where I propose to read, and point as follows: καὶ ἐνέκειντο, (scil. αὐτῷ,) τὴν [νομοθεσίαν] ἐξ αὐτοῦ προφέροντες, καὶ, προσείοντες, ὡς εἰπεῖν, Γοργόνα, κατεσ. ἄλλως πρ. ὅ. κ. ἰ., whence we are enabled to see the origin of the metaphor here.

Finally, for προσείοντες, I should be inclined to think ought here to be read προσσείοντες, but that the sense shake forth or out may be said to imply at: and answering to the phrase φόβον προσείειν is the term in Latin intentare, as Tacit. Ann. iii. 28, terror omnibus intentatur: and so the phrase intentare crimen, &c. for objicere, ad mortem intentare. In Jos. Bell. i. 10, 9, we have ἐπισείειν αὐτῷ σκιὰν ἀδικημάτων, with which compare the expression in Quintil. iii. 10, 'intentari invicem crimen.'

2. λόγῳ] 'argument,' (lit. allegation,) as i. 76, τῷ δικαίῳ λόγῳ, i. e. the argument of justice. The πρὸς is best referred to μείζονι; the sense being, as Haack expresses it, majori quam pro Syracusanorum viribus.

3. κακοὶ] A general term, though here to be understood, agreeably to the context, in the sense faithless, perfidious; a sense which the word bears also in Xen. Cyr. iii. 2, 14, and An. i. 4, 8. vi. 6, 6. Hist. vi. 5, 38. (ed. Th.) And so Hom. Il. xxiv. 63, κακῶν ἔταρ', αἰὲν ἄπιστε. Of τῇ παρασκευῇ ἠπειρωτίδων the sense is literally, 'continental (as opposed to maritime) in their force;' i. e. well provided with foot and horse. With which tacit opposition to ναυτικῇ compare the direct one at i. 35, καὶ ναυτικῆς, καὶ οὐκ ἠπειρώτιδος, διδομένης, where, as here, ἠπ. does not mean mediterraneus, inland, but, simply, terrestris, land; a sense derived from the very frequent use of ἤπειρος in the early writers (as Homer, Hesiod, and the Tragedians) for γῆ. So Hesiod, Theog. 582, κνώδαλ' ὅσ' ἤπειρος πολλὰ τρέφει ἠδὲ θάλασσα. As to the origin of the word ἤπειρος, that is far out of ken (though probably to be found in the Sanscrit); but it is acknowledged to have been formerly an adjective. See Lennep, Etym. And Dammius says it is used in Homer as 'epitheton terræ, positum pro terrâ:' which is very true; but the question is, what was the original force of the epithet? I believe it to have been that of ξηρός: an opinion, I apprehend, placed beyond doubt by a passage of Eurip. Hippol. 761, Μουνύχου δ' ἀκταῖσιν ἐκδὴ σαντο πλεκτὰς πεισμάτων ἀρ|χὰς, ἐπ' ἀπείρου τε γῆς ἔβασαν, where, what Monk calls 'rarior licentia,' is no other than the primitive use; for what does ἐπ' ἀπείρου γῆς ἔβασαν mean but, 'they stepped on the dry land,' answering to ἠπείρου ἐπιβῆναι in Hom. Od. v. 399. But in process of time, ἤπειρος scil. γῆ came to be used, like ξηρὰ scil. γῆ, to denote dry land, as opposed to θάλασσα, as in Ps. lxvi. 6, (Sept.) ὁ μεταστρέφων τὴν θάλασσαν εἰς ξηράν.

οὐ στρατοπέδῳ] sc. ἱδρυθέντες, not as the Athenians were, mere encampers. See supra ch. 37, fin. In the words following, πόλει δὲ ἐπιβουλεύουσι, καὶ, ὅταν καιρὸν λάβωσιν ἑκάστου, οὐκ ἀνιᾶσιν (ἔδειξαν δὲ καὶ ἄλλα ἤδη, καὶ τὰ ἐς Λεοντίνους), καὶ νῦν τολμῶσιν ἐπὶ τοὺς ταῦτα κωλύοντας, καὶ ἀνέχοντας τὴν Σικελίαν μέχρι τοῦδε μὴ ὑπ' αὐτοὺς εἶναι, παρακαλεῖν ὑμᾶς, ὡς ἀναισθήτους. 4. πολὺ δὲ ἐπὶ ἀληθεστέραν γε σωτηρίαν ἡμεῖς ἀντιπαρακαλοῦμεν, δεόμενοι τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν ἀπ' ἀλλήλων ἀμφοτέροις μὴ προδιδόναι, νομίσαι τε τοῖσδε μὲν, καὶ ἄνευ ξυμμάχων, ἀεὶ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἑτοίμην διὰ τὸ πλῆθος εἶναι ὁδὸν, ὑμῖν δ' οὐ πολλάκις παρασχήσειν μετὰ τοσῆσδε ἐπικουρίας ἀμύνασθαι· ἢν εἰ τῷ ὑπόπτῳ ἢ ἄπρακτον ἐάσετε ἀπελθεῖν, ἢ καὶ σφαλεῖσαν, ἔτι βουλήσεσθε καὶ πολλοστὸν μόριον αὐτῆς ἰδεῖν, ὅτε οὐδὲν ἔτι περανεῖ παραγενόμενον ὑμῖν.

LXXXVII. Ἀλλὰ μήτε ὑμεῖς, ὦ Καμαριναῖοι, ταῖς τῶνδε διαμείζονι τῆς ἡμ. παρουσίας, there is the not unfrequent use of abstract for concrete, namely, τοῦ ἡμετέρου στρατοπέδου νῦν παρόντος. In ὅταν καιρὸν λάβωσιν ἑκάστου there is a condensed form of expression for what, more fully expressed, would be, 'and when they get an opportunity [for attacking] each [of you],' i. e. each state of the Siceliot territory. Οὐκ ἀνιᾶσιν, for οὐκ ἀνήσουσι, 'they will not let it go.'

καὶ ἀνέχοντας—εἶναι] These words are exegetical of the preceding ones; and the general sense intended is obvious, though the exact nature of the metaphor in ἀνέχοντας is far from clear. Portus, Hobbes, and Abresch suppose it to be derived from the act of keeping up or afloat a sinking ship. But no proof of such a sense has been adduced from any writer of the age of our author: nay, the passage of Aristides, appealed to by Abresch, will very well bear the signification found in the earlier writers, to hinder (literally, 'to keep back,' 'prevent,' probably an equestrian metaphor): and hence no reason is there why the same sense should not be supposed here intended.

4. πολὺ δὲ ἐπὶ ἀληθεστέραν γε σωτηρίαν] A transposition for ἐπὶ δὲ πολὺ ἀληθ. σωτ. (Bauer.) Τὴν ὑπάρχ. ἀπ' ἀλλήλων—προδ., 'not to betray the present safety to both, from the aid of one another.' Παρασχήσειν, scil. τὸν καιρὸν, 'will the opportunity offer itself.' Só Hdot. iii. 13, ἡμῖν παρέξει (scil. ὁ καιρὸς) ἀνασώσασθαι τὴν ἀρχήν.

ἔτι βουλήσεσθε—ἰδεῖν] 'ye will some time wish to see even the smallest portion of it, when, if present, it could no longer be of any service to you.' Compare Xen. Cyr. v. 4, 7, εἰ δὲ ἡμᾶς ἀφήσετε, σκέψασθε πόθεν αὖθις ἂν τοιαύτην δύναμιν λάβοιτε ξύμμαχον. Dionys. Hal. vi. 71, εἰ δὲ παρήσετε τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον, εὔξαισθε ἂν πολλάκις ὅμοιον εὑρεῖν ἕτερον, and vii. 24. and Liv. xxxi. 29, 'sero ac nequidquam, quum dominum Romanum habebitis, socium Philippum quæretis;' and lastly a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke xvii. 22, ἐλεύσονται ἡμέραι ὅτε ἐπιθυμήσετε μίαν τῶν ἡμερῶν τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἰδεῖν, καὶ οὐκ ὄψεσθε.

Again, for vulg. πολλοστημόριον, I have, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, received, from many of the best MSS. (to which I add Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) πολλοστὸν μόριον: for πολλοστημόριον is Greek of a later period than that of our author, being found in such writers as Plutarch, Lucian, and Longinus; whereas in πολλοστὸν μόριον or μέρος we have Greek sufficiently ancient to be found in Xenoph., Plato, Aristotle, and Demosth., and sometimes occurring in the purest of the later writers, as Arrian, Dio Cass, and Themistius. As to the argument urged by Duker, that 'the Scholiast recognises the former,' that would have some force if it were well founded; but it is not, since πολλοστημ. occurs only in the Scholiast's paraphrase; and no more proof is there that he read πολλοστὸν μόριον than that he read ποτε for ἔτι, but quite the contrary. In short, every reason is there to think that the reading in question was derived from the Scholiast. With respect to the sense of πολλοστὸν μόριον, that may be explained, 'a minute part out of many such, a very small fraction of the whole;' and, consequently, the expression may be said to have an exact parallel in that of the passage of St. Luke above cited, μίαν τῶν ἡμερῶν.

CH. LXXXVII. The speech is now brought to a close,—first, in the way of βολαῖς ἀναπείθεσθε, μήτε οἱ ἄλλοι· εἰρήκαμεν δ' ὑμῖν πᾶσαν τὴν ἀλήθειαν περὶ ὧν ὑποπτεύομεθα, καὶ ἔτι ἐν κεφαλαίοις ὑπομνήσαντες, ἀξιώσομεν πείθειν. 2. φαμὲν γὰρ ἄρχειν μὲν τῶν ἐκεῖ, ἵνα μὴ ὑπακούωμεν ἄλλου, ἐλευθεροῦν δὲ τὰ ἐνθάδε, ὅπως μὴ ὑπ' αὐτῶν βλαπτώμεθα· πολλὰ δ' ἀναγκάζεσθαι πράσσειν, διότι καὶ πολλὰ φυλασσόμεθα, ξύμμαχοι δὲ καὶ νῦν καὶ πρότερον τοῖς ἐνθάδε ὑμῶν ἀδικουμένοις οὐκ ἄκλητοι, παρακληθέντες δὲ, ἥκειν. 3. καὶ ὑμεῖς μήθ' ὡς δικασταὶ γενόμενοι τῶν ἡμῖν ποιουμένων, μήθ' ὡς σωφρονισταὶ,—ὃ χαλεπὸν ἤδη,—ἀποτρέπειν πειρᾶσθε· καθ' ὅσον δέ τι ὑμῖν τῆς ἡμετέρας πολυπραγμοσύνης καὶ τρόπου τὸ αὐτὸ ξυμφέρει, τούτῳ ἀπολαβόντες χρήσασθε· καὶ νομίσατε μὴ πάντας ἐν ἴσῳ βλάπwarning; 2. in that of recapitulation of the strongest arguments why the Athenians should not be suspected of evil designs, accompanied by earnest remonstrance, and concluding with entreaty and exhortation. The speaker bids them bear in mind that 'the very self-interestedness imputed to the Athenians would lead them to protect the independence so essential to their own benefit:' and as to the restless interference with foreign nations ascribed to them, the Camarinæans might, from the close community of their interests with those of Athens, safely take advantage, by availing themselves of the aid now offered of that stirring spirit which prompted Athens to interpose wherever her aid was sought, and which rendered her very name a restraint to the domineering, and a stay to the helpless.

2. πολλὰ δ' ἀναγκάζεσθαι] The expression here, πολλὰ πράσσειν, is susceptible of both a bad and a good sense: and such is its use in a passage cited by Acacius from Eurip. Suppl. 576, where the Theban herald says to king Theseus, πράσσειν σὺ πόλλ' εἴωθας, ἥ τε σὴ πόλις, and Theseus replies, τοίγαρ πονοῦσα πολλὰ, πόλλ' εὐδαιμονεῖ.

In φυλασσόμεθα, the full sense of which is, 'we are obliged to be on our guard in many ways,' there is a use of the middle verb frequent in our author. In οὐκ ἄκλητοι, παρακληθ. δὲ, ἥκειν, there is not, what Abresch supposes, a Perissologia, but rather, as Bauer points out, a sort of Amplificatio per diversum, very forcible and well suited to the denial of any thing. So in Æschyl. Choeph. 825, we have, ἥκω μὲν οὐκ ἄκλητος, ἀλλ' ὑπάγγελος, where ὑπάγγελος is equivalent to κληθεὶς ὑπ' ἀγγέλου: but ὑπάγγελος ought not to be altered, as Blomfield supposes, to ὑπ' ἀγγέλου, since that would be to change an uncommon and poetic into a common and prosaic expression.

3. καὶ ὑμεῖς μήθ'—χρήσασθε] Render, 'and attempt not, as judges of what is done by us, nor as moderators or correctors, to divert us from our purpose, (which were now hard to effect,) but, so far as this our busy intermeddling spirit is even profitable to you, take it and use it.' Σωφρ. is used as at iii. 65, where see note. In πολυπραγ. καὶ τρόπου there is an hendiadys. Ἀπολαβόντες χρήσασθε stands for λαβόντες ἀποχρήσ., the literal sense being, 'take it off or away [and welcome], and use it to the utmost.' Compare Plato 369, b. ἀπολαμβάνων, ὃ ἂν ᾖ δυσχερέστατον τοῦ λόγου, τοῦτον ἔχῃ, secum habeat. It remains, however, to determine a point here more than any other material to investigate,—namely, the sense of πολυπραγμοσύνης, which Steph., Duk., Poppo, and Goeller take in a good sense, to denote an active, stirring spirit: but no proof is there that the term ever bore a good sense; for as to the authority of A. Gell. xi. 16, which those commentators adduce, it is insufficient; nor is there any reason to suppose that the term ever had any sense but that of a busy intermeddling in the concerns of others;—a sense here more particularly required by the term associated with πολυπ., namely, τρόπος. Hence I am still, as formerly, of opinion that there is here a concealed sarcasm, or witty point, by which Euphemus uses the very term employed by the enemies of Athens,—choosing to take for granted the truth of the imputation of a busy intermeddling restlessness, which will neither be quiet, nor suffer others to be so. To which purpose compare the sketch of the Athenian character, i. 70, where are various traits that correspond to the πολλὰ πράσσειν here spoken of, and where is lastly subjoined one parallel to the πολυπραγμοσύνη in question: ὥστε μήτε αὐτοὺς ἔχειν ἡσυχίαν, μήτε τοὺς ἄλλους ἀνθρώπους τειν αὐτά, πολὺ δὲ πλείους τῶν Ἑλλήνων καὶ ὠφελεῖν. ἐν παντὶ γὰρ πᾶς χωρίῳ, καὶ ᾧ μὴ ὑπάρχομεν, ὅ τε οἰόμενος ἀδικήσεσθαι καὶ ὁ ἐπιβουλεύων, διὰ τὸ ἑτοίμην ὑπεῖναι ἐλπίδα τῷ μὲν, ἀντιτυχεῖν ἐπικουρίας ἀφ' ἡμῶν, τῷ δὲ, εἰ ἥξομεν, μὴ ἀδεεῖς εἶναι κινδυνεύειν, ἀμφότεροι ἀναγκάζονται ὁ μὲν, ἄκων σωφρονεῖν, ὁ δ', ἀπραγμόνως σώζεσθαι. 4. ταύτην οὖν τὴν κοινὴν τῷ τε δεομένῳ καὶ ὑμῖν νῦν παροῦσαν ἀσφάλειαν μὴ ἀπώσησθε· ἀλλ', ἐξισώσαντες τοῖς ἄλλοις, μεθ' ἡμῶν τοῖς Συρακοσίοις, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀεὶ φυλάσσεσθαι αὐτούς, καὶ ἀντεπιβουλεῦσαί ποτε ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου μεταλάβετε."

LXXXVIII. Τοιαῦτα δὲ ὁ Εὔφημος εἶπεν. οἱ δὲ Καμαριναῖοι ἐπεπόνθεσαν τοιόνδε. τοῖς μὲν Ἀθηναίοις εὔνοι ἦσαν, πλὴν καθ'

ἐᾷν. That πολυπραγμοσύνη and the verb πολυπραγμονεῖν are very frequently used to denote an intermeddling in the concerns of others is quite certain; and that not only as applied to individuals, but to states. Compare Polyb. ii. 43, 9, and 45, 6. ii. 13, 3, τὰ κατὰ τὴν Ἰβηρίαν πολυπραγμονεῖν. xviii. 34, 2, μηδὲν πολ. τῶν κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν. Joseph. Ant. iv. 6, 2, γῆν ἄλλην πολυπραγμονεῖν.

Here, then, by πολυπραγ. is to be understood what the enemies of Athens call a busy intermeddling interference with others; as, in like manner, at ch. 17, 1, Alcibiades, by the same elegant turn, says, ταῦτα ἢ ἐμὴ ἄνοια: nay, it is not quite clear whether in the very expression πολλὰ πράσσειν we may not have a sort of subtle detortio of the sense in which the enemies of Athens used to apply it to Athens. Thus in the above-cited passage of Euripides, as Markland well observes, the herald meant to have the expression πράσσειν πολλὰ taken in the bad sense for πολυπραγμονεῖν (a sense of which he adduces examples from Herodot. v. 33, and Aristoph. Ran. 749); but, in his answer, Theseus dexterously parries the thrust by taking it in the good sense for πολλὰ πονεῖν; which, indeed, he was justified in doing, since even the Corinthian orator, in Thucydides i. 70, describes the Athenians as ἄοκνοι—μετὰ πόνων πάντα—μοχθοῦντες, καὶ μήτε ἑορτὴν ἄλλο τι ἡγούμενοι, ἢ τὸ τὰ δέοντα πρᾶξαι.

ἐν παντὶ γὰρ — σώζεσθαι] Of these words the sense, obscurely expressed, seems to be as follows: 'For all in every place, (even where we are not at hand,) both he who thinks he shall be wronged, and he who meditates the wrong, by reason of the present hope that the one has of obtaining counter-aid from us, and the full expectation of the other, that if we come, he may run the risk of finding us formidable enemies—both parties are obliged, the one to learn moderation, however unwillingly, the other to be saved with no trouble of his own.' Καὶ ᾧ (for ἐν ᾧ) μὴ ὑπάρχομεν, 'even in that where we are not at hand,' viz. to render any aid sought for, as in Sicily, Africa, and other distant countries, as distinguished from Greece. See Goeller and Dr. Arnold. The term ἐλπὶς has here, as Abresch points out, the twofold sense of hope and fear, (or, rather, it may be said to denote fearful expectation, what is at ch. 61 expressed by ἡ ἐλπὶς τοῦ φόβου.) as taken with the two members of the period. Of the words μὴ ἀδεεῖς εἶναι κινδυνεύειν, the sense is best represented thus, 'that we may chance to be not unalarming to him.' Ἀπραγμόνως is equivalent to χωρὶς πόνου, 'without any trouble to him.'

4. ταύτην οὖν — μεταλάβετε] Render, 'This security, then, which now is presented,—common both to the power that entreats it and to yourselves,—reject not; but, acting like other men, instead of always standing on your guard against the Syracusans, unite with us, and take your turn to counterplot against them, as they have plotted against you.' With ἐξισώσαντες (scil. ἑαυτοὺς) τοῖς ἄλλοις (of which the sense is literally, 'making yourselves like others,' i. e. doing as others do; see Milton's Lycidas, v. 67.) compare Soph. El. 1194, μητρὶ δ' οὐδὲν ἐξισοῖ.

Ch. LXXXVIII. 1. ἐπεπόνθεσαν τοιόνδε] 'had stood thus affected:' a sense which πάσχειν bears not unfrequently in the Attic writers, especially Plato; yet almost always, in this case, followed by πρὸς or such like; not, as here, taken absolutely, though πρὸς ἑκατέρους, 'towards each party,' is mentally to be supplied.

πλὴν καθ' ὅσον εἰ] Haack and Poppo bracket the εἰ, which, with Reiske, they suspect to have come from the margin, ὅσον εἰ τὴν Σικελίαν ᾤοντο αὐτοὺς δουλώσεσθαι, τοῖς δὲ Συρακοσίοις ἀεὶ, κατὰ τὸ ὅμορον, διάφοροι· δεδιότες δ' οὐχ ἧσσον τοὺς Συρακοσίους, ἐγγὺς ὄντας, μὴ καὶ ἄνευ σφῶν περιγένωνται, τό τε πρῶτον αὐτοῖς τοὺς ὀλίγους ἱππέας ἔπεμψαν, καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν ἐδόκει αὐτοῖς ὑπουργεῖν μὲν τοῖς Συρακοσίοις μᾶλλον,—ἔργῳ ὡς ἂν δύνωνται μετριώτατα,—ἐν δὲ τῷ παρόντι, ἵνα μηδὲ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἔλασσον δοκῶσι νεῖμαι, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ἐπικρατέστεροι τῇ μάχῃ ἐγένοντο, λόγῳ ἀποκρίνασθαι ἴσα ἀμφοτέροις. 2. καὶ οὕτω βουλευσάμενοι ἀπεκρίναντο, 'ἐπειδὴ τυγχάνει ἀμφοτέροις οὖσι ξυμμάχοις σφῶν πρὸς ἀλλήλους πόλεμος ὤν, εὔορκον δοκεῖν εἶναι σφίσιν ἐν τῷ παρόντι μηδετέροις ἀμύνειν.' καὶ οἱ πρέσβεις ἑκατέρων ἀπῆλθον.

3. Καὶ οἱ μὲν Συρακόσιοι τὰ καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἐξηρτύοντο ἐς τὸν πόλεμον· οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐν τῇ Νάξῳ ἑστρατοπεδευμένοι, τὰ πρὸς τοὺς where it was entered down as an explanation of καθ' ὅσον: but nothing is there in the MSS. to countenance this idea; and καθ' ὅσον needs no explanation. True it is that, as Poppo says, πλὴν καθ' ὅσον without εἰ occurs at ch. 54 and 82, but no gloss is there found. Hence better were it, I think, to suppose the word pleonastic, but that such might justly be pronounced a mere expedient to remove a difficulty: and as εἰ ᾤοντο cannot mean, what Dr. Arnold would make it to mean, 'might think,' (and that both because such a rendering is forbidden by propriety of language, and because it would make their so thinking too hypothetical,) it is best to regard this as one of those many formulas occurring in our author, in which there is a blending of two modes of expression. Moreover, considering the frequent occurrence of πλὴν εἰ and πλὴν ὅσον, both in Thucydides and the best writers, why should we not suppose that καθ' ὅσον between πλὴν and εἰ is blended with πλὴν εἰ by way of increasing the exceptive force; q.d. 'except in so far as?' Thus in the formula πλὴν ἀλλ' εἰ, (on which see Steph. Thes. 7716, e.) we have the same interposition of another particle by way of qualifying the exception.

κατὰ τὸ ὅμορον] 'on account of their being borderers;' which circumstance was a constant source of jealousy and ill-will. See i. 15, 2. v. 69. iv. 92. After μᾶλλον I have placed a comma, because ἔργῳ is to be construed with the words following, not those preceding: the sense of ἔργῳ being reipsâ, reverâ, as often in the best writers, especially Eurip., Xen., and Plato.

ὡς ἂν δύνωνται μετριώτατα] 'as sparingly as they could.'

ἵνα μηδὲ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἔλασσον δοκῶσι νεῖμαι] Here, for vulg. δοκῶσιν εἶναι, I have adopted, with all the later editors, the emendation of Valcken. on Eurip. frag. p. 77, δοκῶσι νεῖμαι, which, though quite unsupported by external evidence, is sufficiently borne out by, what in so very minute a variation far outweighs external, internal evidence. Finally, such must have been the reading in Valla's copy, judging by his rendering, 'ne minoris facere viderentur Athenienses.' With the expression ἔλασσον νέμ. compare Eurip. Suppl. 379, τὸ δ' ἧσσον ἀδικίᾳ Νέμεις. Of the phrase πολὺ, πλέον, or πλεῖστόν τινι νέμειν, examples occur elsewhere in Æsch. Prom. 292, οὐκ ἔστιν ὅτῳ μείζονα μοῖραν νεῖμαι. Plato, p. 492, μηδὲν πλέον νέμοντες τοῖς φίλοις τοῖς αὑτῶν ἢ τοῖς ἐχθροῖς.

3. τὰ καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἐξηρτύοντο] For this several MSS. (to which add Mus. Brit.) have τὰ καθ' ἑαυτούς: but the former, besides yielding a sense more suitable than the latter, (which, as Duker observes, will mean pro virili, as in the phrase τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ,) is sufficiently defended by Herodian iii. 1, 16, ὁ Νίγερος ἐξήρτυε τὰ καθ' ἑαυτόν: and with τὰ καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἐξηρτ. here we may compare τὰ ἡμέτερα αὐτῶν ἐξαρτύεσθαι, supra i. 82. τ' ἄλλα ἐξηρτύσαντο, vii. 65. τὰ περὶ τὴν Α. ἐξηρτ., iv. 107, and ναυτικὰ ἐξηρτύετο ἡ Ἑλλὰς, i. 13: and though the phrase followed, as here, by ἐς τὸν πόλεμον, has something far receding from ordinary use, yet I have noted an example of the same elsewhere in Plato, p. 625, ταῦτα πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον ἐξηρτ. Finally, it may be observed that τὰ is here required in order to correspond to the τὰ a little further on, in the words τὰ πρὸς τοὺς Σικ., where the article is not, as some suppose, redundant, but carries an ellipsis of πράγματα

Σικελοὺς ἔπρασσον, ὅπως αὐτοῖς ὡς πλεῖστοι προσχωρήσονται. 4. καὶ οἱ μὲν πρὸς τὰ πεδία μᾶλλον τῶν Σικελῶν, ὑπήκοοι ὄντες τῶν Συρακοσίων, οἱ πολλοὶ ἀφεστήκεσαν· τῶν δὲ τὴν μεσόγαιαν ἐχόντων †αὐτόνομοι [οὖσαι] καὶ πρότερον ἀεὶ [αἱ] †οἰκήσεις, εὐθὺς, πλὴν ὀλίγοι, μετὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἦσαν, καὶ σῖτόν τε κατεκόμιζον τῷ στραto be supplied from the verb ἔπρασσον, the sense being what we should express by the phrase to manage matters or affairs.

4. οἱ πολλοὶ ἀφεστήκεσαν] For οἱ πολλοί, Canter conjectured the true reading to be οὐ πολλοί, which conjecture has been approved by Duker, and adopted by Poppo; but not on good grounds; since although at ch. 103 we have ἦλθον δὲ καὶ τῶν Σικελῶν πολλοὶ ξύμμαχοι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, οἳ πρότερον περιεωρῶντο, yet that will not exclude οἱ πολλοί, as understood in the sense plerique, since the many of one passage is very consistent with the very many of the other: nor are the two terms ἀφεστ. and περιεωρ. irreconcileable; the former adverting to the fact itself, that they stood aloof (literally, stood or held off); the latter, to the animus which dictated it,—namely, that of looking around, waiting to see which party should be superior. And one who thus looks about him will, of course, stand off or keep aloof. Hence I must still, as formerly, prefer the interpretation of the Scholiast, οὐ προσεχώρουν, which, as Dukas observes, is confirmed by another passage of our author, iv. 119, οὐδενὸς ἀποστήσονται, and vii. 7, and viii. 2, ἀφειστήκει τοῦ πολέμου; as also by several of Demosthenes, Aristides, Lucian, and others adduced in Steph. Thes. Poppo, indeed, objects that in all those cases the genitive is added; the omission of which here Dr. Arnold thinks remarkable, but is of opinion that τῶν Ἀθηναίων must be supplied from what immediately follows; comparing a passage of Demosth. p. 355, ἐγὼ δὲ ἀφίσταμαι scil. τοῦ πράγματος, 'I have nothing to do with the matter.' Under these circumstances Poppo's decision is as follows: 'Quum ἀφίστασθαι, ubicunque aut absolute aut etiam addito genitivo nationis legitur, deficere Thucydidi sonet, atque ex altera interpretatione imperfectum magis requiratur, Canteri conjecturam adhuc probabilem ducimus:' but of these two reasons neither would seem very cogent; especially in a writer, like our author, who recedes so far from ordinary usage. The former is quite irrelevant, considering that ἀφίστασθαι is not here the word most in question; and the latter is any thing but forcible; inasmuch as the pluperfect where we should have expected the perfect tense,—and that also associated with the perfect,—is sometimes found in the best writers, especially the earlier ones, as Homer, Herodotus, and Thucydides. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 505, 4, (where is adduced another passage of our author, vii. 86, ἐτεθνήκει — μετεχείρισαν,) and Kühn. Gr. § 400, 2, (ed. Jelf,) who truly remarks, that 'where the perfect has a present sense, the pluperfect is used as a perfect;' which is the very case in the present instance, since ἕστηκα has the sense of a present, 'I stand.'

Finally, I am enabled to confirm the interpretation of the Scholiast above mentioned, from a passage of Josephus, written, I doubt not, with a view to the present, Bell. Jud. vii. 8, 1, καὶ τὴν μὲν ἄλλην ἅπασαν (scil. Ἰουδαίαν) ὁρῶν τῷ πολέμῳ κεχειρωμένην, ἓν δὲ μόνον ἔτι φρούριον ἀφεστηκὸς, for οὐ προσχωροῦν, 'holding out, not coming over to terms of surrender.' In nearly the same sense ἀφίσταμαι occurs in a passage of Polyb. xxxvi. 6, 1, καὶ τότε συνεγγίσας τοῖς ἐφεδρείαις, προβαλόμενος ὀφρὺν ἀπότομον, ἀπέστη καὶ πλείω χρόνον: and nearly the same sense the word bears in the passage above cited of Demosthenes, where it stands for οὐ κοινωνῶ.

τῶν δὲ τὴν μεσόγαιαν — ἦσαν] The obscurity justly complained of by Duker in these words will be materially diminished if we adopt, as I have done, the conjecture of Bekker, (which had long ago occurred to myself before the appearance of his edition,) and interpret οἰκήσεις, with Hudson, Bauer, Dukas, and Dr. Arnold, in the sense oppidula. 'The term οἰκήσεις,' observes Dr. Arnold, 'was employed by our author in preference to πόλεις or even κῶμαι, in order to denote the absolutely barbarian habits of the Sicuh, whose habitations had nothing in them approaching to civil union: and thus,' he adds, 'it is the term used by Plato (de Leg. iii. p. 681) to describe the first assemblage of dwellings formed by men in the very infancy of society, τῶν οἰκήσεων τούτων μειζόνων αὐξανομένων ἐκ τῶν ἐλαττόνων καὶ πρώτων.' I add, that Diodorus, (iv. 30.) making mention of a mountain tribe in Sardinia, τεύματι, καὶ εἰσὶν οἳ καὶ χρήματα. 5. ἐπὶ δὲ τοὺς μὴ προσχωροῦντας οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι στρατεύοντες τοὺς μὲν προσηνάγκαζον, τοὺς δὲ καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν Συρακοσίων, φρουρούς τε πεμπόντων καὶ βοηθούντων, *ἀπεκωλύοντο. τόν τε χειμῶνα μεθορμισάμενοι ἐκ τῆς Νάξου ἐς τὴν Κατάνην, καὶ τὸ στρατόπεδον, ὃ κατεκαύθη ὑπὸ τῶν Συρακοσίων, employs the very term οἰκήσεις to designate their habitations, which he says were subterraneous caves hewn out of the mountains (like the Troglodytæ mentioned by Strabo and others); and the inhabitants he describes as being in the lowest state of barbarism. Moreover, he mentions their perpetual independence, his words (probably written with a view to the present passage) being, ἅπαντα τὸν αἰῶνα διαμένοντες ἐλεύθεροι. At any rate, the description he there gives of the Sardinian mountaineers might not unaptly have been employed of these Sikelians: μεταστάντες ἐς τὴν ὀρεινὴν, ἐν ταῖς δυσχωρίαις κατῴκησαν. Ἐθίσαντες δ' ἑαυτοὺς τρέφεσθαι γάλακτι καὶ κρέασι, καὶ πολλὰς ἀγέλας κτηνῶν τρέφοντες, οὐκ ἐπεδέοντο σίτου. Κατασκευάσαντες δ' οἰκήσεις (domicilia, sedes) ἑαυτοῖς καταγείους, καὶ τὴν τοῦ βίου διεξαγωγὴν ἐν τοῖς διορύγμασι ποιούμενοι, ('dragging out their miserable existence in caves,') τοὺς ἐκ τῶν πολέμων κινδύνους ἐξέφυγον (where, for πολέμων, I conjecture the true reading to be πολεμίων). Compare also three passages of the Old Testament, Is. ii. 19, and Jerem. xvi. 16. xlviii. 28, and finally a passage of Xen. Cyr. ii. 14, 12, where Cyrus, inquiring about the Armenians (inhabitants also of a remarkably rugged and mountainous country), asks the question, αἱ δ' οἰκήσεις πότερον ἐν ἐχυροῖς χωρίοις εἰσίν; where by οἰκήσεις cannot be meant what Poppo understands it to denote, domicilia, but oppidula; the term being employed to intimate a state of things like the above, wherein the inhabitants of what would elsewhere form a petty village, being crowded into one cave, formed a domicile not widely differing from what were the towns of our Saxon ancestors: and so in Thuc. i. 6, διὰ τὰς ἀφράκτους οἰκήσεις, the term οἰκ., though it properly signifies domicilia or sedes, yet must at any rate denote towns, such as are called at v. 1, πόλεις ἀτείχιστοι. Accordingly the construction will be, αἱ δὲ οἰκήσεις τῶν ἐχόντων τὴν μεσόγαιαν, οὖσαι καὶ πρότερον ἀεὶ αὐτόνομοι, εὐθὺς ἦσαν μετὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, πλὴν ὀλίγοι [ἄνθρωποι, per synesin], where the transition from the feminine to the masculine is, in Poppo's opinion, not more harsh than certain others adduced by him in Proleg. i. 1, p. 102, seq. Of those, the only instance quite to the purpose is from viii. 64, fin. σωφροσύνην λαβοῦσαι αἱ πόλεις — οὐ προτιμήσαντες. Yet, what might be tolerated in πόλεις there, cannot in οἰκήσεις here. Harsh enough were it to take οἰκήσεις as standing for πόλεις according to the proper sense of the word; but intolerably harsh were it to regard the city as put for the citizens. Upon the whole, there is great reason to think that the corruption of the passage in all the MSS. is too extensive to be removed by the mild means adopted by Bekker; and I suspect that the corruption rests chiefly with οὖσαι, (which seems to have been accidentally introduced from the margin, where it had been entered down to fill up the construction) though also with αὐτόνομοι and οἰκήσεις, for which the true reading is, I apprehend, αὐτονόμῳ and οἰκήσει. Accordingly the passage will stand thus: τῶν δὲ τὴν μεσογαίαν ἐχόντων αὐτονόμῳ, καὶ πρότερον ἀεὶ, οἰκήσει, εὐθὺς, &c.: of this phrase, which is rare, another example occurs supra ii. 16, 1, τῇ τε οὖν ἐπὶ πολὺ κατὰ τὴν χώραν αὐτονόμῳ οἰκήσει μετεῖχον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, i. e. 'used (or enjoyed) free and independent habitancy.' Here, then, the sense will similarly be, 'those who occupied the inland region, even ever aforetime held in independent habitancy, they immediately, [all] except a few, were on the side of the Athenians.' The genitive here, τῶν ἐχόντων, stands for what we should rather have expected, the nominative, because it is a genitivus partitivus, to be referred to the word left understood, though plainly alluded to, at πλὴν ὀλίγοι, namely, πάντες.

5. ἀπεκωλύοντο] For vulg. ἀπεκώλυον, I have at length ventured to receive the above what may be called certain emendation of Doederlein; which had also occurred to Bekker and Dobree, and has been edited by Poppo, Goeller, Bekker (2nd edit.), Haack (2nd edit.), and Dr. Arnold. As respects the construction, we must here supply μὴ (or τοῦ) προσαναγκάζειν from the context. See Goeller, who compares a passage infra ch. 102 (where at διεκώλυσε supply αἱρεῖν), and Dobree another, ch. 91, κωλύσετε, scil. ὠφελεῖσθαι.

Certain it is that the το in ἀπεκωλύοντο might easily be lost, either as absorbed in the το of τόν just after, or rather from the circumstance that in the ancient MSS. it would be written (as it is actually in Mus. Brit.) ἀπεκωλύονˉ, which the later copyists would easily mistake for ἀπεκώλυον, especially in case of the τ being faded.

6. εἰ δύναιντό τι ὠφελεῖσθαι] 'to try if they could get any aid:' on which sense of ὠφελεῖσθαι I have before treated.

ἐξόμενοι τοῦ πολέμου] 'as being about to apply themselves closely to the war.' Compare i. 140, ἔχ. γνώμης, and iv. 66, λόγου ἔχεσθαι.

7. ὡς καὶ ἐκείνοις ἐπιβουλευόμενα] 'as treacherously planned against them also.' Compare iii. 96, 3, ὅτε τὸ πρῶτον ἐπεβουλεύετο, scil. ἡ παρασκευή, 'when the design of the expedition was being planned.'

8. ψηφισάμενοι—ὥστε] On this use of ὥστε Goeller refers to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 531, obs. 2, and Poppo compares other passages, infra viii. 45, πεῖσαι ὥστε, and 79, δόξαν ὥστε, and 86, ἐπαγγελλόμενοι ὥστε.

9. φορτηγικοῦ] 'a vessel of burden.' Many of the best MSS. have φορτητικοῦ, but that may justly be supposed an error of the scribes arising from their mistaking ſ for τ: not to mention that the word would be formed contrary to analogy. As to φορτηγικοῦ πλοίου here, there is the less reason to suspect it to be wrong, considering that the word occurs in Xen. Anab. v. 1, 18, τὰ φορτηγικὰ πλοῖα καὶ γέμοντα ἔξω ἄγειν.

ὑπόσπονδος ἐλθών] 'having gone under the sanction of a solemn assurance of safety;' corresponding to what we call a safe-conduct. Ὑπόσπονδος is one of those adjectives formed from a phrase consisting of a preposition and substantive governed of it. Thus ὑπόσπονδος stands simply for ὑπὸ σπονδαῖς, equiv. to Lat. sub fide, i. e. pactione, and may bear the sense either of fide data, as Polyb. iii. 8, 1. (where we have ὑπόσπονδον ἀφιέναι τινά.) Xen. Hist. i. 2, 12. ii. 2, 1. iv. 8, 8, and often in Plutarch; or, fide accepta, as in two other passages of our author, ii. 79, and vi. 103: and the epithet is in Thucydides, Xen., and Polyb., very frequently applied to the slain in battle, permitted to be taken away for burial, fide accepta, scil. ex victoribus, who are said ἀποδιδόναι. Far less frequent is it for persons to be said to go forth from a besieged place fide accepta, ('sub pactione,') viz. from the besiegers; which is the use of the term supra i. 103, and Herodot. v. 72. Diod. Sic. t. ii. 375, et al.: and very rare is it for a person to be said to go to any place ὑπόσπονδος, as here, and vi. 59, ἐχώρει ὑπόσπονδος ἐς Σιγεῖον. The only examples of this use that I have noted out of Thucydides, are, Herodot. vi. 103, κατῆλθε ἐπὶ τὰ ἑωυτοῦ ὑπόσπονδος, 'sub pactione,' 'under safe-conduct.' Eurip. Phœn. 79, ὑπόσπονδον μολεῖν Ἔπεισα παιδὶ παῖδα, where the term may be rendered 'fide inita,' since it implies the mutually giving and receiving the solemn pledge of security: and so 460, ὅπως κλύοιμί σου Κοινὰς βραβείας, αἷς ὑπόσπονδον μολεῖν Τόνδ' εἰσεδέξω τειχέων, where by βραβείας is meant διαλλαγάς. Such a mutual pactio must also be meant in a passage of Plutarch, viii. 363, τὴν Καδμείαν ὑπόσπονδον παραδόντες ἡμῖν, where, however, for ὑπόσπονδον, is doubtless to be read ὑπόσπονδοι. The same error is observable in Diod. Sic. t. iii. 364, ἐξέλιπον τὸ χωρίον ὑπόσπονδον. In Polyb. v. 86, 4, ἐκήδευσε τοὺς τεθνεῶτας ὑποσπόνδους. Schweighæuser says, 'omnino scribendum putem ὑπόσπονδος:' but the learned critic did not consider, that as the conquered are said to ask for the dead ὑποσπόνδους, and, accordingly, to receive them ὑποσπόνδους, and also ἀνελέσθαι νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους, (an expression of frequent occurrence in Xen. and Thucydides,) so there is no reason why they should not be said κηδεύειν τοὺς νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους.

10. τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην δεομένους] 'by making the same requests as Alcibiades [did].' For vulg. κωλύσοντας I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, adopted κωλύοντας, this being supported alike by external authority and internal evidence. In παρώξυνέ τε καὶ ἐξώρμησε we have a highly significant form of expression, by the union of two terms which, however synonymous, yet have this distinction, that the former signifies, 'to whet on or egg on persons to quarrel and fight,' by working on their angry feelings; (so Xen. Hist. vi. 4, 6, says, παροξ. πρὸς τὸ μάχην συνάπτειν: and Shakspeare, 'Oh whet not on those two too furious peers!') the latter, to goad on to action by the application of strong motives, such as literally will not let one rest. So Hom. Il. vi. 338, με—ἐπέεσιν Ὄρμησ' ἐς πόλεμον.

CH. LXXXIX. In the able speech now before us (which Dionys. Hal. made his model in the harangue ascribed by him, Ant. viii. 3, to Coriolanus addressing the Volsci) Alcibiades commences with loosening their prejudices, by apologizing for his former opposition to the interests of Lacedæmon, and that on the ground that it was forced upon him by their neglect of his attentions, and their strengthening the hands of his political adversaries; hence he argues, that they have no reason to keep up their resentment, but might be appeased. Such is the substance of the first three sections, forming the proem. In § 1 there is a not unusual captatio benevolentiæ, intended to deprecate any prejudice against him on the score of his constant enmity to Sparta, and as constant support to democracy in opposition to oligarchy.

1. τῆς ἐμῆς διαβολῆς] For τῆς κατ' ἐμοῦ διαβολῆς, 'the crimination, or accusation (αἰτίας), brought against me,' i. e. of being a determined enemy of Lacedæmon, and supporter of democracy. Such is the sense of διαβολῆς, and not that assigned by Smith and others, calumny; for the thing is considered in the light of a charge or imputation quâ male audiebat, and which the speaker now proceeds to refute. Compare i. 131. vi. 29. viii. 91, οὐ πάνυ διαβολὴ μόνον τοῦ λόγου. Of χεῖρον τὰ κοινὰ τῷ ὑπόπτῳ μου ἀκροάσησθε the sense is, 'lend a less attentive ear to what concerns the public weal by your suspicion of me.'

2. τῶν δ' †ἡμῶν προγόνων την προξενίαν ὑμῶν κατά τι ἔγκλημα ἀπειπόντων αὐτὸς ἐγὼ πάλιν ἀναλαμβάνων ἐθεράπευον ὑμᾶς, ἄλλα τε καὶ περὶ τὴν ἐκ Πύλου ξυμφοράν. καὶ διατελοῦντός μου προθύμου, ὑμεῖς, πρὸς Ἀθηναίους καταλλασσόμενοι, τοῖς μὲν ἐμοῖς ἐχθροῖς δύναμιν, δι' ἐκείνων πράξαντες, ἐμοὶ δὲ ἀτιμίαν περιέθετε. 3. καὶ διὰ ταῦτα δικαίως ὑπ' ἐμοῦ, πρός τε τὰ Μαντινέων καὶ Ἀργείων τραπομένου καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα ἠναντιούμην ὑμῖν, ἐβλάπτεσθε. καὶ

2. τῶν δ' ἡμῶν προγόνων] Reiske and Poppo, objecting to the position of δὲ and the use of the plur. pron. where the sing. might have been expected, would, for τῶν δ' ἡμῶν προγόνων, read τῶν δ' ἐμῶν προγόνων. But no such alteration is necessary, since, as respects the δ', that may very well stand (as it not unfrequently does in our author) for the γὰρ explicative (answering to Lat. enim), or for the narrative autem; its purpose being to usher in a statement of the circumstances on which Alcibiades seeks to remove the charge against him. With respect to the emendation ἐμῶν, that is by Krueger and Dr. Arnold rejected on the ground that as the plural occurs several times in the course of the chapter, it may here be taken for the singular; or that his fellow-exiles, who may be understood to have accompanied him, may be included; or, again, that he may have meant to include some others of his family, certain members of which may have been banished with him. Against these arguments, however, Poppo urges that the collocation of the pers. pron. ἡμῶν is such as to run counter to Attic usage; and the mention of his family, which the speaker makes further on, is there far more in place than it would be here. Of which two reasons the latter has far more force and weight than the former. Though, indeed, the whole defence of the common reading involves so much of what is merely suppositious and conjectural, as to be quite inadmissible. Far less difficulty is involved in the supposition that the copyists by mistake wrote, for ἐμῶν, ἡμῶν. As to προξενίαν, just after, it is well observed by Goeller, 'discernenda est ἰδιοξενία familiarum Alcibiadis Spartani et Attici a προξενίᾳ familiæ Alcibiadis Attici cum Spartanis publice inita.' He also enters at large (chiefly from Mueller's Dor. ii. p. 411, note 3, and Wachsm. Ant. i. p. 268, sq. note 22.) into the subject of the connexion by hospitality of the family of the Attic Alcibiades with the Spartans.

διατελοῦντός μου προθύμου] Other writers (as Euripides, Herodian, and Arrian) use τὸ πρόθυμον for προθυμίᾳ; but I have met with no instance elsewhere of the omission of the article, so indispensable to converting the adjective into a substantive. Hence I suspect that, for μου should be read τοῦ, where the article may at once stand for the pron. possess., and also convert the adjective into a substantive. Not but that this presents too much of what may be called the short cut; and exact propriety would rather have required τοῦ ἐμοῦ προθύμου, as in Eur. Med. 179, μήτοι τό γ' ἐμὸν πρόθυμον φίλοισιν ἀπέστω. In such a case, it seems, the article is thought to be sufficient, expressed once, to serve both purposes, when placed before the adjective or adj. pronoun.

Retaining, however, the common reading, we must suppose that πρόθυμον is here regarded as a noun substantive, like διάφορον, dissidium, a word formed from τὸ διάφορον. So we have both τὰ διάφορα, and διάφορα without the τὰ at v. 65, οὐ περὶ μικρῶν τὸν κίνδυνον εἶναι—διαφόρων, and iv. 87, τὰ μέγιστα ἡμῖν διάφορα, also in Xen. An. iv. 6, 2, and Mem. ii. 3, 5.

ἐμοὶ δὲ ἀτιμίαν περιέθετε] Compare iv. 87, τῇ πόλει τὸ κάλλιστον ὄνομα περιθεῖναι. Demosth. 1417, 3, δόξαν περ., also the expressions ἀξίωμα and κόσμον περ. in Plut., and ἀξίωμα περ. in Æschin. The metaphor in these cases is one taken from dress, and derived from the custom of honouring or disgracing any one, by putting upon him a rich robe or a mean garment. Compare Ps. lxxi. 13, περιβαλλέσθωσαν αἰσχύνην. Here the meaning is simply, 'ye put a slight upon me:' and answering to this is the expression in Lucilius ap. Non. i. 93, ignominiam alicui imponere.

3. The words πρός τε—ὑμῖν advert to the instances of injury done to them and him: and of πρὸς τὰ M. καὶ Ἀργ. τραπομένου, the sense is, 'to pass over to the side or interests of the Mantineans and Argives.' Compare iii. 55, πρὸς Ἀθηναίους τραπέσθαι, 'to go over to the Athenians.' The words following, ὅσα ἄλλα ἠναντιούμην ὑμῖν, have reference to the νῦν, εἴ τις καὶ τότε ἐν τῷ πάσχειν, οὐκ εἰκότως, ὠργίζετό μοι, μετὰ τοῦ ἀληθοῦς σκοπῶν ἀναπειθέσθω· ἢ, εἴ τις, διότι καὶ τῷ δημῳ προσεκείμην μᾶλλον, χείρω με ἐνόμιζε, μηδ' οὕτως ἡγήσηται ὀρθῶς ἄχθεσθαι. τοῖς γὰρ τυράννοις ἀεί ποτε διάφοροί ἐσμεν· πᾶν δὲ τὸ ἐναντιούμενον τῷ δυναστεύοντι δῆμος ὠνόμασται· καὶ ἀπ' ἐκείνου ξυμπαρέμεινεν ἡ προστασία ἡμῖν τοῦ πλήθους. ἅμα δὲ, τῆς πόλεως δημοκρατουμένης, τὰ πολλὰ ἀνάγκη ἦν τοῖς παροῦσιν ἕπεσθαι. 4. τῆς δὲ ὑπαρχούσης ἀκολασίας ἐπειρώμεθα μετριώτε-

καὶ νῦν—ἀναπειθέσθω] These words are closely connected with the preceding, and are inferential; the meaning being, in other words, 'and [accordingly] now,—though any one was then, while under suffering, incensed, however causelessly, against me,—let him now, considering things in their true light, be persuaded to change his opinion.' Ἀναπειθέσθω here stands for μεταπειθέσθω, 'to be drawn to another opinion;' a sense very rare, of which examples occur elsewhere in Plato, p. 304. 370. 371. 495: so also in a passage of the Old Testament, Prov. xxv. 15, it is said, 'by long forbearing is a prince appeased,' lit. persuaded, viz. to turn from his anger, change his intention. Οὐκ εἰκότως stands, as Poppo says, for ἀπεικότως, unreasonably. Compare οὐκ ἀπεικότως, i. 73. The reason why οὐκ εἰκότως was here used, and not ἀπεικότως, was, that the expression is parenthetical, and accordingly rather requiring two words than one.

ἢ εἴ τις, &c.] Alcibiades now proceeds to the second charge against him, founded on his devoted attachment to democratical principles; and here he appeals to their equitable allowance, inasmuch as 'he could not well set himself against the institutions of his country.' He however, most adroitly, slips it in, by way of a captatio benevolentiæ, what Thirlwall terms 'a liberal sneer at the Athenian constitution,' and with the same view ascribes his expulsion to the extravagance of democratical licence. At ἀναπειθέσθω I have placed a colon, not a period, as is done by Bekker and Dr. Arnold, the latter of whom here commences a new section: but that is quite forbidden by the ἢ, εἴ τις, for the particle ἢ never commences a new sentence, unless it be an interrogative one; it can only commence a new clause, and where it strictly signifies aut, 'or,' it must have reference to a clause preceding, (or the first member of a sentence,) which must have an ἢ expressed, or understood, or, as here, some equivalent, such as καί. Thus here καὶ εἴ τις has corresponding to it, ἢ εἴ τις, aut si. This use of ἢ is very rare in any but interrogative sentences, (where it is frequent,) and the only example of it that I have noted elsewhere, is in Plato, p. 453, ἢ ἔχεις τι λέγειν; No instance of this use with εἰ following have I met with except in the present passage. In Latin, too, extremely rare is the use of aut, si, &c. found in Virg. Eclog. vii. 24, 'aut, si non possumus omnia;' yet there aut precedes. Even here, however, the disjunctive force of ἢ is very perceptible, since it serves to introduce another and different argument.

τῷ δήμῳ προσεκείμην] 'was attached to democracy,' addictus sum; denoting the attachment which springs from long friendship. So Herodot. vi. 61, ἦν οἱ φίλος τῶν Σ. ἀνὴρ, τῷ προσεκέετο τῶν ἀστῶν μάλιστα ὁ Ἀ. Dio Cass. 254, 36, τῷ ὁμίλῳ προσκ. Alcibiades employs here the term δήμῳ as one fitted to his present purpose, this forming one of the three arguments which, as Goeller observes, he here uses in order to ward off the charge against him, (contained in the words τοῖς γὰρ τυράννοις—λοιδορήσαιμι,) namely, that it was τῷ δήμῳ, not τῷ ὄχλῳ, that he was attached to, i. e. to democracy, not to ochlocracy.

τοῖς γὰρ τυράννοις—ἐσμεν] Meaning, that he and his family had ever been opposed to despotic rule. Of the words following, πᾶν δὲ τὸ—ὠνόμασται, the sense is, 'now whatever [part of the citizens] is opposed to despotic rule, (in other words, 'that party in the city which is politically opposed to tyranny,' or every power exercised without being sanctioned by lawful authority in the will of the people,) is denominated the people.'

καὶ ἀπ' ἐκείνου—πλήθους] 'and from that cause,' viz. because one naturally associates enmity to despotic power with support of popular right and power. Τοῖς παροῦσιν ἕπεσθαι, 'to follow the course of things as they are,' act as a conservative.

4. τῆς δὲ ὑπαρχούσης—εἶναι] 'but we

ροι ἐς τὰ πολιτικὰ εἶναι. ἄλλοι δ' ἦσαν,—καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν πάλαι, καὶ νῦν,— οἳ ἐπὶ τὰ πονηρότερα ἐξῆγον τὸν ὄχλον· οἵπερ καὶ ἐμὲ ἐξήλασαν. 5. ἡμεῖς δὲ τοῦ ξύμπαντος προέστημεν, δικαιοῦντες, ἐν ᾧ σχήματι μεγίστη ἡ πόλις ἐτύγχανε καὶ ἐλευθερωτάτη οὖσα, καὶ ὅπερ ἐδέξατό τις, τοῦτο ξυνδιασώζειν· ἐπεὶ δημοκρατίαν γε καὶ ἐγιγνώσκομεν οἱ φρονοῦντές τι,—καὶ αὐτὸς οὐδενὸς ἂν χεῖρον, ὅσῳ † καὶ λοιδορήσαιμι, [γιγνώσκοιμι]—ἀλλὰ περὶ ὁμολογουμένης ἀνοίας οὐδὲν ἂν endeavoured to be more moderate in matters of polity, than agreed with the existing intemperate licence of the populace;' τῆς ὑπαρχ. ἀκολασίας standing, by a somewhat harsh use, for ἡ κατὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν ἀκολασίαν, as i. 76, δικαιότεροι ἢ κατὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν δύναμιν. The same idiom has place at i. 84.

ἄλλοι δ' ἦσαν—οἳ ἐπὶ τὰ πονηρότερα ἐξῆγον τὸν ὄχλον] By these Dr. Arnold supposes to be meant, the high aristocratical party: and the same view is adopted by Goeller and Poppo. But this, I apprehend, besides being highly improbable in itself, is at once discountenanced by the very term ὄχλον, which naturally suggests the idea of those belonging to the low democratical, or mob-party, rather than that of the high aristocrats, who surely cannot be supposed to have had any influence with the mob. I fully agree with Bp. Thirlwall, that the true interpretation of the words here is to be sought in those of another passage infra viii. 65, where the demagogue Androcles is described as the man ὅσπερ καὶ τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην οὐχ ἥκιστα ἐξήλασεν: as Plutarch, Alcib. 19, observes, ἦν γὰρ οὗτος ἐχθρὸς ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου. In πονηρότερα there is, not the mere use of comparative for positive, but the expression imports deteriora quam par est, 'worse than should have been,' or, than consisted with the moderate political principles of Alcibiades. In ἐξῆγον we have the same metaphor as at iii. 45, 5, ἐξάγουσιν ἐς τοὺς κινδύνους.

5. τοῦ ξύμπαντος] Another term to denote, like respublica, 'democracy.' With the sentiment in ἐν ᾧ σχήματι—ξυνδιασώζειν, compare i. 71, and vi. 18. By σχῆμα, scil. πολιτικὸν, is meant, 'form of constitution.'

In like manner Coriolanus, in order to show that the Volsci ought not to distrust him, but may place full reliance on him, at first adverts to the constitution of his country, and notices the political feuds which caused him to be banished.

ἐπεὶ δημοκρατίαν — φρονοῦντές τι] 'since democracy, forsooth, we who had any sense, knew,' viz. what it is. In the next words there exists a difficulty almost insuperable; to remove which, Krueger and Arnold would suppose some words lost before λοιδορήσαιμι, so that the words οὐδενὸς ἂν χεῖρον properly belong to that verb, and after ὅσῳ should, they think, be supplied μᾶλλον ὑπ' αὐτῆς. This, however, is too bold a mode of emendation to be approved: and as to the versions proposed by Arnold and Dobree, these, though they present the general sense intended, yet yield such a sense as can by no means be said to arise either out of the words as they stand, or as they propose to emend them. Now, it is the opinion of Poppo, that if all be right in the words, we must at ἂν χεῖρον supply γιγνώσκοιμι, and at ὅσῳ λοιδορήσαιμι the particle ἄν, which we may suppose omitted here because it was put in the former member of the sentence. Thus (continues he) the sentiment will stand as follows: 'Et ego non minus quam alius ullus intelligam, quo magis vel objurgem, i. e. quo justiorem causam objurgandi habeam.' Yet all surely cannot be right in a sentence which requires certain words to be supplied in so irregular a manner as each of the foregoing methods requires. Under these circumstances, I venture to propose an emendation at once mild and effectual,—which is after λοιδορήσαιμι to insert γιγνώσκοιμι, (which may easily have been lost after so very similar a word,) and for καὶ λοιδ. to read κἂν,—by which all will be right, since the ἄν after οὐδενὸς will thus belong to γιγνώσκ., and λοιδ. will have the ἄν which it requires. Easily might the κἂν be mistaken (as it has not unfrequently been elsewhere) for καί: and quite indispensable is the ἄν here, the conditional force imparted by the conjunction being demanded by the words which follow, ἀλλὰ περὶ ὁμολογουμένης ἀνοίας οὐδὲν ἂν καινὸν λέγοιτο; of which the meaning is, in other words, 'I could revoke it; but nothing new would be said on what involves the imputation of acknowledged folly,—namely, a democratical form of government.'

Accordingly I have ventured to insert the word γιγνώσκοιμι, in small characters, καινὸν λέγοιτο·—καὶ τὸ μεθιστάναι αὐτὴν οὐκ ἐδόκει ἡμῖν ἀσφαλὲς εἶναι, ὑμῶν πολεμίων προσκαθημένων.

XC. "Καὶ τὰ μὲν ἐς τὰς ἐμὰς διαβολὰς τοιαῦτα ξυνέβη· περὶ δὲ ὧν ὑμῖν τε βουλευτέον, καὶ ἐμοὶ—εἴ τι πλέον οἶδα—εἰσηγητέον, μάθετε ἤδη. 2. Ἐπλεύσαμεν ἐς Σικελίαν πρῶτον μέν, εἰ δυναίμεθα, and within brackets. And though no MS. has preserved it, it would seem that Dionys. Hal. had it in his copy, since at Antiq. ii. 20, his words are, ἀλλά, καίπερ ἐπιστάμενος ταῦτα οὐδενὸς χεῖρον: and in no other writer, I believe, do we find this rare use of οὐδενὸς χεῖρον by litotes for 'as well as any one.'

The sense of the words may be thus expressed: 'And I too myself should (or might) know this, better than any, in proportion as I could (or might) speak more severely of it,' literally, might, if I pleased or thought it worth while: on which force of the ἄν, as imparting to the optative (which of itself could only express an indefinite possibility) something conditional, see Jelf's Kühn. Gr. § 425, 1. With καὶ αὐτὸς here compare Soph. Phil. 319, Ἐγὼ δὲ καὐτὸς τοῖσδε μάρτυς ἐν λόγοις, Ὡς εἰσ' ἀληθεῖς οἶδα (where, for ἐν, which cannot be right, read ὧν).

For vulg. ὅσον, I have, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, received ὅσῳ, which is at once supported by a vastly preponderating weight of external authority from MSS. (including Mus. Brit.) and borne out by internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance that the use in question (to signify, 'in proportion to,' or eo quod) is of frequent occurrence in our author, (see i. 68. iii. 45. v. 90. vi. 11.) though somewhat rare in other writers. Of course in this case μᾶλλον is implied. Again, for vulg. ἀγνοίας, I have, with Haack, Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, adopted ἀνοίας, which has in its favour a preponderating weight of external evidence from MSS. (including Mus. Brit.) and is supported by strong internal evidence, as existing in the greater propriety of ἄνοια taken as at iii. 42. 48. iv. 17. The same error should be emended in Plut. Alcib. c. 38. Plut. de Is. et Os. 24. Democrit. ap. Stob. Serm. p. 233, 41. Clem. Alex. 374, c. Isocr. Areop. § 33, p. 244, seemingly written with a view to the present passage. Also in Phalar. Ep. 57, καὶ κακὴ ἄγνοια, I conjecture καὶ κακὴ καὶ ἄγνοια. The contrary emendation ought to be adopted in Liban. Orat. 138, and Plato de Repub. l. ii. p. 607. With the sentiment Poppo compares Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1179, and Demosth. p. 383, ὁ δῆμος—ἀσυνθετώτατον, where he rightly emends, from several MSS., ἀσυνετ.: a correction confirmed by a passage which Demosthenes had there probably in view, of Herodot. iii. 81, ὁμίλου ἀχρηίου οὐδὲν ἐστι ἀξυνετώτερον. See Dio Cass. l. lii. 15.

The words καὶ τὸ μεθιστάναι—προσκαθημένων are not to be taken with those that immediately precede them, the moods and tenses of the verbs being quite different. Neither, however, are they, what Dr. Arnold supposes, a continuation of the sentence δικαιοῦντες τοῦτο ξυνδιασώζειν: but they are to be referred to ἐπεὶ δημοκρατίαν—ἐγιγνώσκομεν οἱ φρονοῦντές τι, the intermediate words being in some measure parenthetical. To this, indeed, it is objected by Poppo, that 'thus the καὶ must have an adversative sense.' But the objection is not valid; since, considering that this is a not unfrequent use of καὶ in the best Attic writers, no reason is there why it should not be admitted here. The καὶ, indeed, bears here exactly the same sense as in Aristoph. Conc. 977, and a passage of the New Test., Matt. vi. 26, ὅτι οὐ σπείρουσιν—καὶ ὁ Πατὴρ ὑμῶν τρέφει αὐτά, 'and yet,' &c. The meaning, then, may be thus expressed: 'We know very well what democracy is (i. e. how foolish a thing); and yet to change it [into any other form] did not seem safe,' &c.

CH. XC. The speaker now proceeds to relate the real design with which the Sicilian expedition had been undertaken. This he prefaces with the words καὶ τὰ μὲν—ἤδη, which serve as the vinculum to what follows, and of which the general sense is, 'And so stand matters as regards the charges against me:' though, according to the literal sense, they import that the circumstances of the case as regarded the charges against him, were such as he avers, fell out as he says: in other words, he has given 'a plain unvarnished tale.' But (be that as it may) he bids them listen and learn as to the matters about which they are now to consult,—and he ventures to counsel or suggest what is proper to be done. See note on iii. 20, 1. The words εἴ τι πλέον οἶδα are thrown in by way of intimating, that he knows more than the other counsellors, of the real intentions of Athens. Compare v. 29, πλέον τι εἰδότας.

Σικελιώτας καταστρεψόμενοι, μετὰ δ' ἐκείνους αὖθις καὶ Ἰταλιώτας, ἔπειτα καὶ τῆς Καρχηδονίων ἀρχῆς, καὶ αὐτῶν, ἀποπειράσοντες. 3. εἰ δὲ προχωρήσειε ταῦτα, ἢ πάντα ἢ καὶ τὰ πλείω, ἤδη τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ ἐμέλλομεν ἐπιχειρήσειν, κομίσαντες ξύμπασαν μὲν τὴν ἐκεῖθεν προσγενομένην δύναμιν τῶν Ἑλλήνων, πολλοὺς δὲ βαρβάρους μισθωσάμενοι, καὶ Ἴβηρας καὶ ἄλλους τῶν ἐκεῖ, ὁμολογουμένως νῦν [βαρβάρων] μαχιμωτάτους * * * * * τριήρεις τε, πρὸς ταῖς

2. τῆς Καρχηδονίων ἀρχῆς] Meaning, the states subject to them, as Ionia and the islands to Attica; meaning Corsica, Sardinia, the Baleares, and the provinces of Bætica and Tarraconensis in Hispania. By τῶν αὐτῶν understand Carthage itself, including its territory, as distinct from its ἀρχή. That the Baleares and Hispania Carthaginiensis must be included, plainly appears from the circumstance, that the Carthaginians had always called the people of those regions into the field to fight their battles, as being under their dominion; and still more from what is added, that the Athenians reckoned on the services of the Iberians and others of the barbarians of those parts. By the others are meant as well the Iberians,—the Celtiberi, the Oretani, Ilerdones, Contestani, and also the tribes of Bætica,—as the Turdetani, Turduli, Bastuli, and others.

I must not omit, however, to advert to a certain difficulty resting on the word μαχιμωτάτους, which Poppo thinks he removes by reading μαχιμωτάτων, on the authority of one MS.; and Müller and Arnold by placing a comma after ἐκεῖ. Of these two methods neither can be approved; the former, because evidence both external and internal is against μαχιμωτάτων, this being manifestly a mere blunder of a negligent copyist from a bad original, proceeding on a mistake of the termination ους for ων, and arising from the circumstance of the word preceding terminating in ων. With respect to the latter of the above methods, it is objectionable on the ground that, as Poppo is aware, it would require the presence of the article τῶν before βαρβάρων. Preferable to either of these two is the expedient resorted to by Bekker, (in his second edition,) namely, to cancel the word βαρβάρων, supposing it to have crept in from the margin. Yet this has the objection of being wholly unsupported by the authority of MSS.: and as to the argument in its favour derived from its lessening the unpleasantness of the transposition, and removing what to a modern ear would seem a defect in βαρβάρων,—this surely, in a writer like Thucydides, can have but little weight. The transposition is, indeed, not harsher than others of a similar kind occurring in our author; and the construction will stand thus: καὶ ἄλλους νῦν ὁμολ. μαχ. τῶν ἐκεῖ βαρβ., or ὁμ. μαχ. τῶν νῦν ἐκεῖ βαρβ. Finally, there will be the less harshness in adopting the above construction, if we may regard ὁμολογουμένως as interposed parenthetically, and standing in the place of a short interposed clause equivalent to ut in confesso est, as in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Tim. iii. 16, καὶ, ὁμολογουμένως, μέγα ἐστὶ τὸ τῆς εὐσεβείας μυστήριον: and also Xen. Anab. ii. 6, 1, ὁμολογουμένως ἐκ πάντων, quod omnium consensu est. If, however, this be thought scarcely admissible, and if it be, as it must, granted that there is something not a little harsh in τῶν νῦν ἐκεῖ, we may adopt the punctuation of Müller and Arnold, and place a comma after ἐκεῖ, thus referring μαχιμ. both to Ἴβηρας and to ἄλλους. As to the objection of Poppo, that thus τῶν would be required before νῦν, that may be obviated by supposing, with Bekker, that βαρβ. is from the margin. The objection of Arnold, that in that case the omission of the participle ὄντας before ὁμολογουμένως would be sufficiently harsh,—it is insuperable: and rather than admit so unprecedentedly harsh an ellipsis, I would suppose the possibility of there being some corruption in the text; and I have little doubt that the word ὄντας has been lost after μαχιμωτάτους, which it might easily be from the circumstance that the sigla for the termination at the top of μαχ. being indistinctly marked, ὄντας written in abbreviation would seem to be the termination to μαχ. That Dio Cass. had ὄντας in his copy, is pretty certain from his words, (evidently imitated from this form of expression,) p. 624, 5, πρὸς Ταυρίσκους καὶ Ἰάπυδας καὶ Δαλμάτας καὶ Παννονίους — ἐμαχέσασθε, καὶ πάντας ἡμετέραις, πολλὰς ναυπηγησάμενοι,—ἐχούσης τῆς Ἰταλίας ξύλα ἄφθονα,—* αἷς τὴν Πελοπόννησον πέριξ πολιορκοῦντες, καὶ τῷ πεζῷ ἅμα ἐκ γῆς ἐφορμαῖς, τῶν πόλεων τὰς μὲν βίᾳ λαβόντες, τὰς δ' ἐντειχισάμενοι, ῥᾳδίως ἠλπίζομεν καταπολεμήσειν, καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα καὶ τοῦ ξύμπαντος Ἑλληνικοῦ ἄρξειν. 4. χρήματα δὲ καὶ σῖτον, ὥστε εὐπορώτερον γίγνεσθαί τι αὐτῶν, αὐτὰ τὰ προσγενόμενα ἐκεῖθεν χωρία ἔμελλε διαρκῆ, ἄνευ τῆς ἐνθένδε προσόδου, παρέξειν. XCI. Τοιαῦτα μὲν περὶ τοῦ νῦν οἰχομένου στόλου παρὰ τοῦ τὰ αὐτοὺς, καίτοι πολεμικωτάτους ὁμολογουμένως ὄντας, ἐχειρώσασθε. Under these circumstances I have ventured to place the βαρβάρων within brackets, by way of noting the omission of ὄντας by the usual mode of a lacuna.

The reference of the relative αἷς, just after, has been disputed. Duker refers it, not to the nearer antecedent ξύλα, but the remoter τριήρεις; while Abresch and Arnold refer it neither to ξύλα singly, nor to τριήρεις, but to all that had previously been spoken of, δύναμιν τῶν Ἑλλήνων—πολλοὺς βαρβάρους—τριήρεις τε πολλάς. But a naval blockade can only with propriety be referred to the ships, not to the land-forces, Greek or barbarian, because such would be disembarked, and act τῷ πεζῷ ἐκ γῆς ἐφορμαῖς: though, indeed, that is preferable to supposing, with Haack, a reference ad rerum notionem generalem, or, with Poppo, that 'the gender is accommodated to the nearer noun ξύλα, because those are the materials of triremes, and are themselves sometimes named for ships:' of which reasons the former is utterly without force; and the latter has very little weight, since the term ξύλον is never so employed except in the oldest poets: for as to the passage supra iv. 11, 4, (referred to by Poppo,) see the note there. The reference must be to τριήρεις, for the words ἐχούσης—ἄφθονα are in some measure parenthetical, and consequently the true reading must be, what I have ventured to edit, with Bekker, αἷς, because though it seems not found in the MSS., yet it is strongly borne out by internal evidence, as existing in the possibility and probability, from its being separated so far from its antecedent, and coming immediately after ξύλα, of its having been mistaken for οἷς.

In the expression πέριξ πολιορκοῦντες (which is so rare as to be, I believe, unprecedented elsewhere) we have what is well adapted to designate the naval blockade of an island by cruising around it. Compare supra iv. 14, τὴν νῆσον περιέπλεον καὶ ἐν φυλακῇ εἶχον, and Æschyl. Pers. 373—6, Τάξαι νεῶν μὲν στῖφος ἐν στίχοις τρισὶν, Ἔκπλους φυλάσσειν καὶ πόρους ἁλιρρόθους· Ἄλλας δὲ κύκλῳ νῆσον Αἴαντος πέριξ.

The next words, τῷ πεζῷ—ἐφορμαῖς, are best taken, not, with the preceding, (as it is by Arnold,) but,—as it is by Duk., Bauer, and Poppo,—with the following, λαβόντες. Misled by this error in construction, Arnold assigns to ἐφορμαῖς a sense which the term will by no means bear, namely, positions, like Pylus, Argos, from which to observe and annoy the enemy. That sense would require vulg. ἀφορμαῖς, for which Arnold has, in common with all the editors, rightly adopted the reading of most of the best MSS. (to which add Mus. Brit.) ἐφορμ., required by the context. The term ἐφορμὴ properly denotes 'the impetus of a body in motion towards any point;' but also, like impetus in Latin, an attack or onset. It is true the word is very rare; yet it is not so rare as to be unprecedented, since it occurs in Hom. Od. xxii. 130, μία δ' οἴη γίνετ' ἐφορμῇ (where it signifies approach, access). Apoll. Rhod. iv. 204, ἡμετέρῃ δ' ἐπειρεῖδεται Ἑλλὰς ἐφορμῇ (enterprise). Oppian, Hal. iv. 623, Ἔλπεται οὐχ ὁρόωσα λαθεῖν ὁρώωντος ἐφορμήν (attack). In like manner our noun approach originally signified only aditus, access, though subsequently a hostile approach, an attack. Finally, the term, a little after, ἐντειχισάμενοι, refers to walling in by circumvallation.

4. ὥστε εὐπορώτερον γίγνεσθαί τι αὐτῶν] 'so that each of these undertakings may be the more practicable,' easier of accomplishment. Comp. ch. 17, τά τε οὖν ἐκεῖ—τοιαῦτα καὶ ἔτι εὐπορώτερα εἶναι.

CH. XCI. The speaker proceeds to say, that 'such were the plans formed by the Athenians, (as they may be sure, having their intelligence from the best source,) and that such as they were, they will be carried out, unless they be frustrated by the speedy interposition of the Lacedæmonians.'

1. οὐ περιέσται τἀκεῖ] 'those parts,' or rather, (the neuter being taken as standing for masculine,) 'those persons (meaning the Siceliots) will not bring the war to a successful termination,' i. e. will be worsted. Compare ii. 13, 10, περιέσεσθαι τῷ πολέμῳ, and i. 55, περιγίγνεται τῷ πολέμῳ.

2. The speaker now shows on what grounds he forms this opinion. On the expression ξυστραφέντες, see note supra ch. 77, 1. Here the addition of ἀθρόοι serves to impart intensity of sense. Κατειργόμενοι, 'hemmed in,' viz. by the naval blockade. So ch. 6, κατεῖργον, and Hdot. vi. 102, κατέργοντες πολλὸν [τοὺς Ἀθηναίους]. Though in those passages the term bears rather the metaphorical sense to straiten.

3. Here are pointed out the consequences of this event, resulting in the speedy conquest of all Sicily, followed by the immediate subjugation of Italy, (meaning Magna Græcia,) and gradually the danger before adverted to from the conquered countries. Ἔχεται, 'capta tenetur.' Compare supra ii. 5, ἐχομένων, and Xen. Cyr. vii. 2, 4, εἴχετο τὰ ἄκρα. The present is here used instead of the future, in order to denote the certainty and speedy occurrence of the event, as in Matt. iii. 10. Mark ix. 31.

4. The speaker now suggests the means that must be taken to ward off these dangers; which are, 1. to send speedy and effective aid to Syracuse, and, above all, a Spartan to take the command. 2. To renew and carry on more vigorously than ever the war in Greece; and especially to occupy and fortify Decelea in Attica.

ὥστε μὴ—Πελοποννήσου, εἰ μὴ ποιήσετε] Here, as Poppo well points out, the words, τάδε ποιήσετε are explained by the subsequent ones, στρατιάν τε πέμψετε, referring to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 630, 2.

αὐτερέται κομισθέντες] On this form of expression see i. 10, and iii. 18. In the words, a little after, ὡς ἂν—ξυντάξῃ, by τοὺς παρόντας are meant those at present serving as soldiers, in opposition to τοὺς μὴ θέλοντας, just after, 'those who are not disposed' to serve; for the term προσαναγκάζω here bears the sense to compel to serve, as infra vii. 18, τοὺς ἄλλους Πελ. προσηνάγκαζον. Ξυντάξῃ seems to bear the united sense of training or organizing, (found in Herodot. vii. 78, τούτους συνέτασσον ἄρχοντες οἵδε. Pol. xi. 10, 9, συνέταξε τοὺς ὄχλους. i. 73, 2, τοὺς πολιτικοὺς συντ., 'to form trained bands,') and, which is a sense of the word elsewhere found in our author, 'to draw up in order of battle,' including the general direction of the operations of the army.

5. τὰ ἐνθάδε φανερώτερον ἐκπολεμεῖν] lit. 'to more manifestly carry on war with those here (meaning the Athenians at home);' in other words, maintain a more declared hostility. Ὑμᾶς ἐπιμελεῖσθαι, scil. αὐτῶν, 'that you care for (are solicitous for) their welfare:' a sense which the word bears nowhere else in Thucydides, though examples are rare in other writers. It is found in Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 3, τῶν φίλων ἐπιμελεῖσθαι, and Symp. viii. 18, ἀπόντων μᾶλλον ἢ παρόντων ἐπιμελεῖσθαι. So also in the New Testament, Phil. ii. 20, οὐδένα ἔχω—ὅστις τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν μεριμνήσει.

6. οὐ διαπεπειρᾶσθαι] se non experturos esse, 'that they have not experienced [this evil];' of which sense, which is very rare, examples occur elsewhere in Herodot. iii. 14, διεπειρᾶτο αὐτοῦ τῆς ψυχῆς. Demosth. p. 311, πειρᾶσθαι κακῶν. Themist. ap. Steph. Thes. χαλεποῦ πειρᾶσθαι δαίμονος.

βεβαιότατα δ' ἄν τις—ἐπιφέροι] This has the air of a political maxim, of which the sense is, 'Thus may one be most sure of injuring one's foes, if, what we have ascertained from clear information they most fear, that we bring upon them.' At ἐπιφέροι supply αὐτοῖς. In this sense, far from usual, 'to cause any thing to happen to any one,' the word occurs supra iii. 56, ὅτι πᾶσι δουλείαν ἐπέφερεν ὁ βάρβαρος. Plato, p. 945, ἐπενεγκεῖν τιμωρίαν. Hence may be understood a peculiar expression in the New Testament, Phil. i. 16, οἰόμενοι θλῖψιν ἐπιφέρειν τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου, of which the true sense is, 'to bring affliction (or severity of treatment) to me already suffering imprisonment.' Answering to this is the phrase in Latin, 'alicui sollicitudinem, metum, dolorem objicere,' or afferre, and our expression to bring upon, always used of evil, except that in a passage of Jerem. xxxii. 42, (Engl. Vers.) it bears a good sense, yet only by reason of the antithetical words, 'Like as I have brought all this evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good.'

7. At κωλύσετε supply ὠφελεῖσθαι from the preceding ὠφελούμενοι. In τὰ μέγιστα κεφαλαιώσω we have a sensus prægnans, to signify, 'I will bring together and sum up in a few words.' See note at iii. 67, 8.

οἷς—ἡ χώρα κατεσκεύασται] 'ea, quibus ipsorum ager est instructus,' meaning, as Dr. Arnold and Poppo are agreed, both the live and the dead stock of the country, slaves, cattle, sheep, farm-houses, trees, &c. The expression πρὸς ὑμᾶς—ἥξει signifies, as applied to the dead stock, and of the live, the cattle, 'will come into your hands:' a sense any thing but usual, but which is here meant the better to consort with αὐτόματα, which, as appears from another passage of our author, infra vii. 27, 5, must have reference to the σώματα, or slaves, who were the agricultural labourers. The term ληφθέντα applies to the dead stock and the cattle; αὐτόματα, to the slaves, who went over voluntarily to the enemy, ηὐτομολήκεσαν, as it is said infra vii. 27, 5, (a passage calculated to throw no little light on the present;) so forming a fulfilment of all that Alcibiades anticipated from this ἐπιτείχισις

I have here followed Haack, Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, in adopting, from nine manuscripts, (to which add Codd. Cant. and Mus. Brit.) the reading Λαυρίου instead of vulg. Λαυρείου.

ὅσα ἀπὸ γῆς—ὠφελοῦνται] Meaning, the benefit from the land, both in the produce to the proprietors, and the tax thereon paid to the government, since the latter could not be paid if the former was utterly annihilated, which, in point of fact, it was, as appears from the words λιστα δὲ τῆς ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμμάχων προσόδου ἧσσον διαφορουμένης, οἳ, τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν ν μίσαντες ἤδη κατὰ κράτος πολεμεῖσθαι, ὀλιγωρήσουσι. 8. γίγνεσθαι δέ τι αὐτῶν καὶ ἐν τάχει καὶ προθυμότερον, ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστὶν, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι· ἐπεὶ, ὥς γε δυνατά, (καὶ οὐχ ἁμαρτήσεσθαι οἶμαι γνώμης) πάνυ θαρσῶ. XCII. Καὶ χείρων οὐδενὶ ἀξιῶ infra vii. 27, τῆς χώρας ἁπάσης ἐστέρηντο.

δικαστηρίων] Meaning, as Poppo remarks, 'Prytanea cum parastasi et paracatabole atque multa,' namely, fees and fines of various sorts, on which see Boeckh, Publ. Œcon. i. p. 250, and Wachsm. Ant. ii. 1, p. 140, seqq.

μάλιστα δὲ] scil. ἀποστερήσονται, vel βλαφθήσονται. (Æm. Port.) In ἧσσον διαφορουμένης, 'less [regularly] rendered,' or paid, we have a use of διαφορέω scarcely found elsewhere. The nearest approach to it is that at ch. 100, and Dio Cass. 629, 41, where it bears the sense perferre, transferre, Angl. to remit, transmit. Thus there will be no reason to read, with Poppo, διαφρουμένης: indeed that word would here be little suitable in sense. Dobree queries whether διαφορουμένης be here equivalent to διαφερομένης, perferre, constanter ferre. I answer, by no means; for otherwise why should not our author have written διαφερομένης? But indeed διαφέρειν does not bear the sense constanter ferre. There is no difficulty in supposing, that as διαφορέω originally signified transferre, 'to bear abroad to different parts,' (according to its use infra viii. 101, and in Hom. Odyss. xix. 333, τοῦ μέν τε κλέος εὐρὺ ('far and wide') διὰ ξεῖνοι φορέουσι, with which compare a passage of Ennius, 'Volito vivu' per ora virûm,') so did it also mean to transmit, remit, as said of money. Finally, the genitives τῆς προσόδου διαφορουμένης are not, as Dukas supposes them, genitives absolute, but are governed of ἀποστερήσονται to be repeated at μάλιστα δέ: and the genitive here is quite as correct as the accusative before; since, as Hertl. ap. Pop. remarks, 'the verb ἀποστερεῖσθαι is construed both with an accusative and a genitive. See supra ch. 82, 2. 68, 2.' The use of the two in the same sentence may seem harsh, but it is far from unfrequent in our author; especially where, as here, the two different regimens are separated by the intervention of several words. Indeed an instance in the case of this very verb, and that with no separation, occurs in Eurip. Troad. 374, Ἔθνησκον, οὐ γῆς ὅρι' ἀποστερούμενοι, Οὐδ' ὑψιπύργου πατρίδος, where, had Reiske and Burges remembered the present passage, they would certainly have refrained from conjecturing.

οἳ τὰ] Thus, for οἱ τὰ, was rightly edited by Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, though only from the Edd. Ald. and Basil. I am enabled to further confirm it from the MSS. Clarend., Cant., and Mus. Brit.

ὀλιγωρήσουσι] Supply αὐτῶν from the context: the sense is, 'will set light by them,' 'will hold them cheap.' So Xen. Mem. ii. 4, 3, τῶν φίλων ὀλιγωροῦντες.

8. γίγνεσθαι—θαρσῶ] I have followed Poppo in throwing this to the present chapter, from which it had been wrongly separated in the preceding editions; since it forms, in effect, the closing sentence of the counsel given. Ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστὶ, 'rests with you:' on this force of the phrase, see Blomf. on Æschyl. Pers. 177.

Ch. XCII. Now comes the ἐπίλογοι, in which, as the speaker had before endeavoured to remove certain injurious prejudices against him, so, here reverting to the same subject, he applies himself to anticipate certain objections, which might possibly occur to his hearers against receiving him, —namely, on the score of the busy zeal of a fugitive, or on that of his former patriotism, and hatred to Lacedæmon. He shows, in the way of apology, why he should not be thought worse of on those accounts; and on what grounds he acts as he now does against his country, and how far he was justifiable. He remarks, that he regards his country as no longer his country, but that he is endeavouring to make it such, in order that he may return to it.

Section 4 contains the conclusion, which deals in earnest entreaty, 1. that they would confidently employ his services even on the well-known and fully admitted argument, that 'if, while an enemy, he has done them much injury, so, when a friend, he can render them proportionable service;' one may very fairly be thought a just measure of the other. 2. That, aware of the importance of the object in view, they would lose no time in setting about the attainment, especially considering, that at moderate sacrifices they may secure weighty advantages—the possession of acknowledged pre-eminence with undisturbed security.

1. χείρων—εἶναι] Comp. Andocid. p. 39, μηδὲ τῷ χείρους δόξωμεν εἶναι. Ἐγκρατῶς is well explained by the gloss of the Schol. καρτέρως, i. e. σφοδρῶς, since the term κάρτερος not unfrequently bears the sense vigorous or vehement, as said of an attack. Of ἐγκρατῶς in this sense examples are so rare, that I have met with it no where else except in Appian, i. 93 and 96, πολεμεῖν ἐγκρατῶς, and Theoph. Simoc. p. 69, καταπολεμηθέντων ἐγκρατῶς, and 175.

οὐδὲ ὑποπτεύεσθαι—τὸν λόγον, &c.] 'nor let my word (or counsel) be suspected on the score of the busy forwardness, or officious zeal of an exile.' Προθυμία, being a vox mediæ significationis, is capable, according to its application, both of a good and a bad sense: as used in the latter, it is very rare; though I have noted examples supra ii. 65, ἄκαιρον προθυμίαν, and Eurip. Herc. Fur. 310, πρόθυμός ἐστιν· ἡ προθυμία δ' ἄφρων: and answering to this is the use in Latin of alacer or officiosus. Not but that the fugitive or deserter has a strong desire to work evil on his former friends; but his chief characteristic is a busy forwardness to do the behests of his new masters or friends. Compare Xen. Anab. i. 9, 10. (Thiem.) ἀλλὰ μήν, εἴ τίς γέ τι αὐτῷ προστάξαντι καλῶς ὑπηρετήσειεν, οὐδὲν ἀχάριστον εἴασε τὴν προθυμίαν. This construction of ὑποπτ. with εἰς and accusative of thing (to denote some quality) is so rare, that I have met with no examples of it elsewhere. But διαβάλλειν, λοιδορεῖν, and other verbs, are used with this very construction, accusative of person followed by accusative of thing depending on εἰς. See note at viii. 88. In φυγάς εἰμι—ὠφελείας we have a somewhat frigid play upon words, similar to certain others that occur in our author, and in the writings of St. Paul, and which cannot be well represented in translation. The best mode of expressing the figure in the present instance, is by resolving the phrase φυγάς εἰμι into its equivalent φυγαδεύεσθαι, q. d. 'I am a run-away from, I flee from the malice (i. e. malicious persecution) of those that drove me out, (compare Plato, p. 241, φυγὰς γίγνεται ἐκ τούτων, fugit hæc. Plut. Ant. 70 (of Timon), φυγὰς ἀνθρώπων, and Nonnus, φυγὰς μερόπων,) and yet not, if ye hearken to me, from your benefit, the benefiting of you;' meaning, as the Schol. explains, οὐ φεύγω (non fugio, refugio) τὸ ὠφελεῖν ὑμᾶς. Compare viii. 47. Levêque, indeed, expresses the sense as follows, 'Je m'exile loin de la méchanceté de mes persécuteurs, et—jamais je ne m'exilerai de vos intérêts:' and so Dr. Arnold. Yet this would make the former clause to contain something bordering on nonsense: and I am greatly inclined to think that Portus expresses the true sense intended when he renders, 'exul sum propter improbitatem,' &c., except that this sense cannot be extracted from the words as they now stand. Hence I strongly suspect that, for φυγάς τε γάρ εἰμι τῆς τῶν ἐξελ. πονηρίας, &c., our author wrote φυγάς τε γάρ εἰμι, τῇ τῶν ἐξελ. πονηρίᾳ, &c., according to which all will be right, and the sense be, in other words, 'I am indeed, by the wickedness of those who drove me out, a banished man; but I am not banished from rendering you service.'

3. οὐκ ἐν ᾧ ἀδικοῦμαι—ἐπολιτεύθην] 'And my love of country I keep (or approve), not wherein I am wronged, but wherein I enjoyed securely the right of citizen.' Ἐν ᾧ means, (as Poppo and Dr. Arnold point out,) 'quo rerum statu,' 'a case in which, under circumstances in which.' The city, or state, of Athens is considered under two points of view,—namely, one as his protectress, the other as his oppressor. The speaker means to say, that he holds or approves his patriotism for the former, not the latter. Now the present tense would have best suited both these clauses; but as the aorist is used in the latter, we must suppose here a certain brevity of expression to be filled up as follows: 'but my patriotism I held or approved in a state where,' &c.

The sentiment is further developed in ἰέναι, πολὺ δὲ μᾶλλον τὴν οὐκ οὖσαν ἀνακτᾶσθαι. καὶ φιλόπολις οὗτος ὀρθῶς, οὐχ ὃς ἂν, τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ἀδικῶς ἀπολέσας, μὴ ἐπίῃ ἀλλ', ὃς ἂν ἐκ παντὸς τρόπου, διὰ τὸ ἐπιθυμεῖν, πειραθῇ αὐτὴν ἀναλαβεῖν. 4. οὕτως ἐμοί *τε ἀξιῶ ὑμᾶς καὶ ἐς κίνδυνον καὶ ἐς ταλαιπωρίαν πᾶσαν ἀδεῶς χρῆσθαι, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι,—γνόντας τοῦτον δὴ τὸν ὑφ' ἁπάντων προβαλλόμενον λόγον, ὡς, 'εἰ πολέμιός γε ὢν σφόδρα ἔβλαπτον, κἂν, φίλος ὢν, ἱκανῶς ὠφελοίην,' ὅσῳ τὰ μὲν Ἀθηναίων οἶδα, τὰ δ' ὑμέτερα ἤκαζον,—καὶ αὐτούς, νῦν νομίσαντας περὶ μεγίστων δὴ τῶν διαφερόντων βουλεύεσθαι, μὴ ἀποκνεῖν τὴν ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν τε καὶ ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν στρατείαν, ἵνα τά τε ἐκεῖ, the next words, οὐδ' ἐπὶ πατρίδα—ἀνακτᾶσθαι, in which we have a refined way of expressing, that Athens, as now his oppressor, is no longer his country, but that he is endeavouring to repossess himself of it as such, i. e. as a protectress. Closely imitated from the present is a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 7, where Coriolanus is represented as similarly saying, πατρίδα δὲ ἡγοῦμαι, οὐ τὴν ἀπαρνησαμένην με, πόλιν, ἀλλ' ἧς, ἀλλότριος ὢν, πολίτης γέγονα· γῆν τε, οὐκ ἐν ᾗ ἠδίκημαι, φίλην, ἀλλ' ἐν ᾗ τὸ ἀσφαλὲς ἔχω. Also another, of Appian, t. i. 35, 74, εἶπεν οὐκ εἶναι πατρίδα τὴν ἐκβαλοῦσαν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ὑποδεχομένην.

καὶ φιλόπολις, &c.] 'He is a true patriot, not who having been unjustly deprived of it (by banishment) forbears to invade it; but who, from his desire for it, endeavours in every way to repossess it.' Ὀρθῶς is used as at ii. 87, 4, τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἀεὶ ἀνδρείους ὀρθῶς εἶναι: of this exceedingly rare use of ἀπόλλυμι to signify the losing of any thing by deprivation, I know no example elsewhere; but something very similar to it occurs in Plato, p. 695, τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπώλεσεν ὑπὸ τῶν Μήδων, 'was deprived of it by the Medes.' Xen. Anab. iii. 4, 11, τὴν ἀρχὴν ὑπὸ τῶν Μήδων ἀπώλεσαν: and parallel to this is the use of amittere in Cicero de Orat. i. 40, amittere civitatem, and Justin vi. 1 (of Conon), 'amissâ bello patriâ, Cypri exulabat.'

4. οὕτως ἐμοί τε] This, the reading of Bekker (2nd edition), I have thought proper to adopt instead of vulg. ἔμοιγε, which, though found in perhaps all the MSS., cannot be right, since, while difficult is it to see what place γε can here have, τε has great propriety, as referred to the καὶ at καὶ αὐτούς, which it may be with the less harshness, considering that the intermediate words are in some measure parenthetical. Οὕτως. Render, quapropter, 'accordingly,' lit. 'and so, such being the case,' as i. 76, 2. Of ἐμοὶ—ἀδεῶς χρῆσθαι the sense is, 'I request you to fearlessly use me, (i. e. my services,) both for every danger and for every toil.' The interposed words γνόντας—ὠφελοίην suggest the ground of this fearlessness,—namely, that contained in the λόγος, or argument, alleged by all persons so circumstanced, (exiles deserting to the enemy,) that 'if, while an enemy, he injured them exceedingly, he may also, when become a friend, benefit them abundantly.' Of προβαλλόμενον the sense is lit., 'put forward,' alleged; a very rare sense of the term, the nearest approach to which exists in a passage of Plato, p. 201, τὸν Ὅμηρον—προβάλλεσθαι. Herodot. iv. 46, ἔθνος οὐδὲν ἔχομεν προβάλλεσθαι σοφίης πέρι. Evidently written with a view to this passage, and especially the next words, is the following passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. p 1522, ἀλλὰ καταχοῆσθέμοι (read καταχοῆσθ' ἐμοὶ) λαβόντες, ὅπου ἂν μέλλω τι ὑμᾶς ὠφελήσειν, καὶ εὖ ἴστε, ὅτι, ὃς πολεμῶν ὑμῖν μεγάλα βλάπτειν ἐυνατὸς ἦν, καὶ σὺν ὑμῖν ἀγωνιζόμενος, μεγάλα ἐυνήσομαι ὠφελεῖν, where, for ὅς, read εἰ, on the authority of Vat. MS. and that of Lapus.

ὅσῳ τὰ μὲν — ἤκαζον] These words advert to the power which would accompany the will. The full sense is, 'Inasmuch as, on the one hand, I know the affairs of the Athenians, and [then, when I was an enemy] I only guessed at yours. Now, however, I know both,—and consequently can sufficiently serve you.' See v. 26, 4, γενομένῳ παρ' ἀμφοτέροις τοῖς πράγμασι.

αὐτούς] for ὑμᾶς. Περὶ μεγίστων δὴ τῶν διαφερόντων, 'about matters of the very greatest moment.' Compare i. 70, μεγάλων τῶν διαφερόντων καθεστώτων. With μὴ ἀποκνεῖν τὴν—στρατείαν, 'do not shrink from the expedition,' compare Pausan. ix. 8, 3, τὴν πορείαν ἀπώκνησε, βραχεῖ μορίῳ ξυμπαραγενόμενοι, μεγάλα σώσητε, καὶ Ἀθηναίων τήν τε οὖσαν καὶ τὴν μέλλουσαν δύναμιν καθέλητε, καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα αὐτοί τε ἀσφαλῶς οἰκῆτε, καὶ τῆς ἁπάσης Ἑλλάδος ἑκούσης, καὶ οὐ βίᾳ, κατ' εὔνοιαν δὲ ἡγῆσθε."

XCIV. Ἅμα δὲ τῷ ἦρι εὐθὺς ἀρχομένῳ τοῦ ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους οἱ ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἅραντες ἐκ τῆς Κατάνης παρέπλευσαν ἐπὶ and another passage of our author, supra iii. 30, ἀπώκνησαν τὸν κίνδυνον.

βραχεῖ μορίῳ] 'with a moderate force,' viz. as compared with the whole of their army. Τὰ ἐκεῖ — μεγάλα σώσητε, 'may save the great interests there at stake.' Alcibiades well knew that the Lacedæmonians were only moveable on a point where their interest was concerned; and accordingly in these concluding sentences the argument is solely that of interest. Knowing their stinginess, he only asks for a slender aid to secure great interests; and he concludes with laying before them the alluring attraction of attaining what their sluggish (and yet grasping) spirit would most prize, the attainment at once of all they would desire, the secure possession of the empire of all Greece, without the trouble of continually enforcing its obedience.

Ch. XCIII. 1. περιορώμενοι] circumspectantes, taken absolutely; or with the supply of τὸν καιρὸν, or τὰ γενησόμενα, expressed in Dio Cass. 675, 7. Dionys. Hal. vii. 64. In ἐπερρώσθησαν there is a pregnancy of sense for, 'were yet more confirmed in their intention, and emboldened to carry it into execution.' Such is the use of οἰκοδομεῖσθαι in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Cor. viii. 10, οὐχὶ ἡ συνείδησις αὐτοῦ οἰκοδομηθήσεται εἰς τὸ τὰ εἰδωλόθυτα ἐσθίειν;

2. ὥστε τῇ ἐπιτειχίσει, &c.] 'Such being the case, they set their mind on the fortifying of Decelea,' i. e. made it their continual aim, or object in view. The infinitive πέμπειν depends on προσεῖχον τὸν νοῦν understood in the implied sense which it carries, of intending, as though διενοήθησαν had preceded. With ποιεῖν ὅπη, operam dare quomodo, i. e. ut, compare i. 65, ἔπρασσεν ὅπη γενήσεται. On the phrase ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, see note at iii. 29. iv. 17.

4. τὴν τροφήν] Meaning the money to pay the troops withal. See note at viii. 57.

Ch. XCIV. 2. ἔρυμά τι] This must mean the fort lately raised by the Syracusans on the ruins of Old Megara, as spoken of supra vi. 75. Far from clear is it what is meant by τὸ πεδίον, for, in point of fact, the country all thereabout is very hilly, and there is, properly speaking, no plain. Yet something answering to this description exists in a district running along the coast from the mouth of the Terias to the east of the Pantagias, forming a sort of Delta; also a very narrow plain running along the margin of the Terias up to Leontini, and forming what the Scotch call a strath. The term here ἀναβάντες is used, not because the site of this strath is of any great elevation, but simply with reference to its being such as compared to the coast line.

3. Κεντόριπα] The site of this ancient capital of the Siculi may with confidence be fixed at the present Centorbi, as laid down in Captain Smyth's map; a most commanding situation for the purpose of strength. The site of Inessa, another strong hold, mentioned just after, and iii. 103, (and of which the original name was Ætna,) it is difficult to fix. It has been best placed by Dorv. Sic. p. 224, at the present Santo Nicolo (or Nicolosi, as laid down in Capt. Smyth's map): yet that will not tally with the distance assigned by Strabo, of eighty stadia from Catania. Hence I would fix it at a village called Arragona in Capt. Smyth's map, exactly eighty stadia from the port of Catania, and in a situation almost as strong as Centorbi, and more so than any other in that part of the country. This view is confirmed by what Strabo further observes, namely, that it was not far from Centoripa. Now Arragona is only thirteen miles distant from Centoripa. By the Hyblæans, just after spoken of, understand those of Hybla Major or Galeatis.

1. ταλάντων οὐκ ἔλασσον πέντε καὶ εἴκοσι] For this might rather have been expected ἐλασσόνων: but the idiom by which ἔλασσον considered as an adverb is made to supply the place of the adjective ἔλασσον, is, however rare, not unprecedented. So Diod. Sic. xvi. 86, ἔχων ἵππους οὐκ ἔλασσον τῶν δισχιλίων, and a passage of the New Testament, 1 Tim. v. 9, χήρα μὴ ἔλαττον ἐτῶν ἑξ. Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 52, where some MSS. have οὐκ ἔλαττον ἀπώλοντο εἴκοσι ἱππέων, while the reading of the text is ἐλάττονας. The idiom in question may first have arisen from the use of adverb parenthetically, in order to αὐτῷ θέρει οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον, ἐπιθέμενος τοῖς τὰς ἀρχὰς ἔχουσιν, οὐ κατέσχεν· ἀλλὰ, βοηθησάντων Θηβαίων, οἱ μὲν ξυνελήφθησαν, οἱ δ' ἐξέπεσον Ἀθήναζε.

XCVI. Καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι τοῦ αὐτοῦ θέρους ὡς ἐπύθοντο τούς τε ἱππέας ἥκοντας τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ μέλλοντας ἤδη ἐπὶ σφᾶς ἰέναι, νομίσαντες, ἐὰν μὴ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν κρατήσωσιν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι,—χωρίου ἀποκρήμνου τε καὶ ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως εὐθὺς κειμένου,—οὐκ ἂν ῥᾳδίως βάσεις αὐτῶν φυλάσσειν, ὅπως μὴ κατὰ ‡ταύτας λάθωσι σφᾶς ἀναβάντες οἱ πολέμιοι· οὐ γὰρ ἂν ἄλλῃ γε αὐτοὺς δυνηθῆναι. 2. ἐξήρτηται γὰρ τὸ ἄλλο χωρίον, καὶ μέχρι τῆς πόλεως ἐπικλινές τέ ἐστι καὶ ἐπιφανὲς πᾶν εἴσω· καὶ ὠνόμασται ὑπὸ τῶν Συρακοσίων, διὰ τὸ ἐπιπολῆς τοῦ ἄλλου εἶναι, Ἐπιπολαί. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν, ἐξελθόντες πανδημεὶ ἐς τὸν λειμῶνα παρὰ τὸν Ἄναπον ποταμὸν ἅμα τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, (ἐτύγχανον γὰρ αὐτοῖς καὶ οἱ περὶ τὸν Ἑρμοκράτην στρα-modify a foregoing assertion, as to numbers. Compare Thucyd. vii. 19, παραπλήσιον, καὶ οὐ πυλλῷ πλέον, &c.

Ch. XCVI. 1. ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως] Hence the origin of the name, which signifies Above-hill. Τὰς προσβάσεις αὐτῶν: meaning the ways up, access to, Epipolæ, by its precipitous sides, so as to reach the summit called, from its form, the Hog's back. There is the same use of πρόσβασις in a similar passage of Herodot. iii. 111, πρὸς ἀποκρήμνουσι οὔρεσι, ἔνθα πρόσβασιν ἀνθρώπῳ οὐδεμίην εἶναι. See another example of this plural use in a passage of Polybius, cited and emended at vii. 51, 2. Why the Athenians could not circumvallate Syracuse, without possession of the heights of Epipolæ, see Map and Memoir in Appendix.

For ταύτας, Poppo and Goeller have received the reading ταῦτα, on the authority of six MSS., to which add Codd. Clarend., Cant., and Mus. Br. Yet strong as is the external evidence in its favour, I must still, with Bekker, decline to receive it into the text, because it is susceptible of no tolerable sense. Easily might ταύτας be mistaken for ταῦτα, from the circumstance of the siglæ serving to denote the terminations α and ας being so very similar.

2. ἐξήρτηται] It is truly observed by Goeller, that ἐξαρτᾶσθαι is said de altitudine præruptâ, as suspensa rupes in Virg. Æn. viii. 190. This sense of the word occurs also in Plut. Anton. 46, τὰ μεγάλα πεδία τῶν λοφῶν τούτων ἐξήρτηται, and in Strabo ap. Steph. Thes. ἐξήρτηται ἡ χώρα πρὸς νότον.

καὶ ἐπιφανὲς πᾶν εἴσω] The sense is well expressed by the rendering of Portus and Bauer, 'introrsus (i. e. ab urbe) totus vel patens est.' And it is justly observed by Poppo, that 'in this use of ἐπιφανὲς the situation of the spectator is (as not unfrequently elsewhere) changed.' So supra i. 64, we have, τὸ δ' ἐκ τοῦ ἰσθμοῦ τεῖχος, where Bauer explains, 'a parte, a regione isthmi;' adding, 'nempe, mutato spectantis situ, quod in isthmum versum esset, etiam ex isthmo ex altera parte pertinebat.'

3. τὸν λειμῶνα παρὰ τὸν Ἄναπον] Render, 'the meadow by the side of the Anapus;' the article serving to denote the meadow by the Anapus, well known as being probably the usual place of military exercise. Here, indeed, propriety might be thought to require the repetition of the article τόν; but several examples of its omission are adduced by Poppo, though scarcely one that is quite decisive. The present instance scarcely falls under the canon laid down in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 277, and Buttm. § 125, because the place in question was, we may suppose, one so well known, that the appellation the meadow had become a proper name, in which case the article would not be required. To which purpose compare a passage of the New Testament, Acts xvi. 13, where we have, ἐξήλθομεν ἔξω τῆς πόλεως παρὰ ποταμὸν οὗ ἐνομίζετο προσευχὴ εἶναι, meaning 'the place by the river-side, where prayer was wont to be offered up.' Now there the article is with reason omit-

On the expression ἐξέτασις ὅπλων see note at vi. 72, 73.

Ch. XCVII. 1. ἐν στενῷ ἰσθμῷ] On this use of ἐν see note at iv. 113.

2. κατὰ τὸν Εὐρύηλον] 'at and up to the knoll,' literally, the broad knoll, or wart, from its resemblance to that excrescence. See the map, and memoir.

5. Λαβδάλῳ] By the name Labdalum is meant, literally, the wart, or excrescence of the Labda, the letter Λ having thus the form of an obtuse angle, and constituting, we find, the summit of the Hog's back. This is with great probability supposed to have been on or near the point now called Belvedere, from the fine view thence presented.

By χρήμασι are meant effects, or moveable property of every kind, especially clothes and furniture; (see supra ch. 49, and note on iii. 74.) and by σκεύη, accoutrements, baggage, and tackle of every kind, so necessary to a besieging army in an enemy's country.

Ch. XCVIII. 2. Συκῆν] See Map and Memoir. The place was doubtless, as Steph. Byz. supposes, so called (like many others) from the circumstance of fig-trees abounding on this spot. Τὸν κύκλον: meaning 'the wall of circumvallation,' as at ch. 99, 1, τὸ πρὸς Βορέαν τοῦ κύκλου τεῖχος. Hence it is clear that the method pursued by the Athenians was to commence the wall of circumvallation at its most northerly point (Συκῆ), and then draw it downward each way (east and west) until they should reach the sea in both directions, and thus effectually block up all access to the place.

ἔκπληξιν] The term may best be understood to denote that mixture of surprise and alarm similarly conveyed by our term consternation, implying the suddenness of the stroke of dismay: in which view compare a passage of the Old Testament, Ezek. xxiv. 16, 'I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke, (or rather, as it would have been better translated, 'at a stroke,' what in the Sept. is expressed by ἐν παρατάξει, for which probably the true reading may have been ἐν παραπλήξει,) and another of Prov. i. 26, καταχαροῦμαι—ὡς ἂν ἀφίκηται ὑμῖν ἄφνω θόρυβος, where ἄφνω, though it has no corresponding word in the Hebrew original, is, however, very properly expressed, being implied in the accompanying term Suphah, a hurricane; suddenness forming the characteristic idea and distinguishing property of hurricanes, agreeably to the words of the poet, 'Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend.'

3. διεσπασμένον] 'disordered,' 'in disarray' (by a use of the word frequent in Xenophon: so Anab. iv. 8, ἡ φάλαγξ διασπασθήσεται); the contrary to which is, in military phraseology, ξυντάσσεσθαι.

Ch. XCIX. 1. λίθους καὶ ξύλα ξυμφοροῦντες] From this passage it is clear that timber was used together with stone in the walls of circumvallation, chiefly, we may suppose, for the towers; and hence carpenters (as we learn from ch. 44) were brought as well as masons. Παρέβαλλον. The full sense is, 'laid them along the intended line.' Ἐπὶ Τρωγίλον, 'towards Trogilus.' I have followed Poppo in placing the accent as above — Τρώγιλον — because, as he observes, though the MSS. here universally present either Τρωγίλον or Τρωγιλὸν, yet all the MSS. at vii. 2, have Τρώγιλον, and the same is found in Steph. Byz. Nor is it entirely without support from MSS. in the present passage; for I have found it in Mus. Brit. and Clarend. primâ manu. From the manner in which our author makes mention of this place, it would seem to have been not a village, but merely a petty port.

τὸ ἀποτείχισμα] Meaning the wall

στρατηγῶν ἐσηγησαμένου, μάχαις μὲν πανδημεὶ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους οὐκέτι ἐβούλοντο διακινδυνεύειν, ὑποτειχίζειν δὲ ἄμεινον ἐδόκει εἶναι, ᾗ ἐκεῖνοι ἔμελλον ἄξειν τὸ τεῖχος,—καὶ, εἰ φθάσειαν, ἀποκλήσεις γίγνεσθαι· καὶ ἅμα καὶ ἐν τούτῳ εἰ ἐπιβοηθοῖεν, μέρος ἀντιπέμπειν αὐτοὶ τῆς στρατιᾶς· καὶ φθάνειν ἂν τοῖς σταυροῖς προκαταλαμβάνοντες τὰς ἐφόδους, ἐκείνους δὲ ἂν, πανομένους τοῦ ἔργου, πάντας ἂν πρὸς σφᾶς τρέπεσθαι. 3. ἐτείχιζον οὖν ἐξελθόντες, ἀπὸ τῆς σφετέρας πόλεως ἀρξάμενοι, κάτωθεν τοῦ κύκλου τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐγκάρσιον τεῖχος ἄγοντες, τάς τε ἐλάας ἐκκόπτοντες τοῦ Τεμένους καὶ πύργους ξυλίνους καθιστάντες. 4. αἱ δὲ νῆες τῶν Ἀθηναίων οὔπω ἐκ τῆς Θάψου περιεπεπλεύκεσαν ἐς τὸν μέγαν λιμένα, ἀλλ' ἔτι οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐκράτουν τῶν περὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, κατὰ γῆν δ' ἐκ τῆς Θάψου οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὰ ἐπιτήδεια ἐπήγοντο.

C. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ τοῖς Συρακοσίοις ἀρκούντως ἐδόκει ἔχειν ὅσα τε ἐσταυρώθη καὶ ᾠκοδομήθη τοῦ ὑποτειχίσματος, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι of circumvallation, called τὸ περιτείχισμα ch. 101, 1.

2. ὑποτειχίζειν] 'to build an under-wall,' meaning, one below the wall of circumvallation, which should intercept and cut off its course by crossing the place where it was meant to be carried.

καὶ, εἰ φθάσειαν—στρατιᾶς] In tracing the construction here, it seems best, with Goeller and Arnold, to regard ἀποκλήσεις as a nominative, and supply ἐδόκουν from ἐδόκει, or ἔμελλον, and at φθάσειαν to supply, with Poppo, the words τὸ τεῖχος ἀγαγόντες [ἐκεῖνοι οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι]. The plural ἀποκλ. is employed, because the two lines would, in the event of the ὑποτείχισμα being pushed forward in time, mutually block up each other's course, and thus the circumvallation be effectually prevented.

In the next words, καὶ ἅμα, &c., there is a yet greater harshness, not to say corruption of the text: to remove which, I have decided on adopting, instead of the manifestly corrupt reading αὐτοὺς, the conjecture of Arnold, αὐτοί, in preference to that of Bekker, αὐτοῖς, which has been introduced into the text by Poppo, but which is scarcely less objectionable than αὐτούς. In favour of αὐτοὶ Arnold justly urges the circumstance of its better agreeing with the words following, φθάνειν ἂν τοῖς σταυροῖς προκαταλαμβάνοντες.

καὶ φθάνειν ἂν—προκαταλαμβάνοντες] The sense is well expressed by the rendering of Dobree, 'atque ita videbantur occupaturi.' By τὰς ἐφόδους seem meant, the enemy's approaches or attacks to hinder the building of the ὑποτείχισμα. Now these would have to be checked by a line of stockading, carried in advance of the ὑποτείχισμα, and in the very direction it was meant to take, and which would (as is intimated in the next words) draw off the enemy's forces from their works of circumvallation.

3. ἐγκάρσιον τεῖχος] A transverse or cross wall; so called, as being intended to cross the enemy's κύκλος, whenever it should reach it, and it would of course be κάτωθεν τοῦ κύκλου τῶν Ἀθηναίων, and proceeding from their own city-wall. Compare Aristot. de Mundo, ἐγκάρσιος κύκλος. By τοῦ Τεμένους is meant the strip of land called τὸ Τέμενος from the circumstance of its having been recently the sacred grove of the temple of Apollo, and consisting, it seems, of olive-trees, as sacred to that divinity. From the mention of the wooden towers, it plainly appears that the ἐγκάρσιον τεῖχος was a double wall like that of circumvallation around Platæa.

4. τῶν περὶ τὴν θάλασσαν] Namely, Plemmyrium and the parts adjacent, of course commanding the great harbour itself.

Ch. C. 1. ἐπειδὴ δὲ τοῖς Συρακοσίοις—πόλιν] This obscure, perplexed, and ill-constructed sentence may be thus rendered, with a slight freedom, to promote perspicuity: 'And now when the Syracusans conceived that their under-wall, of stockading and stone-work, was sufficiently accomplished (i. e. carried forward as far as was necessary)—and as the Athe-αὐτοὺς οὐκ ἦλθον κωλύσοντες, φοβούμενοι μὴ σφίσι δίχα γιγνομένοις ῥᾷον μάχωνται,—καὶ ἅμα τὴν καθ' αὑτοὺς περιτείχισιν ἐπειγόμενοι,—οἱ μὲν Συρακόσιοι, φυλὴν μίαν καταλιπόντες φύλακα τοῦ οἰκοδομήματος, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐς τὴν πόλιν· οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι τούς τε ὀχετοὺς αὐτῶν, οἳ ἐς τὴν πόλιν ὑπονομηδὸν ποτοῦ ὕδατος ἠγμένοι ἦσαν, διέφθειραν, καὶ τηρήσαντες τούς τε ἄλλους Συρακοσίους κατὰ σκηνὰς ὄντας ἐν μεσημβρίᾳ, καί τινας καὶ ἐς τὴν πόλιν ἀποκεχωρηκότας, καὶ τοὺς ἐν τῷ σταυρώματι ἀμελῶς φυλάσσοντας, τριακοσίους μὲν σφῶν αὐτῶν λογάδας καὶ τῶν ψιλῶν τινας ἐκλεκτοὺς ὡπλισμένους προὔταξαν θεῖν δρόμῳ ἐξαπιναίως πρὸς τὸ ὑποτείχισμα· ἡ δὲ ἄλλη στρατιὰ δίχα, ἡ μὲν μετὰ τοῦ ἑτέρου στρατηγοῦ πρὸς τὴν πόλιν, εἰ ἐπιβοηθοῖεν, ἐχώρουν, ἡ δὲ μετὰ τοῦ ἑτέρου πρὸς τὸ σταύρωμα τὸ παρὰ τὴν πυλίδα. 2. καὶ προσβαλόντες οἱ τριακόσιοι αἱροῦσι τὸ σταύρωμα· καὶ οἱ φύλακες, αὐτὸ ἐκλιπόντες, κατέφυγον εἰς τὸ προτείχισμα τὸ περὶ τὸν Τεμενίτην. καὶ αὐτοῖς ξυνεσέπεσον οἱ διώκοντες, καὶ ἐντὸς γενόμενοι, βίᾳ ἐξεκρούσθησαν πάλιν ὑπὸ τῶν Συρακοσίων· καὶ τῶν Ἀργείων τινὲς αὐτόθι καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων οὐ πολλοὶ διεφθάρησαν. 3. καὶ ἐπαναχωρήσασα ἡ πᾶσα στρατιὰ τήν τε ὑποτείχισιν καθεῖλον, καὶ τὸ σταύρωμα ἀνέσπασαν καὶ διεφόρησαν τοὺς σταυροὺς παρ' ἑαυτούς, καὶ τροπαῖον ἔστησαν.

nians had not come to hinder them in its erection, they (i. e. the Syracusans) fearing lest those (i. e. the Athenians) should engage with them to more advantage when thus separated, (especially as they were hastening forward with their circumvallation,) they, after leaving one battalion as a guard to the works, retired into the city.'

οἳ ἐς τὴν πόλιν — ἦσαν] Here we have, as Bauer says, a transposition, for τοὺς ὀχετοὺς αὐτῶν ποτοῦ ὕδατος οἳ ἦσαν ἠγμένοι ὑπονομηδὸν ἐς τὴν πόλιν. Of ὑπονομηδὸν the sense is well represented by the gloss of the Scholiast, διὰ ὑπονόμων, 'as subterranean canals.' Ποτοῦ ὕδατος, literally, 'water for drinking.' Of these aqueducts remains have been traced about the ruins of the theatre in the Neapolis by Dorville and Swinburne. See more in the note of Goeller, and the map.

ἐν τῷ σταυρώματι] Meaning 'in the stockade' formed, as above, of double rows of strong palisades; and the purpose of which was, as Arnold well points out, to cover the approaches to it. By τὸ σταύρωμα τὸ παρὰ τὴν πυλίδα, a little further on, is meant, as Didot and Arnold point out, the palisading, which was generally employed as an exterior defence to cover the postern gate of a city; doubtless in order to secure it from a sudden attack, by a coup de main. Thus at v. 10, we have ταῖς ἐπὶ τὸ σταύρωμα πύλαις. This πυλὶς is by Goeller justly supposed to have been one by which there was an outlet from the quarter Temenitis into Epipolæ.

At ἐπιβοηθοῖεν supply οἱ πολῖται, taken from πόλιν.

2. τὸ προτείχισμα τὸ περὶ τὸν Τεμενίτην] Meaning, as Letronne and Goeller are agreed, the wall which encircled Temenitis. Ξυνεσέπεσον. So I have edited, with Goeller and Poppo, from three MSS., instead of vulg. ξυνέπεσον; and for its support am enabled to adduce the following passages, in which the same compound occurs: Dio Cass. 345, 68, σφίσι φυγοῦσιν ἐς τὸ ἔρυμα συνεσπεσών, and 514, 89. 1260, 66. Arrian, E. A. i. 8, 12, and 22, 7. Appian, i. 563 & 703. ii. 71. Dionys. Hal. p. 1255, 8, Reiske. See also Xen. Anab. vii. 1, 12, and Hist. iv. 7, 6. Possibly our author may here have had in mind a passage of Herodot. iii. 55, where we have similarly, συνεσπεσόντες φεύγουσι ἐς τὸ τεῖχος.

3. τὴν ὑποτείχισιν] Meaning, as Didot points out, the τεῖχος ἐγκάρσιον above mentioned. Of διεφόρησαν the full sense is, 'carried off and distributed παρ' ἑαυτούς, among them.' Compare Dio Cass.

CI. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἀπὸ τοῦ κύκλου ἐτείχιζον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὸν κρημνὸν τὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἕλους, ὃς τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν ταύτῃ πρὸς τὸν μέγαν λιμένα ὁρᾷ, καὶ ἧπερ αὐτοῖς βραχύτατον ἐγίγνετο καταβᾶσι διὰ τοῦ ὁμαλοῦ καὶ τοῦ ἕλους ἐς τὸν λιμένα τὸ περιτείχισμα. 2. καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐν τούτῳ, ἐξελθόντες, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀπεσταύρουν αὖθις, ἀρξάμενοι ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως, διὰ μέσου τοῦ ἕλους· καὶ τάφρον ἅμα παρώρυσσον, ὅπως μὴ οἷόν τε ᾖ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις μέχρι τῆς θαλάσσης ἀποτειχίσαι. 3. οἱ δ', ἐπειδὴ τὸ πρὸς τὸν κρημνὸν αὐτοῖς ἐξείργαστο, ἐπιχειροῦσιν αὖθις τῷ τῶν Συρακοσίων σταυρώματι καὶ τάφρῳ, τὰς μὲν ναῦς κελεύσαντες περιπλεῦσαι ἐκ τῆς Θάψου ἐς τὸν μέγαν λιμένα τὸν τῶν Συρακοσίων· αὐτοὶ δὲ περὶ ὄρθρον καταβάντες ἀπὸ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν ἐς τὸ ὁμαλὸν καὶ διὰ τοῦ ἕλους, ᾗ πηλῶδες ἦν καὶ στεριφώτατον, θύρας καὶ ξύλα πλατέα ἐπιθέντες, καὶ ἐπ' αὐτῶν διαβαδίσαντες, αἱροῦσιν ἅμα ἕῳ τό τε σταύρωμα, πλὴν ὀλίγου, καὶ τὴν τάφρον, καὶ ὕστερον καὶ τὸ ὑπολειφθὲν εἷλον. 4. καὶ μάχη ἐγένετο, καὶ ἐν αὐτῇ ἐνίκων οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι· καὶ τῶν Συρακοσίων οἱ μὲν τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας ἔχοντες πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ἔφυγον, οἱ δ' ἐπὶ τῷ εὐωνύμῳ παρὰ τὸν ποταμόν. καὶ αὐτοὺς βουλόμενοι ἀποκλῄσασθαι τῆς διαβάσεως οἱ τῶν Ἀθηναίων τριακόσιοι λογάδες δρόμῳ ἠπείγοντο πρὸς τὴν γέφυραν. 5. δείσαντες δὲ οἱ Συρακόσιοι (ἦσαν γὰρ καὶ τῶν ἱππέων αὐτοῖς οἱ πολλοὶ ἐνταῦθα) ὁμόσε χωροῦσι τοῖς τριακοσίοις τούτοις, καὶ τρέπουσί τε αὐτούς, καὶ ἐσβάλλουσιν ἐς τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας τῶν Ἀθηναίων. καὶ προσπεσόντων αὐτῶν, ξυνεφοβήθη καὶ ἡ πρώτη *φυλὴ τοῦ κέρως. 6. ἰδὼν δὲ ὁ Λάμαχος παρεβοήθει ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐωνύμου τοῦ ἑαυτῶν, μετὰ τοξοτῶν τε οὐ πολλῶν, καὶ τοὺς Ἀργείους παραλαβών· καὶ ἐπιδιαβὰς τάφρον τινὰ, καὶ μονωθεὶς 629, τὰ μὲν ἀνέκοπτον, τὰ δὲ διεφόρουν.

Ch. CI. 1. ἀπὸ τοῦ κύκλου—κρημνὸν] i. e. ἐτείχιζον τὸν κρημνὸν [ἀρξάμενοι] ἀπὸ τοῦ κύκλου.

3. τὸ πρὸς τὸν κρημνὸν] i. e., as Goeller and Arnold explain, the work which had been carried as far as the cliff, and built at the cliff; by κρημνὸν being meant, as Goeller points out, part of the south cliff of Epipolæ, very craggy contiguous to Temenitis, and not differing from the rock stretched out between Temenitis and Sycha.

τοῦ ἕλους] See Map. Πηλῶδες denotes a mixture of mud and clay.

4. παρὰ τὸν ποταμὸν] 'to the river-side:' their intention being doubtless to cross the river, and make their way to the fort of Olympæum.

5. ξυνεφοβήθη] 'was thrown into a panic.' Of this word, which is very rare, the only example that I have met with elsewhere is in Dio Cass. 659, 26.

For vulg. φυλακὴ, I have, with Arnold, received the conjecture of Duker, approved by Goeller and Poppo, φυλή. From the frequent confusion of the two words, the authority of MSS. in this case is slender. Φυλὴ seems also to have had place in Valla's MS.

6. ἑαυτῶν] Meaning the Athenians.

ἐπιδιαβὰς] The sense of the ἐπὶ is, 'after,' i. e. in pursuit of them. So Xen. Hist. v. 3, 4, Ὀλύνθιοι ἐπιδιέβαινον τὸν ποταμόν. Herodot. iv. 122, 10, ἐπιδιαβάντες ἐδίωκον. The word also bears this sense in Dio Cass. 292, 57. 277, 32. 613, 11. Polyb. iii. 14, 18. Arrian, E. A. ii. 11, 3. Pausan. i. 36, 2.

μονωθεὶς μετ' ὀλίγων] We must not too rigorously interpret μονωθείς. The use is, μετ' ὀλίγων τῶν ξυνδιαβάντων, ἀποθνήσκει αὐτός τε, καὶ πέντε ἢ ἓξ τῶν μετ' αὐτοῦ. καὶ τούτους μὲν οἱ Συρακόσιοι εὐθὺς κατὰ τάχος φθάνουσιν ἁρπάσαντες πέραν τοῦ ποταμοῦ ἐς τὸ ἀσφαλές, αὐτοὶ δὲ, ἐπιόντος ἤδη καὶ τοῦ ἄλλου στρατεύματος τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἀπεχώρουν.

CII. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ οἱ πρὸς τὴν πόλιν αὐτῶν τὸ πρῶτον καταφυγόντες, ὡς ἑώρων ταῦτα γιγνόμενα, αὐτοί τε πάλιν ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως, ἀναθαρσήσαντες, ἀντετάξαντο πρὸς τοὺς κατὰ σφᾶς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ μέρος τι αὐτῶν πέμπουσιν ἐπὶ τὸν κύκλον τὸν ἐπὶ ταῖς Ἐπιπολαῖς, ἡγούμενοι ἔρημον αἱρήσειν. 2. καὶ τὸ μὲν δεκάπλεθρον προτείχισμα αὐτῶν αἱροῦσι καὶ διεπόρθησαν, αὐτὸν δὲ τὸν κύκλον Νικίας διεκώλυσεν· ἔτυχε γὰρ ἐν αὐτῷ δι' ἀσθένειαν ὑπολελειμμένος· τὰς γὰρ μηχανὰς καὶ ξύλα ὅσα πρὸ τοῦ τείχους ἦν καταβεβλημένα, ἐμπρῆσαι τοὺς ὑπηρέτας ἐκέλευσεν, ὡς ἔγνω ἀδυνάτους ἐσομένους ἐρημίᾳ ἀνδρῶν ἄλλῳ τρόπῳ περιγενέσθαι. 3. καὶ ξυνέβη οὕτως· οὐ γὰρ ἔτι προσῆλθον οἱ Συρακόσιοι διὰ τὸ πῦρ, ἀλλὰ ἀπεχώρουν πάλιν. καὶ γὰρ πρός τε τὸν κύκλον βοήθεια ἤδη κάτωθεν τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ‡ ἀποδιωξάντων τοὺς ἐκεῖ, ἐπανῄει, καὶ αἱ νῆες ἅμα αὐτῶν ἐκ τῆς Θάψου, ὥσπερ εἴρητο, κατέπλεον ἐς τὸν μέγαν λιμένα. 4. ἃ ὁρῶντες οἱ ἄνωθεν κατὰ τάχος ἀπῄεσαν, καὶ ἡ ξύμπασα στρατιὰ τῶν Συρακοσίων ἐς τὴν πόλιν, νομίσαντες μὴ ἂν ἔτι, ἀπὸ τῆς παρούσης σφίσι δυνάμεως, ἱκανοὶ γενέσθαι κωλῦσαι τὸν ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν τειχισμόν.

CIII. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τροπαῖον ἔστησαν, καὶ τοὺς νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους ἀπέδοσαν τοῖς Συρακοσίοις, καὶ τοὺς μετὰ Λαμάχου καὶ αὐτὸν ἐκομίσαντο. καὶ, παρόντος ἤδη σφίσι παντὸς τοῦ στρατεύματος, καὶ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ καὶ τοῦ πεζοῦ, ἀπὸ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν καὶ τοῦ κρημνώδους ἀρξάμενοι, ἀπετείχιζον μέχρι τῆς θαλάσσης τείχει διπλῷ τοὺς Συρακοσίους. 2. τὰ δ' ἐπιτήδεια τῇ στρατιᾷ ἐσήγετο ἐκ τῆς Ἰταλίας πανταχόθεν· ἦλθον δὲ καὶ τῶν Σικελῶν πολλοὶ ξύμμαχοι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις,—οἳ πρότερον περιεωρῶντο,—καὶ ἐκ τῆς as in Herodot. vi. 15, μετ' ὀλίγων μεμουνωμένοι, and Æschyl. Pers. 740, μονάδα δὲ Ξέρξην ἔρημόν φασιν οὐ πολλῶν μέτα.

Ch. CII. 2. τὸ δεκάπλεθρον προτείχισμα] Meaning a sort of out-work, or advanced stockade, of 1000 feet in length in front of the line of circumvallation, for the protection of the workmen on the wall in case of any sudden attack. By τοὺς ὑπηρέτας seem meant the camp-servants.

3. ἀποδιωξάντων] For this, Haack and Poppo have edited ἀποδιωξόντων, on the authority of several of the best MSS. (to which add Cod. Mus. Brit.) but I have chosen, with Bekker and Goeller, to retain the common reading; for the above form is one not found in the old Attic Greek; and as to the tense, it is here unsuitable.

4. ἀπὸ τῆς παρούσης σφίσι δυνάμεως] i. e. as Bauer explains, ab illis viribus ὁρμηθέντες. Compare ii. 77. v. 89.

Ch. CIII. 1. καὶ αὐτὸν] scil. τὸν Λάμαχον: a somewhat rare ellipsis. Τείχει διπλῷ: namely, one both of circumvallation and contravallation, as at the siege of Platæa. See supra iii. 21.

2. οἳ πρότερον περιεωρῶντο] 'qui antea circumspectabant,' i. e. tanquam eventum expectantes. So vi. 93, μέλλοντες καὶ περιορώμενοι: and vii. 33, οἱ δ' ἄλλοι—οἱ πρότερον περιορώμενοι, ξυστάντες ἐβοήθουν. Dio Cass. 657, 57, περιορ. τὰ

Τυρσηνίας νῆες πεντηκόντοροι τρεῖς· καὶ τἆλλα προυχώρει αὐτοῖς ἐς ἐλπίδας. 3. καὶ γὰρ οἱ Συρακόσιοι πολέμῳ μὲν οὐκέτι ἐνόμιζον ἂν περιγενέσθαι, ὡς αὐτοῖς οὐδὲ ἀπὸ τῆς Πελοποννήσου ὠφέλεια οὐδεμία ἦκε· τοὺς δὲ λόγους ἔν τε σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἐποιοῦντο ξυμβατικοὺς, καὶ πρὸς τὸν Νικίαν· οὗτος γὰρ δὴ μόνος εἶχε, Λαμάχου τεθνεῶτος, τὴν ἀρχήν. 4. καὶ κύρωσις μὲν οὐδεμία ἐγίγνετο,—οἷα δὲ εἰκὸς ἀνθρώπων ἀπορούντων, καὶ μᾶλλον ἢ πρὶν πολιορκουμένων,—πολλὰ ἐλέγετο πρός τε ἐκεῖνον καὶ πλείω ἔτι κατὰ τὴν πόλιν. καὶ γάρ τινα καὶ ὑποψίαν, ὑπὸ τῶν παρόντων κακῶν, ἐς ἀλλήλους εἶχον· καὶ τοὺς στρατηγούς τε, ἐφ' ὧν αὐτοῖς ταῦτα ξυνέβη, ἔπαυσαν, ὡς ἢ δυστυχίᾳ ἢ προδοσίᾳ τῇ ἐκείνων βλαπτόμενοι, καὶ ἄλλους ἀνθείλοντο, Ἡρακλείδην καὶ Εὐκλέα καὶ Τελλίαν.

Ἐν δὲ τούτῳ Γύλιππος ὁ Λακεδαιμόνιος καὶ αἱ ἀπὸ τῆς Κορίνθου νῆες περὶ Λευκάδα ἤδη ἦσαν, βουλόμενοι ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν διὰ τάχους βοηθῆσαι. καὶ ὡς αὐτοῖς αἱ ἀγγελίαι ἐφοίτων δειναὶ, καὶ πᾶσαι ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ἐψευσμέναι, ὡς ἤδη παντελῶς ἀποτετειχισμέναι αἱ Συράκουσαί εἰσι, τῆς μὲν Σικελίας οὐκέτι ἐλπίδα οὐδεμίαν εἶχεν ὁ Γύλιππος, τὴν δὲ Ἰταλίαν βουλόμενος περιποιῆσαι, αὐτὸς μὲν καὶ Πυθὴν ὁ Κορίνθιος ναυσὶ δυοῖν μὲν Λακωνικαῖν, δυοῖν δὲ Κορινθίαιν, ὅτι τάχιστα ἐπεραιώθησαν τὸν Ἰόνιον ἐς Τάραντα· οἱ δὲ Κορίνθιοι πρὸς ταῖς σφετέραις δέκα Λευκαδίας δύο καὶ Ἀμπρακιώτιδας τρεῖς προσπληρώσαντες, ὕστερον ἔμελλον πλεύσεσθαι. 2. καὶ ὁ μὲν Γύλιππος ἐκ τοῦ Τάραντος ἐς τὴν Θουρίαν γενησόμενα, where what is here left understood is expressed. Thus the expression is nearly equivalent to that used supra ch. 88, of the same people, οἱ πολλοὶ ἀφιστήκεσαν, literally, 'had held off, stood aloof,' intending to join the stronger party.

ἐς ἐλπίδας] Poppo justly regards this as a brief expression similar to that iii. 64, ἐς τὸ ἀληθὲς, the sense, expressed in full, being, (as Portus and Bauer point out,) 'so as to suggest hopes, bid them have hopes for the future.' In short, the ἐς here denotes tendency, marking what a thing tends to or is likely to become; and such is the use of this preposition not unfrequently in the New Testament. See my Lexicon.

4. κύρωσις οὐδεμία ἐγίγνετο] 'there was no confirmation,' 'nothing was confirmed by actual treaty.' Compare Dio Cass. 160, 23, ὥστε μηδεμίαν ἐν αὐτῇ κύρωσιν τὸν δῆμον σχεῖν, for κυρωθὲν ἦν οὐδὲν, nihil ratum est, as Herodot. viii. 56, οὐδὲ κυρωθῆναι ἔμενον τὸ προκείμενον πρῆγμα, i. e. 'did not wait until the thing proposed was made by compact κύριον,' ratum, firmum.

ὑπὸ τῶν παρόντων κακῶν] 'suffering under the weight of present evils.' The τε after στρατηγοὺς is transposed, and ought to be construed after ἔπαυσαν.

At this part of the narrative, (forming the turning point of the war,) when the Syracusans began to treat of capitulation, and when Nicias being left alone in the command, 'it seemed (as observes Bp. Thirlwall) as if fortune had deprived him of his colleague in order that he might enjoy the undivided glory of bringing the perilous enterprise to a successful issue,—there was a pause, like that of the Iliad, while Hector's hand was on the ship of Protesilaus, (Il. xv. 705-7.) but, as in that case, only serving to usher in the coming storm.

CH. CIV. 1. πᾶσαι ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ἐψευσμέναι] 'Arguta sane brevitas, et quasi cum Oxymoro: congrui nuntii, et tamen falsi, ficti, vani, et tamen congruentes.' (Bauer.) The general sense is, 'all feigned to the same purport, all concurring in the same falsehood;' or, as the Scholiast explains, ψευδεῖς μὲν, σύμφωνοι δέ.

πρῶτον πρεσβευσάμενος, κατὰ τὴν τοῦ πατρὸς ποτε πολιτείαν, καὶ οὐ δυνάμενος αὐτοὺς προσαγαγέσθαι, ἄρας παρέπλει τὴν Ἰταλίαν, καὶ ἁρπασθεὶς ὑπ' ἀνέμου κατὰ τὸν † Τεριναῖον κόλπον, ὃς ἐκπνεῖ ταύτῃ μέγας κατὰ Βορέαν ἑστηκώς, ἀποφέρεται ἐς τὸ πέλαγος, καὶ πάλιν

2. πρεσβευσάμενος] 'having gone on an embassy:' a use of middle for active, found also at i. 31. v. 39. Κατὰ τὴν τοῦ πατρός ποτε πολιτείαν, 'on account of his father having been once a citizen there;' namely, when banished from Sparta he took refuge there, and was made a citizen. In κατὰ τὴν πολιτείαν there exists, indeed, a certain harshness, but such as I would by no means venture to remove by adopting, with Bekker (2nd edition), the reading of two MSS., καὶ τὴν τοῦ πατρὸς ἀνανεωσάμενος πολιτείαν, which has the appearance of being a mere alteration to get rid of a difficulty,—unless it may have been that the κατὰ having (as often) been changed to καὶ, some participle thus seemed wanting, and for this effect ἀνανεωσάμενος was ingeniously supplied by some critic, who also cancelled ποτε as useless: be that as it may, the alteration, from whatever source originating, is justly to be rejected, considering that the speaker had surely no occasion to remind the Thurians of what they well knew; nor could it be his purpose to take up again the citizenship his father had formerly possessed, but simply to draw the Thurians over to the interests of the Peloponnesians and Syracusans; which he was, we are told, not able to effect. Finally, κατὰ thus used with an accusative bears here, as often elsewhere in our author, (e. gr. iv. 9, κατὰ τοῦτο,) the sense propter.

ἁρπασθεὶς ὑπ' ἀνέμου] In ἁρπασθεὶς we have a nautical term, which, while properly suitable only to the ship, (according to its use in Plut. de Garrul. p. 507.) is, however, sometimes, as here and in Eurip. Cycl. 108, Æschyl. Ag. 610, and Lucian, Ver. Hist. i., applied to the sailors.

κατὰ τὸν Τεριναῖον κόλπον] Here we have a formidable difficulty and almost inextricable perplexity, existing in the circumstance of the Terinæan gulf being, in point of fact, on the west coast of Italy, not the east, which Gylippus was coasting along: for the removal of this strange contradiction, Poppo proposes to read Ταραντῖνον; and Goeller, to cancel the words κατὰ τὸν Τεριναῖον κόλπον: neither of which methods can I consider otherwise than unsatisfactory and inadmissible; the former as introducing a reading wholly devoid of external authority, as existing in any countenance from MSS., and strongly opposed by internal evidence; and the latter, as a vain attempt to remove the difficulty by cutting rather than untying the knot. I am inclined to think that the perplexity in question may best be removed by supposing, with Dr. Arnold, that 'as the words our author has employed do not necessarily imply that Gylippus was in the Terinæan gulf, his meaning is, that Gylippus was over-against that part of the west coast of Italy, where is the Terinæan gulf.' (I say west; for Dr. Arnold, by a strange confusion, speaks of northern and southern, for what he should rather have called western and eastern.) Not but that this would be (as Dr. Arnold admits) a somewhat extraordinary way of describing the situation which Gylippus had reached when the wind in question caught him,—namely, when he was at the part of the coast over-against the Terinæan gulf (on the other side). Similarly, infra vii. 2, we have ἀναβὰς κατὰ τὸν Εὐρύηλον, where see note.

μέγας κατὰ Βορέαν ἑστηκὼς] I have thought proper to remove the comma after μέγας; our author's meaning here being, that 'when the wind set stiffly at north, it is there (i. e. in the situation Gylippus then was) felt as blowing great,' i. e. possessing a mighty force,—something, we may suppose, in the manner of the Typhon, Εὐροκλυδὼν, of which we have mention in Acts xxvii. 14. Why the NW. wind (for such is here, as often, denoted by the term Βορέας) should have such force as to be felt as a strong off-shore wind, even on the east coast of Italy, may be imagined from the configuration of that part of Italy: the situation where the gale caught them was, I apprehend, off Scylaceum or Crotolla, where a gap in the hilly ridge that runs down Brutia, somewhere about Scylaceum or Crotolla, would let in a north-wester from the Tyrrhene sea. Finally, that violent winds do sometimes blow from gulfs, cannot be doubted; and occasional mention of such is made by the ancients; e. gr. Plutarch, Anton., who has, ἄφνω δὲ τοῦ κόλπου πολὺν ἐκπνεύσαντες λίβα. Compare also another passage of our author, supra ii. 84, ὡς δὲ πνεῦμα κατῆει.

With this use of ἵστημι as applied to a wind which sets steadily (as we should say stiffly) from any given quarter, compare χειμασθεὶς ἐς τὰ μάλιστα τῷ Τάραντι προσμίσγει· καὶ τὰς ναῦς, ὅσαι ἐπόνησαν ὑπὸ τοῦ χειμῶνος, ἀνελκύσας ἐπεσκεύαζεν. 3. ὁ δὲ Νικίας πυθόμενος αὐτὸν προσπλέοντα, ὑπερεῖδε τὸ πλῆθος τῶν νεῶν, ὅπερ καὶ οἱ Θούριοι ἔπαθον, καὶ λῃστικώτερον ἔδοξε παρεσκευασμένους πλεῖν, καὶ οὐδεμίαν φυλακὴν πω ἐποιεῖτο.

CV. Κατὰ δὲ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους τούτου τοῦ θέρους καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐς τὸ Ἄργος ἐσέβαλον, αὐτοί τε καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, καὶ τῆς γῆς τὴν πολλὴν ἐδῄωσαν. καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι Ἀργείοις τριάκοντα ναυσὶν ἐβοήθησαν· αἵπερ τὰς σπονδὰς φανερώτατα πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους αὐτοῖς ἔλυσαν. 2. πρότερον μὲν γὰρ λῃστείαις ἐκ Πύλου, καὶ περὶ τὴν ἄλλην Πελοπόννησον μᾶλλον ἢ ἐς τὴν Λακωνικὴν ἀποβαίνοντες, μετά τε Ἀργείων καὶ Μαντινέων ξυνεπολέμουν, καὶ πολλάκις, Ἀργείων κελευόντων, ὅσον σχόντας μόνον ξὺν ὅπλοις ἐς τὴν Λακωνικήν, καὶ τὸ ἐλάχιστον μετὰ σφῶν δῃώσαντας, ἀπελθεῖν, οὐκ ἤθελον· τότε δὲ, Πυθοδώρου καὶ Λαισποδίου καὶ Δημαράτου ἀρχόντων ἀποβάντες ἐς Ἐπίδαυρον τὴν Λιμηρὰν καὶ Πρασιὰς καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα, ἐδῄωσαν τῆς γῆς, καὶ τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἤδη εὐπροφάσιστον μᾶλλον τὴν αἰτίαν ἐς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους τοῦ ἀμύνεσθαι ἐποίησαν. 3. ἀναχωρησάντων δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐκ τοῦ Ἄργους ταῖς ναυσὶ καὶ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, οἱ Ἀργεῖοι, ἐσβαλόντες ἐς τὴν Φλιασίαν, τῆς τε γῆς αὐτῶν ἔτεμον, καὶ ἀπέκτεινάν τινας, καὶ ἀπῆλθον ἐπ᾽ οἶκον.

Aristæn. ii. 11, τοῦ δὲ πνεύμ. ἔνθεν ἑστηκότος. Herodot. vi. 140. Pollux i. 110, ἀνέμου ἑστηκότος, and a passage of the Old Testament, Ps. cvi. 25, (Sept.) ἔστη πνεῦμα καταιγίδος. By the term μέγας as here used in conjunction with πνέω, is denoted the blowing of what we call a gale of wind. Compare Xen. de Venat. vi. 2, ὅταν ἄνεμος πνέῃ μέγας. Eurip. Rhes. 323, ἔφυσε (scil ἄνεμος) λαίφη τῆσδε γῆς μέγας πνέων: so also we have the epithet μέγας especially applied to Βορέας in Aristoph. Vesp. 1123, Βορέας ὁ μέγας: and it occurs, as used with ἐκπνέω, (to denote a wind which does not shift, but blows right out from a given quarter,) in Soph. Aj. 1148, ἐκπνεύσας μέγας χειμών. Herodot. viii. 138. Plut. Ages. 32.

In the words following, ἀποφέρεται ἐς τὸ πέλαγος, we have the idea of this powerful north-wester set forth in its natural effect, with allusion to which it is in Eurip. Phœn. 319, characterized as ἐξώστης—μέγας ἄνεμος: and similarly in Herodot. ii. 113, we have mention of a wind which drives the ship out of course, and carries it along with it.

χειμασθεὶς] 'after being tempest-tossed.' So Acts xxvii. 18, χειμαζομένων ἡμῶν.

3. προσπλέοντα] This, the reading of two of the best MSS., I have thought proper to receive, with Bekker (2nd edition), as yielding a sense far preferable to that arising from vulg. πλέοντα. Easily might the preposition in composition be lost; and that Plutarch had it in his copy, is plain. Ὑπερεῖδε τὸ πλῆθος. See note on iv. 10, 5. Ὅπερ καὶ οἱ Θ. ἔπαθον, 'a feeling which the Thurians also experienced.'

Ch. CV. 2. ὅσον σχόντας μόνον] 'only just so far as to land on the Lacedæmonian territory in arms.' Πρασιάς. So I read, with Bekker (2nd edition), from one of the best MSS., confirmed by two passages, supra ii. 56, and vii. 18, instead of vulg. Πρασιὰν, retained by Poppo and Goelker, from a vain deference to MSS. in a case where their authority weighs light: a strong support is also derived to this reading from the words of Aristoph. Pax, 241, ἰὼ Πρασιαὶ προσάθλιαι: and so in Steph. Byz. we have Πρασίαι.

ὅσα ἄλλα] For ἐς ὅσα ἄλλα ἀπέβησαν, 'wherever else they landed.'

sequently the crews formed a disposable force. The foregoing τε belongs to the καὶ before τοὺς Σελινουντίους.

στρατιᾷ] Some MSS. have πανστρατιᾷ, but almost all the best MSS. (including Mus. Brit.) στρατιᾷ without the παν, which, I suspect, arose from the τᾶν in ἁπαντᾶν just before, and would be the more likely to be inserted here from the circumstance of the phrase πανστρατιᾷ ἀπαντησόμενοι occurring a little further on at ch. 2. Though however suitable there, it were here anything but such; since, as observes Poppo, 'considering the vicinity of these Segestans, the Selinuntians could not be expected to join them with their whole force; and, in point of fact, they brought but a slender aid.'

5. ἀναλαβὼν] 'taking them with him,' for παραλ., as v. 64, 5, ἀναλ. τοὺς ξυμμάχους, assumptis, and vii. 74. Polyæn. p. 650, τοὺς ἱππέας ἀναλ. On the term ἐπιβατῶν see note at iii. 95. In stating the total number of the battle array brought by Gylippus to the aid of Syracuse, historians differ. Mitford states it at 5000, including slaves. Diodorus Sic. at 3000 foot, and 200 horse; yet even the latter is probably too high an estimate: and our only means of correct information on this point is, I believe, to be derived from Thucydides: though what is the precise meaning to be affixed to his words, is far from clear; and the obscurity which involves it, has been increased by erroneous punctuation. According to the pointing adopted by all the editors, the numbers of the Selinuntian and Geloan quotas are not specified, and the number of the Sicels is under 1000; yet the latter number is surely too high, considering that the Sicel tribes were only some, not the whole, and only promised to send στρατιὰν οὐ πολλήν. Again, why should it be said 1000 in all? I am persuaded that the words τοὺς πάντας have reference to the Selinuntians, Geloans, and Sicels, whose quotas in all made up 1000 horse and foot,—the latter, we may suppose, chiefly consisting of light-armed. In order to obtain this sense, we have only to place a comma after Σικελῶν, which I have found in two of the best MSS. (Clar. and Mus. Brit.) Of course τινὰς is, in this case, to be supplied from what goes before: now thus the numbers of the Sicilian force will be brought within the bounds of probability; and the preposition ἐς, (understood here to bear the sense 'to the amount of,') followed by some specified number and the adjective πᾶς or ξύμπας, is not unfrequently used to denote a sum total. See supra iii. 20. vii. 30, and especially compare vi. 67, ἐβοήθησαν δὲ αὐτοῖς Σελινούντιοι μὲν μάλιστα, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ Γελῴων ἱππῆς, τὸ ξύμπαν ἐς διακοσίους.

CH. II. 1. Γόγγυλος] This proper name seems to be a diminutive of an old adjective, not preserved in the Greek writers, γόγγος, round; and when applied to a person, denoted what we call a squab, i. e. a short thick person; being one of the many names formed from personal peculiarities. The noun γόγγος is derived from the Sanscrit gonga, 'round;' whence the name of a round metal instrument used in the east: from γόγγος came the noun γόγγων, 'a stupid, thick headed fellow;' and γόγγρος, for γόγγυρος, a conger-eel,

Συρακούσας, ὀλίγον δὲ πρὸ Γυλίππου· καὶ καταλαβὼν αὐτοὺς περὶ ἀπαλλαγῆς τοῦ πολέμου μέλλοντας ἐκκλησιάσειν, διεκώλυσέ τε καὶ παρεθάρσυνε, λέγων ὅτι νῆές τε ἄλλαι ἔτι προσπλέουσι, καὶ Γύλιππος ὁ Κλεανδρίδου, Λακεδαιμονίων ἀποστειλάντων, ἄρχων. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν Συρακοσίοι ἐπερρώσθησάν τε, καὶ τῷ Γυλίππῳ εὐθὺς πανστρατιᾷ ὡς ἀπαντησόμενοι ἐξῆλθον· ἤδη γὰρ καὶ ἐγγὺς ὄντα ᾐσθάνοντο αὐτόν. 3. ὁ δὲ †Γέτα[ς] †τό τε τεῖχος ἐν τῇ παρόδῳ τῶν Σικελῶν ἑλὼν, καὶ ξυνταξάμενος ὡς ἐς μάχην, ἀφικνεῖται ἐς τὰς Ἐπιπολάς· καὶ ἀναβὰς κατὰ τὸν Εὐρύηλον, ᾗπερ καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι and also the round excrescence on the trunks of trees: γόγγος is of the same form with σπόγγος, φθόγγος, and the obsolete λόγγος, preserved in the Latin longus.

περὶ ἀπαλλαγῆς τοῦ πολέμου] i. e. concerning some mode of getting rid of the war: a very rare phrase, of which the only examples that I have noted elsewhere are the following: Demosth. p. 275, οὐκ ἦν τοῦ πρὸς ὑμᾶς πολέμου πέρας οὐδ' ἀπαλλαγὴ Φιλίππῳ. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 421. 7, ζητεῖν ἀπαλλαγὴν τοῦ πολέμου, and 1843, 9, ἀπαλλαγῆς τοῦ πολέμου τυχεῖν ἠξίουν. Comp. infra ch. 42, εἰ πέρας μηδὲν ἔσται σφίσι τοῦ ἀπαλλαγῆναι (for ὥστε ἀπ.) τοῦ κινδύνου.

3. Γέτας] The true name of an obscure hill-fort like this, it is, amidst the marvellous variations in the MSS., impossible to ascertain; and, accordingly, editors here differ widely: Bekker edits Γέτα; Goeller and Dr. Arnold, Ἰέτας; and Poppo, Γέτα[ς γε τό]. This, indeed, is one of those cases in which easier is it to say what is not, than what is, the true reading: and the reading adopted by Goeller and Dr. Arnold may safely be pronounced of the former class, since it has no support whatever from the MSS.; nor is it, as Goeller imagines, borne out by the words of Steph. Byz. in Ἰέται, φρούριον Σικελίας, Φίλιστος ἕκτῃ, for that fort cannot be the one here meant, since it is upwards of 25 miles out of the road from Himera to Syracuse; and on an occasion like this, where speed was indispensable, Gylippus would, of course, go by the nearest route: of the two readings Γέτας and Γέτα, the latter is the better supported by authority of MSS., and seems further countenanced by the existence of the manifestly false reading γε τό. Yet the MSS. here are so miserably faulty, that it is hopeless to arrive at the truth through them: and the next words, whether τό τε or τότε be adopted, are palpably corrupt. Under these circumstances, we are left not a little to conjecture. I believe Thucydides to have written either Γέτα τε τεῖχος, or Γέγα (Γέγας) τε τεῖχος, which latter appears to me the more probable from the circumstance of the name being more like a Siked one; and also from the γ being supported by the old editions, some MSS., and lastly by Valla, who well represents the sense by his version, 'in ipso transitu Siculorum Gegæ et muro expugnato;' where, I suspect, for Gegæ, was originally written Gegas: for the æ would be here useless, and the note of abbreviation for et nearly resembles an s.

τὸ τεῖχος—τῶν Σικελῶν] The genitive τῶν Σικελῶν belongs to τεῖχος, not παρόδῳ, for ἐν τῇ παρόδῳ merely means, 'on his passage' or route, as i. 126, 11. The article τὸ before τεῖχος I have obelized as probably corrupt, because there was no fort of the Sikels so called κατ' ἐξοχήν: the present was evidently an obscure stronghold belonging to the Sikels in the interest of Syracuse; (see ch. 1, 4.) and which we may be sure Gylippus would not have wasted his time to subdue, (probably by a coup de main,) had it not lain quite ἐν τῇ παρόδῳ, and obstructed his passage. I believe the fort to have occupied the site of the Petra of after-times; a name originally meaning merely a hill-fort, and then the name of a town (q. d. hill-town, rock-stone). It was in the direct road from Himera to Enna, (Castell. Giovanni,) which would be pursued by Gylippus, (52 miles by the Roman Itinerary,) and from thence to Syracuse would be upwards of 70 miles in a straight line.

καὶ ξυνταξάμενος ὡς ἐς μάχην] 'and having put his forces in order as for battle:' for although he was yet nearly four days' march from Syracuse, he might not without reason expect to be encountered by some Athenian troops sent out to arrest his progress. Ἀναβὰς κατὰ τὸν Εὐρύηλον. The full sense is, 'and having ascended the height at the point over-against where Euryelus was situated.'

So κατὰ τὸν Τεριναῖον κόλπον, supra vi. 104, 2. On Euryelus, see note at vi. 97.

ᾗπερ καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὸ πρῶτον] Namely, by the ridge which, over the Hog's Back, connects it with the upland country.

4. κατὰ τοῦτο τοῦ καιροῦ] I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, in receiving the τοῦ, though found only in two MSS., because it seems almost required by the tenor of the context; and was far more likely to be omitted than added. As to Dr. Arnold's arguments to show that the article may be dispensed with, they are any thing but cogent: he has not proved that the article in this idiom is sometimes employed and sometimes omitted by the best ancient writers. No proof is supplied by the passage he has adduced from Demosth. p. 20, 12; for there the article is not required, (the words being, as Wolf says, for τοιοῦτος καιρὸς τῶν Φιλίππου πραγμάτων ἐστὶ, and meaning that the affairs of Philip had come to a crisis,) whereas here it is indispensable; the sense being, 'that Gylippus came at the very crisis when, from the upper works of the circumvallation being unfinished, he himself could get thither to Syracuse, and the Syracusans could simultaneously pass through thence to meet and annoy him.'

τῷ δὲ ἄλλῳ] A rare use for κατὰ τὸ ἄλλο [μέρος], as the Scholiast explains; and which is borne out by the reading of four MSS., Cass., Græv., Cant., and Clar., τὸ ἄλλο. As to the words τῷ πλέονι, they are, as Poppo remarks, thrown in by way of correction and explanation; (see Matth. Gr. § 389.) and the general meaning intended is, that 'at the rest of the line (viz. of circumvallation) in the direction of Trogilus to the sea the other way, stones were already laid along (as ready for use).' Compare Plut. Nic. 18, παρὰ τοσοῦτον—κινδύνου: and see note on iii. 49, fin.

Ch. III. 1. τὸ πρῶτον] I have followed Bekker in introducing the article, on the authority of two MSS. (to which add Cant. and Clarend. in marg.) because it was more likely to have been inadvertently omitted than intentionally inserted.

προπέμπει] The reading here is doubtful: the old editions had προσπέμπει, which was altered by Duk., and from him by Bauer, Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, to προπέμπει; while Bekker recalled the old reading, which is found in three MSS., but injudiciously; for although προσπέμπει yields a tolerable sense, yet that is one by no means so good as προπέμπει. Few, I think, will hesitate to assent to the critical canon laid down by Duker, that 'where the sentiment (in the context) requires the sense præmittere or prius mittere, we should write προπέμπειν; when aliquem mittere, προσπέμπειν.' This rule he shows, by various examples, to have been acted on by our author; and it is only necessary to add, that here the former sense is unquestionably required,—the evident intent of Thucydides being to state, that before Gylippus advanced to attack, he sent a herald.

2. ἐν ὀλιγωρίᾳ ἐποιοῦντο] 'made light of it:' a very rare phrase, of which I have noted no example elsewhere; but we may comp. the similar one ἐν ἐλαφρῷ ποιεῖσθαι in Hdot. i. 118. iii. 154, and ἐν αἰσχύνῃ ἀντιπαρεσκευάζοντο ἀλλήλοις ὡς ἐς μάχην. 3. καὶ ὁ Γύλιππος, ὁρῶν τοὺς Συρακοσίους ταρασσομένους καὶ οὐ ῥᾳδίως ξυντασσομένους, ἐπανῆγε τὸ στρατόπεδον ἐς τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν μᾶλλον. καὶ ὁ Νικίας οὐκ ἐπῆγε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ἀλλ' ἡσύχαζε πρὸς τῷ ἑαυτοῦ τείχει. ὡς δ' ἔγνω ὁ Γύλιππος οὐ προσιόντας αὐτούς, ἀπήγαγε τὴν στρατιὰν ἐπὶ τὴν ἄκραν τὴν Τεμενῖτιν καλουμένην, καὶ αὐτοῦ ηὐλίσαντο. 4. τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἄγων τὴν μὲν πλείστην τῆς στρατιᾶς, παρέταξε πρὸς τὰ τείχη τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ὅπως μὴ ἐπιβοηθοῖεν ἄλλοσε· μέρος δέ τι πέμψας πρὸς τὸ φρούριον τὸ Λάβδαλον, αἱρεῖ, καὶ ὅσους ἔλαβεν ἐν αὐτῷ πάντας ἀπέκτεινεν· ἦν δὲ οὐκ ἐπιφανὲς τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τὸ χωρίον. καὶ τριήρης τῇ αὐτῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἁλίσκεται τῶν Ἀθηναίων ὑπὸ τῶν Συρακοσίων ἐφορμοῦσα τῷ λιμένι.

IV. Καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἐτείχιζον οἱ Συρακόσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι διὰ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν, ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως ἀρξάμενοι ἄνω, πρὸς τὸ ἐγκάρσιον τεῖχος ἁπλοῦν· ὅπως οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, εἰ μὴ δύναιντο κωλῦσαι, μηκέτι οἷοί τε ὦσιν ἀποτειχίσαι. 2. καὶ οἵ τε Ἀθηναῖοι ἀναβεβήκεσαν ἤδη ἄνω, τὸ ἐπὶ θαλάσσῃ τεῖχος ἐπιτελέσαντες, καὶ ὁ Γύλιππος, (ἦν γάρ τι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τοῦ τείχους ἀσθενὲς) νυκτὸς ἀναλαβὼν τὴν στρατιὰν, ἐπῄει πρὸς αὐτό. 3. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι, (ἔτυχον γὰρ ἔξω αὐλιζόμενοι) ὡς ᾔσθοντο, ἀντεπῆσαν· ὁ δὲ, γνοὺς, κατὰ τάχος ἀπ-οὐδὲν ἀποκρινάμενοι] In Plutarch, Nic. 19, it is added, τῶν δὲ στρατιωτῶν τινες, καταγελῶντες, ἠρώτων, εἰ διὰ παρουσίαν ἑνὸς τρίβωνος καὶ βακτηρίας Λακωνικῆς οὕτως ἰσχυρὰ τὰ Συρακουσίων ἐξαίφνης γέγονεν, ὡς Ἀθηναίων καταφρονεῖν: and, indeed, Gylippus seems to have been almost the only Spartan: so Justin iv. 5, 7, it is said, 'ab his (scil. Lacedæmoniis) mittitur Gylippus solus;' though it is truly added, 'sed in quo instar omnium auxiliorum erat:' where certainly the editors and critics would not have stumbled, as they have done, at the in quo, and proposed various but futile conjectures for the removal of a fancied corruption, had they been aware of the ellipsis there of unus, a word the more readily to be supplied, as suggested by the foregoing solus. Similarly in Virg. Æn. vii. 707, 'Agmen agens Clausus, magnique ipse agminis instar,' we have the word unus implied, and ipse expressed. Where nothing in the context exists to suggest it, the word unus, in such a case, is expressed, as in Cic. Brut. 51, 'Plato mihi unus instar est omnium.'

3. τὴν ἄκραν τὴν Τεμενῖτιν] See the Map and Memoir.

4. μέρος—Λάβδαλον] This detachment was doubtless sent from the extreme right of the line, and under the cliff or ridge extending from the upper country down to Euryelus, and to which Gylippus took his course when he penetrated the Athenian lines to bring succours to Syracuse. He was tempted to make this attack on Labdalum from observing its weak state the day before, which made it liable to be taken by a coup de main.

ἐφορμοῦσα τῷ λιμένι] 'lying off the port;' probably for the purpose of reconnoitring it, and seeing what galleys were ready for sea. By τῷ λιμένι understand that part of the great harbour which was occupied by the Athenians; being a kind of μυχός. See Map. Before λιμένι Bekker (2nd edition) has inserted, from two MSS., the word μεγάλῳ; but this I have not ventured to receive into the text, because it is evidently derived from the margin, as indeed plainly appears from the modern Scholium τῷ μεγάλῳ.

Ch. IV. 1. πρὸς τὸ ἐγκάρσιον] 'in a cross direction,' so as to cross the Athenian wall. See Map and Memoir.

2. ἀσθενὲς] Namely, as Haack points out, by not having been carried high enough.

3. ἔξω αὐλιζόμενοι] i. e. 'bivouacking

ἠγαγε τοὺς σφετέρους πάλιν. ἐποικοδομήσαντες δὲ αὐτὸ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ὑψηλότερον, αὐτοὶ μὲν ταύτῃ ἐφύλασσον, τοὺς δὲ ἄλλους ξυμμάχους κατὰ τὸ ἄλλο τείχισμα ἤδη διέταξαν, ἦπερ ἔμελλον ἕκαστοι φρουρεῖν.

4. Τῷ δὲ Νικίᾳ ἐδόκει τὸ Πλημμύριον καλούμενον τειχίσαι· ἔστι δὲ ἄκρα ἀντιπέρας τῆς πόλεως ἥπερ προὔχουσα τοῦ μεγάλου λιμένος τὸ στόμα στενὸν ποιεῖ, καὶ εἰ τειχισθείη, ῥᾷον αὐτῷ ἐφαίνετο ἡ ἐσκομιδὴ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἔσεσθαι· δι' ἐλάσσονος γὰρ πρὸς τῷ λιμένι τῷ τῶν Συρακοσίων ἐφορμήσειν σφᾶς, καὶ οὐχ, ὥσπερ νῦν, ἐκ μυχοῦ τοῦ λιμένος τὰς ἐπαναγωγὰς ποιήσεσθαι, ἤν τι ναυτικῷ κινῶνται. προσεῖχέ τε ἤδη μᾶλλον τῷ κατὰ θάλασσαν πολέμῳ, ὁρῶν τὰ ἐκ τῆς γῆς σφίσιν, ἐπειδὴ Γύλιππος ἦκεν, ἀνελπιστότερα ὄντα. 5. διακομίσας οὖν στρατιὰν καὶ τὰς ναῦς, ‡ἐξετείχισε on the outside with a piquet-guard.' Ἐποικοδομήσαντες — ὑψηλότερον, lit. 'having built it up (by laying further layers of stone) so as to make it higher.'

4. Πλημμύριον] See my note in Translation, and also Map and Memoir.

ῥᾷον] So I have edited, with Bekker and Goeller, from 12 of the best MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) for vulg. ῥᾴων, which, though correct Greek, is yet less Attic. The former reading, as being the more recondite use, is the more likely to be genuine, and it is also strongly supported by two passages adduced by Dr. Arnold, infra ch. 28, θᾶσσον οὖσα, and supra iv. 10, μὴ ῥᾳδίως οὔσης τῆς ἀναχωρήσεως. To which add, Dionys. Hal. Ant. ii. 43, καὶ τοῦ Ῥωμύλου (ῥᾷον γὰρ ἤδη ἐκ τοῦ τραύματος) ἐκβοηθήσαντος, &c.; where, for ἤδη, I conjecture the true reading to be ἦν δή.

δι' ἐλάσσονος] Supply διαστήματος, 'from a shorter distance,' viz. than before, where the Athenian blockading station had been the part of the harbour from Dascon to the entrance of the harbour. Ἐφορμήσειν. Render, 'would blockade them.' Μυχοῦ τοῦ λιμένος. Meaning, the bottom of the harbour, reckoning from the upper part of the island of Ortygia; that part now called the Bay of Madalena. Now this still continued to form the station for the Athenian fleet in general; though the light ships, and the barges, and boats were soon removed to a station nearer the mouth of the harbour. See Map.

For vulg. ἐπαγωγὰς, which yields no tolerable sense, I have, with Goeller, Poppo, and Bekker (2nd edition), edited ἐπαναγωγάς. Render, 'their advances [to meet the enemy],' lit. their getting under weigh: such is the use of the verb ἐπανάγεσθαι in Polyb. i. 20, 15, where we have, Κ. κατὰ πορθμὸν ἐπαναχθέντων αὐτοῖς, and Dio Cass. 211, 64, ναυλοχοῦσαι (νῆες) σφίσιν ἐπαναχθῆσαι.

ἤν τι ναυτικῷ κινῶνται] This expression is best referred (as it is by the Schol., Didot, Poppo, and Dr. Arnold) to the Syracusans, not the Athenians; for, as Dr. Arnold well points out, 'the term κινῶνται is one more applicable to the stirring of a party undergoing blockade, than to the mere locomotion of the ships of the blockaders from one point to another:' to which purpose he compares another passage of our author, infra viii. 100. So also, I add, Xen. An. vi. 3, 5, (Th.) the enemy is described as so closely blockading, ὥστε κινηθῆναι οὐκ ἐδύναντο ἐκ τοῦ χωρίου: and in Hist. ii. 1, 22, we have, προεῖπεν ὡς μηδεὶς (meaning, no ship) κινήσοιτο—μηδὲ ἀνάξοιτο, 'should get under weigh:' and, indeed, for what were the Athenian ships stationed there, but to watch the motions of the Syracusan fleet, that ships might go forth to fetch prisoners, &c.?

ἀνελπιστότερα ὄντα] lit. 'more unhopeful,' i. e. less to be hoped of: a harsh idiom as used in the comparative (though ἀνέλπιστον in the positive occurs at v. 102); yet not so harsh as our word unhopeful, used in the superlative by Shakspeare, 'Benedict is not the unhopefullest husband that I know.'

5. στρατιὰν] Not, as almost all translators render it, 'the army,' (for Nicias would not send the whole of the land-forces, but only a detachment;) rather, 'a force,' meaning, some forces; of which sense of the word, not a little rare, an example occurs elsewhere in Xen. Cyr. viii. 6, 10, συνήγειρε στρατιάν: and so Suidas explains στρατιὰ by τὸ τῶν στρατιωτῶν ὑπὸ ἕνα ἔπαρχον, what we should express by 'a corps.'

ἐξετείχισε] So I have edited, with Haack

τρία φρούρια· καὶ ἐν αὐτοῖς τά τε σκεύη τὰ πλεῖστα ἔκειτο, καὶ τὰ πλοῖα ἤδη ἐκεῖ τὰ μεγάλα ὥρμει, καὶ αἱ ταχεῖαι νῆες. 6. ὥστε καὶ τῶν πληρωμάτων οὐχ ἥκιστα τότε πρῶτον κάκωσις ἐγένετο· τῷ τε γὰρ ὕδατι σπανίῳ χρώμενοι, καὶ οὐκ ἐγγύθεν, καὶ ἐπὶ φρυγανισμὸν ἅμα ὁπότε ἐξέλθοιεν οἱ ναῦται, ὑπὸ τῶν ἱππέων τῶν Συρακοσίων, κρατούντων τῆς γῆς, διεφθείροντο. τρίτον γὰρ μέρος τῶν ἱππέων τοῖς Συρακοσίοις διὰ τοὺς ἐν τῷ Πλημμυρίῳ, ἵνα μὴ κακουργήσοντες ἐξίοιεν, ἐπὶ τῇ ἐν τῷ Ὀλυμπιείῳ πολίχνῃ ἐτετάχατο. 7. ἐπυνθάνετο δὲ καὶ τὰς λοιπὰς τῶν Κορινθίων ναῦς προσπλεούσας ὁ Νικίας· καὶ πέμπει ἐς φυλακὴν αὐτῶν εἴκοσι ναῦς, αἷς εἴρητο περί τε Λοκροὺς καὶ Ῥηγίον καὶ τὴν προσβολὴν τῆς Σικελίας ναυλοχεῖν αὐτάς.

V. Ὁ δὲ Γύλιππος ἅμα μὲν ἐτείχιζε τὸ διὰ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν τεῖχος, τοῖς λίθοις χρώμενος οὓς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι προπαρεβάλοντο σφίσιν, ἅμα δὲ παρέτασσεν ἐξάγων ἀεὶ πρὸ τοῦ τειχίσματος τοὺς Συρακοσίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους· καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀντιπαρετάσσοντο. 2. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἔδοξε Γυλίππῳ καιρὸς εἶναι, ἦρχε τῆς ἐφόδου· καὶ ἐν χερσὶ γενόμενοι ἐμάχοντο μεταξὺ τῶν τειχισμάτων, ᾗ τῆς ἵππου τῶν Συρακοσίων οὐδεμία χρῆσις ἦν· καὶ νικηθέντων τῶν Συρακοσίων καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων, καὶ νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους ἀνελομένων, καὶ τῶν and Poppo, from many of the best MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar., Cantab., and Mus. Brit.) for vulg. ἐξετείχιζε, which is retained by Bekker and Goeller, but injudiciously, since while external evidence greatly preponderates, internal is equal, or in favour of the former.

τὰ σκεύη] Meaning chiefly the ship's tackle, (see ch. 24.) though also the baggage of the army, and stores generally. By τὰ πλοῖα μεγάλα understand the barges used to convey articles to and from shore. The station for the μεγάλα πλοῖα and νῆες ταχεῖαι was, I apprehend, at the entrance of the harbour. See Map. Ὥρμει Render, 'stationem habebant.'

6. ὥστε καὶ] The ὥστε here simply denotes consequence, and may be rendered 'consequently,' or 'hereupon.' The purpose of the words being to intimate, that the advantage he had gained, by the measure just mentioned, whereby the introduction of supplies by sea was protected,—was counterbalanced by a no small disadvantage,—namely, that the crews were obliged to go much further for wood and water, and were harassed and cut up by continual attacks from the Syracusan cavalry, which were masters of the field. The reason why they had to go further was, doubtless, that the promontory of Plemmyrium supplied no wood and water, and the country immediately adjoining furnished water but scantily.

τῷ τε γὰρ ὕδατι, &c.] Poppo well points out that the two members of this sentence cohere with the verb διεφθείροντο, thus: χρώμενοί τε καὶ ὁπότε ἐξέλθοιεν διεφθείροντο, the sense, literally expressed, being, 'nam et quia aqua rara, eaque non e vicinia, utebantur, et quum lignatum exirent, ab equitatu Syracusano peribant.' φρυγανισμὸν here means the gathering of brushwood for fuel. Compare Acts xxviii. 3, and a passage of Pherecydes ap. Pollux, x. 128, ὡς ἐπὶ φρυγανισμὸν ἐξῆλθε.

πολίχνῃ] Meaning, a small town forming, as it were, a suburb to Olympieium. I have not written it (as it is by some editors) with a capital letter, because I agree with Didot, that the form of speech and the collocation of the words, τῇ ἐν τῷ Ὀλυμπιείῳ πολίχνῃ, tend to show that the word is not a proper name, but an appellative.

7. ναυλοχεῖν αὐτάς] For ἐνεδρεύειν αὐτάς, 'be on the watch or look-out for them:' a rare idiom, of which Dr. Arnold adduces an example from Appian, B. C. iv. 82, Μ. δὲ ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ ναυλοχῶν Κλεόπατραν.

Ἀθηναίων τροπαῖον στησάντων, ὁ Γύλιππος ξυγκαλέσας τὸ στράτευμα, οὐκ ἔφη τὸ ἁμάρτημα ἐκείνων, ἀλλ' ἑαυτοῦ γενέσθαι· τῆς γὰρ ἵππου καὶ τῶν ἀκοντιστῶν τὴν ὠφέλειαν τῇ τάξει, ἐντὸς λίαν τῶν τειχῶν ποιήσας, ἀφελέσθαι· νῦν οὖν αὖθις ἐπάξειν. 3. καὶ διανοεῖσθαι οὕτως ἐκέλευεν αὐτούς, ὡς τῇ μὲν παρασκευῇ οὐκ ἔλασσον ἔξοντας, τῇ δὲ γνώμῃ οὐκ ἀνεκτὸν ἐσόμενον εἰ μὴ ἀξιώσουσι, Πελοποννήσιοί τε ὄντες καὶ Δωριῆς, Ἰώνων καὶ νησιωτῶν καὶ ξυγκλύδων ἀνθρώπων κρατήσαντες, ἐξελάσασθαι ἐκ τῆς χώρας. VI. Καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα, ἐπειδὴ καιρὸς ἦν, αὖθις ἐπῆγεν αὐτούς. ὁ δὲ Νικίας καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, νομίζοντες, καὶ εἰ ἐκεῖνοι μὴ ἐθέλοιεν μάχης ἄρχειν, ἀναγκαῖον εἶναι σφίσι μὴ περιορᾶν παροικοδομούμενον τὸ τεῖχος· (ἤδη γὰρ καὶ ὅσον οὐ παρεληλύθει τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων τοῦ τείχους τελευτὴν ἡ ἐκείνων τείχισις, καὶ εἰ προέλθοι, ταὐτὸν ἤδη ἐποίει αὐτοῖς νικᾶν τε μαχομένοις διὰ παντὸς, καὶ μηδὲ μάχεσθαι) ἀντεπῆσαν οὖν τοῖς Συρακοσίοις. 2. καὶ ὁ Γύλιππος τοὺς μὲν ὁπλίτας ἔξω τῶν τειχῶν μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον προαγαγών, ξυνέμισγεν αὐτοῖς, τοὺς δ' ἱππέας καὶ τοὺς ἀκοντιστὰς ἐκ πλαγίου τάξας τῶν Ἀθηναίων, κατὰ τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν, ᾗ τῶν τειχῶν ἀμφοτέρων αἱ ἐργασίαι ἔληγον. 3. καὶ προσβαλόντες οἱ ἱππῆς ἐν τῇ μάχῃ τῷ εὐωνύμῳ κέρᾳ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ὅπερ κατ' αὐτοὺς ἦν, ἔτρεψαν· καὶ δι' αὐτὸ καὶ τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα, νικηθὲν ὑπὸ τῶν Συρακοσίων, ‡κατηράχθη ἐς τὰ τειχίσματα. 4. καὶ τῇ ἐπιούσῃ νυκτὶ ἔφθασαν παρξυγκλύδων ἀνθρώπων] 'a promiscuous rabble.' It is strange that Valck. should have condemned this word, and thought it ought every where to be changed (the genitive into συνηλύδων, the accusative into συνηλύδα); for it is not unfrequent in the best prose writers. And the very phrase ξύγκλυδες ἄνθρωποι occurs in Hdian. vii. 7, 2. Polyæn. viii. 16, 5. Appian, i. 592. Jos. Ant. xix. 4, 1.

Ch. V. 3. διανοεῖσθαι οὕτως—ἔξοντας] Render, 'he also bid them to so conceive of themselves, as being likely to be no way inferior as a force.'

Ch. VI. 1. καὶ εἰ προέλθοι, ταὐτὸν ἤδη ἐποίει αὐτοῖς] It is well pointed out by Dobree, that the αὐτοῖς has reference to the Athenians: and the sense, as laid down by Dobree, Poppo, and Goeller, is, that if it (meaning their cross-wall) should proceed further, it would soon make that it should be always the same thing to the Athenians, although conquering in battle, as if they had not struck a stroke. So in a passage of Plutarch, Nicias, 19, (referred to by Dobree and Goeller,) it is said, ἤδη γὰρ ἀπέκοψε τὸν ἐκείνων περιτειχισμὸν, ὥστε αὐτοῖς μηδὲν εἶναι πλέον κρατοῦσι, 'so that it should do them no more good to conquer than not to conquer.' See the conclusion of the present chapter, and chapter 11, fin.

3. κατηράχθη ἐς τὰ τειχίσματα] This is one of those many cases in which easier is it to discern the general sense than to determine the exact reading; especially as the MSS. fluctuate between the vulg. κατηράχθη and κατερράχθη, the reading of eight MSS., besides (as I find) Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit. And here a reference to other writers will scarcely clear up the doubt, since in these writers nearly the same variation of reading exists. Thus in Herodot. ix. 69, τοὺς δὲ λοιποὺς κατήρραξεν—ἐς τὸν Κιθαιρῶνα is the common reading and that of some MSS.; while Wess., Schweigh., and Gaisford edit, on the authority of other MSS., κατήραξεν, which is confirmed by Appian, t. i. 322, τοὺς δὲ λοιποὺς ἐς τὰς πέτρας κατήραξαν. And Valckn., after adducing a passage of Demosth. p. 675, where we have, κατέρραξεν εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν ἅπαντας, proposes to read κατήραξεν, which is supported by the reading of some MSS. there, κατήρραξεν. Similarly in Plut. Fab. 8, οἰκοδομήσαντες καὶ παρελθόντες τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων οἰκοδομίαν, ὥστε μηκέτι μήτε αὐτοὶ κωλύεσθαι ὑπ' αὐτῶν, ἐκείνους τε καὶ παντάπασιν ἀπεστερηκέναι, εἰ καὶ κρατοῖεν, μὴ ἂν ἔτι σφᾶς ἀποτειχίσαι.

VII. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο αἵ τε τῶν Κορινθίων νῆες καὶ Ἀμπρακιωτῶν καὶ Λευκαδίων ἐσέπλευσαν αἱ ὑπόλοιποι δώδεκα, λαθοῦσαι τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων φυλακὴν (ἦρχε δὲ αὐτῶν Ἐρασινίδης Κορίνθιος), καὶ ξυνετείχισαν τὸ λοιπὸν τοῖς Συρακοσίοις μέχρι τοῦ ἐγκαρσίου τείχους. 2. καὶ ὁ Γύλιππος ἐς τὴν ἄλλην Σικελίαν ἐπὶ στρατιάν τε ᾤχετο, καὶ ναυτικὴν καὶ πεζὴν ξυλλέξων, καὶ τῶν πόλεων ἅμα προσαξόμενος εἴ τις ἢ μὴ πρόθυμος ἦν, ἢ παντάπασιν ἔτι κατέρραξεν (scil. αὐτοὺς) εἰς χάρακα is the common text, though some MSS. have κατήραξαν, seemingly the true reading. Also, in Arrian, E. A. v. 17, 13, κατηρράχθησαν—εἰς τεῖχος is found in the text and MSS.; though Ellendt there edits κατηράχθησαν, perhaps rightly. And further, in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1906, we have, ἵνα μὴ καταρραχθῶσι πρὸς χωρίον βιαζόμενοι, without var. lect. Also in Jos. Ant. xiii. 13, 5, εἰς βαθεῖαν κατερράχθη φάραγγα, where the writer had probably this passage of Thucydides in mind; and if so, he read, we may suppose, κατερράχθη. At least that passage and the one of Dionysius above cited will prove that καταῤῥήσσω or καταῤῥάσσω was sometimes used in the sense deturbo. But that καταράσσω was also so used, is certain; and the weight of evidence is quite in its favour: though if even that were not the case, the balance would strike the beam when the following passages of Dio Cass. were thrown into the scale: p. 512, 87, καταραχθεὶς ἐς τὸ τεῖχος: and 514, 89: as also 805, 82, κατήραξαν ἐς τὸ τάφρευμα, and 555, 67, τοὺς πεζοὺς ἐς τὸ τεῖχος καταράξαντος. Moreover, ἐναράσσω and εἰσαράσσω are often used in Herodotus and Dio Cass., and ἀπαράσσω in Thucyd. vii. 63, 1, where see note. That Dio Cass. had κατηράχθη in his copy, is quite clear: and when we consider that ἀπαράξητε, and not ἀπορράξητε, occurs infra ch. 63, in all the copies, little reason is there to doubt that κατηράχθη is the true reading here. As to what Poppo alleges, 'ῥάσσειν potius quam ἀράσσειν ita dictum est, et per se probabile est, et in Demosth. Cor. § 8, ῥάξαντες εἰς τὸν βόρβορον appareat,'—what can such a surmise be said to weigh against evidence of fact so overpowering as the above? As to the passage he adduces from Demosthenes, it is nothing to the purpose, since there ῥάξαντες only signifies, 'having dashed him down into the mud,' as we should say, 'knocked him into the kennel.'

καὶ παρελθόντες] These words have been bracketed by Bekker, Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold. But they are little less than necessary to the sense of the passage; and considering that in one MS. only is it that they are not found, more probable is it that they were there omitted by the scribe propter homœoteleuton, than that they should have been foisted into all the rest. That they were in the text in the time of Plutarch, is almost certain from what that writer says in his Nicias, ch. 19, παροικοδῶν εἰς τὰς διαστολὰς, 'intervalla murorum.' In their second editions, Goell. has removed the brackets; while Bekker has extended them to οἰκοδομίαν. And certainly if the καὶ be removed, the other words are better away: but not a particle of authority exists to warrant this procedure; and the word οἰκοδομίαν is, as Poppo observes, recognised as having place by Anti-atticistes.

Ch. VII. 1. μέχρι τοῦ ἐγκαρσίου] Meaning, 'beyond the interval where the two walls converged towards each other:' an explanation of this disputed passage not essentially different from Goeller's, (De Situ Syrac. p. 98.) except that there seems no difficulty in taking the expression ἐγκάρσιον τεῖχος (a mere relative one) to mean the Athenian wall. But Goeller seems right in supposing that before the arrival of the Corinthians the counterwork, though carried to its utmost length, was in an unfinished state. Dr. Arnold's remarks do not point out any better way of reconciling the seeming contradiction between the language of Thucydides, ch. 6, ἔφθασαν παροικοδομήσαντες τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων οἰκοδομίαν, and in ch. 7, ξυνετείχισαν τὸ λοιπὸν μέχρι τοῦ ἐγκαρσίου τείχους. ἀφεστήκει τοῦ πολέμου. 3. πρέσβεις τε ἄλλοι τῶν Συρακοσίων καὶ Κορινθίων ἐς Λακεδαίμονα καὶ Κόρινθον ἀπεστάλησαν, ὅπως στρατιὰ ἔτι περαιωθῇ, τρόπῳ [†ᾧ †ἂν, ἐν ὁλκάσιν, ἢ πλοίοις, ἢ ἄλλως ὅπως ἂν] προχωρῇ, ὡς καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπιμεταπεμπομένων. 4. οἵ τε Συρακόσιοι ναυτικὸν ἐπλήρουν, καὶ ἀνεπειρῶντο, ὡς καὶ τούτῳ ἐπιχειρήσοντες, καὶ ἐς τἆλλα πολὺ ἐπέῤῥωντο. VIII. Ὁ δὲ Νικίας, αἰσθόμενος τοῦτο, καὶ ὁρῶν καθ' ἡμέραν ἐπιδιδοῦσαν τήν τε τῶν πολεμίων ἰσχὺν καὶ τὴν σφετέραν ἀπορίαν, ἔπεμπε καὶ αὐτὸς ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας, ἀγγέλλων πολλάκις μὲν καὶ ἄλλοτε καθ' ἕκαστα τῶν γιγνομένων, μάλιστα δὲ καὶ τότε, νομίζων ἐν δεινοῖς τε εἶναι,—καὶ, εἰ μὴ ὡς τάχιστα ἢ σφᾶς μεταπέμψουσιν ἢ ἄλλους μὴ ὀλίγους ἀποστελοῦσιν, οὐδεμίαν εἶναι σωτηρίαν. 2. φοβούμενος δὲ μὴ οἱ πεμπόμενοι, ἢ κατὰ τοῦ λέγειν ἀδυνασίαν, ἢ καὶ ‡μνήμης ἐλλιπεῖς γιγνόμενοι, ἢ τῷ ὄχλῳ πρὸς χάριν τι λέγοντες,

2. ἀφεστήκει τοῦ πολέμου] 'had desisted from [taking part in] the war.' See my Lexicon of the New Testament in ἀφίστημι.

3. τρόπῳ—προχωρῇ] As the best mode of adjusting the phraseology here, (which is, like that occasionally occurring elsewhere, somewhat overloaded,) I propose simply to insert two letters, and change the first ἂν to (what is not unfrequently mistaken for ἀν) οὖν; reading and pointing thus: τρόπῳ ὁτῳοῦν ἐν ὁλκάσιν ἢ πλοίοις, ἢ ἄλλως ὅπως ἂν προχωρῇ. On the Attic idiom, by which οὖν is (not, as has been said, pleonastically, but by a use answering to that of cunque in Latin) subjoined to ὥσπερ, ὅστις, οἷος, ὁποῖος, &c., suffice it to refer to Steph. Thes. col. 10981, sq. Moreover, in ἢ we have, as Poppo remarks, an instance nimii μερισμοῦ, as at vi. 34, 2, ἤτοι κρύφα, ἢ φανερῶς ἢ ἐξ ἑνός γε τοῦ τρόπου. At προχωρῇ there is an ellipsis of πρᾶγμα, 'in whatever way the thing may succeed.'

4. ἀνεπειρῶντο] This I would not, with Steph. and Bauer, regard as standing for the simple verb ἐπειρῶντο. It may rather be supposed that the ανα has reference to the idea of repetition implied in what the Scholiast and Goeller here very properly assign as the sense,—namely, to practise, or make trial of,—a sense which the term also bears in Appian, i. 566, and in Hdot. vi. 12, καὶ ἐσβαίνειν οὐκ ἐθέλεσκον ἐς τὰς νέας, οὐδ' ἀναπειρᾶσθαι. Indeed it appears to have been no other than a cox solennis de hac re; for in Poll. i. 123, it is enumerated among nautical terms; and so I find it used by Callixenus ap. Athen. p. 204, B.

ἐς τἆλλα πολὺ ἐπέῤῥωντο] 'they were much encouraged as to the rest [of their projects].' Compare supra ii. 8, ἐῤῥωντο ἐς τὸν πόλεμον, where see note.

CH. VIII. 2. ἀδυνασίαν] A Thucydidean idiom for ἀδυναμίαν. Of κατὰ τοῦ λέγειν ἀδυνασίαν the sense is, 'on account of, by reason of, any deficiency of power in speaking.' The article τὴν after κατὰ has been very properly cancelled by the later editors, on the authority of some MSS. (to which add Codd. Cant. and Mus. Brit.) because it would make that actual which is left hypothetical; q. d. 'should they not be able to address the people.'

μνήμης ἐλλιπεῖς γιγνόμενοι] Such is the reading adopted by Haack (second edition), Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller (first edition), for vulg. γνώμης, retained by Haack (first edition), Goeller (second edition), and Arnold. I am fully persuaded that the word γνώμης, though found in all the MSS. except two, and supported by the version of Valla, is indefensible, as admitting of no suitable sense: for if it be interpreted intelligentia or prudentia, then we are encountered by the objection, that, of course, Nicias would not send fools; and explaining it to mean presence of mind, then we assign to the word a sense which it can by no means be proved ever to bear. Again, if, with Abresch and Goeller (second edition), we refer the term to Nicias, rendering either, with Abresch, 'ipsius mentionem assecuti,' or, with Goeller, 'hinter seiner Absicht zurückbleibend,' then, as Bauer and Poppo observe, the words τῆς ἑαυτοῦ would here be indispensably necessary; not to say that the term ἐλλιπὴς (as Bauer remarks) does not deοὐ τὰ ὄντα ἀπαγγέλλωσιν, ἔγραψεν ἐπιστολήν,—νομίζων οὕτως ἂν μάλιστα τὴν αὐτοῦ γνώμην, μηδὲν ἐν τῷ ἀγγέλῳ ἀφανισθεῖσαν, μαθόντας τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, βουλεύσασθαι περὶ τῆς ἀληθείας. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν ᾤχοντο φέροντες, οὓς ἀπέστειλε, τὰ γράμματα καὶ ὅσα ἔδει αὐτοὺς εἰπεῖν· ὁ δὲ, τὰ κατὰ τὸ στρατόπεδον διὰ φυλακῆς μᾶλλον ἤδη ἔχων, ἢ δι' ἐκουσίων κινδύνων, ἐπεμελεῖτο.

note non intelligens, but carens. For these several reasons, I must decidedly prefer the reading μνήμης, the deficiency of which in external authority seems amply overbalanced by the weight of internal evidence. Indeed the two words μνήμη and γνώμη are so very similar in MS. characters, that easily might one be mistaken for the other; and the introduction of the word γνώμῃ here may justly be attributed to the occurrence of γνώμης just after. Again, as to what Arnold urges against this reading, that a man's memory must be bad indeed if he could not remember any particulars of the state of the armament as contained in Nicias's letter,—this, though true in itself, is not to the present purpose; since from what follows, § 3, οἱ μὲν ᾤχοντο φέροντες τὰ γράμματα, καὶ ὅσα ἔδει αὐτοὺς εἰπεῖν,—it appears that besides the particulars contained in the letter, there were others committed to them to state by word of mouth; (compare ch. 10, ὅσα τε ἀπὸ γλώσσης εἴρητο αὐτοῖς, εἶπον, &c.) and consequently Nicias might reasonably fear that if all of them had been left to be delivered by word of mouth, the memory of the messengers might fail them, especially considering that presence of mind, the main stay of memory, (and well called by Shakspeare 'the warder of the brain,') might give way on so trying an occasion as that of addressing their dread sovereign Δῆμος,—an occasion on which they would have to deliver many unpleasant truths.

Finally, as to the objection of Goeller, that thus the dative (μνήμῃ), and not the genitive (μνήμης), were required,—that is wholly futile; for (not to mention that the dative is actually found in one of the best MSS.) it is sufficient to say, that the genitive is here used instead of the dative agreeably to a certain idiom peculiar to our author, though not unexampled in other writers. In the present case, the use of the genitive is sufficiently defended by another passage of our author, supra iv. 55, and by the following passages of Plato, p. 924, 669, and 504, τῆς ἀκριβείας ἐλλιπῆ. Lucian, Macrob. § 22, μηδενὸς γενόμενον τῶν πρὸς ὑγίειαν ἐλλιπῆ. Clem. Alex. p. 307, 50, ἐλλιπὴς τῶν ἀγαθῶν. So in our own language, though the purest writers say wanting in,—yet others, expressing themselves more according to the phraseology of common life, say wanting of, for the more correct expression, destitute of. Whenever, then, ἐλλιπὴς bears, as here and in the above passages, the sense destitute, the genitive is more proper than the dative.

ἔγραψεν ἐπιστολήν] Thucydides does not (as Mitford imagines) say that Nicias was the first to adopt the practice of sending home despatches in writing of the transactions that occurred: though from the air of the expressions themselves we may safely infer that this was the first epistle he had sent; and consequently that the other ἐπιστολαὶ were verbal messages, to be delivered at the time. This may, indeed, seem in direct contradiction to what is said at the beginning of the letter itself. But see note there.

ἐν τῷ ἀγγέλῳ ἀφανισθεῖσαν] 'obscured through or by the person,' meaning his fault: on which force of ἐν see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 577.

3. ὅσα ἔδει εἰπεῖν] viz. by way of communicating further particulars, or explaining and confirming such as were contained in the epistle. Compare Jos. Ant. xvii. 6, 1, a passage evidently written with a view to the present.

τὰ κατὰ τὸ στρατόπεδον—ἐπεμελεῖτο] Variety of reading, joined with something anomalous in the phraseology, has here occasioned some uncertainty as to the sense. For vulg. διὰ φυλακῆς ἤδη ἔχων ἤδη ἐκουσίων, I have adopted the reading of two MSS., the edd. Ald., Flor., and Basil, and the version of Valla, διὰ φυλακῆς μᾶλλον ἤδη ἔχων, ἢ δι' ἐκουσίων, a reading which besides being preferable in point of sense to the former, and not open, I apprehend, to any serious objections, is, I am enabled to show, further confirmed by the circumstance that such was evidently the reading of Dio Cass., who, in two passages closely imitated from the present, similarly writes: p. 613, 14, αὐτὸς μὲν ἡσύχαζε, καὶ οὐδένα ἔτι κίνδυνον αὐθαίρετον ἀνῃρεῖτο, and 516, 58,

IX. Ἐν δὲ τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει τελευτῶντι, καὶ Εὐετίων στρατηγὸς Ἀθηναίων, μετὰ Περδίκκου στρατεύσας ἐπ' Ἀμφίπολιν Θρᾳξὶ πολλοῖς, τὴν μὲν πόλιν οὐχ εἷλεν, ἐς δὲ τὸν Στρυμόνα περικομίσας τριήρεις ἐκ τοῦ ποταμοῦ ἐπολιόρκει ὁρμώμενος ἐξ Ἰμεραίου. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα [τοῦτο].

X. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος ἥκοντες ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας οἱ παρὰ τοῦ Νικίου, ὅσα τε ἀπὸ γλώσσης εἴρητο αὐτοῖς, εἶπον,—καὶ εἴ τίς τι ‡ ἠρώτα ἀπεκρίνοντο, καὶ τὴν ἐπιστολὴν ἀπέδοσαν. ὁ δὲ γραμματεὺς ὁ τῆς πόλεως παρελθὼν ἀνέγνω τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, δηλοῦσαν τοιάδε.

* XI. "Τὰ μὲν πρότερον πραχθέντα, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐν ἄλλαις πολλαῖς ἐπιστολαῖς, ἴστε· νῦν δὲ καιρὸς οὐχ ἧσσον μαθόντας ὑμᾶς, ἀλλ' αὐτοί τε διὰ φυλακῆς, μᾶλλον ἢ διὰ κινδύνων, τὸ στρατόπεδον ἐποιοῦντο.

This reading, formerly adopted by me in my smaller edition of Thucydides, has since then been received by Bekker and Poppo, (who had before retained the common reading,) and more lately by Arnold.

To advert to one or two points of phraseology,— in διὰ φυλακῆς ἔχειν τι we have a phrase occurring in the best authors; e. g. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1709, 17, and 1896, ult. τὰς γνώμας τὰς αὐτὰς εἶχον ἑκάτεροι, διὰ φυλακῆς τὰ οἰκεῖα ἔχειν, καὶ μηκέτι ἄρχειν μάχης (a passage evidently written with a view to this passage of Thucydides). Jos. Bell. iv. 4, 3. And in Jos. Ant. xviii. 2, 2, and Bell. i. 2, 1, for ἦγον διὰ φυλακῆς τι, I suspect the true reading to be εἶχον διὰ φυλακῆς τι. At ἢ διὰ κινδύνων supply ἔχων, for ἐς κινδύνους ἰών. And with the use here of ἔχειν διὰ with κινδύνων, compare that of ἔχειν διὰ elsewhere with various genitives, as φόβου, φροντίδος, ἀπονοίας, φιλίας. See note on i. 17, and ii. 22. The general sense, then, may be thus expressed: 'As for himself, he now took care of the affairs of the army, by keeping on the defensive, rather than by encountering voluntary dangers,' i. e. dangers such as he could avoid, if he chose.

Ch. X. ἀπὸ γλώσσης] 'by word of mouth,' as Herodot. i. 123. For ἠρώτα, Bekker (second edition) and Arnold have edited, on the authority of two MSS. (or rather only one) ἐπηρ. I have not ventured to follow their example, because it appears to me more likely that ἠρώτα should have arisen by the mistake of one copyist, (occasioned by the circumstance of the ἐτι just before being taken for ἐπ) than that ἐπηρ. should have been altered in the MSS. almost universally into ἠρώτα, and that for no imaginable reason; since the compound ἐπηρ. in this context could have no more force than the simple verb ἠρώτα.

ὁ γραμματεὺς ὁ τῆς πόλεως] There were, as Dr. Arnold observes, three kinds of γραμματεῖς at Athens: 1. that of which we have mention at iv. 118, γραμμ. κατὰ πρυτανείαν: 2. another elected by the council of 500 to take charge of the official copies of the laws (answering to our custos rotulorum, and called γραμματεὺς τῆς βουλῆς); and a third, the one here spoken of, elected by the people to read aloud any public documents to the council and the general assembly, and hence called γραμματεὺς τῆς πόλεως or τοῦ δήμου, and sometimes, from his office being of a subordinate and less dignified kind than that of the foregoing, denominated ὑπογραμματεύς. See more on this subject in Boeckh, Pub. Œcon. of Athens, i. 249, and Schoemann de Comitiis Ath. p. 320.

After γραμματεὺς I have, with Bekker (second edition), inserted the article ὁ, on the authority of one MS., because it seems required by propriety of language, and was far more likely to be inadvertently omitted, than purposely inserted.

Ch. XI. 1. ἐν ἄλλαις πολλαῖς ἐπιστολαῖς] for διὰ πολλῶν ἄλλων ἐπιστολῶν, 'by many other epistles.' The apparently wide discrepancy existing between what is here said and is implied in the words at viii. 2, ἔγραψεν ἐπιστολὴν,—may, I apprehend, be effectually removed by taking ἐπιστολαῖς here as standing for ἀγγελιαῖς, messages, despatches: a sense which the word ἐπιστολὴ occasionally bears in the earlier Greek writers, (especially Xenophon,) and which is noticed by Hesych. and other of the ancient lexicographers.

ἐν ᾧ ἐσμὲν, βουλεύσασθαι. 2. κρατησάντων γὰρ ἡμῶν μάχαις ταῖς πλείοσι Συρακοσίους ἐφ' οὓς ἐπέμφθημεν, καὶ τὰ τείχη οἰκοδομησαμένων ἐν οἵσπερ νῦν ἐσμὲν, ἦλθε Γύλιππος Λακεδαιμόνιος, στρατιὰν ἔχων ἔκ τε Πελοποννήσου καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν Σικελίᾳ πόλεων ἔστιν ὧν, καὶ μάχῃ τῇ μὲν πρώτῃ νικᾶται ὑφ' ἡμῶν, τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ, ἱππεῦσί τε πολλοῖς καὶ ἀκοντισταῖς βιασθέντες ἀνεχωρήσαμεν ἐς τὰ τείχη. 3. νῦν οὖν ἡμεῖς μὲν, παυσάμενοι τοῦ περιτειχισμοῦ διὰ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν ἐναντίων, ἡσυχάζομεν (οὐδὲ γὰρ ξυμπάσῃ τῇ στρατιᾷ δυναίμεθ' ἂν χρήσεσθαι, ἀπαναλωκυίας τῆς φυλακῆς τῶν τειχῶν μέρος τι τοῦ ὁπλιτικοῦ), οἱ δὲ παρῳκοδομήκασιν ἡμῖν τεῖχος ἁπλοῦν, ὥστε μὴ εἶναι ἔτι περιτειχίσαι αὐτοὺς, ἢν μή τις τὸ παρατείχισμα τοῦτο, πολλῇ στρατιᾷ ἐπελθὼν, ἕλῃ. 4. ξυμβέβηκέ τε πολιορκεῖν δοκοῦντας ἡμᾶς, ἄλλους αὐτοὺς μᾶλλον, ὅσα γε κατὰ γῆν, τοῦτο πάσχειν· οὐδὲ γὰρ τῆς χώρας ἐπὶ πολὺ διὰ τοὺς ἱππέας ἐξερχόμεθα.

XII. Πεπόμφασι δὲ καὶ ἐς Πελοπόννησον πρέσβεις ἐπ' ἄλλην στρατιὰν, καὶ ἐς τὰς ἐν Σικελίᾳ πόλεις Γύλιππος οἴχεται, τὰς μὲν καὶ πείσων ξυμπολεμεῖν, ὅσαι νῦν ἡσυχάζουσιν, ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν ἔτι καὶ στρατιὰν πεζὴν καὶ ναυτικοῦ παρασκευὴν, ἣν δύνηται, ἄξων. 2. διανοοῦνται γὰρ, ὡς ἐγὼ πυνθάνομαι, τῷ τε πεζῷ ἅμα τῶν τειχῶν ἡμῶν πειρᾶν, καὶ ταῖς ναυσὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν. 3. Καὶ δεινὸν μηδενὶ ὑμῶν δόξῃ εἶναι, ὅτι 'καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν·' τὸ γὰρ ναυτικὸν ἡμῶν, ᾧπερ κἀκεῖνοι πυνθάνονται, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἤκμαζε καὶ τῶν νεῶν τῇ ξηρότητι καὶ τῶν πληρωμάτων τῇ σωτηρίᾳ· νῦν δὲ αἵ τε νῆες διάβροχοι—τοσοῦτον χρόνον ἤδη θαλασσεύουσαι—καὶ τὰ πληρώματα ἔφθαρται. τὰς μὲν γὰρ ναῦς οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνελκύσαντας διαψῦξαι, διὰ τὸ ἀντιπάλους [καὶ] τῷ πλήθει, καὶ ἔτι πλείους, τὰς

3. ἡσυχάζομεν] 'we are sitting still,' doing nothing. See note on v. 54, 4.

4. ξυμβέβηκε πολιορκεῖν — τοῦτο πάσχειν] Here we have (as at iv. 30) a neat turn, which has been imitated by Hdian. viii. 5, 13, συνέβαινε δὲ τὸν στρατὸν, δοκοῦντα πολιορκεῖν αὐτὸν πολιορκεῖσθαι. Compare also Pol. i. 29, 12.

Ch. XII. 3. ὅτι καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν] 'that [I say] also by sea.' Such is the true sense, — the foregoing words being repeated: and thus the ὅτι carries with it an ellipsis of εἶπον. I have, with Haack, Poppo, and Bekker, edited ᾧπερ instead of vulg. ὅπερ, retained by Goeller and Arnold, but injudiciously, since the former is supported at once by external authority (to which I add Codd. Clar., Cantab., and Mus. Brit.) and by internal evidence, as existing in the greater probability of ᾧπερ being, by gloss, altered to ὅπερ, than ὅπερ to ᾧπερ.

τῇ σωτηρίᾳ] sanitate, 'healthiness:' a rare sense of the word, which I have not met with elsewhere. Of διάβροχοι the full sense is, 'so decayed as to be leaky;' literally, to let in the water through. Θαλασσεύουσαι, 'after keeping the sea:' a rare word, of which the only example that I have met with elsewhere is in Appian, t. ii. 88.

τὰς μὲν γὰρ ναῦς, &c.] The γὰρ refers to νῆες διάβροχοι before; it being meant, that the ship's timber had become decayed from their not having been on shore διαψῦξαι, to careen, literally, to let air through to dry them. Why they had not, is shown in the words following, διὰ τὸ ἀντιπάλους — ἐπιπλεύσονται, namely, that 'the enemy's ships being an equal match also in point of number, and even more, occasion a continual expectation that they will attack us.' In διαψῦξαι we have an accustomed term on this subject. So τῶν πολεμίων οὖσας ἀεὶ προσδοκίαν παρέχειν ὡς ἐπιπλεύσονται· φανεραὶ δέ εἰσιν ἀναπειρώμεναι, καὶ αἱ ἐπιχειρήσεις ἐπ' ἐκείνοις, καὶ ἀποξηρᾶναι τὰς σφετέρας μᾶλλον ἐξουσία· οὐ γὰρ ἐφορμοῦσιν ἄλλοις. XIII. Ἡμῖν δ' ἐκ πολλῆς ἂν περιουσίας νεῶν μόλις τοῦτο ὑπῆρχε, καὶ μὴ ἀναγκαζομένοις, ὥσπερ νῦν, πάσαις φυλάσσειν. εἰ γὰρ ἀφαιρήσομέν τι καὶ βραχὺ τῆς τηρήσεως, τὰ ἐπιτήδεια οὐχ ἕξομεν, παρὰ τὴν ἐκείνων πόλιν χαλεπῶς καὶ νῦν ἐσκομιζόμενοι. 2. τὰ δὲ πληρώματα διὰ τόδε ἐφθάρη τε ἡμῖν, καὶ ἔτι νῦν φθείρεται, τῶν ναυτῶν τῶν μὲν διὰ φρυγανισμὸν καὶ ἁρπαγὴν καὶ ὑδρείαν μακρὰν ὑπὸ τῶν ἱππέων ἀπολλυμένων· οἱ δὲ θεράποντες, ἐπειδὴ ἐς ἀντίπαλα καθεστήκαμεν, αὐτομολοῦσι, καὶ οἱ ξένοι, οἱ μὲν ἀναγκαστοὶ

Pollux, cited by Duker, mentions ships as ἐντεθαλαττευκυίας and διεψυγμένας: and at vii. 191, he has, οὐκέτι πλέουσα ναῦς, νεωλκημένη, διαψυχομένη, ἀνειλκυσμένη. Compare also Lucian, t. i. 521, μηδὲ νεωλκῆσαι μηδὲ διαῦξαι τὸ σκαφίδιον. Of which two terms, the former signifies, to lay up in dock, for repair; the latter simply, to careen.

For vulg. ἐπὶ πλείους, I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, edited ἔτι πλείους, though only on the authority of two MSS., yet borne out by very many passages of various writers adduced in my smaller edition.

φανεραὶ δέ εἰσιν ἀναπειρώμεναι] Render, 'they are evidently in training;' in other words, the crews are practising nautical manœuvres. See note on vii. 4 & 5. These words are closely connected with the preceding, as serving to give a reason for the expectation in question. And the words following, αἱ ἐπιχειρήσεις ἐπ' ἐκείνοις, have reference to the term ἐπιπλεύσονται just before, understood in the sense to attack. A new sentence commences with the words καὶ ἀποξηρᾶναι, &c., of which the sense is, 'And further, they have more the power to keep their vessels from wet,' literally, to dry off the wet.

CH. XIII. 1. ἡμῖν δ' ἐκ πολλῆς, &c.] 'But this would hardly have been in our power, even out of a superabundance of ships.'

εἰ γὰρ ἀφαιρήσομεν, &c.] 'if we shall abate ever so little of our watchfulness.' Of this very rare use of ἀφαιρεῖν, by which it signifies to take off, let go, remit, I have noted examples elsewhere in Xen. Mem. ii. 6, 23, τὸν φθόνον ἀφαιροῦσι, and Laced. iv. 7, ἀφελόντες αὐτῶν τὸ ἰσχύος ἐπιμελεῖσθαι. Demosth. 627, 2, ἀφελὼν σκοπεῖν, for ἀφεὶς or ἀμελήσας, and 848, 6, τὸ μὲν γράφειν, τὸ δὲ ἀφαιρεῖν.

2. τὰ δὲ πληρώματα διὰ τόδε ἐφθάρη] These words are explanatory of what was said at § 3 of the preceding chapter; adverting to the cause of the above, as existing in the destruction (lit. wasting, or mouldering, away) of the crews from a variety of casualties, occasioned partly by the wear and tear of continual watching and unrelieved duty just adverted to; and partly from the circumstance adverted to just after, in the words ναυτῶν—ἀπολλυμένων, namely, the constant drain by lives lost in the parties sent out a-far, for wood and water, or plunder of any kind. The word μακρὰν I have, with Bekker (2nd edition), placed, not after ἁρπαγὴν, but after ὑδρείαν, according to its position in two MSS., further confirmed by what was said at ch. 4, ὕδατι χρώμενοι οὐκ ἐγγύθεν. In τῶν ναυτῶν ἀπολλυμένων we have the use of genitive absolute to denote cause. After τῶν ναυτῶν τῶν μὲν ought, in propriety, to have followed τῶν δὲ θεραπόντων—αὐτομολούντων; but, as Krueger and Goeller point out, we have οἱ δὲ θεράποντες, &c. by a sort of variation of construction, observable in very many other passages of our author, (see especially infra viii. 78.) and which is treated on by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 288 and 565. By οἱ θεράποντες are here denoted (as Goeller points out) the sailors' servants, who waited on them, (answering to our cabin-boys,) mention of whom is found at vi. 11, and who are the same with the soldiers' servants spoken of at iv. 16.

ἐπειδὴ ἐς ἀντίπαλα καθεστήκαμεν] lit. 'since we are reduced to an equal match;' in other words, 'now that we are brought to that state in which the enemy is an equal match for us:' of which very rare phrase the only examples that I have noted elsewhere are, Dio Cass. 147, 69, ἐς ἀντίπαλον αὐτοὺς ἀλλήλοις καταστῆσαι, 'to set them as a match to each other.' Plut. on Self-praise, ch. 5, ἑαυτὸν ἐσβάντες εὐθὺς κατὰ τὰς πόλεις ἀποχωροῦσιν, οἱ δὲ ὑπὸ μεγάλου μισθοῦ τὸ πρῶτον ἐπαρθέντες, καὶ οἰόμενοι χρηματιεῖσθαι μᾶλλον ἢ μαχεῖσθαι, ἐπειδὴ παρὰ γνώμην ναυτικόν τε δὴ καὶ τἄλλα ἀπὸ τῶν πολεμίων ἀνθεστῶτα ὁρῶσιν, οἱ μὲν ἐπ' αὐτομολίας, προφάσει, ἀπέρχονται, οἱ δὲ ὡς ἕκαστοι δύνανται· πολλὴ δ' ἡ Σικελία. εἰσὶ δ' οἳ καὶ, αὐτοὶ ἐμπορευόμενοι, ἀνδράποδα Ὑκκαρικὰ ἀντεμβιβάσαι ὑπὲρ σφῶν πείσαντες τοὺς τριηράρχους, τὴν ἀκρίβειαν τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ἀφεἰς ὀρθὸν καθιστὰς καὶ ἀντίπαλον. By οἱ ξένοι understand the foreign seamen taken into Athenian pay, of whom mention is made at i. 143.

κατὰ τὰς πόλεις] Here, of course, the article stands for the pronoun possessive; but as to the question debated between Poppo and Didot, whether cities in general, or those of Sicily [and Italy], are here to be understood, the latter must, as appears from the context, be chiefly meant; though indeed the expression is a general one, and, in truth, the point is a vix de lana caprina, since the real sense of κατὰ τὰς πόλεις is, 'to their homes;' the phrase αὐτομολεῖν κατὰ τὰς πόλεις being formed on διαλύεσθαι κατὰ τὰς πόλεις at ii. 23. ii. 78. iii. 26. By ἀναγκαστοὶ are denoted those impressed into the service, though put on pay: answering to which is the expression ἠναγκασμένοι ἔμμισθοι at vi. 22. The same term occurs at ch. 58, and viii. 24.

ὑπὸ μεγάλου μισθοῦ ἐπαρθέντες] scil. ἐσβῆναι, like στρατεύειν in the land-service. Compare Herodot. i. 87, ἐπαείρας ἐμὲ στρατεύεσθαι. Xen. Cyr. iv. 2, 4, ἐπαίρειν στρατεύεσθαι.

ἀπὸ τῶν πολεμίων] Render, 'on the part of the enemy.' In ἐπ' αὐτομολίας, προφάσει, ἀπέρχονται there is a certain awkwardness of expression, tending to ambiguity of sense, which has led some critics to suppose corruption, and propose conjectural emendations for the removal of the perplexity; but unnecessarily. Now the sense here mainly depends on the construction; which it would seem most natural to trace thus, ἀπέρχονται ἐπὶ προφάσει αὐτομολίας: and so Poppo, Dr. Arnold, and Didot have traced it; though on the sense they differ; Dr. Arnold explaining it to be, 'finding some excuse for going over to the enemy;' Didot, 'abeunt eo consilio ut transfugiant:' to neither of which renderings can I accede: the former introducing a sense neither to be elicited from the words, nor in itself satisfactory, as conveying what is not a little overloaded as to the sentiment,—namely, that 'they go off, finding some excuse for going over to the enemy;' and the latter is open to the objection of assigning to the term πρόφασις a sense which is far from being established, and which does not arise naturally out of the words. Rejecting, then, the construction laid down as above, I prefer, with Goeller, to construe, ἐπ' αὐτομολίας προφάσει, regarding προφάσει as standing in opposition to ὡς ἕκαστοι δύνανται: and I would render, 'some go off [by taking] to desertion, on some excuse or other.' Προφάσει stands, as Goeller says, for προφάσει τινί, scil. εὐπρεπεῖ or εὐλόγῳ, as vi. 8 and 79. See also v. 53, 1, and vi. 76: and as προφάσει is for ἐπὶ or ἐν προφάσει, equiv. to κατὰ πρόφασιν, I have pointed it off. Compare with the present a similar form of expression in Eurip. Iph. Aul. 360, πέμπεις—παῖδα σὴν Δεῦρ' ἀποστέλλειν, Ἀχιλλεῖ πρόφασιν ὡς γαμουμένην, and in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Thess. ii. 5, οὔτε ποτὲ ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας ἐγενήθημεν—οὔτε, ἐν προφάσει, πλεονεξίας. Finally, for accus. αὐτομολίας, Poppo thinks the dative were rather required, as in the phrase ἐπὶ πολέμῳ ἀπιέναι: but the accusative is equally correct, and moreover has the advantage of yielding a more forcible sense, as serving to denote the end of going, the action in which it terminates, similarly as in the phrase ἰέναι ἐπὶ θήραν in Herodot. i. 37; and so we say to take to, i. e. to pursue a course. Here, then, the sense is, 'to take to desertion.' This plural use of αὐτομολίας, which is very rare, occurs also in Dio Cass. 540, ὥστε εὔξασθαι ἐπισχεθῆναι σφῶν τὰς αὐτομολίας, and 611, and Jos. Bell. vi. 8, 2, οὐ μὴν ἀντέχειν οἱ φρουροὶ πρὸς τὰς αὐτομολίας ἴσχυον, (where the plural is used with reference to the plurality of the persons who commit the action,) otherwise I should suspect that Thucydides wrote αὐτομολίαν. So viii. 40, αὐτομολίᾳ (for ἐπ' αὐτομολίαν) ἐχώρησαν.

εἰσὶ δ' οἳ καὶ—ἀφῄρηνται] Render, 'Some, too, there are who, themselves following traffic, have prevailed on the ship-captains to take on board, as substitutes for themselves, Hyccaric slaves, and

So vi. 55, 3, ἐς δὲ τοὺς ἐπικούρους (τὸ) ἀκριβὲς, meaning, severe diligence in having well-picked men, and exact discipline: so Polyb. xv. 13, 2, τὸ τῆς συντάξεως ἀκριβές.

Ch. XIV. 1. βραχεῖα ἀκμὴ πληρώματος] Of short duration in the ἀκμὴ, or point of exactness (namely, the ἀκρίβεια just before spoken of) of a crew. Comp. supra xii. 3.

οἱ ἐξορμῶντες—καὶ ξυνέχοντες, &c.] The expression ἐξορμῶντες ναῦν is not well rendered by Dorville and Duk., 'piloting a ship out of port,' or 'out to sea.' Nor can I approve of the sense they assign to ξυνέχοντες τὴν εἰρεσίαν, 'discharging that office among the crew which pertained to the κελευσταί.' For thus the sense will be confined to the officers; whereas it seems meant to be expressed, in a general way, that the loss of able seamen is one not easily repaired: the two phrases, then, may be supposed to have reference to the employments of seamen in general; and hence I prefer taking the former one, ἐξορμῶντες ναῦν, (with Portus and most other interpreters,) in the sense agere navem, navis cursum incitare, or, as Dr. Arnold expresses it, 'to set a ship in motion (lit. to start her off, set her a-going):' and in the same manner I would understand it in Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1328, τοῖς δὲ ἐξορμᾶν, τοῖς δὲ στέλλειν, scil. τὴν ναῦν, and Aristoph. Thesm. 659, χρὴ κοῦφον ἐξορμᾶν πόδα, where the word ἐξορμάω is used metaphorically. With respect to the latter, ξυνέχειν τὴν εἰρεσίαν, this is best rendered by Dr. Arnold, 'to keep the rowing in order.' In short, the persons here denoted by the phrase οἱ ξυνέχοντες τὴν εἰρεσίαν, were those of the crew who performed a duty similar to that of the strokesman in our naval boating,—namely, the man who pulls the aftmost oar, (called the stroke-oar,) and whose stroke is to be followed by the strokes of the rest; accordingly, such an one may be said to keep the rowing together, and in order,—namely, by first setting the stroke, and then keeping it,—as the leader of a musical band sets the time with his baton, and so keeps the rest in it. Now of these persons there were doubtless several on board a galley; and still more of the persons οἱ ἐξορμῶντες τὴν ναῦν: and both together may be said to nearly correspond to the aft seaman and foremast men, on board of our ships of the present day.

2. αἱ ὑμέτεραι φύσεις] 'your dispositions and tempers.' So Aristoph. Pax, 607, Περικλεῆς—τὰς φύσεις ὑμῶν δεδοικώς, καὶ τὸν αὐτοδὰξ τρόπον, &c. See also Eq. 41 and 519, and Pax, 349. In ἄρξαι, here standing for ἀρχθῆναι, we have a use also found at i. 20. vi. 22. By ἐπιπληρωσόμεθα is denoted putting crews on board the ships, manning them; and by τὰ ὄντα are meant the forces, stores, &c., which yet remained of what were first brought.

3. διαπεπολεμήσεται] So I have edited, with Bekker and Goeller (1st edition), for vulg. διαπολεμήσεται, (retained by Poppo and Goeller, 2nd edition,) because internal evidence is decidedly in favour of the former, and to the authority of 6 MSS. for it, I am enabled to add that of Mus. Brit.: again, it has the recommendation of being more suitable as to sense; the meaning being, that 'the war would soon be brought to a close, without a battle.' Comp. μῆσθαι ἐννόμως, scil. τὸν πόλεμον. As I have not met with the tense elsewhere, I doubt not that both Dio Cass. and Arrian had this passage of our author in mind, and consequently had διαπεπολεμῆσθαι in their copies. In ἐκπολιορκηθέντων ἡμῶν we have the use of genitive absolute of cause: see Jelf's Kuhn. Gr. Render, 'by our being starved out.'

4. τούτων ἐγὼ ἠδίω—χρησιμώτερά γε] Bauer compares Liv. iii. 18, 'his ego gratiora dicta, alia esse scio: sed me vera pro gratis proloqui—necessitas cogit:' and to the same purpose is also a passage of Liv. xxii. 38, and Æschin. p. 71, 331.

μὴ ὁμοῖον] i. e. 'not correspondent to those representations.' So οὐχ ὁμοῖον, also without case, at i. 35 and 73.

Ch. XV. 1. καὶ νῦν—ἔχετε] The constr. may be best laid down as follows, καὶ νῦν ἔχετε τὴν γνώμην οὕτω, ὡς καὶ τῶν στρατιωτῶν καὶ τῶν ἡγεμόνων μὴ μεμπτῶν γεγενημένων ὑμῖν ('apud vos') καὶ (πρὸς ταῦτα) ἐφ' ἃ ἤλθομεν τὸ πρῶτον. 'And now rest assured of this, that neither the soldiers nor commanders have acquitted themselves so as to deserve any blame in respect of the business which we at first came to accomplish.' On this use of ὡς, 'as though,' with participles, especially genitives absolute, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 569, 7, and compare vii. 72, and Xen. Anab. i. 3, 6, ὡς ἐμοῦ οὐκ ἰόντος, ὅπη ἂν καὶ ὑμεῖς, οὕτω τὴν γνώμην ἔχετε.

ξυνίσταται] 'is being drawn together,' in combination. See i. 100. iii. 70. v. 82. vi. 37. For vulg. αὐταρκούντων, Poppo, Bekker (2nd edition), and Goeller (2nd edition) edit, from several MSS. (to which I add Clar. primâ manu, and Mus. Brit.) ἀνταρκούντων; and with good reason, since internal evidence is quite in its favour, and the term is more significant than αὐταρκούντων, and used by the best writers. Here, however, it bears the sense 'to hold out against;' the dative being in this case for πρὸς and an accusative, which are found in Suidas, πρὸς τὰς παρατάξεις ἀνταρκ., and in Dio Cass. 571, 84, πρὸς τὴν ῥώμην τῶν—ἡ τόλμα αὐτῶν ἀντήρκει, also 1061, 42, where the term is used absolute, and where it has been similarly mistaken for αὐταρκεῖν. That the Scholiast so read, is plain; though for ἀντ., αὐτ. has been, by a strange error, put in the heading. Finally, as a strong argument against the reading αὐτ., it may be urged that the expression αὐταρκεῖν τινι can only mean, 'to suffice to,' not what is the sense here required, 'to suffice against:' nay, it may be questioned whether the word αὐταρκεῖν was in use in the time of our author; or, indeed, centuries after. True it is that αὐταρκεῖν is in Steph. Thes. ascribed to Isocrates, as put for καρτερεῖν, but I cannot find the passage in that writer; and I doubt not that, be that as it may, the true reading there is ἀνταρκεῖν.

2. ἀξιῶ—τυγχάνειν] Of the somewhat rare phrase ξυγγνώμης τυγχάνειν, (which corresponds to ξυγγνώμην ἔχειν,) I have noted examples elsewhere in Eurip. Med. 1356. Xen. Mem. i. 7, 4. Demosth. 1231, 16. Polyb. iv. 16, 3. xxiv. 12, 5: only one example do I know of the phrase with ἀξιῶ preceding,—namely, Isocr. Panath., οὐ συγγνώμης τυχεῖν ἀξιῶ, and none at all of the genitive of person following ὑμᾶς εὖ ἐποίησα. 3. Ὅ τι δὲ μέλλετε, ἅμα τῷ ἦρι εὐθὺς, καὶ μὴ ἐς ἀναβολὰς, πράσσετε,—ὡς τῶν πολεμίων τὰ μὲν ἐν Σικελίᾳ δι' ὀλίγου πορισμένων, τὰ δ' ἐκ Πελοποννήσου σχολαίτερον μὲν, ὅμως δ', ἢν μὴ προσέχητε τὴν γνωμην, τὰ μὲν λήσουσιν ὑμᾶς, ὥσπερ καὶ πρότερον, τὰ δὲ φθήσονται."

XVI. Ἡ μὲν τοῦ Νικίου ἐπιστολὴ τοσαῦτα ἐδήλου. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀκούσαντες αὐτῆς, τὸν μὲν Νικίαν οὐ παρέλυσαν τῆς ἀρχῆς, ἀλλ' αὐτῷ, ἕως ἂν ἕτεροι ξυνάρχοντες αἱρεθέντες ἀφίκωνται, τῶν αὐτοῦ ἐκεῖ δύο προσείλοντο, Μένανδρον καὶ Εὐθύδημον, ὅπως μη μόνος ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ ταλαιπωροίη· στρατιὰν δὲ ἄλλην ἐψηφίσαντο πέμπειν, καὶ ναυτικὴν καὶ πεζὴν, Ἀθηναίων τε ἐκ καταλόγου καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων· καὶ ξυνάρχοντας αὐτῷ εἵλοντο Δημοσθένην τε τὸν Ἀλκισθένους καὶ Εὐρυμέδοντα τὸν Θουκλέους. 2. καὶ τὸν μὲν Εὐρυμέδοντα εὐθὺς περὶ ἡλίου τροπὰς τὰς χειμερινὰς ἀποπέμπουσιν ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν μετὰ δέκα νεῶν, ἄγοντα εἴκοσι τάλαντα ἀργυρίου, ξυγγνώμης, which Portus, Stephens, and Bauer regard as dependent on παρὰ understood, but wrongly: for though our author might have so written, (compare Arrian, E. A. i. 7, 17, οὐδενὸς φιλανθρώπου, scil. συγγνώμης, τυχεῖν ἂν παρ' Ἀλέξανδρον ἀξιοῦντες, and 2 Tim. i. 18. Herodot. xi. 58, 4.) yet he did not; and the genitive is equally applicable to συγγνώμης, just as in our own language we may either say, 'I crave your pardon,' or 'I crave pardon at your hands.' The sense of the passage may be thus expressed, 'Now I think it right that I should obtain your indulgence in this matter; for I am worthy to obtain (worthy that I should obtain, I deserve to obtain) it.' See vii. 25, ἀξιώσοντας ξυμβοηθεῖν. The Scholiast has rightly taken ἀξιῶ as standing for ἄξιός εἰμι: and Portus well renders the infinitive following, 'qui veniam impetrem:' similarly, in a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke vii. 4, we have, ἄξιός ἐστιν ᾧ παρέξει τοῦτο, 'dignus est ut hoc illi præstes.'

3. ἐς ἀναβολὰς] A phrase meaning, 'with procrastination,' as Hdot. viii. 21, οὐκ ἔτι ἐς ἀναβολὰς ἐποιοῦντο τὴν ἀναχώρησιν. Plut. Demetr. 56, οὐκ εἰς ἀναβολὰς, ἀλλὰ τὸ πρῶτον. Jos. Ant. xvii. 7, κελεύει—μηδὲν εἰς ἀναβολὰς, ἀλλ' ἐκ τοῦ ὀξέως (read ὀξέος), and xvii. 15, 2, πλέων, μηδὲν εἰς ἀναβολὰς, ἐπανάγειν (infin. for imper.) αὐτὸν πρὸς ἡμᾶς, and Ant. xvii. 4, 2, κομίσασάν τε οὐδὲν εἰς ἀναβολὰς, πράσσειν τοῦ ἀνδρὸς τὰς ἐντολάς. Ælian, Anim. p. 71, 105. Dr. Arnold thinks that the ἐς before ἀναβολὰς has reference to some word understood, as τρεπόμενοι; adducing, in support of this opinion, another passage of our author, iii. 108, μήτε ἐς ἀλκὴν ὑπομεῖναι: but the idea of τραπέσθαι is, in effect, implied in the words ἐς ἀλκὴν, 'for a conflict in self-defence:' not so here; hence better is it to regard the present expression as standing for the plainer one, ἐπ' ἀναβολῇ, (which occurs in Plato, p. 915.) and so forming one of the many examples noticed in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 578, of ἐς followed by an accusative used adverbially.

σχολαίτερον μέν, ὅμως δὲ—λήσουσιν] Compare Dio Cass. 344, 75, οἱ δὲ ἐκ τῆς Ἰταλίας (στρατιῶται) βραδέως μὲν—ὅμως δὲ οὖν ἦλθόν ποτε. The complete phrase occurs in Dio Cass. 345, 29, ὀψὲ μὲν καὶ χαλεπῶς, ἐλθούσας δὲ οὖν ποτε. See the commentators on Herodot. vii. 38.

Ch. XVI. 1. παρέλυσαν τῆς ἀρχῆς] 'did not remove him from the command:' of this phrase another example occurs at viii. 45, and it is found in Herodian vi. 2, 3. iii. 2, 18. On the use of πεζὴν for πεζικὴν, see note at vi. 34.

2. καὶ ἑκατὸν] I have not ventured, with Haack, Bekker, and Poppo, to insert these words after εἴκοσι, (found only in two MSS. and Valla,) because I regard the reasons urged by Haack and Arnold as insufficient to justify the insertion of words whose omission would not be easy to be accounted for on such slender warrant as one second-rate MS. and a version. If the present reading be really, what Dr. Arnold thinks it, indefensible on the score of the smallness of the number in question, may we not suspect that there is some mistake in the figure, and that for κ should be read ζ, equiv. to ἐννενήκοντα? perhaps that sum would be sufficient till more should be brought by Demosthenes early in the spring: and as it was now the heart of winter, the time would not be long. Nay, in Plut. Nic. 20, it is said that Demosthenes sailed ἐκ χειμῶνος, immediately after the expiration of the winter season.

ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν] I have no hesitation in adopting, with Bekker, Haack, Goeller, and Poppo, this reading, though found only in two MSS., for vulg. ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ, which in the early Attic Greek has been shown to be indispensable: that Dobree, Poppo, and Dr. Arnold should be inclined to read τοῖς ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ, I think not a little strange, considering that while most difficult were it to account for the omission of τοῖς, the change of ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν into ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ might very well arise; the ι adscript and the ν being perpetually in MSS. confounded, as are the words ἐς and ἐν. Moreover, any change of accusative into dative would draw with it an alteration of the preposition.

Ch. XVIII. 1. ἐδίδασκε] 'advised,' 'counselled them:' on which sense of the word see my Lexicon of the New Testament.

2. ῥώμη] courage, confidence; as iv. 29, ῥώμην παρέσχε: and vi. 8, τοῖς φίλοις θάρσος καὶ ῥώμην ἐνεποίει. Xen. Ages. i. 201, ῥώμην ἐμβαλεῖν πρὸς τὸ μάχεσθαι.

ἢν δίκας θέλωσι διδόναι] i. e. 'if they should be disposed to give legal satisfaction,' by putting the case at issue on a fair footing, namely, by referring it to just arbitration. Comp. i. 28, 2, δίκας ἤθελον δοῦναι. And so at ch. 85 and 144, and v. 79, and Herodot. v. 83, οἱ Αἰγ. δίκας ἐδίδοσάν τε καὶ ἐλάμβανον παρ' ἀλλήλων.

ἐνεθυμοῦντο τὴν ξυμφορὰν] 'made it matter of serious reflection.' Compare v. 32, ἐνθυμούμενοι τὰς ἐν μάχαις ξυμφοράς.

3. ταῖς τριάκοντα ναυσὶν] See supra ch. 17. Ὁρμώμενοι, i.e. from Argos. See vi. 105. The το in ἐλησ. I have placed within brackets, because, considering that the middle form is no where else found, there is reason to think that ἐλῄστευον, found in one MS., and edited by Bekker (second edition), is the true reading.

ἐς τοὺς Ἀθ. περιεστάναι] 'had shifted round to the Athenians.' Comp. vi. 61, ὑποψία περιεστήκει ἐς τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην.

4. προσηνάγκαζον] 'compelled them to it.'

CH. XIX. 1. πρῳαίτατα] So I have edited, with Bekker and Goeller, on the authority of a few MSS., for vulg. πρωϊαίτατα; while Poppo has edited, from several of the best MSS. (to which may be added Codd. Clar. primâ manu, and Mus. Brit.) πρωΐτατα. I have adopted the first, because it has the support or countenance of most of the MSS.; and πρωΐτατα is, I suspect, of later Atticism.

2. ἀπέχει δὲ—Βοιωτίας] This passage is embarrassed by not a few difficulties both of reading and interpretation. Nothing is there to forbid our admitting, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, after παραπλήσιον δὲ, the word καὶ, here used for ἤ, as it not unfrequently is in our author, especially after ὅσον καὶ παραπλήσιον, and other expressions of this kind. So infra vii. 42, we have, στρατὸν ὅσον καὶ παραπλήσιον, and at i. 22, 4, for τοιοῦτον the true reading may justly be supposed to be παραπλήσιον. So also v. 74, τοιαύτη καὶ ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τούτων. Plut. de Sera Num. ταὐτὸ καῦμα καὶ παραπλήσιον. In such a case the Latin writers would use aut, and the English or. Accordingly the sense here is well expressed by the version of Valla, 'tantundem, aut non multo plus, etiam a Bœotiâ.' Finally, παραπλήσιον here is used for παραπλησίως, as in Pol. i. 4, 8. iv. 40, 10. iii. 33, 17.

The site of Deceleia has been well fixed by Sir W. Gell and Col. Leake at or near the modern Tatoy, where a peaked detached height (which forms a conspicuous object from the Acropolis) is with reason supposed by the latter writer to be the fortress, and the demus itself below near a fountain, around which are many remains of antiquity. As to distance, it corresponds exactly; for Col. Leake testifies that the direct distance from the walls of Athens is about eleven miles; which, he shows, agrees sufficiently well with the computation of Thucydides. What the historian says, of the fortress being καταφανὴς μεχρὶ τῆς τῶν Ἀθηναίων πόλεως, is attested by the account both of Gell and Leake, especially the latter, who proves the great elevation of the fortress by a reference to Xen. Hist., where it is said that Agis, in the second year of the Peloponnesian war, observed from thence the Athenian cornships entering the Peiræus. Its situation, however, was, I imagine, selected not for its elevation only, but because (as appears from the accounts of Gell and Leake) it commanded the defiles both to Tanagra and to Oropus, and thus lay very conveniently for intercepting all supplies from Eubœa.

Thus far all is clear:—but a no inconsiderable difficulty yet remains to be removed,—namely, how Deceleia could be about as much, or not much more, from Bœotia, (meaning, of course, the nearest point of the Bœotian frontier,) when, in fact, it was almost close upon it, at the distance of about only fifteen stadia. And to suppose, with Goeller (second edition), and recently Arnold, that by Bœotia is meant the furthest part of it, beyond Oropus and towards Delium,—is to make a plain statement a perfect riddle. Now the difficulty here does not hinge on the question as to whether ἐπὶ or ἀπὸ be read before τῆς Βοιωτίας. But I am still, as formerly, of opinion, that as ἐπὶ is quite indefensible, and ἀπὸ is found only in two inferior MSS., there is great reason to suspect each to have come from the margin. Even ἀπὸ, which has the advantage of greater suitableness, is unnecessary, from the genitive τῆς being governed of the απο in ἀπέχει: for which reason I have cancelled it. Still the above geographical difficulty continues in full force; and can, I apprehend, be alone removed by critical conjecture. There must be some error in our present copies; and that, if I mistake not, rests on Βοιωτίας, for which should, I suspect, be written Βοιωτῶν or Βοιωτίων. Of course, at τῆς Βοιωτίων must be repeated πόλεως from the preceding, to correspond to τῆς τῶν Ἀθηναίων πόλεως: and by Βοιωτ. πόλ. must be meant the capital of Bœotia, namely, Thebes, of which the distance may be said to be παραπλήσιον καὶ οὐ πολλῷ πλέον,—at least in the rough and random way, by which distances, especially from great elevations, are measured by the eye. Thus Mr. Dodwell speaks of Deceleia as distant from Athens about fifteen miles; whereas Col. Leake ascertained the exact distance to be only eleven. How easily the terminations ων and ας might be mistaken, is obvious; and this would be more likely to happen here, where the τῆς preceding would induce the scribe to take the abbreviation in Βοιωτῶν for ιας.

ἐπὶ τῷ πεδίῳ] Render, not 'upon the plain,' but 'to the injury of the plain,' 'over which imminere (ἐπικεῖσθαι) videbatur.' Compare iii. 93, 2, ὧν ἐπὶ τῇ γῇ ἐκτίζ. ('to the injury of whose territory.') and see note at vi. 79, 1. The words τῆς χώρας τοῖς κρατίστοις ἐς τὸ κακουργεῖν are to be understood κατ' ἀντίφρασιν, meaning 'the best for the purpose in view,' namely, to avenge them; ἐς τὸ κακουργ. standing for ἐς τὸ κακουργεῖσθαι (compare iii. 38, ἄριστον ἀπατᾶσθαι); and indeed our author would probably have written ἀρίστοις, but that the term is rather applicable to persons, and κράτιστα to things; especially, too, considering that being made, not by coasting along shore, but by pushing across the main sea. Of the term ἀφιέναι in this nautical sense, both with τὰς ναῦς expressed and left understood, an example occurs, among various others that I have noted, in Hdot. vii. 193, ἐνθεῦτεν γὰρ ἔμελλον — ἐς τὸ πέλαγος ἀφήσειν.

in using κράτ. he alluded to the plain itself, as being κράτιστα τῆς χώρας, the most fertile tract of the country. Comp. i. 2, 3, τῆς γῆς—ὅσα ἦν κράτιστα.

3. τῶν Νεοδαμωδῶν] I have bracketed the τῶν, because it is in most of the MSS. (including Cod. Mus. Brit.) not found, and accordingly has been cancelled by Poppo and Haack (second edition); though retained by Bekker and Goeller, and with reason; since it is at once required by propriety, and was more likely to be omitted through inadvertence, than inserted from correction. The ἐς just after I have, with Bekker and Goeller, admitted, though found only in one MS., because it is too elegant to have arisen by accident, and may easily have been absorbed in the εξ following.

4. ἐν τοῖς πρῶτοι, ὁρμήσαντες] 'having been of those who set out first.' On this use of ἐν τοῖς see note at i. 6, and iii. 17: and on ὁρμήσαντες see note at ii. 19. In the words following, ἀφῆκαν ἐς τὸ πέλαγος, (scil. τὰς ναῦς,) 'they put off into the open sea,' there is an allusion to the voyage

5. πληρωθεῖσαι] The term must here have the most extensive sense of which it is capable,—namely, 'filled with whatever is necessary for service,' including crews, equipments, and furnishing with provisions and stores of every kind. So vi. 30, ἐπλήρωσε τὰς ναῦς ὡς ἀναξόμενος. Of the very rare word ἕωσπερ examples have been adduced from Plato, p. 97, e, and from Xen. Cyr. vii. 8, 39. For τὸ πρότερον, Bekker (second edition) edits τὸ πρῶτον, from two MSS. I have chosen, with Poppo and Goeller, to retain the common reading, since more likely was it that τὸ πρότερον should in one or two MSS. have been from inadvertence altered into the more common expression τὸ πρῶτον, than that τὸ πρῶτον should have been altered almost universally.

CH. XXI. 2. ἀπόπειραν λαμβάνειν] Of this phrase, which is somewhat rare, examples are found elsewhere in Polyb. xxvii. 4, 2. Her. Miles. ap. Corp. Hist. Byz. i. 257, ἀπόπ. λαμβ. τοῦ πολέμου: and ἀπόπ. ποιήσασθαι is found in Hdot. viii. 9, 7.

τι ἔργον – κατεργάσασθαι] 'to achieve some deed for the war worthy of the danger.'

3. ξυνέπειθε—τοῦ μὴ ἀθυμεῖν] I have, with Bekker and Goeller, retained the τοῦ, which has been cancelled by Poppo; but without sufficient reason; since only six of the worst MSS. have it not, and internal evidence, as well as external authority, is quite in its favour,—considering that no reason can be imagined why it should have been inserted; but why omitted, is obvious, namely, from ignorance of the force of the article, which, as Dr. Arnold observes, serves to denote object; the sense being, 'to the end that they might not fear,' as at ii. 4 & 22, and elsewhere. Poppo, indeed, objects that this idiom 'in verbis significationis mancæ sive complementa desiderantia,' though found in the scriptural writers and Byzantine historians, requires proof of occurrence in the earlier and purer writers. But that argument is insufficient to bear down the authority of the received text, supported as it is by every MS. of any value.

For vulg. ξυνανέπειθε, I have, with Bekker and Goeller, received ξυνέπειθε, the reading of sixteen of the best MSS. (to which add Mus. Brit.) for though we have ξυναναπείθειν at vi. 88, yet that is here less suitable in sense than ξυμπείθειν.

οἵους καὶ Ἀθηναίους] On this idiom see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 473, 2, and Kuhn. Gr. § 788.

ᾧ γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι—ὑποσχεῖν] Construe, ᾧ γὰρ (τρόπῳ) καταφοβοῦσι τοὺς πέλας, οὐ δυν. ἔστιν ὅτε προὔχοντες, τῷ δὲ θράσει ἐπιχ. (ἔφη) καὶ σφᾶς ἂν ὑποσχεῖν τὸ αὐτὸ ὁμοίως τοῖς ἐναντίοις.

4. καὶ Συρακοσίους—βλάψοντας] The passage may be thus rendered: 'He knew also (he said) that the Syracusans by thus unexpectedly daring to withstand the Athenian navy, would be more likely to gain the advantage, (from the amazement the Athenians would feel thereat,) than the Athenians would be likely to defeat the inexperience of the Syracusans by their own skill.' In the concluding expressions things are put for persons. Βλάπτειν, in the sense to worst, defeat, occurs not unfrequently in Thucydides, as iv. 73, τῷ βελτίστῳ τοῦ ὁπλιτικοῦ βλαφθῆναι, and, with the same figure of speech, at vii. 62, διὰ τὸ βλάπτειν ἂν τὸ τῆς ἐπιστήμης τῇ βαρύτητι τῶν νεῶν.

5. καὶ εἴ του ἄλλου πειθόντων] Poppo compares Soph. Aj. 483, and refers to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 556. 2. 617, 1, g.

Ch. XXII. 1. αἱ δὲ πέντε καὶ τεσσαράκοντα] i. e. the remaining 45, not the whole 80. See ch. 37. At § 2 the article merely serves to denote a certain number taken from the whole of any thing.

τὸ νεώριον] 'the dock-yard,' or naval arsenal, containing store-houses of all kinds for the forming, repairing, and fitting-out of ships; and also νεώσοικοι, or covered docks, for the laying them by, for repair, or when not wanted for service.

I have, with Bekker (second edition), cancelled the τε after αὐτοῖς, as worse than useless, and as not found in one of the best MSS. It may justly be supposed to have arisen from a mistake in the construction.

Ch. XXIII. 1. ἐπικαταβάντων] 'being gone down to embark,' viz. in order to engage the enemy. Τῇ ναυμαχίᾳ τὴν γνώμην προσεχόντων: meaning that the rest, who had not gone to engage the enemy, were giving their attention to the sea-fight, to the neglect of the land approaches on their rear.

5. ναυάγια ἀνελκύσαντες] attractis navigiis: equivalent to τὰ ναυάγια προσάγεσθαι at viii. 106. Τῷ νησιδίῳ, 'the inlet.' See the Map.

Ch. XXIV. 2. χρήματα πολλὰ] Comprehending whatever had been laid up for use, as money, (to pay the fleet and army,) also property, public and private, of all sorts, especially equipments for the fleet and army, stores, &c., the forts forming such a sort of ταμιεῖον for both fleet and army, as Labdalum had been for the army.

ὥστε] This use of the word for ἄτε, though frequent in the Ionic writers, is in the Attic ones so rare, that Bekker has ventured to edit ἄτε, from one MS.: but injudiciously; since, though rare, the use is, as Abresch here, and Lobeck on Phryn. p. 427, have shown, not without precedent elsewhere. And that ὥστε was read by Josephus, is probable, from the circumstance that at Ant. xviii. 9, 1, he (evidently with the present passage in mind) writes, ἐχρῶντο δὲ ὥσπερ ταμιείῳ ταῖσδε ταῖς πόλεσιν, as yards, sails, rigging, cables, benches, oars, &c., generally called σκευή, though also σκεύη in a passage of the Old Testament, Jonah i. 5. See my Lexicon of the New Testament in voc. Χρήματα, just after, means goods, merchandise, bought for sale or barter. See vi. 31, 3.

Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο ναῦς τε ἐκπέμπουσι δώδεκα οἱ Συρακόσιοι, καὶ Ἀγάθαρχον ἐπ' αὐτῶν Συρακόσιον ἄρχοντα. καὶ αὐτῶν μία μὲν ἐς Πελοπόννησον ᾤχετο, πρέσβεις ἄγουσα, οἵπερ τά τε σφέτερα φράσωσιν, ὅτι ἐν ἐλπίσιν εἰσὶ, καὶ τὸν ἐκεῖ πόλεμον ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐποτρύνωσι γίγνεσθαι· αἱ δὲ ἕνδεκα νῆες πρὸς τὴν Ἰταλίαν ἔπλευσαν, πυνθανόμεναι πλοῖα τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις γέμοντα χρημάτων προσπλεῖν. 2. καὶ τῶν τε πλοίων ἐπιτυχοῦσαι, τὰ πολλὰ διέφθειραν, καὶ ξύλα ναυπηγήσιμα ἐν τῇ Καυλωνιάτιδι κατέκαυσαν, ἃ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἑτοῖμα ἦν. 3. ἔς τε Λοκροὺς μετὰ ταῦτα ἦλθον, καὶ ὁρμουσῶν αὐτῶν, κατέπλευσε μία τῶν ὁλκάδων τῶν ἀπὸ Πελοποννήσου ἄγουσα Θεσπιέων ὁπλίτας. 4. καὶ ἀναλαβόντες αὐτοὺς οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς, παρέπλεον ἐπ' οἶκου. φυλάξαντες δ' αὐτοὺς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι εἴκοσι νανσὶ πρὸς τοῖς Μεγάροις, μίαν μὲν ναῦν λαμβάνουσιν αὐτοῖς ἀνδράσι, τὰς δ' ἄλλας οὐκ ἠδυνήθησαν, ἀλλ' ἀποφεύγουσιν ἐς τὰς Συρακούσας.

5. Ἐγένετο δὲ καὶ περὶ τῶν σταυρῶν ἀκροβολισμὸς ἐν τῷ λιμένι, οὓς οἱ Συρακόσιοι πρὸ τῶν παλαιῶν νεωσοίκων κατέπηξαν ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, ὅπως αὐτοῖς αἱ νῆες ἐντὸς ὁρμοῖεν, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐπιπλέοντες, μὴ βλάπτοιεν ἐμβάλλοντες. 6. προσαγαγόντες γὰρ ναῦν μυριοφόρον αὐτοῖς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, πύργους τε ξυλίνους ἔχουσαν καὶ παραφράγματα, ἔκ τε τῶν ἀκάτων ὤνευον ἀναδούμενοι τοὺς σταυροὺς καὶ ἀνέκλων, καὶ κατακολυμβῶντες ἐξέπριον. οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι ἀπὸ τῶν νεωσοίκων ἔβαλλον· οἱ δ' ἐκ τῆς ὁλκάδος ἀντέβαλλον· καὶ τέλος τοὺς πολλοὺς τῶν σταυρῶν ἀνεῖλον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι. 7. χαλεπωτάτη δ' ἦν τῆς σταυρώσεως ἡ κρύφιος· ἦσαν γὰρ τῶν σταυρῶν οὓς οὐχ ὑπερέχοντας τῆς θαλάσσης κατέπηξαν, ὥστε δεινὸν ἦν προσπλεῦσαι, μὴ οὐ προϊδών τις ὥσπερ περὶ ἕρμα περιβάλῃ τὴν ναῦν. ἀλλὰ καὶ τούτους κολυμβηταὶ δυόμενοι ἐξέπριον μισθοῦ. ὅμως δ' αὖθις οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐσταύρωσαν. 8. πολλὰ δὲ καὶ ἄλλα πρὸς ἀλλήλους, οἷον εἰκὸς, τῶν στρατοπέδων ἐγγὺς ὄντων καὶ ἀντιτεταγμένων, ἐμηχανῶντο, καὶ ἀκροβολισμοῖς καὶ πείραις παντοίαις ἐχρῶντο.

9. Ἔπεμψαν δὲ καὶ ἐς τὰς πόλεις πρέσβεις οἱ Συρακόσιοι Κορινθίων καὶ Ἀμπρακιωτῶν καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων, * ἀγγέλλοντας τήν τε τοῦ Πλημμυρίου λῆψιν, καὶ τῆς ναυμαχίας πέρι, ὡς οὐ τῇ τῶν πολεμίων ἰσχύϊ μᾶλλον ἢ τῇ σφετέρᾳ ταραχῇ ἡσσηθεῖεν, τά τε ἄλλα αὖ δηλώσοντας ὅτι ἐν ἐλπίσιν εἰσὶ, καὶ ἀξιώσοντας ξυμβοηθεῖν ἐπ' αὐτοὺς καὶ νανσὶ καὶ πεζῷ, ὡς καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων προσδοκίμων ὄντων ἄλλῃ στρατιᾷ, καὶ ἣν φθάσωσιν αὐτοὶ πρότερον διαφθείραντες τὸ παρὸν στράτευμα αὐτῶν, διαπεπολεμησόμενον. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ ταῦτα ἔπρασσον.

XXVI. Ὁ δὲ Δημοσθένης, ἐπεὶ ξυνελέγη αὐτῷ τὸ στράτευμα ὃ ἔδει ἔχοντα ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν βοηθεῖν, ἄρας ἐκ τῆς Αἰγίνης, καὶ πλεύσας πρὸς τὴν Πελοπόννησον, τῷ τε Χαρικλεῖ καὶ ταῖς τριάκοντα νανσὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ξυμμίσγει· καὶ παραλαβόντες τῶν Ἀργείων ὁπλίτας ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς ἔπλεον ἐς τὴν Λακωνικήν. 2. καὶ πρῶτον μὲν τῆς Ἐπιδαύρου τι τῆς Λιμηρᾶς ἐδῄωσαν· ἔπειτα, σχόντες ἐς τὰ καταντικρὺ Κυθήρων τῆς Λακωνικῆς, ἔνθα τὸ ἱερὸν τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνός ἐστι, τῆς τε γῆς ἔστιν ἃ ἐδῄωσαν, καὶ ἐτείχισαν ἰσθμῷδές τι χωρίον, ἵνα δὴ οἵ τε Εἵλωτες τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων αὐτόσε αὐτομολῶσι, καὶ [ἅμα] λῃσταὶ ἐξ αὐτοῦ, ὥσπερ ἐκ τῆς Πύλου, ἁρπαγὴν ποιῶνται.

3. οὐδ' οἱ ἔσπλοι—τῆς ἐπαγωγῆς τῶν ἐπιτηδείων] hoc est, subvectio commeatus non potuit tutò intrare portum, pro commeatu ipso, seu navibus commeatum advehentibus. Comp. iii. 51, 2, μηδὲν ἐσπλεῖν, ubi vide not., et conf. v. 82, 4, ἡ ἐπαγωγὴ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων. (Poppo.) I must still adhere to the version formerly propounded by me, namely, 'the entrance was not safe for the introduction of necessaries;' which has been since adopted by Dr. Arnold. The genitive may be supposed to have here the not unfrequent sense quod attinet.

Ch. XXV. 1. ἐποτρύνωσι] 'they rouse on.' Compare supra vi. 69, ξύνοδον ἐπώτρυνον ὁπλίταις, where see note.

5. τῶν σταυρῶν] Meaning a sort of stockade of piles, driven down to secure a constant station for their ships, so as to always be in readiness to annoy the Athenian fleet. By νεωσοίκων (on which term see note at ch. 22.) understand the old docks, as distinguished from the new ones, which were doubtless in the νεώριον of the smaller port.

6. παραφράγματα] for παραβλήματα or παραπετάσματα, made of light wood (see iv. 115.) or stout skins, like the plutei of the Romans.

ὤνευον] 'wrenched them up with a ὄνος or windlass:' a machine so called from some fancied resemblance of the top of a windlass to an ass's head, as our word a crane, the Latin grus, and the Greek γέρανος.

ἀνέκλων] 'pulled up,' as ii. 76, where see note. Of the verb κατακολυμβᾶν, 'to dive under water,' the use is so rare, that I have met with only one example of it elsewhere, namely, in Lucian, t. ii. p. 695.

7. ὥσπερ περὶ ἕρμα περιβάλῃ τὴν ναῦν] 'should dash the ship as it were on a rock.' So Herodot. vii. 183, τῶν νεῶν τρεῖς ἐπέλασαν περὶ τὸ ἕρμα. Æschyl. Eum. 561, (Schutz.) τὸν πρὶν ὄλβον ἕρματι προσβαλὼν δίκας. Plato, p. 553, ἐξαίφνης πταίσαντα, ὥσπερ πρὸς ἕρματι, πρὸς τῇ πόλει. Dio Cass. 368, 86, περὶ αὐτὰς, ὥσπερ περὶ ἕρμα, ἐπταίκεσαν. Finally, this passage of our author seems to have suggested a similar form of expression in Lucian, Sat. 4, οἱ δὲ ἔμπαλιν γυμνοὶ ἐξενήξαντο, συντριβέντος αὐτοῖς τοῦ σκάφους, περὶ οὕτω μικρῷ ἕρματι τῷ κύβῳ.

8. ἀκροβολισμοῖς καὶ πείραις παντοίαις] On the former word (skirmishes) see Bp. Blomfield on Æschyl. Theb. 146. On the latter compare Appian, t. ii. 755, ἐγίγνετο ταῦτα σὺν πείραις πολλαῖς. Aristot. t. i. 224, c. ἀκροβολισμοῖς καὶ πείραις. Πεῖρα often, as here, implies a notion of device and stratagem. So Schol. on Soph. Aj. 2, πεῖράν τιν' ὀχθῶν ἁρπάσαι. Aristoph. Thesm. 766, τίς ἔστι μηχανὴ σωτηρίας; τίς πεῖρα, τίς ἐπίνοι';

Ch. XXVI. 2. ἅμα] I have, in deference to Bekker and Goeller, received this, on the authority of one MS.; but the word is, to say the least, useless, and I suspect came from the margin.

3. καὶ ὁ μὲν Δημοσθένης εὐθὺς, ἐπειδὴ ξυγκατέλαβε τὸ χωρίον, † ἐπέπλει ἐπὶ τῆς Κερκύρας, ὅπως καὶ τῶν ἐκεῖθεν ξυμμάχων παραλαβὼν, τὸν ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν πλοῦν ὅτι τάχιστα ποιῆται· ὁ δὲ Χαρικλῆς, περιμείνας ἕως τὸ χωρίον ἐξετείχισε, καὶ καταλιπὼν φυλακὴν αὐτοῦ, ἀπεκομίζετο καὶ αὐτὸς ὕστερον ταῖς τριάκοντα ναυσὶν ἐπ' οἴκου, καὶ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι ἅμα.

XXVII. Ἀφίκοντο δὲ καὶ Θρᾳκῶν τῶν μαχαιροφόρων τοῦ Διακοῦ γένους ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας πελτασταὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει τούτῳ τριακόσιοι καὶ χίλιοι, οὓς ἔδει τῷ Δημοσθένει ἐς τὴν Σικελίαν ξυμπλεῖν. 2. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι, ὡς ὕστερον ἦκον, διενοοῦντο αὐτοὺς πάλιν, ὅθεν ἦλθον, ἐς Θρᾴκην ἀποπέμπειν. τὸ γὰρ ἔχειν πρὸς τὸν ἐκ τῆς Δεκελείας πόλεμον αὐτοὺς πολυτελὲς ἐφαίνετο· δραχμὴν γὰρ τῆς ἡμέρας ἕκαστος ἐλάμβανεν. 3. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἡ Δεκέλεια, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ὑπὸ πάσης τῆς στρατιᾶς ἐν τῷ θέρει τούτῳ τειχισθεῖσα, ὕστερον δὲ φρουραῖς ἀπὸ τῶν πόλεων κατὰ διαδοχὴν χρόνου ἐπιούσαις τῇ χώρᾳ ἐπῳκεῖτο, πολλὰ ἔβλαπτε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις χρημάτων τ' ὀλέθρῳ καὶ ἀνθρώπων φθορᾷ ἐκάκωσε τὰ πράγματα. 4. πρότερον μὲν γὰρ βραχεῖαι γιγνόμεναι αἱ ἐσβολαὶ τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον τῆς γῆς ἀπολαύειν οὐκ ἐκώλυον· τότε δὲ ξυνεχῶς ἐπικαθημένων, καὶ ὁτὲ μὲν καὶ πλε-

3. ἐπέπλει] Such is the common reading, and that of almost all MSS. except one or two that have παρέπλει, which was edited by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller; while Arnold retains ἐπέπλει. I have done the same, but not for the same reason. Παρέπλει is, I agree with Arnold, a correction proceeding from some one dissatisfied with ἐπέπλει; and, I would say, justly; for, though it be very true, what Arnold affirms, that the word does not always signify a hostile advance; yet it will bear no sense here to the purpose; that assigned by Arnold, 'sailed,' being quite unauthorized. I doubt not that the true reading is (what Reiske conjectured as such) ἀπέπλει; a conjecture, as Didot remarks, strongly confirmed by a passage infra ch. 31, 1, ὁ δὲ Δημ. τότε ἀποπλέων ἐπι τῆς Κερκύρας μετὰ, &c.

Ch. XXVII. 1. τῶν μαχαιροφόρων τοῦ Διακοῦ γένους] See note on ii. 96, and comp. Plut. Paul. Æm. 18, οἱ Θρᾷκες — ὀρθὰς δὲ ῥομφαίας βαρυσιδήρους ἀπὸ τῶν δεξιῶν ὤμων ἐπισείοντες. On the word ῥομφαίας see my Lexicon of the New Testament.

3. ἀπὸ] So Bekker and Goeller edit, on the authority of two MSS., for vulg. ὑπὸ, which is retained by Poppo; but not on good grounds, since ἀπὸ is required here by, what Poppo himself, with Bekker, Haack, and Goeller, has edited, from many of the best MSS. (to which add Codd. Cant. and Mus. Brit.) for vulg. ἐπιουσῶν, ἐπιούσαις. Τῇ χώρᾳ must be referred to ἐπιούσαις. For πρώτοις, Bekker edits, on conjecture, πρῶτον, comparing supra ch. 24, 3. But I have chosen, with Poppo, to retain the common reading; for though ἐν τοῖς πρῶτον be found in the best writers, yet it is not to the exclusion of the more popular form ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις; since the more recondite form is, in such a case, not to be introduced from conjecture; but allowance is to be made for that intermixture of popular with recondite phraseology found in the most Attic writers, especially Aristophanes. Finally, there is the less necessity to change the common reading, since, as Poppo observes, the sense is here, not, as at ch. 24, 3, 'omnium primum,' but 'in primis,' i. e. maximè.

χρημάτων] Meaning property generally, as cattle, &c. Ἀνθρώπων φθορᾷ, 'hominum jacturâ:' alluding to the loss of the slaves, who went over to the enemy.

4. ὁτὲ μὲν—ὁτὲ δὲ] This is, as Arnold observes, for ποτὲ μὲν answering to ποτὲ δέ; a use far from common, though I have noted it elsewhere in Aristot. Rhet.

όνων ἐπιόντων, ὁτὲ δ', ἐξ ἀνάγκης, τῆς ἴσης φρουρᾶς καταθεούσης τε τὴν χώραν, καὶ λῃστείας ποιουμένης, βασιλέως τε παρόντος τοῦ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων Ἄγιδος, ὃς οὐκ ἐκ παρέργου τὸν πόλεμον ἐποιεῖτο, μεγάλα οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐβλάπτοντο. 5. τῆς τε γὰρ χώρας ἁπάσης ἐστέρηντο, καὶ ἀνδραπόδων πλέον ἢ δύο μυριάδες ηὐτομολήκεσαν, καὶ τούτων πολὺ μέρος χειροτέχναι, πρόβατά τε πάντα ἀπολώλει καὶ ὑποζύγια· ἵπποι τε, ὁσημέραι ἐξελαυνόντων τῶν ἱππέων, πρός τε τὴν Δεκέλειαν καταδρομὰς ποιουμένων, καὶ κατὰ τὴν χώραν φυλασσόντων, οἱ μὲν ἀπεχωλοῦντο, ἐν γῇ ἀποκρύτῳ τε, καὶ ξυνεχῶς ταλαιπωροῦντες, οἱ δὲ ἐτιτρώσκοντο. XXVIII. ἥ τε τῶν ἐπιτηδείων παρακομιδὴ ἐκ τῆς Εὐβοίας, πρότερον ἐκ τοῦ Ὠρωποῦ κατὰ ‡ γῆν διὰ τῆς Δεκελείας θᾶσσον οὖσα, περὶ Σούνιον κατὰ θάλασσαν πολυτελὴς ἐγίγνετο· τῶν τε πάντων ὁμοίως ἐπακτῶν ἐδεῖτο ἡ πόλις, καὶ, ἀντὶ τοῦ πόλις εἶναι, φρούριον κατέστη. 2. πρὸς γὰρ τῇ ἐπάλξει τὴν μὲν ἡμέραν κατὰ διαδοχὴν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι φυλάσσοντες, τὴν δὲ νύκτα καὶ ξύμπαντες, πλὴν τῶν ἱππέων, οἱ μὲν ἐφ' ὅπλοις ποιούμενοι, οἱ δ' ἐπὶ τοῦ τείχους, καὶ θέρους καὶ χειμῶνος ἐταλαιπωροῦντο. 3. μάλιστα δ' αὐτοὺς ἐπίεζεν ὅτι δύο πολέμους ἅμα εἶχον· καὶ ἐς φιλονεικίαν καθέστασαν τοιαύτην, ἣν, πρὶν γενέσθαι, ἠπίστησεν ἄν τις ἀκούσας. τὸ γὰρ αὐτοὺς πολιορκουμένους ἐπιτειχισμῷ ὑπὸ Πελοποννησίων, μηδ' ὡς

i. 7, τῆς ἴσης φρουρᾶς: meaning the ordinary garrison; so called as being of a regular number. With the phrase ἐκ παρέργου (on which see note at i. 142.) compare Jos. Ant. Præf. § 1, λογίσασθαι οὐ παρ.

5. Before πολὺ, has been inserted by Bekker the article τό; but on authority (that only of one MS.) too slender to warrant so unnecessary a change.

ὑποζύγια] For this, Bekker edits, from two MSS., ζεύγη. I have not chosen to follow his example, 1. because of the insufficiency of external authority for the latter; and, 2. because it is far from certain whether ζεύγη be susceptible of the sense which the context would here require. With the use of ὑποζύγια here compare that of τὰ κτήνη in a passage of the Old Testament, 1 Kings xviii. 5.

ἀπεχωλοῦντο] 'were utterly lamed,' rendered useless by lameness. So Pausan. x. 42, ἀπεχωλοῦντο οἱ ἵπποι. Xen. Hist. vii. 2, 9, ἀποκεχωλωμένους.

γῇ ἀποκρύτῳ] 'rough, rugged land.' So Philo Jud. p. 896, λιθώδη καὶ ἀπόκροτα χωρία, and Xen. Hipp. vii. 15. In this term ἀπόκροτος there is, I apprehend, an onomatopœia derived from the noise (κρότος) proceeding from such rough and rugged land at the stroke of the foot, or hoof: in which view compare Virg. Æn. viii. 596, Quadrupedante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum.

Ch. XXVIII. 1. γῆν] So I now read, with Poppo and Goeller, for vulg. γῆς, retained by Bekker, but which I must regard as indefensible: suffice it to say, that γῆν is required by the antithetical κατὰ θάλασσαν.

θᾶσσον οὖσα] 'which was done speedily.' So Xen. Hier. iv. 7, θᾶττόν τι γίγνεται. Τῶν πάντων ὁμοίως ἐπακτῶν ἐδεῖτο, 'needed every thing alike to be imparted.'

2. πρὸς τῇ ἐπάλξει] lit. 'at the parapet of defence.' See note on ii. 13. At ἐφ' ὅπλοις ποιούμενοι supply τὴν φυλακὴν from the foregoing φυλάσσοντες.

3. τὸ γὰρ αὐτοὺς, &c.] Here, and throughout this lengthened period, there exists no regular construction; the writer having (as Dr. Arnold observes) forgot to subjoin the apodosis, which would have been in some such words as, πῶς οὐ ταῦτα ἀπίστης φιλονεικίας σημεῖον εἶναι νομίζειν; A similar irregularity occurs at vi. 31, 3.

ἀποστῆναι ἐκ Σικελίας, ἀλλὰ ἐκεῖ Συρακούσας τῷ αὐτῷ τρόπῳ ἀντιπολιορκεῖν, πόλιν οὐδὲν ἐλάσσω αὐτήν γε καθ' αὐτὴν τῆς Ἀθηναίων, καὶ τὸν παράλογον τοσοῦτον ποιῆσαι τοῖς Ἕλλησι τῆς δυνάμεως καὶ τόλμης, (ὅσον κατ' ἀρχὰς τοῦ πολέμου, οἱ μὲν ἐνιαυτὸν, οἱ δὲ δύο, οἱ δὲ τριῶν γε ἐτῶν, οὐδεὶς πλείω, χρόνον, ἐνόμιζον περιοίσειν αὐτούς, εἰ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι ἐσβάλοιεν ἐς τὴν χώραν) ὥστε ἔτει ἑπτακαιδεκάτῳ μετὰ τὴν πρώτην ἐσβολὴν ἦλθον ἐς Σικελίαν, ἤδη τῷ πολέμῳ κατὰ πάντα τετρυχωμένοι, καὶ πόλεμον οὐδὲν ἐλάσσω προσανείλοντο τοῦ πρότερον ὑπάρχοντος ἐκ Πελοποννήσου. 4. δι' ἃ καὶ τότε ὑπό τε τῆς Δεκελείας πολλὰ βλαπτούσης, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀναλωμάτων μεγάλων προσπιπτόντων, ἀδύνατοι ἐγένοντο τοῖς χρήμασι. καὶ τὴν εἰκοστὴν, ὑπὸ τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον, τῶν κατὰ θάλασσαν, ἀντὶ τοῦ φόρου, τοῖς ὑπηκόοις ἐποίησαν,—πλείω νομίζοντες ἂν σφίσι χρήματα οὕτω προσιέναι. αἱ μὲν γὰρ δαπάναι οὐχ ὁμοίως καὶ πρὶν, ἀλλὰ πολλῷ μείζους καθέστασαν, ὅσῳ καὶ μείζων ὁ πόλεμος ἦν· αἱ δὲ πρόσοδοι ἀπώλλυντο.

XXIX. Τοὺς οὖν Θρᾷκας τοὺς τῷ Δημοσθένει ὑστερήσαντας, διὰ τὴν παροῦσαν ἀπορίαν τῶν χρημάτων οὐ βουλόμενοι δαπανᾶν, εὐθὺς ἀπέπεμπον, προστάξαντες κομίσαι αὐτοὺς Διϊτρέφει, καὶ εἰπόντες ἅμα ἐν τῷ παράπλῳ, (ἐπορεύοντο γὰρ διὰ Εὐρίπου) καὶ οὐδὲν ἐλάσσω αὐτήν γε καθ' αὐτὴν] For vulg. τε, which cannot be defended, I have, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, edited, from one MS., γε, which bears the signification scilicet; and of αὐτὴν καθ' αὑτὴν, the sense is, 'it being considered in comparison.' So Æschyl. Prom. 1048, Αὐθαδία—αὐτὴ καθ' αὑτὴν οὐδενὸς μεῖον σθένει.

For τῶν Ἀθηναίων, found in almost all the MSS., and edited by Goeller and Poppo, I have chosen, with Bekker and Dr. Arnold, to adopt the reading τῆς Ἀθηναίων: for I agree with Dr. Arnold in thinking that the former would not be a correct mode of writing, and that propriety requires the τῆς. See note supra ch. 19, 3.

τοσοῦτον] This is to be referred, not to ὅσον, but to ὥστε. In the words following, ὅσον—χώραν (which are parenthetical) ὅσον stands for ἐς ὅσον, having here what is a sense far from common, (especially in a parenthesis, and at the beginning of a sentence or clause,) the sense quatenus scilicet; of which examples occur infra viii. 92, ὅσον ἀπὸ βοῆς ἕνεκα, and in a passage of Plutarch ap. Steph. Thes. col. 7879.

After πλείω I have placed a comma, as the construction requires; the accusative before requiring an accusative here: and χρόνον cannot, as Poppo imagines, be supplied from χρόνον following. It is better to suppose a transposition: in fact, in οὐδεὶς πλείω there is an insertion brought in a little too soon. Περιοίσειν stands for περιέσεσθαι, as in Dio Cass. p. 14, 26, οὐ γὰρ περιοίσειν ἔτι τοὺς ἔνδον, and 277, 42. On τετρυχωμένοι see note at iv. 70, 2.

4. ἀδύνατοι ἐγένοντο τοῖς χρήμασι] 'were unable to provide for their necessary expenses.' Such seems to be the true sense of this unusual form of expression, which would have been plainer, had πρὸς τὰ χρήματα been written, as in Polyb. xxxvii. 3, 8, Νομαδία ἀδύνατος πρὸς ἡμέρους καρπούς. Here, however, as often, the dative is used for πρὸς and the accusative. Compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 22, ἀδυνάτως ἔχειν—διαλύειν τὰ χρέα.

τὴν εἰκοστὴν] Boeckh, Publ. Œcon. vol. ii. 3, 139, has shown that this was an ad valorem duty, levied in the manner of our customs, on all sea-borne commodities to or from any port in the Athenian dominions.

CH. XXIX. 1. τῷ Δημοσθένει ὑστερήσαντας] Meaning, as Bauer and Dr. Arnold explain, 'too late to be of any use to Demosthenes.'

τοὺς πολεμίους, ἤν τι δύνηται, ἀπ' αὐτῶν βλάψαι. 2. ὁ δὲ ἐς τε τὴν Τάναγραν ἀπεβίβασεν αὐτοὺς, καὶ ἁρπαγήν τινα ἐποιήσατο διὰ τάχους, καὶ ἐκ Χαλκίδος τῆς Εὐβοίας ἀφ' ἑσπέρας διέπλευσε τὸν Εὔριπον, καὶ ἀποβιβάσας ἐς τὴν Βοιωτίαν, ἦγεν αὐτοὺς ἐπὶ Μυκαλησσόν. 3. καὶ τὴν μὲν νύκτα λαθὼν πρὸς τῷ Ἑρμαίῳ ηὐλίσατο (ἀπέχει δὲ τῆς Μυκαλησσοῦ ἑκκαίδεκα μάλιστα σταδίους), ἅμα δὲ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πόλει προσέκειτο, οὔσῃ οὐ μεγάλῃ, καὶ αἱρεῖ, ἀφυλάκτοις τε ἐπιπεσὼν καὶ ἀπροσδοκήτοις μὴ ἄν ποτέ τινα σφισιν ἀπὸ θαλάσσης τοσοῦτον ἐπαναβάντα ἐπιθέσθαι, τοῦ τείχους ἀσθενοῦς ὄντος, καὶ ἔστιν ᾗ καὶ πεπτωκότος, τοῦ δὲ βραχέος ᾠκοδομημένου, καὶ πυλῶν ἅμα διὰ τὴν ἄδειαν ἀνεῳγμένων. 4. ἐσπεσόντες δὲ οἱ Θρᾷκες ἐς τὴν Μυκαλησσὸν, τάς τε οἰκίας καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ ἐπόρθουν, καὶ τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἐφόνευον, φειδόμενοι οὔτε πρεσβυτέρας οὔτε νεωτέρας ἡλικίας, ἀλλὰ πάντας ἐξῆς, ὅτῳ ἐντύχοιεν, καὶ παῖδας καὶ γυναῖκας, κτείνοντες, καὶ προσέτι καὶ ὑποζύγια καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα ἔμψυχα ἴδοιεν. τὸ γὰρ γένος τὸ τῶν Θρᾳκῶν, ὁμοῖα τοῖς μάλιστα τοῦ βαρβαρικοῦ, ἐν ᾧ ἂν θαρσήσῃ, φονικώτατόν ἐστι. 5. καὶ τότε ἄλλη τε ταραχὴ οὐκ ὀλίγη, καὶ ἰδέα πᾶσα καθεστήκει ὀλέθρου, καὶ ἐπιπεσόντες διδασκαλείῳ παίδων,—ὅπερ μέγιστον ἦν αὐτόθι, καὶ ἄρτι ἔτυχον οἱ παῖδες ἐσεληλυθότες,—κατέκοψαν πάντας· καὶ ξυμφορὰ τῇ πόλει πάσῃ οὐδεμιᾶς ἥσσων μᾶλλον ἑτέρας ἀδύκητός τε ἐπέπεσεν αὕτη καὶ ἀπ' αὐτῶν] lit. 'out of them,' i. e. by their means. So Hom. Il. xxiv. 605, τοὺς μὲν Ἀπόλλων πέφνεν ἀπ' ἀργυρέοιο βιοῖο.

3. τῇ πόλει προσέκειτο] 'attacked the city:' a somewhat rare sense of προσκεῖσθαι, of which I have noted examples elsewhere in Herodot. ix. 57, and Arrian, E. A. i. 19, 5. iii. 14, 8; though only with a dative of person; not, as here, of thing. The only other example known to me is in Eurip. Phœn. 746, Λόχων ἀνάσσειν, ἕπτα προσκεῖσθαι πύλαις.

οὔσῃ οὐ μεγάλῃ] I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, received οὐ, though found in only two MSS., 1. because there is, notwithstanding what has been urged by Haack and Didot, no good reason to suppose that Mycalessus was any more than a place of rather small size; and, 2. because internal evidence is quite in favour of the οὐ; it being more likely that the word should, on account of the οὐ just before, be omitted than inserted. With ἀπροσδοκήτοις—ἐπιθέσθαι comp. supra iii. 52.

τοῦ δὲ βραχέος ᾠκοδομημένου] 'part of it being built low [so as to be low].' Compare ii. 76, and Hom. Il. xiii. 683, τεῖχος ἐδέδμητο χθαμαλώτατον.

4. τοῖς μάλιστα] Supply φονικοῖς from φονικωτάτους. So Hdot. vii. 141, ὁμοῖα τῷ μάλιστα, and iii. 82, σέβονται ὁμοῖα τοῖς μάλιστα (sub. σεβομένους). On this idiom see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 289.

ἐν ᾧ ἂν θαρσήσῃ] 'in whatever case (implying whenever) it can summon courage to show it:' a bitter sarcasm, with which compare that at iv. 126, fin. of the Illyrians, οἳ δ' ἂν εἴξωσιν αὐτοῖς, κατὰ πόδας τὸ εὔψυχον ἐν τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ ὀξεῖς ἐνδείκνυνται. Comp. also Procop. B. G. p. 92, 40, οἱ δὲ βάρβαροι, ἐπεὶ οὐδὲν σφίσι ἀπήντα (read ἀπαντᾷ) πολέμιον, γίνονται ὠμότατοι ἀνθρώπων ἁπάντων.

καὶ ξυμφορὰ—αὕτη καὶ δεινὴ] Whatever may be doubtful in this passage, one thing is certain, that μᾶλλον ἑτέρας is not a mere interpretation of οὐδεμιᾶς ἥσσον, since, as Haack observes, it contains a stronger sense, like that of μᾶλλον ἑτέρου at i. 138: in fact, the words are to be referred to what follows; and the sense (obscured by the brevity of expression, and harshness of character) seems to be, 'and this calamity to a whole city, while in ex-

Ch. XXX. 2. τοξεύματος] This I have, with Goeller and Poppo, edited, from two good MSS. and Valla, for vulg. τοῦ ζεύγματος, which is indefensible; for though there was afterwards a bridge over the Euripus;—which is mentioned by the name ζεῦγμα in a passage of Procop. Ædif. 36, 32, (speaking of the Euripus,) ζεῦγμα δὲ πορθμῷ (sc. Euripo) μία τις ἐγκειμένη ποιεῖται δοκὸς,—ἑνός τε ξύλου ἐπιβολῇ καὶ ἀφαίρεσει, καὶ πεζεύουσι καὶ ναυτίλλονται,—yet that was not now in existence. Besides, the retreating beyond the bridge would not give that reason which the context requires. The phrase ἔξω τοξεύματος is confirmed by an imitation in Herodian viii. 4, 17, μείναντες ἔξω τοξεύματος, where in some old editions there was the same blunder τοῦ ζεύγματος: also others in Dio Cass. p. 626, 32. 815, 26, as also Eunap. p. 161, init., where for τὸ πλοῖον οὐκ ἔχων τοξεύματος I conjecture τὸ πλοῖον οὐκ ἔχων ἔσω τοξεύματος, which I can confirm from Synes. ap. Steph. Thes. πρὶν εἴσω βέλους ἐλθεῖν. Arrian, E. A. i. 6, 18. i. 7, 7, εἴσω βέλους παρέρχεσθαι. Eurip. Orest. 1531, εἴσω ξίφους. In Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 23, we have the phrase ἐντὸς τοξεύματος: indeed, as Duk. observes, the Greeks so often used ἐντὸς and ἔξω τοξ. or βελῶν, that it passed into a proverb. Οὐκ ἀτόπως. So Latin, haud absurdè, for haud malè.

προεκθέοντες καὶ ξυστρεφόμενοι] Compare Herodot. ix. 62, προεξαΐσσοντες — καὶ συστρεφόμενοι, ἐσέπιπτον ἐς τοὺς Σ. See supra ii. 4, and vi. 77. The τε is in many MSS. not found, and has been cancelled by Poppo, and Bekker in his first edition, but restored in the second. The passage of Herodotus above cited is rather against than for the particle, which, too, seems worse than useless. Ἐν τούτῳ, 'in this matter,' meaning, this part of the action.

3. μέρος τι] Meaning, 'some considerable part.' See note at i. 23, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 487, 5.

4. ὡς ἐπὶ μεγέθει] i. e. 'in proportion to the size of the city.' On the expression οὐδενὸς ἧσσον see note supra ch. 29.

Ch. XXXI. 1. ἀποπλέων — τείχισιν] This is put, by a transposition, (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 596,) for ἀποπλέων ἐκ τῆς Λακωνικῆς μετὰ τὴν ἐν αὐτῇ [γενομένην] τείχισιν. (Abresch and Bauer.)

I have, with Poppo and Goeller, excluded the λαβὼν of the common text after Ἠλείων, as found in scarcely any MS., and evidently from the margin, being intended to supply what seemed wanting to the sense. On the same ground I have not received the εὑρὼν of Bekker in his 2nd edition, which only tends to confirm the suspicion that rests on λαβὼν. Each word is unnecessary; the con-truction, as Duker points out, being, ὁλκάδα—αὐτὴν μὲν διαφθείρει, οἱ δὲ ἄνδρες, &c.

2. ὁπλίτας — μετεπέμψατο] For the construction here see note on vii. 57, 8.

3. ἐκ τῆς Σικελίας ἀποπλέων] Why he returned from Sicily, Poppo observes, does not appear: it is, indeed, not said; but he had doubtless gone to join Demosthenes on the western coast of Greece, in order to inform him of the state of things at Syracuse; and, as being soon to assume a joint command with him, to confer with him on the measures to be pursued on their arrival in Sicily.

4. οὔτε καταλύουσι τὸν πόλεμον] For οὐκ ἀποπαύονται τοῦ πολίμου, as Duk. explains, 'do not give up the contest.'

Ch. XXXII. 1. διαφήσουσι] Bekker (2d edit.) and Arnold edit διαφοήσουσι, from the conjecture of Dobree, formed on Aristoph. Av. 193, διαφοήσετε, which is explained by the Schol. and Zonar. Lex. διαφορήσετε, διαπέμψετε: and Dr. Arnold adduces the word εἰσφοήσεσθαι from Demosth. p. 93, used in the sense 'to admit into a city.' To this, indeed, it is objected by Poppo, that φοέω and its compounds nowhere else occur in our author: but since they are used by Eurip. and Aristoph. (see Musgr. on Cycl. 232, and Monk on Eurip. Alc. 1061.) that argument is not very cogent. More to the purpose is it to urge, that the context requires the sense 'to allow to pass through,' not 'to cause to pass through.' This perhaps occurred to Bekker himself, since in his preface he himself expresses a doubt whether the conjecture be true. Hence I think it better to retain διαφήσουσι, though the correctness of this reading is at least equally questionable, since it admits of no sense here suitable; that of dimittere, as found in Xen., Polyb., Ælian, Dionys. Hal., and elsewhere, where the term denotes the disbanding of an army, being here little applicable. It is truly remarked by Poppo and Dr. Arnold, that we should here have expected to find διεῖναι rather than διαφέρειν in the sense to allow a passage through a country. To establish which sense of διεῖναι, Dr. Arnold refers to Demosth. p. 276, 9: the words of which passage are, οὔτ' εἰς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐλθεῖν δυνατὸς, μήτε Θετταλῶν ἀκολουθούντων, μήτε Θηβαίων διέντων: but the signification in question is not so rare as to rest on the evidence of one passage. It is found also in Xen. Anab. iv. 1, 8, διεῖναι αὐτοὺς ὡς διὰ φιλίας, and iii. 2, 14. Dio Cass. 1185, 79, οὓς οὔτε δέξασθαι οὔτε διήσειν διὰ τῆς χώρας ὁμωμόκεσαν. Dionys. Hal. Epist. ad Ammianum, ch. 11, (p. 740,) πρὸς τὸ διὰ Θηβαίων διεῖναι Φίλιππον εἰς τὴν Ἀττικὴν, and 1, 5, μὴ δώσουσιν, where διήσουσιν, the reading found in Aristot. Rhet., is undoubtedly the true one, and ought to have been received into the text by Reiske,—who, had he borne in mind the foregoing examples, or even what occurs a little further on in the same passage of Dionys. p. 744, 4, ἢ διέντας αὐτοὺς (read ταὐτὸν) ἐφ' ὑμᾶς, ἢ συνεμβαλόντας εἰς τὴν Ἀττικήν. From what has been said, there can be no doubt that διήσουσι, first timidly proposed, and then waveringly continued in by Poppo, is the true reading. The origin of the error seems to have been this—that the above signification of διέναι being unknown to the critics, (thus it was unknown even to Poppo, and even, though established by Dr. Arnold from one example, was not adopted by him, and scarcely by Poppo, who says, 'jam profissi sumus,') they ventured to place ἀφ over the δι: and the same scribes wrote ἀφήσουσι, while others, uniting both prepositions, wrote διαφήσουσι: and although the reading does not appear to have place in any of the MSS. of Thucydides extant, yet that it was in Dio Cassius's copy, there can be no doubt.

XXXIII. Καὶ περὶ τὰς αὐτὰς ἡμέρας καὶ οἱ Καμαριναῖοι ἀφικνοῦνται αὐτοῖς βοηθοῦντες, πεντακόσιοι μὲν ὁπλῖται, τριακόσιοι δὲ ἀκοντισταὶ καὶ τοξόται τρια-

2. τριχῇ] This is not found in any of the MSS., and is placed within brackets by all the recent editors—to whose judgment I have deferred; though internal evidence is rather in its favour; for difficult is it to imagine why, if not originally there, it should have been introduced. We may more easily imagine why it should have been thrown out,—namely, I suspect, because it seemed inconsistent with the singular ἐνέδραν τινά. But τριχῇ need not be taken with ποιεῖσθαι (though the phrase τριχῇ ποιεῖσθαι is found in good writers); for the construction may be, and I believe is, ποιησάμενοι τινὰ ἐνέδραν τριχῇ, understanding the term τριχῇ to signify, like tripartitam in Latin, 'tribus in locis,' as in Herodot. vii. 36, at least in some MSS. there; though the greater number have τριχοῦ, probably the Ionic form. Plato, p. 51, τὸν μὴ πειθόμενον τριχῇ ('in three ways') φαμὲν ἀδικεῖν. Hom. Od. viii. 506, τρίχα δέ σφισιν ἤρδανε βουλή, where at τρίχα there is an ellipsis of some verb, as πράσσεσθαι, as here of ἐπιτίθεντες, or such like.

It is meant, then, that the ambuscade was so formed as to be laid in three different situations; yet those so connected as to form but one ἐνέδρα; the thing contrived being, that the three attacks should be almost contemporaneous.

Ch. XXXIII. 2. σχεδόν τι] An Attic form, occurring also at iii. 68, and on which Goeller refers to Schaefer on Dion. Hal. de C. V. p. 177, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 487, 4. In the words a little after, the subject πᾶσα ἡ Σικελία is (as Goeller remarks) repeated after the parenthesis in another form; as in a similar case supra i. 18, and others elsewhere. On οὐδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων see note at ii. 72, 1.

3. ἐπέσχον τὸ εὐθέως] So I edit, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller, on the authority of Codd. Bas., Græv., and Cass. ex emend., (to which add that of Codd. Clar. and Cant.) instead of vulg. ἐπέσχον τι εὐθέως, which is retained by Bekker; but not on good grounds, since, while the active form is frequent in our author (so supra ii. 76.) and the best Attic writers, the middle form does not occur, at least in Thucydides. Abresch aptly compares a passage of Soph. Phil. 881, μηδ' ἐπισχωμεν τὸ πλεῖν.

6. εἴ τις ὑπελέλειπτο] For ὅστις ὑπελέλειπτο. Of the words ἐπειδήπερ—εἰσὶ the sense is, 'now that things are come to that pass,' namely, by the expulsion of the anti-Athenian party.

Cн. XXXIV. 5. ἀντίπρωροι ἐμβαλλόμεναι] 'beaten in by the opposing shock of the ships' beaks of the enemy.' In ἀναῤῥαγεῖσαι τὰς παρεξειρεσίας, 'broken up at the forecastle,' we have a phrase of rare occurrence, of which I have noted examples elsewhere in Dio Cass. 624, 20, and 571, 91, τὰς παρεξειρεσίας ἀναῤῥ. Diod. Sic. t. viii. 174, and Appian ii. 680 and 850. By παρεξειρεσία is here denoted the place between the prow and oar-way. See iv. 12.

παχυτ. τὰς ἐπωτίδας ἐχ.] 'having their ears (or, as we should say, cheeks) made thicker.' These are well described by the Schol. as τὰ ἑκατέρωθεν πρώρης ἐξέχοντα ξύλα: and so Suid. & Etym. Mag. Thus the ἐπωτίδες were two beams projecting horizontally from a ship's head, one on each side of her beak. They are mentioned in Eurip. Iph. T. 1315. Polyæn. v. 43. Philostr. de Imag. p. 792. Appian i. 575. ii. 865. Dio Cass. p. 571. Strabo, l. iii. p. 179, 21. Diod. Sic. xvii. 115. Now, according to the very nature of the thing, there must always have been two of these: and accordingly, though Appian, ii. 850, seems to speak of one, (his words being, ὁ δὲ Ἀγριππας ἔτο μάλιστα εὐθὺ τοῦ Παπίου, καὶ αὐτῷ κατὰ τὴν ἐπωτίδα ἐμπεσὼν, κατέσεισε τὴν ναῦν, καὶ ἐς τὰ κοῖλα ἀνέῤῥηξεν.) we may be sure there is some corruption; and for τὴν ἐπωτίδα I propose to read τιν' ἐπωτίδα, according to which the sense will be, 'at a certain part called an ἐπωτίς;' for the shock could fall on only one of the two ἐπωτίδες. The purpose of this expedient of placing ἐπωτίδες (of which the invention is ascribed by Pliny, H. N. vii. 57, to an Etrurian pirate named Pisæus) was chiefly to strengthen the beak, being probably worked in with its lower end, and being (as Dr. Arnold says) 'partly within and partly without the frame of the ship's hull, as the bowsprit is in present times.' It was, however, I imagine, meant by its position and form outside, to in some measure guard the ship's bows and its beak. Thus in Appian ii. 850, the blow was aimed at the bows, and the ship being too weak to bear it, the framework was broken up as far as the hull itself: now the form would make it a defence, since we may suppose it to have protruded in the same manner as the ears on each side of the human head. Thus from the passage of Strabo, ubi supra, we learn that a promontory or ness in Spain, called Cuneum, (now Capo Santa Maria in Algarva, Portugal,) having three islets lying off it, was compared by Artemidorus to a ship τὸ μὲν (scil. ἄκρον) ἔμβολον τάξιν ἔχον, τὰ δὲ ἐπωτίδων: now the form of these in the best maps is like that of the nose and ears on the human face. Finally, from the passage of Eurip. Iph. T. 1315, it is plain that the anchors were usually hung over the ἐπωτίδες, just as with us the anchor is ordinarily thrown over the cat-head, a strong beam projecting horizontally over the ship's bows. The words of Euripides in the best editions are, οἱ δ' ἐπωτίδων ἄγκυραν ἐξανῆπτον, where formerly, for ἄγκυραν, was written, what the metre utterly rejects, ἀγκύρας: but until I can understand how one anchor can be hung from two ἐπωτίδες, I shall continue to be of opinion that Markland was right in conjecturing the true reading to be ἐπωτίδος; though as there is no pronoun (such as we find in the passage of Appian) I would not explain, (as does Markland,) 'ex unaquaque epotida unam ancoram suspendebant;' but take the singular as put generically with a collective force. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 293. and Jelf's Kuhn. Gr. § 354. Now this is especially the case (in all languages) in such terms as denote those parts of the body which consist of two, as the eyes, ears, hands, and feet. Suffice it to simply refer to a passage of I Cor. ii. 9. ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ εἶδε, καὶ οὖς οὐκ ἤκουσε —ἃ ἡτοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς, &c. (where the Sept. has αἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ,) and another of Job xxix. 11, ὅτι (I conj. ὅτε) οὖς ἤκουσε καὶ ἐμακάρισέ με. Parallel to this is the use of our phrase to give ear or eye to, to put foot or hand on. Finally, as the Greeks used ἐπωτίς, so did the Romans ansa, and our English writers occasionally the word ears, though generally cheeks, as the cheeks of masts which sustain the trestle-trees, supporting the frame of the top.

6. ναυμαχήσαντες ἀντίπαλα] Compare ch. 38, ἰδὼν τὰ τῆς ναυμαχίας ἀντίπαλα. On the construction in διὰ τὴν τοῦ ἀνέμου ἄπωσιν αὐτῶν see Matth. Gr. § 380, 1. On ἐπαναγωγὴν see note at i. 137, 4. So little is the authority existing for ῥᾳδίως, and so much that for καὶ, that, considering that scarcely any copies have both, one must be an interpolation; and as it does not appear how καὶ could have crept in, ῥᾳδίως may fairly be presumed to be insidious, proceeding from those who supposed it necessary to the sense, which it is not: nay, it may be doubted whether it does not rather pervert it; for the force of the καὶ is, like our even, that of however or notwithstanding: in which case a participle or adjective is understood, as here κινδυνεύοντες.

7. οἵ τε γὰρ—ἐνίκων] The recent editors have rightly before πολὺ received καὶ, and for εἰ μὴ adopted the reading ὅτι οὐ; for though these two readings are wanting in external testimony, being found in only one or two MSS., they are strongly supported by internal evidence, existing in the circumstance that καὶ has much force, as in καὶ πάνυ, &c.; and εἰ μὴ has every appearance of proceeding from some marginal scholium.

Cн. XXXV. 2. ἐπικαταβάντες—Ὑλίαν]

ἐκβολὴν τοῦ Ὑλίου· καὶ αἱ νῆες αὐτοῖς ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ ἀπήντων. τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἀναβιβασάμενοι παρέπλεον, ἴσχοντες πρὸς ταῖς πόλεσι πλὴν Λοκρῶν, ἕως ἀφίκοντο ἐπὶ Πέτραν τῆς Ῥηγίνης.

XXXVI. Οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι ἐν τούτῳ, πυνθανόμενοι αὐτῶν τὸν ἐπίπλουν, αὖθις ταῖς ναυσὶν ἀποπειρᾶσαι ἐβούλοντο, καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ παρασκευῇ τοῦ πιέζοῦ, ἥνπερ ἐπ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο, πρὶν ἐλθεῖν αὐτοὺς φθάσαι βουλόμενοι, ξυνέλεγον. 2. παρεσκευάσαντο δὲ τό τε ἄλλο ναυτικὸν ὡς ἐκ τῆς προτέρας ναυμαχίας τι πλέον ἐνεῖδον σχήσοντες, καὶ τὰς πρῴρας τῶν νεῶν ξυντεμόντες ἐς ἔλασσον, στερῥωτέρας ἐποίησαν, καὶ τὰς ἐπωτίδας ἐπέθεσαν ταῖς πρῴραις παχείας, καὶ ἀντήριδας ἀπ' αὐτῶν ὑπέτειναν πρὸς τοὺς τοίχους ὡς ἐπὶ ἓξ πήχεις, ἐντός τε καὶ ἔξωθεν· ᾧπερ τρόπῳ καὶ οἱ Κορίνθιοι πρὸς τὰς ἐν τῇ Ναυπάκτῳ ναῦς ἐπισκευασάμενοι πρῴραθεν ἐναυμάχουν. 3. ἐνόμισαν γὰρ οἱ Συρακόσιοι πρὸς τὰς τῶν Ἀθηναίων ναῦς, οὐχ ὁμοίως ἀντινεναυπηγημένας, ἀλλὰ λεπτὰ τὰ πρῴραθεν ἐχούσας διὰ τὸ μὴ ἀντιπρῴροις μᾶλλον αὐτοὺς ἢ ἐκ περίπλου ταῖς ἐμβολαῖς χρῆσθαι,

For ἐπικαταβάντες πρὸς τὴν θάλασσαν καὶ τὴν ἐκβολὴν τοῦ Ὑλίου ἡλίσαντο, 'having gone down [from the upland] to the sea-coast and the embouchure of the Hylias.' The force of the κατὰ is best seen by adverting to the course which they would probably take,—namely, along the road afterwards called the Via Traiana, to Roscianum, where the road turns off at a right angle towards the sea-coast, and then making another angle is carried along the coast-line, though some miles distant from it, to save the detours made by the coast: consequently the direction taken from Roscianum to the mouth of the Hylias down to Rosea navale, then across to the river Hylias, and then along the left bank of the Hylias to its mouth, would be κατὰ. coast-wards.

Ch. XXXVI. 2. τὸ ἄλλο ναυτικὸν] 'the other parts of their navy,' or naval system, i. e. with the exception of the matter of the prows, of which mention is made just after. (Poppo.)

ὡς ἐκ τῆς προτέρας—σχήσοντες] i. e. 'in such a way as, by what they had learnt from the former engagement, they found would be more advantageous to them.' Compare ch. 62, ἃ ἓξ ἀρωγὰ ἐνειδομεν, &c. With the very rare phrase ξυντεμόντες ἐς ἔλασσον, compare ξυντ. ἐς ὀλιγον in the Scholiast on viii. 45, and ξυντ. ἐς εὐτέλειαν at viii. 86, ἐς εὐτέλειάν τι ξυντέτμηται. Aristoph. Ran. 1262, εἰς ἓν—ξυντεμών. Eurip. Æol. frag. v. 2, ἐν βραχεῖ συντέμνειν, for ἐς βραχύ. On the force of ἐπέθεσαν see note supra ch. 34, 5.

ἀντήριδας] These were a sort of outrunners, or stays, reaching from the middle of the epotides, and bearing upon the sides of the vessel, both inside and outside. The application of these, and the change in the form of the prow and the epotides, (the former being shorter and stouter, and the latter thicker,) constituted the alterations just adverted to. These ἀντήριδες seem to have been four in number, two just under the framework of the epotides, (which are meant by the inner ones,) and two outside of it, one on each side.

The word πρῴραθεν is to be referred to ἐπισκευισάμενοι.

3. διὰ τὸ μὴ—χρῆσθαι] The sense seems to be, 'because they did not use charges with beaks, attacking prow to prow, as those did, after taking a sweep.' Thus the impetus would accomplish that which, in the case of ships attacking at closer quarters, would have to be accomplished by stoutness of prow and thickness of beak. Poppo, stumbling at the very unusual form of expression ἐμβολαῖς ἀντιπρώροις, would, for ἀντιπρώροις, read ἀντιπρώρους: but this has not the slightest support from MSS.; and internal evidence is quite in favour of the common reading: and although the expression is extremely rare, yet it is not unprecedented. Thus Stephens, in his Thes., quotes it from Philostr. Heroic., who doubtless derived it from Thucydides. Moreover, something nearly approaching

οὐκ ἔλασσον σχήσειν, καὶ τὴν ἐν τῷ μεγάλῳ λιμένι ναυμαχίαν, οὐκ ἐν πολλῷ πολλαῖς ναυσὶν οὖσαν, πρὸς ἑαυτῶν ἔσεσθαι· † ἀντίπρωροι γὰρ ταῖς ἐμβολαῖς χρώμενοι, ἀναρρήξειν τὰ πρῴραθεν αὐτοῖς, στερίφοις καὶ παχέσι πρὸς κοῖλα καὶ ἀσθενῆ † παρέχοντες τοῖς ἐμβόλοις. 4. τοῖς δὲ Ἀθηναίοις οὐκ ἔσεσθαι σφῶν ἐν στενοχωρίᾳ οὔτε περίπλουν οὔτε διέκπλουν, ᾧπερ τῆς τέχνης μάλιστα ἐπίστευον· αὐτοὶ γάρ, κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν, τὸ μὲν οὐ δώσειν διεκπλεῖν, τὸ δὲ τὴν στενοχωρίαν κωλύσειν ὥστε μὴ περιπλεῖν. 5. τῇ τε πρότερον ἀμαθίᾳ τῶν κυβερνητῶν δοκούσῃ εἶναι, τὸ ἀντίπρωρον ξυγκρούσαι, μάλιστ' ἂν αὐτοὶ χρήσασθαι· πλεῖστον γὰρ ἐν αὐτῷ σχήσειν· τὴν γὰρ ἀνάκρουσιν οὐκ ἔσεσθαι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐξωθουμένοις ἄλλοσε to it occurs in Arrian, E. A. i. 19. 15. ἐμβάλλειν ἀντιπρώρας. Polyb. xvi. 4, κατὰ ἀντιπρώρους συμπτώσεις, 'conflicts, collisions.' In the Scholiast, οὐκ ἀντιπρωροι ὁρμαῖς ἐνέβαλλον, it is plain that, for ἀντιπρωροι, ought to be read ἀντιπρώρους.

ἀντιπρωροι] For this, Reiske, notwithstanding that the MSS. present no variation, would read ἀντιπρώρους; a conjecture somewhat supported by what has just preceded. Considering, however, the little probability that our author would use again a phrase only just before employed; and, besides this, the circumstance that here it has not the same suitableness as before, I am rather inclined to think that the true reading may be ἀντιπρώρου; a conjecture confirmed by the words just after, τὸ ἀντιπρῴρων ξυγκροῦσαι, with which compare Eurip. El. 846, ἔστησαν ἀντίπρωρα σκιοντες βέλη Ηολ. Ὀρέστης τ': and this adverbial use, though questioned by Poppo, is entirely established by a passage of Plut. Anton. 66, (evidently written with a view to the present,) ἐμβολαὶ μὲν οὐκ ἦσαν, οὐδ' ἀναῤῥήξεις νεῶν τῶν μὲν Ἀντωνίου—ἐνεργοῦς τῶν δὲ Καίσαρος (seil. νεῶν) οὐ μόνον ἀντιπρώρων συμφέρεσθαι πρὸς χαλκώματα στερεὰ φυλασσομένων, &c., where, for ἀντιπρώρων, which cannot be right, and may justly be supposed to have arisen from the supplied νεῶν just before, I doubt not Plutarch wrote ἀντίπρωρον, having in mind the τὸ ἀντίπρωρον ξυγκροῦσαι of our author.

In the next words, ἀναῤῥήξειν—τοῖς ἐμβόλοις, I have not ventured to receive, with Bekker, Goeller, Poppo, and Dr. Arnold, the reading of one MS., παίοντες, because I do not understand, any more than Dr. Arnold, how every copy but one (and the three MSS. I have myself collated all contain παρέχοντες) should have written παρέχοντες, if παίοντες had been the original reading. The expression is indeed one perhaps elsewhere unprecedented; but it is capable of a tolerable sense, if we supply, with Dobree, τὰς ἐμβολὰς, and take παρέχοντες in the sense offering, 'meeting the shock with;' a sense which the term bears also in Aristoph. Ran. 676, παρέχ. γαστέρα, and not a few other writers. Thus the construction will be that laid down by Abresch thus, ἀντίπρωροι γὰρ χρώμενοι ταῖς ἐμβολαῖς (ἐνόμισαν) ἀναῤῥήξειν τὰ πρῴραθεν αὐτοῖς (seil. αὐτῶν) τοῖς [ἑαυτῶν] ἐμβόλοις στερίφοις καὶ παχέσι, παρέχοντες ταῦτα πρὸς κοῖλα καὶ ἀσθενῆ [ἁμαλὰ αὐτῶν]. Thus the construction will be, as Poppo acknowledges, quite correct, coming under the rule of Matth. Gr. Gr. § 528, 'A finite verb is often accompanied by a participle, with which the preceding substantive must be supplied in a different sense, as Hom. Il. π. 406 ἔλκε δὲ ἴουρὸς ἐλών, seil. τὸ δόρυ:' and thus, (to use the words of Poppo,) 'non male vulnerum defendas.'

δ. τὸ ἀντίπρωρον ξυγκρουῦσαι] Poppo, from several MSS., edits ξυγκροῦσει: but the reading may justly be supposed to have arisen from inadvertence on the part of the scribes; unless it originated in the τῇ before, for τὸ, from an attempt to clear the construction; which, however, does not need it, since, as Dr. Arnold observes, 'the use of the nominative, instead of the case strictly required by the grammatical construction, is not uncommon, when the idea expressed by the nominative is added in explanation of what went before,' as in a passage adduced by Poppo and Dr. Arnold from ch. 67, τῆς δοκήσεως προσγεγενημένης—τὸ κρατιστους εἶναι.

By τὴν ἀνάκρουσιν is meant the recoil of the ship back with her stern towards the enemy, accomplished by backing water, ἢ ἐς τὴν γῆν, καὶ ταύτην δι' ὀλίγου καὶ ἐς ὀλίγον, κατ' αὐτὸ τὸ στρατόπεδον τὸ ἑαυτῶν· τοῦ δ' ἄλλου λιμένος αὐτοὶ κρατήσειν. 6. καὶ ξυμφερομένους αὐτούς, ἢν πη βιάζωνται, ἐς ὀλίγον τε καὶ πάντας ἐς τὸ αὐτό, προσπίπτοντας ἀλλήλοις ταράξεσθαι· (ὅπερ καὶ ἔβλαπτε μάλιστα τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἐν ἁπάσαις ταῖς ναυμαχίαις, οὐκ οὔσης αὐτοῖς ἐς πάντα τὸν λιμένα τῆς ἀνακρούσεως, ὥσπερ τοῖς Συρακοσίοις·) περιπλεῦσαι δὲ ἐς τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν, σφῶν ἐχόντων τὴν ἐπίπλευσιν ἀπὸ τοῦ πελάγους τε καὶ ἀνακρουσιν, οὐ δυνήσεσθαι αὐτούς, ἄλλως τε καὶ τοῦ Πλημμυρίου πολεμίου τε αὐτοῖς ἐσομένου, καὶ τοῦ στόματος οὐ μεγάλου ὄντος τοῦ λιμένος.

(a rowing back stern foremost, keeping the prow still opposed to the enemy,) in order to gain space for an impetus in a fresh charge. Moreover, that the term ἀνακρούεσθαι does not differ from πρύμναν κρούεσθαι, appears from Pollux 125. On the operation so denoted see more in note at i. 50, 5.

ἐξωθουμένους] literally, 'pushed out of [the line],' and, by implication, thrown into disorder. The term is one used both of land and naval warfare.

Ch. XXXVII. 1. πρὸς τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἐπιστήμην τε καὶ δύναμιν ἐπινοήσαντες] 'Quum pro ratione suæ peritiæ et virium excogitassent.' (Dobree.)

Ch. XXXVIII. 1. ἄξιόν τι λόγου παραλαβεῖν] 'to carry off, gain any advantage worthy of notice:' a very rare sense of παραλαβεῖν, in which may be recognised one of the many agonistic metaphors introduced into the language of common life; and with which compare the use of φέρεσθαι in ἀξίωσιν or δόξαν φέρεσθαι supra i. 5 & 69. Herodot. vii. 168. 211. Thus the term comes to stand simply for προσλαβεῖν, reportare, consequi, nancisci, as in Herodot. vii. 211, 4, ἐπεὶ δὲ οὐδὲν ἐδυνέατο παραλαβεῖν ('accomplish') οἱ Πέρσαι, τῆς ἐσόδου πειρεώμενοι, &c.: for such is the true punctuation, as founded on the real construction, which was not perceived by the translators: πειρεώμενοι is used as in chap. 39, 1, of ἢ δύο τῶν Ἀθηναίων οἱ Συρακόσιοι καταδύσαντες, διεκρίθησαν· καὶ ὁ πεζὸς ἅμα ἀπὸ τῶν τειχῶν ἀπῆλθε.

2. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ μὲν Συρακόσιοι ἡσύχαζον, οὐδὲν δηλοῦντες ὁποῖόν τι τὸ μέλλον ποιήσουσιν· ὁ δὲ Νικίας, ἰδὼν ἀντίπαλα τὰ τῆς ναυμαχίας γενόμενα, καὶ ἐλπίζων αὐτοὺς αὖθις ἐπιχειρήσειν, τούς τε τριηράρχους ἠνάγκαζεν ἐπισκευάζειν τὰς ναῦς, εἴ τίς τι ἐπεπονήκει, καὶ ὁλκάδας προὥρμισε πρὸ τοῦ σφετέρου σταυρώματος, ὃ αὐτοῖς πρὸ τῶν νεῶν ἀντὶ λιμένος κλῃστοῦ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἐπεπήγει. 3. διαλειπούσας δὲ τὰς ὁλκάδας ὅσον δύο πλέθρα ἀπ' ἀλλήλων κατέστησεν, ὅπως, εἴ τις βιάζοιτο ναῦς, εἴη κατάφευξις ἀσφαλὴς, καὶ πάλιν καθ' ἡσυχίαν ἔκπλους. παρασκευαζόμενοι δὲ ταῦτα ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν διετέλεσαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι μέχρι νυκτός.

XXXIX. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ Συρακόσιοι τῆς μὲν ὥρας πρωαίτερον, τῇ δὲ ἐπιχειρήσει τῇ αὐτῇ τοῦ τε πεζοῦ καὶ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ προσέμισγον τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ ἀντικαταστάντες ταῖς ναυσὶ τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον αὖθις ἐπὶ πολὺ διῆγον τῆς ἡμέρας πειρώμενοι ἀλλήλων, πρὶν δὴ Ἀρίστων ὁ Πυῤῥίχου Κορίνθιος, ἄριστος ὢν κυβερνήτης τῶν μετὰ Συρακοσίων, πείθει τοὺς σφετέρους τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ἄρχοντας, πέμψαντας ὡς τοὺς ἐν τῇ πόλει ἐπιμελομένους, κελεύειν ὅτι τάχιστα τὴν ἀγορὰν τῶν πωλουμένων ‡παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν ‡μεταστῆσαι ‡κομίσαντας, καὶ ὅσα τις ἔχει ἐδώδιμα, πάντας ἐκεῖσε this book. At καταδύσαντες supply, from the preceding context, ἄξιόν τι λόγου παρέλαβον.

2. ἰδὼν ἀντίπαλα τὰ τῆς ναυμαχίας γενόμενα] 'seeing that the sea-fight had been a drawn battle.' Compare supra ch. 34, ναυμαχήσαντες ἀντίπαλα.

λιμένος κλῃστοῦ] Meaning what we should express by a closed port, or land-locked basin, - such either by nature, or by art; on which see Col. Leake, Athens, i. 371, seq.

3. διαλειπούσας — κατέστησε] Something very similar is related in Appian, t. i. 332, τὸν ἔσπλουν τοῦ λιμένος ἐμφράξαι στρογγύλοις πλοίοις ἐπ' ἀγκυρῶν ἐκ διαστήματος — ἐκθέουσαί τε διὰ τῶν διαστημάτων. καὶ, ὅτε βιάζοιντο, ὑπεχωροῦσαι: and Livy, xxx. 10, 'Intervalla fecit, qua procurrere speculatoriæ naves in hostem, ac tuto recipi possent.'

Ch. XXXIX. 1. πρωαίτερον] See supra ch. 19. Polyæn. v. 13 & 32. At ἐπιμελομένους supply τούτων, equiv. to ἐπιμελητάς, agoranomos Ædiles. (Bauer.) Τὴν ἀγορὰν τῶν πωλ. 'annonam promercalem,' namely, (as is expressed just after, καὶ ὅσα τις ἔχει ἐδώδιμα.) of eatables: and so Polyæn. for πωλουμένων has τῶν τροφῶν.

παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν μεταστῆσαι κομίσαντας] Bekker and Arnold edit, from one MS., μεταναστήσαντας ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν κομίσαι. I have not ventured to follow their example, since the reading in question has every appearance of being merely a critical conjecture introduced for the purpose of removing a harshness of phraseology in the ordinary text. That one of the two readings must have arisen from an alteration of the other, is evident: and which is the altered reading, no one can fail to see. Moreover, in such a case the testimony of MSS. has much weight: and alteration must be supposed to rest, not with the many, but with the few. Again, μεταναίστημι is, as far as I know, never used in the sense here required, namely, to remove any thing from one place to another; while μεθιστημι confessedly is (nay, such forms one of the primary senses of the word); e. g. Polyb. ii. 17, 11, μεταστῆσαι—τὰς ὑπάρξεις, 'to remove their property from one place to another.' The verb is used both with εἰς and πρὸς, but not παρὰ, which here pro-φέροντας ἀναγκάσαι πωλεῖν, ὅπως † αὐτοῦ, ἐκβιβάσαντες τοὺς ναύτας εὐθὺς, παρὰ τὰς ναῦς ἀριστοποιήσονται, καὶ δι' ὀλίγου αὖθις καὶ αὐθημερὸν ἀπροσδοκήτοις τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐπιχειρῶσι. XL. Καὶ οἱ μὲν, πεισθέντες, ἔπεμψαν ἄγγελον, καὶ ἡ ἀγορὰ παρεσκευάσθη· καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐξαίφνης πρύμναν κρουσάμενοι, πάλιν πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ἔπλευσαν, καὶ εὐθὺς ἐκβάντες, αὐτοῦ ἄριστον ἐποιοῦντο· 2. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι, νομίσαντες αὐτοὺς, ὡς ἡσσημένους σφῶν, πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ἀνακρούσασθαι, καθ' ἡσυχίαν ἐκβάντες, τά τε ἄλλα διεπράσσοντο καὶ τὰ ἀμφὶ τὸ ἄριστον, ὡς τῆς γε ἡμέρας ταύ-duces a harshness arising from extreme brevity,—the complete, for the present incomplete, form of expression being μεταστ. ἀγορὰν, ὥστε εἶναι παρὰ θάλ. Finally, in support of the παρὰ, it may suffice to adduce the words, a little further on, παρὰ τὰς ναῦς ἀριστοποιήσονται.

ἀναγκάσαι] The term has here simply the sense 'to direct by message or order;'—(as often in the best classical writers. So Aristoph. Eq. 508, ἠνάγκαζεν ἔπη λέξοντάς γ' ἐς τὸ θέατρον παραβῆναι,) a sense, moreover, (though not seen by the translators,) in this case required by what follows at ch. 40, 1, οἱ μὲν (scil. οἱ ἄρχοντες) ἔπεμψαν ἄγγελον, καὶ ἡ ἀγορὰ παρεσκευάσθη.

For vulg. αὐτοὺς, which is quite indefensible, all the recent editors adopt the reading αὐτοῖς, found in almost all the best MSS.: but whether that be the true reading, may be doubted. Duker, who regards it as such, supposes the pronoun here used specie quadam pleonasmi, as supra iii. 98. iv. 25. vii. 19. 25. Yet, slight as the sense of the pronoun may here be, a reference of some kind there must be to certain persons,—though to whom that may be, is the question. Certainly it is not to the commanders: nor to the magistrates; nor, again, to the seamen: and, accordingly, the reading αὐτοῖς is, in reality, little less indefensible than αὐτοὺς, from which it was, I suspect, formed by certain critics, who, seeing that αὐτοὺς made *non*sense, thought αὐτοῖς made some sense. Under these circumstances, I have ventured to receive into the text the reading αὐτοῦ, (which was by Æmil. Port., Haack, Goeller, Poppo, and Didot, regarded as the true reading,) especially as I have found it in the Cod. Clarend., ex emendatione, it is true, but in the handwriting of the original scribe, who, it seems, first mistook his original, and wrote αὐτοὺς, taking the following ε as an ς belonging to the foregoing; and then, seeing his mistake, rectified it. In support of this reading, it may suffice to adduce a passage a little further on, ch. 40, 1, καὶ εὐθὺς ἐκβάντες, αὐτοῦ ἄριστον ἐποιοῦντο, where the pronoun αὐτοῦ must be regarded as equivalent to παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν. True it is that αὐτοῦ might seem unnecessary, as used with παρὰ τὰς ναῦς: but it is not unfrequently found so employed, by way of making what is said more definite, if not emphatic. Compare iii. 81, αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, and viii. 28, ἐς τὴν Μίλητον αὐτοῦ, and vii. 16, αὐτοῦ ἐκεῖ. Xen. Anab. vii. 4, 36, ἐν τῇ Τεγέᾳ αὐτοῦ καταμένοντες, and Hist. iv. 8, 39, ἐν χώρᾳ αὐτοῦ μαχόμενος ἀποθνήσκει (in both which last passages it has been proposed to cancel the word as an interpretamentum). So also in Pausan. ii. 28, 3, we have, κατὰ χώραν αὐτοῦ λείπουσιν ἱερὰ εἶναι, where the editor Facius, in order to remove the pleonasm, would read αὐτά;—rashly. Not so Valcken. on Herodot. iv. 135, 4, αὐτοῦ ταύτῃ ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ, who judiciously leaves the pleonasm, (if such it can be called,) and compares others of Thucydides and Xenophon; also Theopomp. ap. Athen. p. 532, αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ συμποσίῳ. How liable the pronoun αὐτοῦ has been to corruption by the scribes, may be imagined from the many examples adduced from one writer (namely, Polyb.) by Schweigh. Lex. Polyb. in v. I entirely agree with Arnold, that the verb ἀριστοποιησενται, though it applies more properly to the men than the generals, yet it is capable of being applied to the latter, as representing the whole body both of men and officers, as infra viii. 95, ὁ γὰρ Ἀγησανδρίδας ἀριστοποιησάμενος, ἀνήγαγε τὰς ναῦς. Or, in order to avoid what may be somewhat too formal in supposing this idea of representation, we should rather say that the men's dining is necessarily implied in the officers' dining.

For vulg. αὐθήμερον, I have, with the recent editors, edited, from three MSS. (to which add Cod. Cant.) αὐθημερόν.

Ch. XL. 2. διεπράσσοντο] 'set about

3. διὰ πολλοῦ θορύβου] For ἐν πολλῷ θορύβῳ, 'amidst much tumult.' So Acts xiv. 22. διὰ πολλῶν θλίψεων.

4. αὐτοῦ] This word, not found in 18 of the MSS., has been cancelled by Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo; but, I apprehend, on insufficient grounds. Easier is it to imagine why it should have been omitted than why inserted. It might very well be omitted by certain persons who failed to perceive the meaning of the pronoun; which, however, though not very obvious, will be easily discerned by those who have weighed the grounds on which I have received the αὐτοῦ in the foregoing chapter. They will find that αὐτοῦ has the same force here as there; since, as Didot has well pointed out, the words αὐτοῦ διαμέλλοντας and ἐπιχειρεῖν ὅτι τάχιστα correspond one to the other. Compare also a passage of our author infra ch. 51, 1, ἀλλ' αὐτοῦ ('there,' 'upon the spot,') ὡς τάχιστα—ἀναγκάσαι αὐτοὺς ναυμαχεῖν. Finally, the matter is placed beyond dispute by another and altogether similar passage infra viii. 78, 2, where we have, οὐκ οὖν ἔφασαν χρῆναι μέλλειν ἔτι, ἀλλὰ ἐναναυμαχεῖν: for answering to ἐπιχειρεῖν here is ἐναναυμαχεῖν there; with this difference, indeed, that the expression ὅτι τάχιστα ἐπιχειρεῖν implies some verb of motion understood. All would have been plain, had our author, for the words as they now stand, written, ἀλλὰ προβαίνοντας ἐπιχειρ.

ἐκ παρακελεύσεως] 'under the cheering on of the κελευσταί.' So ch. 70, πολλὴ παρακέλευσις καὶ βοὴ ἀφ' ἑκατέρων τοῖς κελευσταῖς.

ἐμβόλων] So, for ἐμβολῶν, (retained by Haack, Poppo, and Goeller,) I still write, as in my smaller edition of Thucydides; and this has, I find, been since preferred by Dobree and Dindorf, and edited by Bekker. Vain is it for Poppo (who supports ἐμβολῶν) to appeal to a passage supra ii. 76, since there by ἐμβολῆς is merely denoted the nozle of a battering-ram. Moreover, ἔμβολος, and not ἐμβολή, is used by Herodotus, as i. 166, and occurs in Pind. Pyth. iv. 342. So also Æschyl. Pers. 421, ἐμβόλους χαλκοστόμους Ναισθέντ'. Again, the same has place at ch. 36, in all the MSS. and editions. And Dio Cass. and Appian not unfrequently use ἔμβολος to denote beak, but never ἐμβολή. It is true that in Diod. Sic. t. v. 209. and Plut. Anton. c. 66. Xen. Hist. iv. 3, 6, we have ἐμβολή; but only as used in the sense of a charge with the beak. And in the passage of Plut., Schaef. has edited ἐμβόλων: and so, just after, we have τὰ ἔμβολα. Αὐτοῖς stands, by a frequent use, for αὐτῶν. Construe, οἱ αὐτῶν ἀκοντιζοντες ἀπὸ τῶν καταστρ., 'those of them who launched darts from the decks.'

ἐς τοὺς ταρσοὺς ὑποπίπτοντες] The full sense is, 'failing foul of by running under the rows of the oars:' an agonistic metaphor derived from wrestling, in which the combatants seek to trip up each other's heels. Compare Plut. t. vi. 216. (Reiske,) οἱ ὑποπίπτοντες ἐν τῷ παλαιειν. The expression has been borrowed by Dio Cass. p. 627, 52, who says of the light vessels of Octavius attacking the bulky and lofty ships of Anthony, ἔς τε τοὺς ταρσοὺς τῶν νεῶν ὑποπίπτοντες, καὶ τὰς κώπας συναράσσοντες, where, for συναρ., I would read σύνταρ.: a conjecture placed beyond doubt by a passage of Herodot. viii. 12. (evidently had in view by Dio Cass.) καὶ ἐτάρασσον τοὺς ταρσοὺς τῶν κω-για παραπλέοντες, καὶ ἐξ αὐτῶν ἐς τοὺς ναύτας ἀκοντίζοντες. XLI. Τέλος δὲ τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ κατὰ κράτος ναυμαχοῦντες οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐνίκησαν, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τραπόμενοι, διὰ τῶν ὁλκάδων τὴν καταφευξιν ἐποιοῦντο ἐς τὸν ἑαυτῶν ὅρμον. 2. αἱ δὲ τῶν Συρακοσίων νῆες μέχρι μὲν τῶν ὁλκάδων ἐπεδίωκον· ἔπειτα, αὐτοὺς αἱ κεραῖαι ὑπὲρ τῶν ἔσπλων αἱ ἀπὸ τῶν ὁλκάδων δελφινοφόροι ἠρμέπέων. Appian, i. 478, τὰ σκάφη τῶν Λιβύων τὰ σμικρὰ ταῖς Ῥωμαϊκαῖς ναυσὶ, μεγάλας οὔσας, ἐς τοὺς ταρσοὺς ὑποτρέχοντα,—ἐξέκοπτε πηδάλια καὶ κώπας.

With respect to the sense here of ταρσοί, it is to be observed, that the term ταρσὸς, among its other significations, means the blade of an oar. And from Pollux and Eustathius we learn, that the blades of oars were called both ταρσοὶ and πτέρα. Here, however, the expression does not bear that sense, but has reference to the whole row of oar-blades on one side of a galley, called ταρσοὶ with allusion to the rows of feathers in the outspread wing of a bird. So Plut. Ant. 63, τοὺς ταρσοὺς τῶν νεῶν ἐγείρας καὶ πτερώσας: thus we say, 'to feather the oars.' And so Moschus, in his Idyll. ii. 6, elegantly says, ὄρνις ἀγαλλόμενος πτερύγων πολυανθέϊ χροιῇ Ταρσὸν ἀναπλώσας, ὡσεί τέ τις ὠκύαλος νηῦς. In the above passage, Plutarch may with no small probability be supposed to have had in view the following one of Eurip. Iph. T. 1311, (edit. Matth.) ὁρῶμεν Ἑλλάδος νεὼς σκάφος ('the hull:' see note on i. 50, 1.) Ταρσῷ κατήρει πίτυλον ἐπτερωμένον, where the construction is, σκάφος ἐπτερ. [κατὰ] πίτυλον, ταρσῷ κατ., 'with a well-equipped row of oars,' singular in collective sense for plural, to denote both ταρσοί. In this sense ταρσὸς occurs not unfrequently in Polybius, both in the singular (as xvi. 3, 12, ἀπέβαλε τὸν δεξιὸν ταρσὸν τῆς νεώς) and the plural, as iii. 96, 4, ἀποβάλλειν τοὺς ταρσούς, and i. 50, 3. xvi. 4, 10, ἐμπιπτόντων αὐτοῖς τῶν λέμβων, ποτὲ μὲν εἰς τοὺς ταρσούς, &c. So, too, Polyæn. v. 22, 2, τοὺς ταρσοὺς τῶν τριηρῶν ἐξελών. And another example of this removal of one of the two ταρσοὶ is found in Polyb. viii. 6, 2. But no reason is there to suppose, as does Didot, that there was a wooden machine in which to place the ταρσοί. The removal of either ταρσὸς would be effected as simply as a bird's wing, after being expanded, is drawn in. Of course, this falling foul of the ταρσοὶ would completely disarrange (συνταράσσειν) the working of the oars; nay, as appears from Polyb. xvi. 4, 10, make it useless.

ἐς τὰ πλάγια παραπλέοντες] 'sailing by them at the flanks;' namely, at prow and poop; where a large ship is, in our naval warfare, often raked fore and aft by a smaller vessel, which would not face her broadside. And the prow and poop of the galleys of the ancients seem to have been liable to the same operation of enfilading, by which some of the best of the crew (mostly stationed there) would be, as we should say, picked off by the dartsmen: but no reason is there to suppose, with Mitford and Arnold, that the dartsmen would discharge their missiles through the portholes for the oars; for though they were (as appears from a passage of Herodot. v. 33, cited by Arnold) large enough for that purpose, yet there could be none at the prow or poop.

Ch. XLI. 1. κατὰ κράτος—ἐνίκησαν] Denoting that the Syracusans, after a hard struggle, as above narrated, came off victors. Ὅρμον, 'stationem navalem.' See supra vi. 103.

2. αὐτοὺς αἱ κεραῖαι—ἐκώλυον] Construe, αἱ κεραῖαι αἱ δελφινοφόροι ἠρμέναι ἀπὸ τῶν ὁλκάδων ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐσπλων ἐκώλυον αὐτούς. These κεραῖαι were formed of beams like the yard-arms, or booms, of ships, and overhung to a considerable extent, (see ii. 76, and iv. 100, and notes,) and were, of course, provided with projectile machines, which, when necessary, hurled the dolphins (what we should call pigs of lead or iron) to some distance from the beam-ends, and were, as the Scholiast says, so heavy and sharp, that they would cut through the hull of the vessel into which they were cast, and sink her. The words of the Scholiast are founded on a passage which he has cited from Aristoph. Eq. 759. Finally, Hesych. in v. δελφῖνες says they were so called διὰ τὰ κρεμαννύμενα βάρη, δελφίνων σχῆμα ἔχοντα, ἃ ταῖς λῃστρικαῖς νανσὶν ἐμβάλλεται, where, for λῃστρικαῖς, which cannot be right, I propose to read πολεμιστρικαῖς, later Greek for πολεμίαις, 'belonging to the enemy:' an emendation strongly supported by the gloss of the Scholiast on this passage of our author, ὥστε ἐμβάλλεσθαι ταῖς πολεμίαις ναυσίν.

ναι ἐκώλυον. 3. δύο δὲ νῆες τῶν Συρακοσίων, ἐπαιρόμεναι τῇ νίκῃ, προσέμιξαν αὐτῶν ἐγγὺς, καὶ διεφθάρησαν, καὶ ἡ ἑτέρα αὐτοὺς ἀνδράσιν ἑάλω. 4. καταδύσαντες δ' οἱ Συρακόσιοι τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἑπτὰ ναῦς, καὶ κατατραυματίσαντες πολλὰς, ἄνδρας τε τοὺς μὲν ζωγρήσαντες τοὺς δὲ ἀποκτείναντες, ἀπεχώρησαν· καὶ τροπαῖά τε ἀμφοτέρων τῶν ναυμαχιῶν ἔστησαν, καὶ τὴν ἐλπίδα ἤδη ἐχυρὰν εἶχον ταῖς μὲν ναυσὶ καὶ πολὺ κρείσσους εἶναι, ἐδόκουν δὲ καὶ τὸν πεζὸν χειρώσεσθαι. 4. κατατραυματίσαντες] The term here, as at viii. 10, bears the sense to put hors de combat, as distinguished from καταδύσαντες, just before, which signifies to sink.

Ch. XLII. 2. εἰ πέρας μηδὲν ἔσται τοῦ ἀπαλλαγῆναι] Compare Herodot. ii. 139, τέλος δὲ τῆς ἀπαλλαγῆς — ὥστε ἔλεγον γενέσθαι. On this use of the genitive of explanation, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 321. Evidently imitated from hence are the words of Joseph. Ant. xv 1, 2, πέρας τε κακῶν οὐδὲν ἦν, and xv. 7, 1, χαλεπῶς—ἤνεσεν, εἰ μηδὲν πέρας αὐτῇ τῶν ἐξ Ἡρ. κινδύνων ἔσται.

At ὁρῶντες there is a confusion of construction, as though οἱ Συρακούσιοι had preceded;—such a confusion as may be observed also at iii. 36, and other passages cited by Duker.

ὡς ἐκ κακῶν] 'ut post tot mala,' as Abresch renders. Compare Livy, x. 43, 'agmine incolumi, ut ex tanta trepidatione, Bovianum perventum est:' and see note at iv. 84, 2, ὡς Λακεδαιμόνιος. Ῥώμη here, as at ii. 43, bears the sense courage.

3. Ἀποχρήσασθαι signifies 'to use up, i. e. to the uttermost,' as at i. 68, vi. 17. Dio Cass. 410, 52, ἀσχολίᾳ αὐτοὺ ἀποχρησάμενοι.

ματος ἐκπλήξει. 4. καὶ ὁρῶν τὸ παρατείχισμα τῶν Συρακοσίων, ᾧ ἐκώλυσαν περιτειχίσαι σφᾶς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ἁπλοῦν [τε] ὂν,—καί, εἰ [ἐπι]κρατήσειέ τις τῶν [τε] Ἐπιπολῶν τῆς ἀναβάσεως καὶ αὖθις τοῦ ἐν αὐταῖς στρατοπέδου, ῥᾳδίως ἂν αὐτὸ ληφθὲν, (οὐδὲ γὰρ ὑπομεῖναι ἂν σφᾶς οὐδένα) ἠπείγετο ἐπιθέσθαι τῇ πείρᾳ. 5. καὶ οἱ ξυντομωτάτην ἡγεῖτο διαπολέμησιν· ἢ γὰρ, κατορθώσας, ἕξειν Συρακούσας, ἢ ἀπάξειν τὴν στρατιὰν, καὶ οὐ τρίψεσθαι ἄλλως Ἀθηναίους τε τοὺς ξυστρατευομένους καὶ τὴν ξύμπασαν πόλιν. 6. Πρῶτον μὲν οὖν τήν τε γῆν ἐξελθόντες τῶν Συρακοσίων ἔτεμνον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι περὶ τὸν Ἄναπον, καὶ τῷ στρατεύματι ἐπεκράτουν, ὥσπερ τὸ πρῶ-

In τῇ τοῦ στρατ. ἐκπλήξει the genitive τοῦ στρατ. is one of object, 'the terror felt at the armament,' as in πάθος νἱοῦ, ἀνδρὸς εὐμένεια in Soph. Œd. Col. 631, and other passages cited in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 367, b. This is especially the case where the nominative expresses a passion of the mind, as love or hatred: in which view compare the expression ἔχθος Κορινθίων at ch. 57.

4. τὸ παρατείχισμα—ἁπλοῦν] See supra ch. 4, seqq. The τε, just after, has been cancelled by Bekker and Arnold; but retained by Poppo and Goeller; rightly; since it was more likely to be, by inadvertence, omitted in one MS. than purposely inserted in all the rest. As to the flaw in construction, which it involves with αὐτὸ, that, as Poppo observes, is easily excused by the interposed clause εἰ ἐπικρατήσειε—στρατοπέδου.

For ἐπικρατ., eleven of the best MSS. and the Scholiast have κρατ., which is adopted by Haack, but rejected by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller; perhaps wrongly; since internal evidence is as strongly in its favour as external, from the probability that, owing to the greater frequency of ἐπικρ. than the simple κρατ. in this sense to get possession of, κρατ. would be altered into ἐπικρ. from a marginal gloss. And such is the sense of the simple κρατεῖν in a similar passage supra iii. 23, ἐκεκρατήκεσαν τοῦ πύργου, and iii. 47, κρ. τῶν ὅπλων. Herodot. iv. 111. Polyb. i. 82, 2, οὓς ποτε κρατήσειε.

ἐπιθέσθαι τῇ πείρᾳ] 'to set himself to the attempt;' for ἐπιχειρεῖν. Compare Herodot. i. 1, ἐπιχ. τῇ ποιήσει. Vit. Hom. vi. ἐπιχ. τοῖς δεδογμένοις.

5. The οἱ before ξυντομωτάτην is in many MSS. not found, and accordingly has been cancelled by Haack, and bracketed by Poppo and Arnold. But, considering that the same use of the reflexive pronoun has place elsewhere in our author, and that while difficult were it to account for the insertion, easy were it for the omission, of the word,—I have, with Bekker and Goeller, dismissed the brackets. Similarly at ch. 49, 3, the word has been omitted, though very properly restored, on the authority of the best MSS., by all the recent editors. Certainly it is here far from being, what Poppo and Arnold pronounce it, unnecessary. Render, 'And he thought it would be the shortest way for him to bring the war to a conclusion.'

Before διαπολέμησιν the article (τὴν) may seem wanting, but it is absent from the best MSS. in a similar passage at ch. 86, 2.

τριψεσθαι] This, for vulg. τρίβεσθαι, retained by Haack and Didot, I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, adopted, on the authority of three MSS., because I see not how the present tense here can be defended;—certainly not on the ground alleged by Poppo and Arnold, of varied construction; for of the three examples they adduce in proof of this principle, namely, infra viii. 5, 5, supra vi. 24, and v. 35, the two first are irrelevant, since there the readings are doubtful, and possibly there should be read ἀποκτενεῖν and ἐκπλεύσειν, or ἂν ἐκπλεῦσαι, as Bekker proposes to read. Again, the tense in τρίβεσθαι cannot be different from that in ἀπάγειν. And moreover, in these verbs the signification of the future is not should, but would; the sense being, 'for either, after succeeding, he should win Syracuse, or else he would draw off the enemy, and not without any purpose consume both the Athenians on service there and the whole state.' Finally, the preponderating weight of MS. authority in favour of τριβεσθαι will not avail in a case like this; especially when it is considered that in many MSS. the letters β and ψ nearly resemble each other.

Cn. XLIII. 1. τοῦ παρατειχίσματος] Meaning, the cross-wall, or counterwork of the Syracusans, of which mention is made supra vi. 11, and the purpose of which was to cut off the Athenians' line of circumvallation.

ὡς ἐπενόει—ἐποιεῖτο] In many of the best MSS. the ὡς is not found; and others have, instead of it, καί. Accordingly, Poppo has marked the words with asterisks, as of doubtful reading; but on insufficient grounds. We may well suppose the ὡς to have been omitted merely from error, and that arising from a mistaking of the MS. characters employed to express ξυνάρχοντας, where the mark serving to represent the termination as being either omitted or faded away, the ως taken for ας seemed to supply it: and when the ὡς was lost, καί was, it seems, introduced for the purpose of propping up the construction.

2. πέντε] So I have edited, with Poppo, from many of the best MSS. (to which I add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) for vulg. πέντ', which is retained by Haack, Bekker, and Goeller; but wrongly, since the authority of MSS., joined with internal evidence and the usage of our author, (see Poppo's Proleg. i. 1, 218.) strongly support the former.

ἀπὸ πρώτου ὕπνου] 'after the first watch.' Equivalent to περὶ πρῶτον ὕπνον supra ii. 2. Compare Virg. Æn. i. 470, 'primo quæ prodita somno.'

3. κατὰ τὸν Εὐρύηλον] 'over-against Eurylus.'

4. ἐν προτειχίσμασιν] These words, not found in the greatest part of the MSS. and Valla, have been cancelled by Bekker, Goeller (1st ed.), and Bekker (2d ed.); but retained and defended by Arnold, Goeller (2d edit.), and Didot, on the ground that there seems to be a reference to them infra § 6, where the Syracusans are described as sallying ἐκ τῶν προτειχισμάτων, by which, they think, is implied some previous notice of their being ἐν προτειχίσμασιν: but, as Poppo observes, there the article is required; although the fortified posts had not been mentioned, because the sense is, 'from the fortifications which they held,' or 'their fortifications.' Moreover, considering that the words are in almost every MS. of credit, (including Codd. Cant. and Mus. Brit.) vain is it, on any such speculative reasoning as the above, to contend against the united force of external authority and internal evidence; the latter, as existing in the little inducement that the scribes would have to omit the words. How they found their way into the few MSS. which have them, we are not obliged to account for; but we may suppose it was from a marginal scholium, founded on the words of § 6, though proceeding, it would seem, on wrong grounds.

5. Ὅπως τῇ παρούσῃ—γένωνται] Render, 'that by their present ardour for accomplishing the objects which brought them, they might not be too slow,' or, as the Schol. explains, 'too late,' ὑστερήσωσι. Τοῦ περαίνεσθαι is to be construed, not with βραδεῖς, (according to the view of the Scholiast and Portus,) but with ὁρμῇ, as Bauer and Goeller direct.

ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης παρατείχισμα—ᾖρουν] i. e. 'quasi scripsisset τὸ ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης ὁρμῆς ἀλώσιμον παρατείχισμα ᾖρουν, et inter se contrarie ponuntur ἐς τὸ πρόσθεν et ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης.' (Goeller.) This ellipsis of ὁρμῆς (also propounded by the Scholiast) is objected to by Poppo, as opposed by the ratio linguæ: and he prefers, with Bredow, to supply μοίρας, ὀξεῖν, or such like, (as in the phrase ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης, for ἴσος, iii. 40.) explaining the sense to be 'primò sitam, scil. proximam munitionis Syracusanorum partem;' observing that the idea of part is inherent in the word, similarly as in Latin we should speak of primam and extremam munitionem to denote the first and extreme part of it. This view of the sense may be considered deserving of the preference; but so far is it from being satisfactory, that I am inclined to suspect that some substantive after πρώτης has been lost in the text, which is not to be restored without better MSS. than those extant. To attain to it by critical conjecture, were hopeless; especially as it may hinge on some point with which, from our imperfect acquaintance with the scene of operations, we are quite in the dark.

6. ἐν νυκτὶ σφίσι] So I have edited, with Haack, Bekker (1st edition), Poppo, and Goeller, on the authority of many of the best MSS. (further strengthened, I find, by Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) for vulg. σφίσιν ἐν νυκτὶ, recalled by Bekker (2nd edition), but not on sufficient grounds; the reading above adopted being strongly favoured by internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance of this being, in the transposition it involves, more in the manner of our author than the latter.

προσέβαλον] This, the reading of four MSS., I have received, with Bekker (2nd edition), and Goeller, for vulg. προσέβαλλον (retained by Haack and Poppo), because it is more suited to the ὑποχώρησις just after.

7. διὰ παντὸς—μεμαχημένου] Supply μέρους; for this is by Acacius, Duk., and Haack, very properly explained to signify that part of the enemy's forces which had not yet come into battle. Poppo compares the expression τὸ μαχόμενον at iv. 96. Of διελθεῖν, just after, the sense is, 'to get through with the business,' to bear down all remaining opposition. Now this was quite in the usual manner of the Athenians, who are at i. 70, described as, φῶσιν, οἱ Βοιωτοὶ πρῶτοι αὐτοῖς ἀντέσχον, καὶ προσβαλόντες ἔτρεψάν τε καὶ ἐς φυγὴν κατέστησαν. XLIV. Καὶ ἐνταῦθα ἤδη ἐν πολλῇ ταραχῇ καὶ ἀπορίᾳ ἐγίγνοντο οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἣν οὐδὲ πυθέσθαι ῥᾴδιον ἦν οὐδ' ἀφ' ἑτέρων ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ἕκαστα ξυνηνέχθη. ἐν μὲν γὰρ ἡμέρᾳ σαφέστερα μὲν, ὅμως δὲ οὐδὲ ταῦτα οἱ παραγενόμενοι πάντα, πλὴν τὸ καθ' ἑαυτὸν ἕκαστος, μόλις, οἶδεν· ἐν δὲ νυκτομαχίᾳ—ἡ μόνη δὴ στρατοπέδων μεγάλων ἔν γε τῷδε τῷ πολέμῳ ἐγένετο—πῶς ἄν τις σαφῶς τι ᾔδει; 2. ἦν μὲν γὰρ σελήνη λαμπρά, εἰώρων δὲ οὕτως ἀλλήλους, ὡς ἐν σελήνῃ εἰκός, τὴν μὲν ὄψιν τοῦ σώματος προορᾶν, τὴν δὲ γνῶσιν τοῦ οἰκείου ἀπιστεῖσθαι, ὁπλῖται δὲ ἀμφοτέρων οὐκ ὀλίγοι ἐν στενοχωρίᾳ ἀνεστρέφοντο. 3. καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων οἱ μὲν ἤδη ἐνικῶντο, οἱ δὲ ἔτι τῇ πρώτῃ ἐφόδῳ ἀήσσητοι ἐχώρουν. πολὺ δὲ καὶ τοῦ ἄλλου στρατεύματος αὐτοῖς τὸ μὲν ἄρτι ἀναβέβηκει, τὸ δ' ἔτι προσανῄει· ὥστ' οὐκ ἠπίσταντο πρὸς ὅ τι χωρήσαι. ἤδη γὰρ τὰ πρόσθεν, τῆς τροπῆς γεγενημένης, ἐτετάρακτο when victorious, pushing their advantage to the uttermost (κρατοῦντές τε τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἐξέρχονται, for ἐπεξέρχονται).

Of the words following, ἀνέντων σφῶν τῆς ἐφόδου, the full sense is, 'slackening in the ardour of their attack;' where we have a syntax treated on in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 338.

οἱ Βοιωτοὶ] These were, I doubt not, (as Thirlwall supposes,) the Thespians who were brought from Locri, ch. 25; a part, perhaps the smaller part, of the 300 mentioned at ch. 19. The rest were probably on board the ships which arrived later.

Ch. XLIV. 1. ἦν οὐδὲ πυθέσθαι, &c.] I agree with Hertl. and Dr. Arnold in thinking that the accusative ἦν is best explained by supposing the intended construction to have been, ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ξυνηνέχθη, scil. ἡ ταραχή; and that ἕκαστα having been inserted, the sentence became ungrammatical.

γε] This I have, with Bekker (2nd edition), received into the text, on the authority of three MSS., because, though here not without force and significancy, the particle may easily have been omitted by the scribes.

πῶς ἄν τις σαφῶς τι ᾔδει;] 'how could any one know any thing?'

2. οὕτως ἀλλήλους—προορᾶν] i. e. οὕτως, ὡς εἰκὸς ἐστιν ὁρᾶν ἐν σελήνῃ, ὡς (for ὥστε, ita ut) τὴν ὄψιν τοῦ σώματος. The words τὴν μὲν ὄψιν—ἀπιστεῖσθαι are, as Dr. Arnold observes, added by way of explaining the former ones, ὡς ἐν σελήνῃ εἰκός: the meaning being, in other words, 'they saw one another as men would do by moonlight,' i. e. so as to see before them the form of the object, but to mistrust their knowledge as to who was friend, or who was foe. Compare Tacit. Hist. iii. 22, 'nihil animus, aut manus; no oculi quidem provisu juvabant.' Also Greg. Naz. t. i. 34, A. ὡς ἐν νυκτομαχίᾳ καὶ σελήνης ἀμυδροῖς φέγγεσιν, ἐχθρῶν ἢ φίλων ὄψεις οὐ διαγινώσκοντες.

3. Here is described a scene which Thucydides is only able to exhibit with an indistinctness corresponding to its real aspect,—'even while the moon shed a strong, but partial and misleading light.' (Thirlwall.) This it was especially to the Athenians: the light of the moon being, as Plutarch tells us, at their backs. Indistinct as the present narrative may seem, it has ever been regarded as pre-eminent for its excellence. Other accounts of the transactions in question may be seen in Polyæn. vi. 5. Dio Cass. xxxvi. 32. Plutarch Pomp. 32, and Tacit. Hist. iii. 22, sq.; but not one of these bears any comparison with this of our author, which was studiously treated of by the ancient rhetoricians Hermogenes, Aphthonius, and others. The one in Plut. Nic. 31, though chiefly formed on this of Thucydides, is distinguished by considerable ability; and though but a copy, yet, in some points, falls little short of its original.

οὐκ ἠπίσταντο—χωρῆσαι] 'they knew not what point they should make for.' Ἤδη γὰρ τὰ πρόσθεν—πάντα, 'for all in front of them was one medley of confusion.' Plutarch adds, that the Athenians had the light of the moon at their backs.

πάντα, καὶ χαλεπὰ ἦν ὑπὸ τῆς βοῆς διαγνῶναι. 4. οἵ τε γὰρ Συρακόσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, κρατοῦντες, παρεκελεύοντό τε, κραυγῇ οὐκ ὀλίγῃ χρώμενοι, (ἀδύνατον ὂν ἐν νυκτὶ ἄλλῳ τῳ σημῆναι,) καὶ ἅμα τοὺς προσφερομένους ἐδέχοντο· οἵ τε Ἀθηναῖοι ἐζήτουν τε σφᾶς αὐτοὺς καὶ πᾶν τὸ ἐναντίον, καὶ εἰ φίλιον εἴη τῶν ἤδη πάλιν φευγόντων, πολέμιον ἐνόμιζον, καὶ τοῖς ἐρωτήμασι τοῦ ξυνθήματος πυκνοῖς χρώμενοι, διὰ τὸ μὴ εἶναι ἄλλῳ τῳ γνωρίσαι, σφίσι τε αὐτοῖς θόρυβον πολὺν παρεῖχον, ἅμα πάντες ἐρωτῶντες, καὶ τοῖς πολεμίοις σαφὲς αὐτὸ κατέστησαν· τὸ δ' ἐκείνων οὐχ ὁμοίως ἠπίσταντο, διὰ τὸ κρατοῦντας αὐτοὺς, καὶ μὴ διεσπασμένους, ἧσσον ἀγνοεῖσθαι· ὥστ', εἰ μὲν ἐντύχοιέν τισι, κρείσσους ὄντες, τῶν πολεμίων, διέφευγον αὐτούς, ἅτε ἐκείνων ἐπιστάμενοι τὸ ξύνθημα· εἰ δ' αὐτοὶ μὴ ὑποκρίνοιντο, διεφθείροντο. 5. μέγιστον δὲ καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα ἔβλαψεν [καὶ] ὁ παιωνισμός· ἀπὸ γὰρ ἀμφοτέρων παραπλήσιος ὢν, ἀπορίαν παρεῖχεν. οἵ τε γὰρ Ἀργεῖοι, καὶ οἱ Κερκυραῖοι, καὶ ὅσον Δωρικὸν μετ' Ἀθηναίων ἦν, ὁπότε παιωνίσειαν, φόβον παρεῖχε τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, οἵ τε πολέμιοι ὁμοίως. 6. ὥστε τέλος, ξυμπεσόντες αὐτοῖς κατὰ πολλὰ τοῦ στρατοπέδου, ἐπεὶ ἅπαξ ἐταράχθησαν, φίλοι τε φίλοις καὶ πολῖται πολίταις,—οὐ μόνον ἐς φόβον κατέστησαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐς χεῖρας ἀλλήλοις ἐλθόντες μόλις ἀπελύοντο. 7. καὶ διωκόμενοι, κατά τε τῶν κρημνῶν [οἱ] πολλοὶ ῥίπτοντες ἑαυτοὺς and shows how that operated to their disadvantage.

4. πᾶν τὸ ἐναντίον] For this, which is the common reading, Bekker and Goeller edit τὸ ἐξ ἐναντίας: but this, besides its deficiency in authority, (being found in only one MS.) may justly be accounted, as it is by Haack, Poppo, and Dr. Arnold, a mere gloss. Render, 'whatever (neut. for masc. whoever) came in a contrary direction.' The term ἐναντίος is here used in its primitive sense, opposite to any one whose face is turned to us; for which Dr. Arnold refers to i. 93. iv. 23. Evidently written with a view to the present is a passage of Jos. Ant. v. 6, 5, ἅπαξ δὲ καταστάντων εἰς ταραχὴν, πᾶν τὸ προστυχὸν ἀνῄρουν, νομίζοντες εἶναι πολέμιον, and 857, 25.

καὶ τοῖς ἐρωτήμασι—κατέστησαν] Render, 'Moreover, by using frequent interrogations of the "watchword," (for there was no other method of recognition,) they, by all asking the question together, occasioned much confusion to themselves, and thereby made it known to the enemy.'

εἰ δ' αὐτοὶ μὴ ὑποκρίνοιντο] The full sense is, 'but if they themselves in like circumstances should not answer.' Ὑποκρίνοιντο is for ἀποκρίνοιντο, by an idiom both Ionic and old Attic, proved to be such, with reference to this very passage, by the testimony of Suid., Phot., Eustath., and other ancient lexicographers. Hence Bekker is quite wrong in editing, from one MS., ἀποκρ., a reading evidently from correction. Ἀποκρ. is a term occasionally used by such of the later writers as cultivate the model of earlier Atticism, especially Appian, as i. 77, 2. 248, 38. 527, 34.

5. οἵ τε πολέμιοι ὁμοίως] Supply, from the context, ὁπότε παιωνίσειαν ('when they sounded the pæan') φόβον παρεῖχον.

6. φίλοι—πολίταις] The datives here are, as Bauer points out, to be referred to ξυμπεσόντες αὐτοῖς.

7. κατὰ τῶν κρημνῶν] 'down the precipices:' a somewhat recondite phrase, for the more usual ἀπὸ τῶν κρημνῶν, and found (as I have shown in smaller edit.) in the best prose-writers, chiefly in the plural, though sometimes in the singular, both with and without the article. So little likely is it that the greater part should throw themselves from the precipice, that I strongly suspect the article to have crept in here (as not unfrequently elsewhere) wrongly. So just after it is found in the greater part of the MSS.; though it has been very properly cancelled by the recent editors: and here the οἱ seems to have arisen from a marginal var. lect. intended for the latter passage. Plutarch seems to have not had it in his copy; nor perhaps had Valla. Indeed the translators and historians all write as if οἱ were not in the text. Finally, the way in which Thucydides speaks of this at ch. 45, 2, is such as to suggest the idea, not of οἱ πολλοί, but of πολλοὶ only.

ἀπώλλυντο, στενῆς οὔσης τῆς ἀπὸ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν πάλιν-καταβάσεως· καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἐς τὸ ὁμαλὸν οἱ σωζόμενοι ἄνωθεν καταβαῖεν, [οἱ μὲν] πολλοὶ αὐτῶν, καὶ ὅσοι ἦσαν τῶν προτέρων στρατιωτῶν, ἐμπειρίᾳ μᾶλλον τῆς χώρας, ἐς τὸ στρατόπεδον διεφύγγανον· οἱ δὲ ὕστερον ἥκοντες εἰσὶν οἳ, διαμαρτόντες τῶν ὁδῶν, κατὰ τὴν χώραν ἐπλανήθησαν· οὓς, ἐπειδὴ ἡμέρα ἐγένετο, οἱ ἱππῆς τῶν Συρακοσίων περιελάσαντες ‡ διέφθειρον.

XLV. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ μὲν Συρακόσιοι δύο τροπαῖα ἔστησαν, ἔπί τε ταῖς Ἐπιπολαῖς ᾗ ἡ πρόσβασις, καὶ κατὰ τὸ χωρίον ᾗ οἱ Βοιωτοὶ ‡ πρῶτον ἀντέστησαν· οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι τοὺς νεκροὺς ὑπο- retained by Bekker; though not, I apprehend, on sufficient grounds. More likely were they to have been introduced, as Benedict supposes, by the grammarians, so as to correspond to the οἱ δὲ a little after, (though, as Poppo shows, quite unnecessarily; since οἱ δὲ is often found used with reference to πολλοὶ or τινές,) than to have been accidentally omitted in the greater part of the MSS.

ἐμπειρίᾳ μᾶλλον τῆς χώρας] 'by their better acquaintance with the country.' On this use of μᾶλλον for μεῖζον see notes at i. 28, and vi. 85. In this sense ἐμπειρία occurs in Herodian vii. 2, 11, διὰ ἐμπειρίαν τῆς χώρας.

διέφθειρον] So I edit, with Poppo, on the authority of several of the best MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) for vulg. διέφθειραν, which is retained by Haack, Bekker, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold; but not, I apprehend, on good grounds: for the former reading is strongly supported not only by a passage of Plut. Nic. 21, referred to by Poppo, but also by one which I have noted, of Plut. Cam. 23, (and evidently written with a view to the present,) τούτους μεθ' ἡμέραν σποράδας ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ διαφερομένους ἐπελαύνοντες οἱ ἱππεῖς διέφθειρον. Moreover, though strict propriety in the distinctive use of the tenses would seem to require διέφθειραν, yet our author is occasionally unmindful of such minutiæ: and the imperf. may here have been employed in order to correspond to the imperf. in διεφύγγανον.

CH. XLV. 1. ᾗ ἡ πρόσβασις] 'where is the ascent to the heights.' For vulg. πρῶτοι, retained by Poppo and Goeller, πρῶτον has been with reason, from the strong internal evidence existing in its favour, adopted by Haack (2nd edition) and Bekker (2nd edition), on the authority of several MSS., to which I add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.

σπόνδους ἐκομίσαντο. 2. ἀπέθανον δὲ οὐκ ὀλίγοι αὐτῶν τε καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων· ὅπλα μέντοι ἔτι πλείω ἢ κατὰ τοὺς νεκροὺς ἐλήφθη· οἱ γὰρ κατὰ τῶν κρημνῶν βιασθέντες ἄλλεσθαι ψιλοὶ ἅνευ τῶν ἀσπίδων οἱ μὲν ἀπώλλυντο, οἱ δ' ἐσώθησαν.

XLVI. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο οἱ μὲν Συρακόσιοι, ὡς ἐπὶ ἀπροσδοκήτῳ εὐπραγίᾳ πάλιν αὖ ἀναῤῥωσθέντες, ὥσπερ καὶ πρότερον, ἐς μὲν Ἀκράγαντα στασιάζοντα πεντεκαίδεκα ναυσὶ Σικανὸν ἀπέστειλαν, ὅπως ὑπαγάγοιτο τὴν πόλιν, εἰ δύναιτο· Γύλιππος δὲ κατὰ γῆν ἐς τὴν ἄλλην Σικελίαν ᾤχετο αὖθις, ἄξων στρατιὰν ἔτι, ὡς ἐν ἐλπίδι ὢν καὶ τὰ τείχη τῶν Ἀθηναίων αἱρήσειν βίᾳ, ἐπειδὴ τὰ ἐν ταῖς Ἐπιπολαῖς οὕτω ξυνέβη. Οἱ δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατηγοὶ ἐν τούτῳ ἐβουλεύοντο πρός τε τὴν γεγενημένην ξυμφορὰν, καὶ πρὸς τὴν παροῦσαν ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ κατὰ πάντα ἀῤῥωστίαν· τοῖς τε γὰρ ἐπιχειρήμασιν ἑώρων οὐ κατορθοῦντες καὶ τοὺς στρα-

2. βιασθέντες ἄλλεσθαι] They were compelled to leap down because they could not get down by the narrow path, which would not afford room for all.

Ch. XLVI. ὅπως ὑπαγάγοιτο τὴν πόλιν] 'that he might bring over the city to the Syracusan side,' or alliance. Dr. Arnold, in a lengthened annotation, endeavours, but unsuccessfully, to show that the sense intended is, 'to induce to send auxiliaries.' As vain is his attempt to trace the primitive sense of ὑπάγειν and ὑπάγεσθαι. The former cannot signify 'to bring up under:' and as to his notion, that a man holding out a piece of meat to a dog, and making him follow to get it, is an exact image of ὑπάγεσθαι, 'to lead on another,'—it is a mere baseless fancy, (for not a particle of proof has he adduced to substantiate it,) and such as one would suppose could only have been broached to ridicule philological investigation of this kind. It is plain that ὑπάγεσθαι in the middle voice signifies primarily, 'to bring any person or thing under one,' i. e. to get the thing in our power, or the person to come to us. In this, as in not a few other idioms, the Greek and English are directly opposite in sound, yet equivalent in sense. Thus while the Greeks say, to bring under; we say, to bring over to one's side, or to join one's party: and indeed the sense of over is implied in under. Finally, as to the passages adduced in proof by Dr. Arnold from Xen. Anab. ii. 4, 3, ἡμᾶς ὑπάγεται μένειν, and Demosth. p. 105, 7, Θηβαίους νῦν ὑπάγεται, in the former the sense is, 'draws us in,' cajoles us to remain; in the latter, as the commentators are agreed, is 'cajoling, drawing us over, by deceit:' and such is occasionally the use of inducere in Latin, which bears this sense in several passages of Cicero and other of the best writers.

After τὴν I have, with Poppo, Goeller (2nd edition), and Bekker (2nd edition), received, on the authority of three MSS. (further borne out by a similar passage at ch. 7.) the word ἄλλην, which, besides yielding a sense highly apt, may easily have been omitted by the scribes.

Ch. XLVII. 1. πρὸς τὴν γεγενημένην ξυμφορὰν] 'with reference to, on account of the calamity,' &c. Compare ch. 60, 2, ξυνελθόντες οἱ στρατηγοὶ—πρὸς τὴν παροῦσαν ἀπορίαν, &c. Ἀῤῥωστία seems to bear here the same sense as in the similar phrase ἐν ἀῤῥωστίᾳ at iii. 15, 2. ἐν ἀῤῥωστίᾳ—ἦσαν τοῦ στρατεύειν, for ἐν ἀπροθυμίᾳ, 'they were in no mind for, but were (as we should say) sick of campaigning.' This view of the sense, originally propounded by me in my Translation with notes, has since, I find, been adopted by Dukas and Poppo: and the reason assigned by Portus for rejecting the above sense, (namely, on the ground of its being deficient in authority,) I am enabled to overrule, by adducing, what I have since noted, an example of the word in exactly this sense, 'afflictam fortunam,' 'reduced state of things,' as Demosth. p. 1459, 26, ᾗ γὰρ ἂν ἡμέρᾳ τῆς λίαν ἀῤῥωστίας ἀπαλλαγῆτε ταύτῃ τούτους οὐδ' ὁρῶντες ἀντέξεσθε. Finally, this interpretation is further confirmed by the subjoined words κατὰ πάντα, as also by a similar passage infra ch. 63, fin. ζεύξατε ὅτι μετὰ ἀσθενείας καὶ ξυμφορῶν ἡ ὑμετέρα ἐπιστήμη κρεισσον ἐστὶν ἑτέρας εὐτυχούσης ῥώμης.

The words following, τοῖς τε γὰρ—μονῇ, τιώτας ἀχθομένους τῇ μονῇ, νόσῳ τε γὰρ ἐπιέζοντο κατ' ἀμφότερα, —τῆς τε ὥρας τοῦ ἐναντιοῦ ταύτης οὔσης ἐν ᾗ ἀσθενοῦσιν ἄνθρωποι μάλιστα, καὶ τὸ χωρίον ἅμα ἐν ᾧ ἐστρατοπεδεύοντο ἑλῶδες καὶ χαλεπὸν ἦν,—τά τε ἄλλα [ὅτι] ἀνέλπιστα αὐτοῖς ἐφαίνετο. 2. τῷ οὖν Δημοσθένει οὐκ ἐδόκει ἔτι χρῆναι μένειν, ἀλλ', ἅπερ καὶ διανοηθεὶς ἐς τὰς Ἐπιπολὰς διακινδυνεῦσαι, ἐπειδὴ ἐσφάλτο, ‡ ἐξιέναι ἐψηφίζετο καὶ μὴ διατρίβειν, ἕως ἔτι τὸ πέλαγος οἷόν τε περαιοῦσθαι, are exegetical of the preceding, being meant to show why they went to counsel,—namely, 1. because they saw themselves not succeeding in their attempts; and, 2. because they saw the soldiers wearied of staying in Sicily.

Of the next words, νόσῳ τε γὰρ—ἐφαίνετο, the purpose is to advert to the causes of the weariness just mentioned,—namely, both because they were afflicted with sickness, and, moreover, affairs in all other respects seemed to them desperate. The intermediate words, τῆς τε ὥρας—χαλεπὸν ἦν, serve to detail the twofold cause of disease adverted to in κατ' ἀμφότερα,—namely, the unhealthy season of the year, and the insalubrity of the situation, which nourished the marsh malaria. To advert to the phraseology in detail; by ἀχθομένους τῇ μονῇ is meant, 'utterly weary of,' as men are of a weight they can no longer support: a sense which ἀχθ. also bears in Hdot. ii. 103. τῇ πλάνῃ ἀχθεσθέντες. and Xen. Hist. iii. 1, 15. ἀχθόμενος τῇ ἐμβολῇ: and so the expression in Latin gravari ætate. The metaphor in ἀχθ. is one taken from a person or thing heavily burdened, (and so in Hom. Od. xv. 456, the term is applied to vessels heavily freighted,)—a metaphor here the more suitable from the circumstance that the idea of calamity is not unfrequently represented by that of burdens heavy to bear. See Ps. xxxviii. 4. Of χαλεπὸν in this sense noxious, 'unfavourable to the health,' examples occur in Hesiod, Op. et Dies, 555, μεὶς γὰρ χαλεπώτατος οὗτος Χειμέριος, χαλεπὸς προβάτοις, χαλεπὸς δ' ἀνθρώποις. Plut. in Camill. θέρος πνεύμασι νοτίοις χαλεπὸν, and Plato, p. 497, τὰ μέγιστα τῶν νοσημάτων τῇδε χαλεπὰ ξυμπέπτωκε. This use of the word, though rare, is such as may readily be deduced from what forms its primary sense,—namely, gravis (and indeed the uses of the term χαλεπὸς generally have an exact parallel to those of gravis in Latin). The word seems to have been first applied to the air, which, when heavy, is noxious; and then to the seasons, as in the above passages (compare Cic. Q. Fr. Ep. II, ult. 'anni tempus grave.' Cæs. B. Civ. iii. 2, 'gravis autumnus exercitum valetudine tentaverat'): also, as in the present passage, to places; so Celsus i. 3, 'neque ex salubri loco in gravem—satis tutus est.'

Ὅτι after ἄλλα I have placed within brackets, because it is not found in two of the best MSS., and may, as Poppo suspects it to have done, have arisen from the margin. Supposing it to be genuine, we may best, with the Scholiast and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 631, 4, recognise here a transposition, for καὶ ὅτι τὰ ἄλλα αὐτοῖς ἀνέλπιστα ἦν. The words preceding, νόσῳ τε ἐπιέζοντο, and τά τε ἄλλα ὅτι, &c. following, are, as Poppo rightly points out, to be taken as belonging to each other, by a use on which he refers to Herodot. vi. 21, compared with viii. 78. ix. 3.

2. διακινδυνεῦσαι] This the later editors have very properly adopted, on the authority of eight MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) for vulg. διεκινδύνευσεν, which has every appearance of being a mere alteration proceeding from those who failed to perceive the construction here, in which, as Haack, Poppo, and Dr. Arnold, have pointed out, ἔφη is to be supplied for the infinitive to depend on, as at iv. 3, 2, ξυνεκπλεῖσαι, where similarly in many MSS. the reading has been altered to ξυνέπλευσε. See more in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 538.

For vulg. διεξιέναι, I have, with Haack, Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker (1st edition), received ἐξιέναι, from almost all the best MSS. (to which add Codd. Cant. and Mus. Brit.) I cannot venture to receive ἀπιέναι, adopted by Bekker (2nd edition) and Dr. Arnold,—not so much because it is found in only three MSS., as because it has every appearance of being a mere correction, suggested by ch. 48, fin. and ἀπελθεῖν, ch. 48, 3. Moreover, ἐξιέναι is confirmed by ἐξανίστασθαι at ch. 49, 3.

I have thought proper to remove the comma after ἐψηφίζετο, because in such a case the second verb introduced by καὶ stands merely for an adverbial phrase, as καὶ τοῦ στρατεύματος ταῖς γοῦν ἐπελθούσαις ναυσὶ κρατεῖν. 3. καὶ τῇ πόλει ὠφελιμώτερον ἔφη εἶναι πρὸς τοὺς ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ σφῶν ἐπιτειχίζοντας τὸν πόλεμον ποιεῖσθαι ἢ Συρακοσίους, οὓς οὐκέτι ῥᾴδιον εἶναι χειρώσασθαι· οὐδ' αὖ ἄλλως χρήματα πολλὰ δαπανῶντας εἰκὸς εἶναι προσκαθῆσθαι. καὶ ὁ μὲν Δημοσθένης τοιαῦτα ἐγίγνωσκεν. in a passage of the Old Testament, 2 Kings ix. 3, φεύξῃ καὶ οὐ μενεῖς.

ἕως ἔτι—κρατεῖν] The construction is, καὶ κρατεῖν ταῖς γοῦν ἐπελθούσαις ναυσὶ τοῦ στρατεύματος ἕως ἔτι οἷόν τε ἦν. The verb κρατεῖν is here used absolutely, as in a similar passage at ch. 48, ἐπὶ πλέον ἤδη ταῖς ὑπαρχούσαις ναυσὶ θαλασσοκρατούντων.

Ch. XLVIII. 1. ἐνόμιζε—πόνηρα σφῶν τὰ πράγματα] Imitated from this is an expression in Jos. Ant. xvii. 5, 6, πόνηρα ἡγεῖσθαι τὰ πράγματα. The term πόνηρα here bears the sense calamitous, dangerous, like our word evil, as in the phrase 'in evil case.' With the use of ἀσθενῆ here compare that of ἀῤῥωστίαν at ch. 47, 1. In either passage we have a medical metaphor.

καταγγέλτους γίγνεσθαι] i. e. 'have their situation disclosed to the enemy.' An hypallage, with which compare a similar one at viii. 13, τοῦ μὴ ἐξάγγελτοι γενέσθαι. Imitated from this is the expression in Dio Cass. p. 11, πρὶν καταγγέλτους σφᾶς γενέσθαι. Similarly at iii. 30, we have ἔκπυστοι γενέσθαι.

2. ἐκτρυχώσειν] 'would wear them down.' See iii. 93. On the construction in καὶ, ἦν γάρ, &c. see note at i. 72.

3. ἐπ' ἀμφότερα ἔχων] For ἐπαμφοτερίζων, 'in mind inclining both ways;' the sense being, ὡς ἐπὶ τρυτάνης ἐπ' ἀμφότερα ῥέπων. The metaphor here is such as we find in the lines of Burns, 'If self the wavering balance shake, It's rarely right adjusted.'

The next words are exegetical; their sense being, 'kept deliberating,' viz. what to do. The particular here elliptically left to be understood is expressed in a passage adduced by Poppo from Dio Cass. lxviii. 12, ἔτι διασκοπῶν ὅ τι πράξῃ ἀνεῖχε. Of this use of ἀνεῖχε for ἐπεῖχε we have another example at viii. 94.

τῷ δ' ἐμφανεῖ λόγῳ οὐκ ἔφη ἀπάξειν τὴν στρατιάν] The expression ἐμφανεῖ λόγῳ taken in conjunction with τῷ λόγῳ οὐκ ἐβούλετο ἀποδεικνύναι at § 1 seems to institute a distinction between the real, though secret, and the avowed motives of Nicias: for the ground he took in the council, his expectations from the effect of public distress at Syracuse, and the exertions of the Athenian party there, made him think the chance of success worth a short delay, especially considering that the naval superiority which he believed yet in his power, would enable him to go when he chose. Yet he wavered between these expectations and the impression produced by his colleague's arguments; and at last, perhaps, only refused to draw off the army in order to conceal the purpose of retreat (which he yet entertained secretly) from the enemy.

καὶ γὰρ οὐ τοὺς—πείσεσθαι] Render, 'For that the same persons would not decide concerning them, and after seeing affairs (as they had done), and not hearing them from the calumnious report of others, should determine; but from what any one might eloquently inveigh, thereby they would be swayed.' There is an elegant Grecism in οὐ τοὺς αὐτοὺς ψηφιεῖσθαι καὶ ὁρῶντας γνώσεσθαι, in the sense 'the persons who are to decide, will not be those who, after seeing, and not hearing [only], shall have to determine,' &c. Compare iii. 38. 4. τὰ μὲν μέλλοντα—ἐπιτιμητάντων.

ἐξ ὧν ἄν τις εὖ λέγων διαβάλλοι] Compare iii. 38, 4.

4. ὑπὸ χρημάτων] 'under bribes.' Ἴσως seems thrown in to show that Nicias, when using the words ὑπὸ τῶν πολεμίων ἀπολέσθαι, meant to speak not of his army, but of himself individually.

5. ὅμως] This has reference to a sentence omitted; q. d. 'however bad our affairs may be:' examples of which idiom occur also at i. 105. iii. 28. 49. 80. iv. 96. v. 61. vi. 70. vii. 1. 29. 97. But in none of these cases is the ellipsis so remarkable as here, except at vi. 70, ἐς τὸ Ὀλ. ὅμως σφῶν αὐτῶν παρέπεμψαν. In either passage there is a blending of the sense although (in old English, what though) and yet, occasionally united in our earlier writers, especially in the low style. So in Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor, act i. sc. 1, Slender says, 'I keep but three men and a boy, till my mother be dead. But what though yet, I live like a poor gentleman born.'

χρήμασι] 'at expenses.' Before this word Haack and Poppo have introduced, from many MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) καί; while Bekker and Goeller have forborne to admit it;—and rightly; for it would be here little less than unnecessary, and seems to have arisen from the καί preceding.

ἐν περιπολίοις] The ἐν bears the sense on, answering to the corresponding preposition in Latin as used in the phrase consumere in re, for in rem. In ξενοτροφεῖν, 'to maintain foreign troops,' we have a term far from common, though examples occur elsewhere in Isocr. ap. D. Hal. t. ii. 1004, ἐνδεεῖς—τῶν καθ' ἡμέραν. ξενοτροφεῖν ἐπικεχειρήκαμεν. Plut. vi. 804. Demosth. p. 157, οὔτε ξενοτροφεῖν ἐθέλομεν, οὔτε αὐτοὶ στρατεύεσθαι τολμῶμεν, and Diod. Sic. t. i. 200. For this the more usual term is ξενολογέω, though that is confined to the later writers.

βόσκοντας] The term does not, as Duk. and Bauer imagine, convey any idea of contempt; the sense being merely, 'supported [by giving pay].' Compare Hdot. vi. 39, πεντακοσίους βόσκων ἐπικούρους. Aristoph. Eq. 255, φράτορες τρωβόλου, Οὓς ἐγὼ βόσκω, and 1258. Eurip. Ion, 183, τοὺς βόσκοντας θεραπείων.

προσοφειλειν] 'to owe in arrears.' Compare viii. 45, τὸν προσοφειλόμενον μισθὸν, and see Xen. Œcon. xx. 1. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 61, 9. In ἐπικουρικὰ μᾶλλον —

6. τρίβειν οὖν ἔφη χρῆναι προσκαθημένους, καὶ μὴ χρήμασιν, † ὡς πολὺ κρείσσους εἰσὶ, νικηθέντας ἀπιέναι.

XLIX. Ὁ μὲν Νικίας τοσαῦτα λέγων ἰσχυρίζετο, αἰσθόμενος τὰ ἐν ταῖς Συρακούσαις ἀκριβῶς, καὶ τὴν τῶν χρημάτων ἀπορίαν,—καὶ ὅτι ἦν αὐτόθι [που] τὸ βουλόμενον τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις γίγνεσθαι τὰ πράγματα, καὶ ἐπικηρυκευόμενον πρὸς αὐτὸν ὥστε μὴ ἀπαν- ὄντα we have a briefly expressed sentence, of which the meaning, more fully developed, is, 'being rather supported by auxiliaries (who might serve or not) than, as in their own case, by those who are compelled to serve.'

6. τρίβειν] morari, terere. Schol. παρέλκειν, scil. τὸν χρόνον. So in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1228, we have, μὴ τρίβετε τὸν χρόνον, and in Demosth. p. 678, 10, τριβόντων τούτων, where is to be supplied τοὺς χρόνους from what precedes. Of the elliptical expression examples occur also in Plato, p. 435, and Æschyl. Agam. 1026.

ὡς πολὺ κρείσσους εἰσί] The MSS. here fluctuate between ὡς, ὧν, and ᾧ, of which readings ᾧ is greatly to be preferred; though it is found in only two MSS., yet further borne out by those which have ὧν, since the ι adscript and the ν are continually interchanged. Certainly the common reading ὡς cannot be right; since if the use of ὡς for ἐπεί in the old Attic Greek could be tolerated, (which is doubtful,) then, as Poppo observes, 'displicet tamen omissum τούτοις, aut, si vulgatam ante nomen χρημ. posueris, nudum νικηθέντας. Accordingly, Poppo and Goeller prefer ᾧ, to which there is no objection on the score of the antecedent being in the plural: since it is in signification singular, bearing the sense money. Hence we find it followed by a pronoun adjective in the singular at i. 80, ἀλλὰ τοῖς χρήμασιν; ἀλλὰ πολλῷ ἔτι πλέον τούτου ἐλλειπόμεν.

Finally, in χρήμασι νικηθέντας we have a form of expression far removed from common, which has been accordingly quite misunderstood by the commentators, and as erroneously rendered by the translators, who have here sought to help out the sense by a tamquam, as if; thus supposing our author's meaning to be, expressed as it might have been, καὶ μὴ ὡς χρήμασι πολὺ κρεισσους ὄντες, νικηθέντας ἀπιέναι. So expressed, however, the sense would have been far less forcible than it is by the words as they now stand, in which by χρήμ. νικηθέντας ἀπιέναι it is meant to be intimated, though not expressly declared, that the contest was one of purse as well as of arms, (compare i. 83, ἔστιν ὁ πόλεμος οὐχ ὅπλων τὸ πλέον, ἀλλὰ δαπάνης, εἰ ἦν τὰ ὅπλα ὠφελεῖ.)—and it remained to be seen whether the Syracusan, or the Athenian, treasury should the sooner be exhausted:—consequently for them to depart, would be virtually a suffering of defeat in the former respect.

CH. XLIX. 1. λέγων ἰσχυρίζετο] 'talia diecndo, in sententiâ perseverabat.' (Acacius.) The που after αὐτόθι, found in some MSS., I have, with Poppo, Bekker, and Haack, bracketed, because, of the MSS. which have it, scarcely any one is of sufficient credit to constitute any authority worth speaking of; and it is capable of no suitable sense. How the word, though not found in nearly all the MSS., should have crept into a few, it is not easy to see; it may have been from a marginal var. lect. of τὸ before βουλόμενον, which being difficult to be accounted for, was hence, it seems, attempted to be emended. Sensible of the above difficulty, I in my smaller edition proposed, for τὸ, to read τι,—a conjecture which derives some support from the words of the preceding chapter, ἦν γάρ τι καὶ ἐν ταῖς Συρακούσαις βουλόμενον—Ἀθηναίοις, and which has been adopted by Arnold, but rejected by Poppo, who maintains that τὸ βουλόμενον means 'those [whom he had intimated] wished affairs to be in the hands of the Athenians.' According to this view of the sense, in which I am now disposed to coincide, the article has the force of reference or renewed mention. Thucydides does not explain through what causes this Athenian party even in Syracuse (so ch. 48, 2, ἦν γάρ τι καὶ ἐν Συρακούσαις) arose; but Plutarch uses language which may lead us reasonably to refer it to the overbearing character of Gylippus,—forming what was a fault almost universal among Lacedæmonian governors.

μὴ] For this, seventeen MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) are stated to have μηδ', which, considering that the MSS. where it is found are almost all deserving of credit, I am inclined to think genuine. The word will here have the sense μηδόλως, nullo modo, as in Xen. Mem. i. 2. 35. Plato, p. 962, and an anonymous writer in Hesych. Lex. in voc., where we have, Μηδὲ λόγον ἔχειν· μὴ φροντίζειν.

καὶ ἅμα ταῖς γοῦν ναυσὶν, ἢ πρότερον, θαρσήσει κρατηθείς] Of these words the general sense is sufficiently clear,—namely, that 'he had additional reason for opposing any present retreat, because, by the arrival of the additional ships, he felt more confidence than heretofore.' Yet how to extract this sense from the words as they stand, is by Poppo and Arnold justly pronounced problematical. Hence we may reasonably suppose the existence of some corruption,—and that resting, I suspect, on θαρσήσει κρατηθείς, which words will by no means bear any such sense as commentators have hitherto assigned to them. Now, for κρατηθείς the true reading is, I have little doubt, the conjecture proposed by Reiske, Bauer, and Dobree, κρατυνθείς. Against this, indeed, Poppo urges, that θαρσήσει κρατυνθείς is a scarcely less unusual phrase than θαρσήσει κρατηθείς. But admitting both to be alike unusual,—perhaps unprecedented,—the former, θαρσ. κρατυνθείς, taken as standing for θαρσυνθείς, has the recommendation of being the less harsh: and it may surely, without any violence to the usus loquendi, be taken to bear the sense 'strengthened, or supported, by confidence;' as we should say, 'buoyed up by confidence.' Similarly in a passage of the Old Testament, Psalm li. 7, (Aquila.) we have, ἐκραταιώθη ἐπὶ τῇ ματαιότητι αὐτοῦ. And at xxvii. 7, some copies of the Sept. have κρατύνεσθαι, in the sense 'to be strengthened in spirit.'

Adopting, then, the above conjecture, κρατυνθείς, this clause will serve to subjoin a third reason for Nicias's persisting in his opinion,—namely, that 'he felt more buoyed up than before, in reliance, at least, on their naval power,—seeing that it was practicable (to use his own words supra ch. 47) τοῦ στρατεύματος ταῖς γοῦν ἐπελθούσαις ναυσὶ κρατεῖν.'

2. τρίβειν αὐτούς] On this use of τρίβειν see note supra ch. 48.

τὰ τῆς ἐμπειρίας—ἔσται] 'the advantages of skill would be theirs.'

4. τι πλέον εἰδὼς] 'from knowing something more [than the rest].' Compare Pausan. i. 18, 2, πλέον τι εἰδέναι. Hdot. ix. 41, προειδότος πλεῦν τι. Eurip. Ale. 1116, imitated by Appian, t. i. 796, Κοκκήιου ἰσχνριζομένου περὶ αὐτῶν καὶ ἐλπιζομένου τι πλέον εἰδέναι.

CH. L. 1. ἡ τοῖς Συρακοσίοις στάσις ἐς φίλια ἐξεπεπτώκει] So I have edited, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, on the

ὁ δὲ Γύλιππος ἄλλην τε στρατιὰν πολλὴν ἔχων ἦλθεν ἀπὸ τῆς Σικελίας, καὶ τοὺς ἐκ τῆς Πελοποννήσου τοῦ ἦρος ἐν ταῖς οἰκάσιν ὁπλίτας ἀποσταλέντας, ἀφικομένους ἀπὸ τῆς Λιβύης ἐς Σελινοῦντα. 2. ‡ ἀπενεχθέντων γὰρ ἐς Λιβύην, καὶ δόντων Κυρηναίων τριήρεις δύο καὶ τοῦ πλοῦ ἡγεμόνας, καὶ ἐν τῷ παράπλῳ Εὐεσπερίταις πολιορκουμένοις ὑπὸ Λιβύων ξυμμαχήσαντες, καὶ νικήσαντες τοὺς Λίβυας, καὶ αὐτόθεν παραπλεύσαντες ἐς Νέαν πόλιν, Καρχηδονιακὸν ἐμπόριον, ὅθεν πρὸς Σικελίαν ἐλάχιστον δυοῖν ἡμερῶν καὶ νυκτὸς ‡ πλοῦν ἀπέχει, καὶ ἀπ' αὐτοῦ περαιωθέντες, ἀφίκοντο ἐς Σελινοῦντα. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν Συρακόσιοι εὐθὺς αὐτῶν ἐλθόντων παρεσκευάζοντο ὡς ἐπιθησόμενοι κατ' ἀμφότερα αὖθις τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ ναυσὶ καὶ πεζῷ· οἱ δὲ τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατηγοί, ὁρῶντες στρατιάν τε ἄλλην προσγεγενημένην αὐτοῖς, καὶ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἅμα οὐκ ἐπὶ τὸ βέλτιον χωροῦντα, ἀλλὰ καθ' ἡμέραν τοῖς πᾶσι χαλεπώτερον ἰσχοντα, μάλιστα δὲ τῇ ἀσθενείᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων πιεζόμενα, μετεμέλοντό τε πρότερον οὐκ ἀναστάντες, καὶ ὡς αὐτοῖς οὐδὲ ὁ Νικίας ἔτι ὁμοίως ἠναντιοῦτο, ἀλλ' ἢ μὴ φανερῶς γε ἀξιῶν ψηφίζεσθαι, προεῖπον, ὡς ἠδύναντο ἀδηλότατα, ἐκπλουν ἐκ τοῦ στρατοπέδου πᾶσι, καὶ παρασκευάσασθαι, ὅταν τις σημήνῃ. 4. καὶ μελλόντων αὐτῶν, ἐπειδὴ ἑτοῖμα ἦν, ἀποπλεῖν, ἡ σελήνη ἐκλείπει· ἐτύγχανε γὰρ πανσέληνος οὖσα. καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οἵ τε πλείους ἐπισχεῖν ἐκέλευον authority of the best MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.) for vulg. ἢ τοῖς Συρ. στάσις ἐς φιλίαν ἐξεπ., which nothing could justify. Yet a no small objection exists to the above reading, in the harshness of what is the only sense that can thus be assigned, 'the faction for friendship with the Syracusans;'—an objection which Haack and Bauer have not at all obviated, by comparing with this the Latin phrases in pacatum and in hosticum: insomuch that I must still incline to the reading (adopted by Bauer) στάσις φιλία, by which all difficulty will be removed. As to what Poppo urges against it, — 'at quomodo ortum sit ἐς, non patet,'—that is any thing but valid. The word may very well be supposed to have arisen from a var. lect. of ἐξ in ἐξεπεπτώκει just after. The prepositions ἐς and ἐξ are frequently confounded; or ἐς might be propounded by one who did not understand the true force of ἐκπίπτειν, namely, 'to be expelled.'

2. ἀπενεχθέντων] So I have edited, with Poppo and Goeller, on the authority of seventeen good MSS. (to which add that of Cod. Mus. Br.) for vulg. ἀπενεχθέντες, which is retained by Haack and Bekker, though internal evidence as well as external authority is rather in favour of the other.

πλοῦν] So I have edited, with Bekker and Goeller, on the authority of one of the best MSS., for vulg. πλοῦς, which Poppo has chosen to retain, on the ground that, 'though πλοῦν is,' he admits, 'borne out by the usage of our author, yet it would require us, for ὅθεν just before, to read ὅ.' That will, however, by no means be necessary, if we recognise here (what is so often to be observed elsewhere) a blending of two forms of expression.

3. ἀλλ' ἢ] 'otherwise than:' a formula found in the best Attic writers. Equivalent as to sense, (see Herm. on Vig. p. 812.) though doubtless arising from a gloss, is the reading of many MSS., ἄλλο εἰ μή. By the words following, μὴ φανερῶς γε ἀξιῶν ψηφίζεσθαι, it is meant (as Dr. Arnold points out) that 'he did not wish a council of war to be held, at which the taxiarchs and trierarchs would be present, and the question be decided by open voting.' (See ch. 48, 1.) And as the generals on this expedition were αὐτοκράτορες, they might act on their own responsibility.

τοὺς στρατηγοὺς, ἐνθύμιον ποιούμενοι, καὶ ὁ Νικίας (ἦν γάρ τι καὶ ἄγαν θειασμῷ τε καὶ τῷ τοιούτῳ προσκείμενος) οὐδ' ἂν διαβουλεύσασθαι ἔτι ἔφη, πρὶν, ὡς οἱ μάντεις ἐξηγοῦντο, τρὶς ἐννέα ἡμέρας μεῖναι, ὅπως ἂν πρότερον κινηθείη. καὶ τοῖς μὲν Ἀθηναίοις μελλήσασι διὰ τοῦτο ἡ μονὴ ἐγεγένητο.

LI. Οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι καὶ αὐτοὶ τοῦτο πυθόμενοι, πολλῷ μᾶλλον

4 ἦν γάρ τι] For this, Goeller, Poppo, and Haack have edited, from one MS., ἦν γάρ τοι,—on the ground that in τι and καὶ ἄγαν there is involved a contradiction. This objection, however, may be effectually removed by a reference to the words at ch. 63, δέομαι μὴ ἐκπεπλῆχθαί τι ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς ἄγαν. And the contradiction, if any, is no other than what would be sufficiently tolerated in such idiomatical forms of expression in our own language, as 'somewhat over-much addicted to,' or 'this is something too much.' And how agreeable to the style and manner of our author, is this moderate way of speaking, it is scarcely necessary to observe. Finally, though γάρ τοι is found in Thucydides and others of the Attic writers, and would here yield a sufficiently good sense, (namely, 'nam omnino:' see Herm. on Vig. 299.) yet the authority for the reading (only that of one of the least valuable MSS.) is too inconsiderable to justify its being received. I have therefore followed Bekker in retaining the common reading; especially as there is every reason to think that such was read by Josephus, who in a passage of Bell. Jud. i. 5, 2,—probably written with a view to this of our author, —has the similar expression, τούτοις (i. e. the Pharisees) περισσὸν δή τι προσεῖχεν Α. σεβομένη περὶ τὸ Θεῖον. In this its use with adverbs, or adjectives in the neuter put as adverbs, the τι has a limitative force, serving to qualify an assertion that might otherwise be too general. See Dorville on Charit. p. 477, and compare Diog. Laërt. l. ii. 131, ἦν δέ πως ἠρέμα καὶ δεισιδαιμονέστερος.

θειασμῷ — προσκείμενος] 'addicted to (on which use see note at vi. 89) superstition,' literally 'an over-scrupulous inquiry into all modes of pleasing the Deity.' See notes on vi. 75. vii. 86. viii. 1; and on the subject itself, a passage of Plut. de Superst. c. 7, and Nic. c. 23.

οὐδ' ἂν διαβουλεύσασθαι ἔτι] scil. αὐτὸν, 'that he would not any longer even deliberate upon it, [much less determine.]' Of this word διαβουλ., which is far from common, and is without any authority in Steph. Thes., I have noted examples elsewhere at ii. 5, and vii. 34. Plato, p. 304. Plut. vii. 364. Dio Cass. 1334, 80. Jos. Ant. xix. 4, 3. The full sense here intended, though not expressed, is, 'to deliberate on, or debate whether to go or stay:' a remarkably elliptical form of expression, for which we have, what may be called the fully-expressed one, in Plato, p. 304, τὴν — εἴτε πολεμητέον εἴτε διὰ φιλίας ἀπαλλακτέον οἵαν τε—διαβουλεύσασθαι.

ἐξηγοῦντο] A customary term on this subject, of which examples occur in Euripides, Xenophon, Arrian, and other writers. The ἐννέα after τρὶς is by Dodwell, Wesseling, and Goeller suspected to have been foisted in by the scribes; and Poppo has obelized the words. That only the three days after lunar or solar eclipses were accounted unlucky, is, Wesseling says, clear from the Exegetica of Autoclides, referred to by Plut. in his Nicias: and the thing is, he thinks, further confirmed by the testimony of Diodorus, and also borne out by the fact of the Athenians remaining scarcely half that time. That, as Dr. Arnold observes, is a circumstance by no means sufficient to prove the point; since the subsequent disasters were of a nature too overwhelming to allow of any further scruples. Again, the evidence for the word, resulting from its having place in every MS., is such as by no means to justify its being given up on any such vague surmise as the above. Moreover, it is to be borne in mind that thrice nine, being the cube of three, (or that number multiplied into itself and then into the product,) was reckoned a perfect number, and, as such, was a favourite one with the soothsayers. See supra v. 26. And to this purpose are the words of Soph. Œd. Col. 483, τρὶς ἐννέα αὐτῇ κλῶνας ἐξ ἀμφοῖν χεροῖν Τιθεὶς ἐλαίας, τάσδ' ἐπεύχεσθαι λιτάς. Finally, it may justly be urged, in favour of τρὶς ἐννέα, that three is as much too small a number as thrice nine may seem to be too large a one. And such Plutarch may fairly be presumed to have read, since he states it to have been the opinion of Nicias, that they ought to wait another revolution of the moon.

Ch. LI. 1. μὴ ἀνιέναι τὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων] 'not to slacken [their exertions as to] the affairs of the Athenians,' viz. to prevent their escape. So supra ch. 18, μὴ ἀνιέναι τὸν πόλεμον. With κατεγνωκότων compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1343, 8, οὗτοι δὲ σφῶν αὐτῶν κατεγνώκεσαν, ὡς κακῶς βεβουλευμένων.

ἐπιβουλεῦσαι] On this term see note at iii. 20 & 109.

χαλεπωτέρους εἶναι προσπολεμεῖν] 'to be worse to war against.' Compare Hom. Il. xviii. 258, ῥηΐτεροι πολεμίζειν ἦσαν Ἀχαιοί, which, as is shown by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 535, stands, by attraction, for ῥηΐτερον ἦν πολεμίζειν τοῖς Ἀχ.

αὐτοῦ] See note on vii. 40, 4.

2. ἡμέρας ὅσαι — εἶναι] Between the eclipse of the moon and the flight recorded at ch. 75, Clinton (in his Fasti, an. 413) reckons eight or nine days.

ἀπολαμβάνουσι] 'they intercept,' viz. by, as we should say, pushing into a corner. The manner of the thing is shown in the Memoir on Syracuse, in the Appendix.

ἐσόδου] So I have edited, with all the recent editors except Didot, for vulg. ἐφόδου. The term here bears the sense ingressus, introitus, literally 'way into;' in which military acceptation, to denote a camp-gate, it occurs also in Xen. Cyr. iii. 3. 17, 18. Polyb. vi. 35, 5, and 36, 2. xiv. 3, 7. Arrian, E. A. i. 22, 7, where in like manner as here, after the mention of αἱ πύλαι we have πολλοὺς τῶν φίλων τῆς εἰσόδου ἀπέκλεισεν, οὓς οἱ Μακ. διέφθειραν. The loss in either case arose from the narrowness of the gate of entrance, which would admit but a few at a time, and consequently, when, on the approach of the enemy, the gate was closed, those yet on the outside would be slain. In the passage of Polyb. xiv. 3, 7, περί τε τῶν προσβολῶν καὶ τῶν εἰσόδων τῶν εἰς τὰς παρεμβολὰς, the editor Schweigh. has injudiciously received, instead of πρεσβειῶν a confessedly corrupt reading, προσβολῶν on the conjecture of Reiske. The true reading there is, I doubt not, προσβάσεων, approaches. And so in a passage of Thucyd. vi. 96, 1, we have, τὰς προσβάσεις φυλάσσειν.

ἀπολλύουσι] I have not ventured, with Goeller (first edition), Bekker, and Arnold, to edit ἀπολλύασι, on the authority of one third-rate MS.: for though the Attic dialect had no such present tense singular as ἀπολλύω -εις -ει, yet it is not only possible, as Arnold admits, but, as Poppo avers, certain that they used that form, at least the third person plural; if indeed the testimony of MSS., here and at iv. 25, can prove any thing. As to the objection of Arnold, that 'the reading in question involves an improbability not to be established without better authority than our present MSS.'—such a reason, though it may induce us to suspect error, will not warrant our altering the reading of all the MSS.; for an editor is not, in such a case, to be wise above what is written, especially since anomalies equally remarkable occur elsewhere in the Attic use of certain forms in only one or two persons of a tense. Finally, the authority of Bekker in this case is the less to be relied on, since in another passage, supra iv. 25, he has retained ἀπολλύουσι.

Ch. LII. 2. ἐπεξαγαγόντα] The word has here the same sense as at v. 71, where see note: and parallel to this is the term at viii. 104, ἀντεπεξῆγον. In land warfare it signifies 'to break from a line or column of troops, to make a movement against (ἐπ) the enemy;' which was usually by a flank attack. But in naval warfare it is rather to be rendered (as the primary sense of the term requires) 'to draw off,' &c.

τῷ κοίλῳ καὶ μυχῷ τοῦ λιμένος] On the site of this, see the Map and Memoir in Appendix. Compare Hom. Od. x. 92, αἱ μὲν [νῆες] ἂρ' ἔντοσθεν λιμένος κοίλοιο δέδεντο Πᾶσαι.

Ch. LIII. 1. καὶ τὰς ναῦς — οὕσης] 'And that the Syracusans should more easily haul off the ships from the shore, [where they were stranded,] which was in the possession of those friendly to them.' Ἐπὶ τὴν χηλήν. On this, see note at i. 63; and for the exact sense here intended, see the Memoir on the Map of Syracuse in Appendix.

2. ταύτῃ] This word, not found in many MSS., some of them the best, has been cancelled by Poppo, as savouring of interpretation; and he refers to a similar additamentum of αὐτοῦ at ch. 40, 4: yet so necessary is it to the sense, that our author can hardly be supposed to have omitted it. Had it been inserted by the critics, it would have been brought in, not where it is, but rather after the γάρ: and indeed the awkwardness (quite Thucydidean) of its position may fairly be presumed to have occasioned its omission. In short, never is a seemingly insignificant word more likely to be lost than at the fag-end of a parenthesis.

4. κληματίδων καὶ δᾳδὸς] 'fagots and torch-wood for kindling.' Of the former term examples occur in Aristoph. Thesm. 728 & 739. Appian, ii. 72. On the latter see Schweigh. on Polyb. i. 45, 12. Closely

ἄνεμος οὔριος] Equivalent to ἄνεμος ἐπίφορος at ii. 77, where see note.

σβεστήρια] Of this term no examples are given in Steph. Thes. It occurs, however, in Arrian, ii. 19, 8, σβεστήριον τῇ φλογὶ ἐπέφερον. And with allusion to the present passage, Pollux, i. 168, has σβεστηρίοις κωλύμασιν ἐχρῶντο. Well calculated to throw light on this passage of our author is one, evidently written with a view to it, of Polyæn. vi. 3, σβεστήριον γὰρ πυρὸς μάλιστα ὄξος εἶναι δοκεῖ· ἄριστον δὲ κώλυμα πυρὸς ἐπαλειφόμενον ὄξος, ἥκιστα γὰρ τούτου πῦρ ἅπτεται.

Ch. LV. 1. γεγενημένης — λαμπρᾶς] Poppo regards this as a brief form of expression for τῆς νίκης, ἣν ἐνίκησαν, λαμπρᾶς νίκης γεγενημένης.

ἐν παντὶ δὴ ἀθυμίας ἦσαν] 'were in the greatest degree of dejection.' Duker notices an evident imitation of the expression in Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 76, ὡς ἐν παντὶ δι' ἀθυμίας ἐγένεσθε (where, for δι', read δή). Matthiæ, Gr. Gr. § 442, 3, treating on this idiom, compares from Plato, ἐν παντὶ κακοῦ εἶναι, whence may be emended a passage of Æschin. c. Tim. p. 9, 27, ἐν παντὶ δὲ κακῷ γενόμενος, where, for κακῷ, should undoubtedly be read κακοῦ, and, for δὲ, perhaps δή. Compare also Plut. de Serâ Num. Vind. ἐν παντὶ γενέσθαι κακῷ διὰ φόβον, where Wyttenbach suspects the words διὰ φόβον to be from the margin: he remarks, that in παντὶ εἶναι κακῷ we have an Attic phrase for in maximo timore esse. In Xen. Cyrop. vii. 1, 22, εἰς πάντα κίνδυνον ἦλθον, I suspect the true reading to be εἰς πᾶν τοῦ κινδύνου ἦλθον.

2. For ἤδη, which taken, as it is best done, to refer to ταύταις μόναις just before, yields a sense but jejune, I am inclined to think the true reading is that proposed on conjecture by Dindorf, δή. Certain it is that the two particles are very often confounded; but more frequently has δὴ passed into ἤδη, than the reverse. Thus in another passage infra viii. 53, 3, for δὴ, ἤδη is found in one of the best MSS.

ὁμοιοτρόποις] This I have, with all the recent editors, adopted, on the authority of the best MSS. (to which I am enabled to add that of Cod. Mus. Brit.) for vulg. ὁμοιοτρόπως. The term ὁμοιοτρ. bears here the extensive sense of 'similar as to dispositions, manners, and habits of life,'—a sense also found at viii. 96, where it is said of the Syracusans, μάλιστα γὰρ ὁμοιότροποι γενόμενοι, ἄριστα καὶ προσεπολέμησαν (scil. τοὺς Ἀθηναίους): and so ὁμοιότρ. is used at iii. 10. Plut. t. viii. 144. Of the term used, as here, with πόλις, I know no example elsewhere: but it occurs with the equivalent expression ἡ γῆ in Dio Cass. 234, 4, a passage doubtless written with a view to the present, and in which the author may justly be supposed to have had ὁμοιοτρόποις in his copy. Finally, so in Plut. Discr. Adul. 9, we have, ὁμ. φιλία καὶ συνήθεια, and in Herodot. viii. 144, ἤθεα ὁμ. Pind. Ol. xiii. 7, ἀσφαλὴς Δίκα, καὶ ὁμότροπος Εἰράνα.

καὶ ναῦς καὶ ἵππους καὶ μεγέθη ἐχούσαις] On a reconsideration of this passage (involving no little perplexity and difficulty) I am inclined to think, that the true reading may be that proposed, on conjecture, by Duker, καὶ ναυσὶ καὶ ἵπποις καὶ μεγέθει ἰσχυούσαις: though the defence, in my smaller edition, of the common reading μεγέθη ἐχούσαις with reference to size, so that πόλεσι—μεγέθη ἐχούσαις may be equivalent to πόλεσι μεγάλαις—has, Poppo admits, not been overturned by the objections to it advanced by himself, and has been confirmed by Didot, who, in addition to the examples adduced by me from Xen. Cyneg. iv. 1, τὰ μεγέθη μεταξὺ μακρῶν καὶ βραχέων, and a passage of Theophr. cited in Steph. Thes. ῥόδα—οὐδὲ μεγάλα τοῖς μεγέθεσι,—subjoins examples of the several phrases μεγέθη ὀρέων, σώματα, ὄψη, πλάτη, and πλήθη. Moreover, Dio Cass. may fairly be presumed to have had ἐχούσαις in his copy, since in a passage, p. 619, evidently written in imitation of the present, he similarly writes, αἴσχιστον ἐὲ, τοσούτους καὶ τοιούτους ὄντας, καὶ ὅπλα καὶ χρήματα καὶ ναῦς καὶ ἵππους ἔχοντας. It is true that he does not bring in the μεγέθη; but that was doubtless because he stumbled at the harshness it involves. That Poppo should think the above writer had there in view, not the present, but rather another passage of our author supra i. 86, 3, ἄλλοις—χρήματα ἔστι — καὶ νῆες, καὶ ἵπποι, — is strange. However, taking into consideration the circumstance, noticed by Poppo, that our author no where else uses the plural of the term μέγεθος, but invariably the singular, as used of the magnitude of plurals (i. 2. vii. 72); also that most of the best MSS. (to which add Cadd. Clar. primâ manu, Cant., and Mus. Brit.) have ναυσὶ, ἵπποις, and μεγέθει, which, while excluding ἐχούσαις, square exactly with ἰσχυούσαις,—and that the very phrase ἰσχύειν μεγέθει occurs at i. 2, and ἰσχύειν ναυτικῷ at iii. 104: again, since while difficult is it to account for accusatives here having been changed into datives, but easy for the change of the datives into the accusatives when once ἰσχ. was changed to ἐχ.: and lastly, considering that the phrase ἰσχύειν ὁπλοις is found in Demosth. 146, 20; and that in Appian, t. i. 377, we have οἷς (scil. ἐλέφασι) ἰσχύουσι, — for these several reasons I feel persuaded that ἰσχυούσαις is the true reading, and could adduce various instances of the interchange of the two words by the scribes; whence have arisen not a few corruptions of the text of the best writers. As to the difficulty started by Didot against the propriety of ἰσχύειν μεγέθει without a genitive,—that is, as Poppo observes, quite futile. The truth is, that, though the words καὶ μεγέθει might have been dispensed with, (and were accordingly passed over by Dio Cass.) yet they have no little force, being used specifically; q. d. 'and in other elements of physical power.' The same exegetic use is observable in a passage of Aristoph. Av. 483, Οὕτως ἰσχυρός τε καὶ μέγας ἦν τότε καὶ πολύς. Finally, not dissimilar to the present is a passage of Lucian, tom. iii. 518, 41-43. ὡς εἰ τοῦτον τὸν ἄνθρωπον ὅπλων ἀπέφηναν καὶ νεῶν, καὶ στρατοπέδων, καὶ καιρῶν, καὶ χρημάτων κύριον· where, for καιρῶν, (which can by no means be defended,) I propose to read, on conjecture, χειρῶν, militum, 'forces.'

In τὸ διάφορον, just after, we have, as Goeller points out, an epexegesis of the preceding τι: the sense being, in other words, 'neque quidquam ex mutato reipublicæ statu inter eos sollicitare poterant, quod caussa dissidii esse solet.' Compare ch. 75, ἢ ἰσομοιρία τῶν κακῶν, ἔχουσά τινα ὅμως, τὸ μετὰ πολλῶν, κούφισιν.

οὔτ' ἐκ παρασκευῆς — ὄντας] I must finally coincide in the view of Bauer, Dukas, and Bekker; according to which κρεισσους is to be regarded as an accusative. And for ὄντας, I have, with Bekker (second edition), edited ὄντας,—a reading which has been finally approved by Poppo, and that on the ground that the words ἐκ παρασκευῆς cannot well be taken as merely equivalent to παρασκευῇ, and that the collocation seems to suggest the propriety of the words οὐ ἐυνάμενοι ἐπενεγκεῖν being referred to each member of the sentence. No direct authority, indeed, exists for the reading ὄντας; but ὄντες is found in three of the best MSS.; and supposing, as we ought, κρείσσους to be an accusative, we must necessarily presume that ὄντας is the true reading. As to the word καίπερ, which Bauer says is here wanting, nothing is more usual than for it to be left understood in the case of the participles ὄντες or ὄντας. See note at vi. 51.

ἠπόρουν] The vulg. ἠθύμουν is evidently a mere marginal gloss. By τὰ πρὸ

Ch. LVI. 2. ἀπὸ τῶν παρόντων] 'from what they now held [in their power].' Genitive of origin, as at viii. 79 and 81, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 573.

καλὸν σφίσιν—φανεῖσθαι] 'that the achievement would appear in the sight of the Greeks honourable to them.' On this sense of ἀγώνισμα see note at i. 22. vii. 59. 86. Compare Herodot. i. 140, καὶ ἀγώνισμα μέγα τοῦτο ποιεῦνται. Aristoph. Ran. 286. Pausan. p. 619.

3. σφετέραν πόλιν ἐμπαρασχόντες προκινδυνεῦσαι] Render, 'and as holding out (i. e. exposing) their city [as one] to encounter danger for [the rest].' Such seems to be the full sense of this somewhat unusual phraseology, of which the only parallel that I have noted is in Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 12, τὰς ἑαυτῶν ψυχὰς προκινδυνεῦσαι τῶν κοινῶν παρέσχον. The ἐν in ἐμπαρασχόντες stands for ἐν χερσί, 'into their hands,' 'to be used at their pleasure,' for their good. Compare supra vi. 13, 2, μηδὲ τούτῳ ἐμπαράσχητε—ἐλλαμπρῦνεσθαι, and Appian, t. ii. 801. ἑαυτὸν ἐμπαρεχ., 'se præbere ictibus,' and Aristoph. Nub. 440, Τουτὶ τό γ' ἐμὸν σῶμ' αὐτοῖσιν Παρέχω τύπτειν, &c. where, for αὐτοῖσιν παρέχω, I conjecture the true reading to be αὐτοῖσ' ἐμπαρέχω, which Attic elegance would seem to require, though in the ordinary Greek the simple παρέχω is used, as in a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke vi. 29, τῷ τύπτοντί σε ἐπὶ τὴν σιαγόνα πάρεχε καὶ τὴν ἄλλην, where several early MSS. and ancient versions add αὐτῷ, and Gregory writes, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν ἑτέραν παρειὰν ἐμπαρ. τῷ παίοντι. Parallel to ἐμπαρ. in the passages of Appian and Aristoph. is ἔδωκα in a passage of the Old Testament, Isaiah l. 6, τὸν νῶτόν μου ἔδωκα εἰς μάστιγας, τὰς δὲ σιαγόνας μου εἰς ῥαπίσματα.

καὶ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ μέγα μέρος προκόψαντες] A somewhat perplexed construction, and unusual mode of taking the verb προκόπτω, namely, not in a neuter, but active sense. Agreeably to this view, the Scholiast regards the words as standing for προκοπὴν μεγάλην τῷ ναυτικῷ στόλῳ παρασχόντες, 'having to a great degree promoted the successes of the navy.' In this active sense (which is exceedingly rare) the verb occurs also at iv. 60, τῆς προκ. ἐκείνοις, and in Herodot. i. 90, and iii. 56, ἐς τὸ πρόσω οὐδὲν προεκόπτετο τῶν πραγμάτων, and Lucian, t. ii. 421, προκόπτειν οἶνον, 'to filter wine,' lit. pass it through a sieve. Moreover, as προκόπτειν signifies primarily 'to cut out and open a way through rough, or thickety, ground and woodlands,' and as that may be either for another, or for oneself, so the verb in question may have either an active or a neuter sense; in which latter case it will mean, 'to make way, get along, proceed;' and, in the figurative sense, it will signify either, as here, 'to occasion progress,' or 'to make progress.' In short, it exactly corresponds in use to promoveo in Latin.

In τοῦ ναυτικοῦ μέγα μέρος προκόψαντες (where μέγα μέρος stands for κατὰ μέγα μέρος, like μέρος τι, at which is similarly to be supplied κατὰ, at ii. 64, and vii. 30.) it is not easy to determine the force of the genitive: Bauer regards it as standing for περί; and Poppo supposes the genitive to have a partitive force. It would rather seem, as Goeller and Dr. Arnold take it, a genitive of progress, like θέειν πεδίοιο, &c. Agreeably to which view, Dr. Arnold renders, 'having facilitated the successes of the navy.' Still this is but gratis dictum, and does not point at the rationale of the thing. I cannot but suspect that the genitive here is in regimen with the accusative ὁδὸν, which in this idiom has to be supplied, whether the verb προκ. be taken in an active or a neuter sense; the sense intended being necessarily, 'to cut a way forwards, either for another or for oneself.' No instance am I enabled to adduce, in which the word ὁδὸν is expressed after προκόπτειν; but it is of frequent occurrence in the phrase τέμνειν ὁδὸν, 'to proceed,' 'make progress,' and the corresponding one in Latin viam secare, as in Virg. Æn. vi. 900, 'Ille viam secat ad naves:' and sometimes, though rarely, the verb is so used without the viam, as in Virg. Æn. v. 595, 'Delphinum similes,—qui per maria humida nando,—Carpathium Libycumque,—secant.' (For so that passage should be pointed.) The same use, in our own language, of the verb to cut is not unknown, (though there it is chiefly confined to the language of common life,) being recognised in the expression to cut on or along to any place, meaning, to hasten to it.

So viewed, the expression may, without harshness, be taken to bear the sense progress, or success, in the present passage, and in another supra iv. 60, τῆς ἀρχῆς προκοπτόντων ἐκείνοις, where the dative, here left to be supplied, (thus, σφίσι καὶ τοῖς ξυμμάχοις) is, we may observe, expressed.

4. τοῦ ξύμπαντος λόγου] Meaning, 'the total number (muster-roll) when reckoned up,' the full tale (to use an old English phrase); the sense of the expression ὁ λόγος ὁ πρὸς being, as Poppo explains it, 'ratio quæ fuit ad,' Germ. 'das Verhältniss, welches Statt fand zu.'

Ch. LVII. 1. μετ' ἀλλήλων στάντες] 'ranged on either side.' So supra iii. 39, μετὰ τῶν πολεμιωτάτων στάντες.

ὡς ἑκάστοις τῆς ξυντυχίας—ἔσχεν] Here I have, as formerly, adopted the readings of Bekker, thus retaining vulg. ἑκάστοις (for what has been edited by Poppo, ἕκαστός τις,) a reading which, I find, has place also in Codd. Clar. and Mus. Brit., and which is further supported by a passage adduced by Dr. Arnold from Hdot. vii. 188, τοῖσι οὕτω εἶχε ὅρμου. Ἀνάγκῃ, the conjecture of Bekker, Dr. Arnold has confirmed from the Parma MS.; and it is further borne out by the testimony of Codd. Mus. Brit. and Leyd., and perhaps Clarend. (for the iota in this last-mentioned MS. is scarcely ever expressed.) Moreover, the reading ἔσχεν (for vulg. ἔσχον), received by Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, on the authority of eleven MSS., I am enabled to further confirm from the MSS. Clar., Cant., and Mus. Brit.

With respect to the construction, it is well pointed out by Poppo that the words κατὰ τὸ ξυμφέρον (as just before, κατὰ δίκην, and κατὰ ξυγγένειαν) correspond to ἀνάγκῃ, taken as standing for κατ' ἀνάγκην, a frequent variation: and accordingly the general import of the words is well represented by the free version of the Scholiast, ἀλλ' ὡς ἑκάστοις συνέτυχε, ἢ διὰ τὸ ἴδιον συμφέρον, ἢ ἐξ ἀνάγκης στρατεύεσθαι, 'as they were each severally circumstanced, either as regarded their interest, or [as they were urged by] necessity.'

5. καταντικρὺ Βοιωτοὶ] Meaning, 'completely (i. e. lit., as Dr. Arnold explains, outright) Bœotians.' In the words following, I have, with Bekker (in his 2nd edit.), before ἔχθος received τὸ, on the authority of several of the best MSS. (to which add that of Codd. Clar. and Mus. Brit.); such being required by the sense, which is, 'by reason of the (i. e. as the article is meant to express, the well-known) enmity between them.'

7. κατὰ τὸ νησιωτικὸν] 'on account of the circumstance of their insular situation.' Μᾶλλον. Equivalent, as Poppo says, to μᾶλλον ἢ ἄλλοι, ἢ οἱ ἠπειρῶται.

8. ἐκ Ναυπάκτου] So I have now written, with Bekker (2nd edition), on the authority of one of the best MSS., for vulg. ἐν Ναυπάκτῳ, retained by Poppo and Goeller; because the former reading is confirmed by another passage supra ch. 31, 2, καὶ ἐκ τῆς Ναυπάκτου τῶν Μεσσηνίων μετεπέμψατο, where the construction is, καὶ μετεπέμψατό [τινας] τῶν Μεσσηνίων ἐκ τῆς Ναυπάκτου, and iv. 41, 2, καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Ναυπάκτου Μεσσήνιοι, &c. Accordingly here, as Poppo points out, the words ἐκ Ναυπάκτου and ἐκ Πύλου are to be construed, not with οἱ καλούμενοι, but with παρελήφθησαν, which I would render, not with Dr. Arnold, 'were pressed into the service,' nor, with Goeller,

Ἀθηναίων ἐχομένης, ἐς τὸν πόλεμον παρελήφθησαν. καὶ ἔτι Μεγαρέων φυγάδες οὐ πολλοὶ Μεγαρεῦσι Σελινουντίοις οὖσι κατὰ ξυμφορὰν ἐμάχοντο. 9. τῶν δὲ ἄλλων ἑκούσιος μᾶλλον ἡ στρατεία ἐγίγνετο ἤδη. Ἀργεῖοι μὲν γὰρ οὐ τῆς ξυμμαχίας ἕνεκα μᾶλλον, ἢ τῆς Λακεδαιμονίων τε ἔχθρας καὶ τῆς παραυτίκα ἕκαστοι ἰδίας ὠφελίας, Δωριῆς ἐπὶ Δωριέας μετὰ Ἀθηναίων Ἰώνων ἠκολούθουν· Μαντινῆς δὲ καὶ ἄλλοι Ἀρκάδων μισθοφόροι, ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀεὶ πολεμίους σφίσιν ἀποδεικνυμένους εἰωθότες ἰέναι, καὶ τότε τοὺς μετὰ Κορινθίων evocabantur; but assumebantur, adsciscebantur, adjungebantur, 'were taken for military service,' nearly equivalent to conscribebantur: a sense which the word bears also at vii. 20 and 21. And so Herodot. ix. 1, ὅκου ἑκάστοτε γένοιτο [ὁ Ξέρξης], τούτους παρελάμβανε, 'adsumsit, et copiis suis junxit.' Not quite parallel to the present are the passages cited by Dr. Arnold, supra i. 111, and v. 52; nor, strictly speaking, are those he adduces from iv. 54, παρ. Σκανδείαν, and iv. 69, παρ. Νισαίαν. More to the purpose were it to compare Herodot. vii. 168, παραλαμβανόντων τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἡμέας ἐς τὸν πόλεμον, and vii. 150. 168 and 169, in all which cases the term bears what is a sense extending to assumere in Latin,—namely, 'aliquem socium sibi assumere:' and so in Liv. ii. 22, we have, 'Hernicos in societatem assumere.' The only instances known to me out of Thucydides of the first-mentioned senses are in Xen. Hist. iv. 2, 12, προϊόντες δὲ, καὶ παραλαμβάνοντες τὰς πόλεις, (meaning, the subject-allies,) and 13, οἱ Λακ., καὶ δὴ Τεγεάτας παρειληφότες καὶ Μαντινέας, ἐξῆσαν, &c. Thus it signifies, 'the calling forth and taking for service the quotas,' meaning, such quotas of troops as any confederate state is bound to furnish.

κατὰ ξυμφορὰν] 'by reason of [their] misfortune,' namely, that of exile.

9. ὠφελίας] This I have received, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, though only on the authority of a few MSS., because it seems absolutely necessary to make out a sense. For to supply here, as Haack proposes to do, the word ἔχθρας from the preceding context, and to suppose here, as he would do, a reference to the factions by which even then Argos seems to have been distracted, (see supra v. 32.) were, besides involving no little violence, jejune and inapposite. In fact, the very nature of the construction forbids the repetition of ἔχθρας; and yet something will then be wanting, as the critics seem to have thought, who introduced the word ξύζης into the text of the Cod. Camer. Admitting, then, the impossibility of repeating ἔχθρας, and yet taking into account the necessity for some word being here supplied, without which the sense will be left lamentably imperfect, I know not how we can do otherwise than receive the reading ὠφελίας; a reading which, while strongly borne out by internal evidence, is not incompetently supported by external authority, considering that it is found in Codd. Vat., Monach., Lugd., Mus. Brit., Venet., Clar. (primâ manu, yet from the same copyist), and finally the MS. of Valla. If it be asked how the word came to be omitted in the greater part of the MSS., I answer, from the similarity existing in MS. characters between the two terminations in ΙΔΙΑΣ and ΩΦΕΛΙΑΣ. Finally, a strong commendation of the above reading is found in the excellence of the sense thence arising,—namely, that 'while the Argive people at large were induced to join the expedition, not so much by their alliance with the Athenians, as by their enmity to the Lacedæmonians, they individually (ἕκαστοι) joined it, each for his own present advantage, as derived from pay and the profits of spoil' (and even of petty traffic: see vi. 31, 5). Of the expression ὠφελίας ἕνεκα, and ὠφ. χάριν, examples are not rare in the Classical writers. So Xen. Ath. i. 3, and Polyb. iii. 82, 8: and, moreover, the noun ὠφέλεια is frequently (especially in Xen., Polyb., and Plut.) used of the spoil gained in war, meaning, the private plunder, as distinguished from the λάφυρα, or public spoils. That the Argives were not insensible to the attractions of good pay and prize-money, we may infer from the covert allusion to their rapacity in Aristoph. Pax, 477, καὶ ταῦτα διχόθεν μισθοφοροῦντες ἄλφιτα.

μετὰ Ἀθηναίων ἠκολούθουν] A somewhat rare construction, of which examples are adduced from Plato, p. 249, ἀκολ. μετ' ἐμοῦ, and Cebes, p. 55, αἱ δὲ γυναῖκες αἱ μετ' αὐτῶν ἀκολουθοῦσαι.

ἐλθόντας Ἀρκάδας οὐδὲν ἧσσον διὰ κέρδος ἡγούμενοι πολεμίους· Κρῆτες δὲ καὶ Αἰτωλοὶ μισθῷ καὶ οὗτοι πεισθέντες· ξυνέβη δὲ τοῖς Κρησὶ, τὴν Γέλαν Ῥοδίοις ξυγκτίσαντας μὴ ξὺν τοῖς ἀποίκοις, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀποίκους, ἄκοντας μετὰ μισθοῦ, ἐλθεῖν. 10. καὶ Ἀκαρνάνων τινὲς ἅμα μὲν κέρδει, τὸ δὲ πλέον Δημοσθένους φιλίᾳ καὶ Ἀθηναίων εὐνοίᾳ, ξύμμαχοι ὄντες, ἐπεκούρησαν. 11. καὶ οἵδε μὲν τῷ Ἰονίῳ κόλπῳ ὁριζόμενοι· Ἰταλιωτῶν δὲ Θούριοι καὶ Μεταπόντιοι, ἐν τοιαύταις ἀνάγκαις τότε στασιωτικῶν καιρῶν κατειλημμένων, ξυνεστράτευον, καὶ Σικελιωτῶν Νάξιοι καὶ Καταναῖοι· βαρβάρων δὲ Ἐγεσταῖοι, οἵπερ ἐπηγάγοντο, καὶ Σικελῶν τὸ πλέον, καὶ τῶν ἔξω Σικελίας Τυρσηνῶν τέ τινες κατὰ διαφορὰν Συρακοσίων, καὶ Ἰάπυγες μισθοφόροι. τοσάδε μὲν μετὰ Ἀθηναίων ἔθνη ἐστράτευον. ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀεὶ πολεμίους σφίσιν ἀποδεικνυμένους] Equiv. to ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀεὶ σφίσι πολεμίους, 'those at any time pointed out [by their employers] as enemies;' for the Arcadians were the Swiss of Greece. In this somewhat graphic use of ἀποδεικνυμένους there is what has a near parallel in the spirited lines of Burns: 'But bring a Scotchman frae his hill, Clap in his cheek a Highland gill; Say 'sic is royal George's will, And there 's the foe:' He has nae thought, but how to kill Twa' at a blow.'

εἰωθότες εἶναι] So I have, with Bekker and Goeller, edited, though only on the authority of one MS., for vulg. εἶναι εἰωθότες, retained by Poppo, because such a position would destroy that clearness of representation so indispensable to the graphic.

ξυγκτίσαντας] Supply αὐτοὺς from the context. Of ἀκόντας μετὰ μισθοῦ the full sense is, 'however unwillingly, yet for the pay;' in other words, they went against their colonists, however unwillingly, yet, for the sake of pay, they went.

11. ἐν τοιαύταις ἀνάγκαις τότε στασιωτικῶν καιρῶν κατειλημμένων] A certain difficulty here exists, which may best be removed by supposing, with Goeller, an ellipsis of αὐτῶν at κατειλημμένων (according to which the sense will be, 'as they had been overtaken'); also, (as Bauer proposes,) by taking τοιαύταις as having reference to some words omitted, such as ὥστε ἀναγκάζεσθαι ξυστρατεύειν Ἀθηναίοις. Thus the sense of this expression, τοιαῦται ἄναγκαι στασιωτικῶν καιρῶν will be, as Poppo renders, 'talis turbulentis temporibus effecta necessitas, ut cogerentur una (cum Atheniensibus) militare.' Here, then, is denoted what may be defined, 'such strong necessities as leave a person no course to take but one:' and so supra iii. 82, 3, ἐς ἀκουσίους ἀνάγκας πίπτειν, and Herodot. i. 116, ἐς ἀνάγκας μεγάλας ἀπικνεῖσθαι. Here καιρῶν is dependent on ἀνάγκας; by ἄναγκαι στασιωτικῶν καιρῶν being denoted such straits as arise out of the critical seasons of faction (the various features of which have been so finely depicted supra iii. 82). This sense of the term καιρὸς—namely, 'a critical time,'—may be deduced from what is its primary sense, punctum temporis, (from κάρ, καρὸς, punctum,) or that particular period when matters are come to a point. Finally, as sufficiently defending the correctness of the phrase κατειλημένων ἐν (which is by Krueger suspected to be corrupt) compare Arrian, E. A. iii. 12, 2. v. 7, 4, ἀνάγκῃ καταλαμβάνει. Herodot. ii. 65, ἀναγκαίῃ καταλαμβανόμενος. In Dem. 1133, 12, for ἢ ὑπ' ἀνάγκης, ἢ ὑπὸ δεσμοῦ καταληφθεὶς. which words have every appearance of being corrupt, I propose to read, ἢ ὑπ' ἀνάγκης, ᾗ ὑπὸ δεσμοῦ ('as it were by a rope') καταληφθείς. Of καταλαμβάνεσθαι thus followed by ἐν I know no other example; but in Plato, p. 217, we have, ἐν τούτῳ τῷ κακῷ ἀπολῃφθέντα, where I should be inclined to think the true reading might be καταλ., but that the former is confirmed by another passage of the same writer, p. 305, ἐν τοῖς ἰδίοις λόγοις ὅταν ἀπολῃφθῶσιν, 'when they are caught in their own words,' said with allusion to the noose of a snare ὡς εἰπεῖν] 'so to say,' 'uno verbo.' The τε, just after, I have, with the recent editors, thought proper to insert, though only on the authority of three MSS., to which add Cod. Clar.

4. πρὸς] pro ratione, 'in comparison with;' on which see Matth. Gr. § 455. By ἄλλος ὅμιλος (an expression occurring also at iv. 112) is meant the turba of the light-armed, (accompanied with the fewer hoplites,) called at iv. 125, ὁ ὅμιλος ψιλὸς, where the expression is equivalent to οἱ ὁπλῖται. Compare also Arrian, E. A. iii. 23, 6.

CH. LIX. 2. καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι] These words, though not found in most of the best MSS., I have, with Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller (2nd edition), thought proper to receive into the text, and that on two grounds; 1. because, (as Haack observes,) 'supposing the words to have no place, the τε will have nothing to correspond to it;' and, 2. from the strong support which the words derive from internal evidence, as existing in the circumstance that while difficult is it to imagine why they should have been inserted, easy is it to account for their having been omitted,—namely, from inadvertence on the part of the copyists. In vindication of the propriety of the words themselves, it is only necessary to observe, that the allies of all kinds, both Sicilian and Grecian, were of sufficient consideration to be deservedly joined with the Syracusans, as participating in their anticipations of glory.

proceeded to close up the great port.' Thucydides does not inform us how long they were occupied in closing it; but Diodorus says it was three days. By the term εὐθύς, however, it is implied that they would do it as speedily as possible: and hence Dodwell may be nearer the truth in supposing one day; which, Poppo observes, is supported by the argumentation at ch. 84.

πλαγίαις] 'placed transverse' or 'broadside,' so as to form what is called at ch. 69, ζεῦγμα. On the words ὀλίγον—ἐπενόουν see notes at ii. 8, and vii. 87.

Ch. LX. 2. πρὸς τὴν παροῦσαν — ἄλλων] 'because of their present distress in other respects;' for the genitive here is either a genitive of relation, (on which see Matth. Gr. § 337.) and so equiv. to κατὰ τὰ ἄλλα, or περὶ τὰ ἄλλα (compare a passage of the New Testament, St. Mark iv. 19, καὶ αἱ περὶ τὰ λοιπὰ ἐπιθυμίαι); or it may be an attributive genitive serving to note origin, as φόβοι πολεμίων, τὸ Τροίας μῖσος, ἡδοναὶ τέκνων, φιλία τινός. But that idiom is, I believe, almost confined to nouns expressing any passion of the mind.

τείχη τὰ ἄνω] Meaning, it may be supposed, as Dr. Arnold explains, the upper extremity of the Athenian lines, where they came nearest to the cliffs of Epipolæ, and were furthest from the sea. See Map and Memoir.

ἀπολαβόντες διατειχίσματι] So I have edited, with Bekker, Goeller, Poppo, and Haack (second edition), on the authority of one MS., for vulg. διατείχισμά τι, which may fairly be presumed to have arisen from inadvertence on the part of the copyists, who here felt the want of an accusative; though that is, in effect, left understood in the ὅσον, scil. μέρος, space; διατειχ. being a dative of instrument. Render, 'by a cross-wall.' See note on iii. 34, 1, and compare Dio Cass. p. 1280, πρὸς αὐτῷ τῷ διατειχίσματι, where is denoted the fortified wall of Hadrian drawn across North Britain. In support of the above reading, Poppo adduces a passage at iv. 102, where we have τείχει ἀπολαβεῖν: and so we should say, 'to take off a space' by drawing a wall across. Ἀπολ. signifies to take off any part from the rest, and consequently to take IN any such part. Finally, though the reading in question be deficient in external authority, yet in so minute a variation, that may very well be dispensed with. And to the evidence of the one MS. above mentioned, I am enabled to add that of another, namely, the Mus. Brit.

ἀσθενοῦσιν] So I have edited, with Bekker (second edition), on the authority of one MS., for vulg. ἀσθενέσιν, which Goeller and Poppo have chosen to retain, only remarking that ἀσθενεῖς is the more usual term of the sick. I believe that οἱ ἀσθενεῖς occurs only in the later writers, as those of the New Testament; though even there ὁ ἀσθενῶν is found seven or eight times. The earlier and purer ones use ἀσθενῶν. So Plato, p. 334, τοῖς ἀσθενοῦσι, and Xen. Anab. v. 3, 1. Hippocrates, too, never uses ὁ ἀσθενὴς to signify ægrotus; but only ὁ ἀσθενέων; employing ἀσθενὴς in the sense sickly, and ἀσθενέων in that of sick, ægrotus. Thus at p. 12 of his book on ancient medical art, he says, ἐγγύτατα τοῦ ἀσθενέοντός ἐστιν ὁ ἀσθενής· ἔστι δὲ ἀσθενέστερος ὁ ἀσθενῶν. On these grounds, then, I have thought proper to adopt the reading ἀσθενοῦσιν.

ἁπλοώτεραι] Render, 'less fit for service,' 'scarcely sea-worthy.'

3. ὑποκατέβησαν] The term seems to bear here simply the sense se subduxerunt, 'withdrew, drew down,' as in Appian, iv. 25. Xen. Hist. iv. 6, 8 & 11, (ed. Thiem.) and Anab. vii. 4, 11, and also (where it is used metaphorically) in Lucian, t. i. p. 498, 1, and Hippocr. p. 1443. So answering to subducere and se subducere, which in Latin not unfrequently are found so used.

ἡλικίας μετέχων] Μετέχειν here bears the sense, not participes esse, but compos esse, (as Plato ap. Steph. Thes. μετέχ. λογισμοῦ, and Eurip. frag. incert. 145, 8, γνώμης μ.) or rather to be endued with, (as Died. Sic. t. i. 265, θείας μετ. φύσεως, and Plut. Opp. Max. vi. 439, τῆς τοῦ βελτίστου φύσεως μ.) So it is used simply for ἔχειν or χρῆσθαι in Herodot. vi. 107. Xen. Œcon. xvii. 6. By ἡλικία is here, as at v. 43, and vi. 24, denoted youthful ardour.

4. ὡς οἷόν τ' ἦν ἐξ ἀναγκαίου — διανοίας] The construction, as Poppo points out, is, ὡς οἷόν τε ἦν ἐξ ἀναγκ. τε διανοίας καὶ τοιαύτης. the sense being, 'as well as they were able, proceeding on such a plan [as that just mentioned] only dictated by necessity,' literally, not such as they would have wished, but such as they were fain to acquiesce in. So ἀναγκ. is used at i. 61. v. 3. vi. 37; where see notes. They were, then, compelled to resort to the old mode of warfare, (see i. 49.) now long abandoned, by which a sea-fight was conducted very much after the manner of a land battle. Dr. Arnold regards the words as if to be taken in inverse order; but that involves too great a harshness to be well admitted. It may be that there is here a slight corruption in the text; and instead of the τε, which is here not quite in place, I suspect our author to have written γε, scilicet. The καὶ here bears the sense even; and the words may best be pointed as follows, ἐξ ἀναγκαίου γε, καὶ τοιαύτης, διανοίας.

5. ὁρῶν καὶ τοὺς, &c.] The καὶ, not found in one MS., has been cancelled, as useless, by Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo. But not to mention the extreme improbability that an useless word should have been introduced into every MS. but one,—the καὶ is, I should say, in one view, any thing but useless, being, I apprehend, no other than a vestige of some early reading now lost, and serving to afford some clue to the true reading, which I suspect was, καὶ τοὺς στρατηγοὺς καὶ τοὺς στρατιώτας, i. e. both the commanders and the soldiers, equivalent to 'the commanders as well as the soldiers,' or (what Goeller says is a sense he should approve, could it be said to be contained in the words) 'non solum milites sed etiam duces.'

Ch. LXI—LXIV. In this truly soldier-like address, the old general ably marshals up and places before the troops all the σωτηρίας καὶ πατρίδος ἑκάστοις οὐχ ἧσσον ἢ τοῖς πολεμίοις· ἢν γὰρ κρατήσωμεν νῦν ταῖς ναυσὶν, ἔστι τῳ τὴν ὑπάρχουσάν που οἰκείαν πόλιν ἐπιδεῖν. 2. ἀθυμεῖν δὲ οὐ χρὴ, οὐδὲ πάσχειν ὅπερ οἱ ἀπειρότατοι τῶν ἀνθρώπων,—οἳ, τοῖς πρώτοις ἀγῶσι σφαλέντες, ἔπειτα διὰ παντὸς τὴν ἐλπίδα τοῦ φόβου ὁμοίαν ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς ἔχουσιν. 3. ἀλλ' ὅσοι τε Ἀθηναίων πάρεστε, πολλῶν ἤδη πολέμων ἔμπειροι ὄντες, καὶ ὅσοι τῶν ξυμμάχων ξυστρατευόμενοι ἀεὶ, μνήσθητε τῶν ἐν τοῖς πολέμοις παραλόγων, καὶ τὸ τῆς τύχης κἂν μεθ' ἡμῶν ἐλπίσαντες στῆναι, [καὶ] ὡς ἀναμαχούμενοι ἀξίως τοῦδε τοῦ πλήθους, ὅσον αὐτοὶ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν ἐφορᾶτε, παρασκευάζεσθε. LXII. Ἃ strongest motives both of fear and of hope, that could rouse them to the utmost exertion. The phraseology here is unusually lucid, and clear of harshness. As to the general character of the speech, it is hortatory, occasionally mixed with the consolatory. Sect. 1 of this chapter forms the proem, in which the speaker reminds all those present, from whatever country they came, that they were on the verge of a crisis, which must decide whether they should ever see again their native country, or not.

1. τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν—ἐπιδεῖν] Compare vi. 77, τευξόμενοι — ὧν ἐπεθυμεῖτό που ἐπιδεῖν. In either passage the που bears the sense 'wherever [it be];' and in this figurative sense of ἐπιδεῖν (by no means common) to revisit, reach again, two examples occur in the Old Test., Jer. xxii. 10, (Sept.) οὐκ ἐπιστρέψει ἔτι, οὐδὲ ὄψεται (where Compl. has οὐ μὴ εἴδῃ) τὴν γῆν πατρίδος αὐτοῦ, and Numb. xiv. 23, οὐκ ὄψονται τὴν γῆν.

2. The matter contained in this section is consolatory. The speaker reminds them that to persons like themselves, who had encountered so many vicissitudes of fortune, and knew the uncertainties of war,—their past reverses were no ground for despondency. They might expect fortune to take a turn; and their forces were such as to encourage all reasonable hope. With τὴν ἐλπίδα—ἔχουσι, of which the sense is literally, 'entertain the expectation of fear [that is] akin to their disasters,' compare Lucian, Tyrann. iv. 318, (Bip.) ἤ τις ἐλπὶς τοῦ φόβου, ἢ τι ὑπόμνημα τῶν συμφορῶν. In either passage the term ἐλπὶς, agreeably to its literal import, as a vox mediæ significationis, bears the sense simply of a looking for of any event, whether good or (as here) evil. Comp. Onosand. p. 85, 6, ὑπολαμβάνουσαι γὰρ (scil. αἱ ψυχαὶ) τι χεῖρον, ὧν πείσονται, φοβερώτερον ἐκδέχονται τὸ μέλλον, and a passage of the New Testament, Heb. x. 27, φοβερά τις ἐκδοχὴ κρίσεως. Goeller thinks, (as I myself formerly did,) that in τοῦ φόβου we have a genit. subst. for adject. φοβεράν. But thus the article τὴν would be without any force. Accordingly I am now of opinion, with Poppo, that we have here a certain brief form of expression for what, more fully expressed, would have been, τὴν ἐλπίδα τοῦ φόβου, ἣν ἔχουσιν, ὁμοίαν ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς ἔχουσι. Thus τὴν ἐλπίδα τοῦ φόβου will mean, as Poppo explains, 'the expectation inspired by their fear.' Ὁμοίαν ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς, 'assimilated to their disasters;' which it naturally will be; for, as Pausanias truly observes, i. 25, 2, 'those who have been frequently disappointed are accordingly not sanguine as to future good.'

3. τὸ τῆς τύχης] for τὴν τύχην. See iv. 18, and note. Κἂν — στῆναι, 'and hoping that fortune may even stand on our side.'

ὡς ἀναμαχούμενοι] Render, not, 'fighting again, renewing the contest'; but, as Abresch explains ἀναμ. to mean, 'fighting up (i. e. repairing) your defeat.' Of ἀναμάχεσθαι so used, examples are adduced by Abresch from Dionys. Hal., Plut., and Xen. Cyr. iii. 1, 10, and others are found in Dio Cass. 305, 16, and 316, 37. 802, 95. 1057, 40.

I must not omit to observe, that I quite agree with Poppo in thinking that a double καὶ placed in the same member of the sentence is offensive, and not to be justified by the examples which Haack has adduced. I suspect that the second καὶ before ὡς ἀναμαχούμενοι arose from the occurrence of the ναι in στῆναι preceding; and accordingly I have bracketed it, and, with the authority of two or three independent MSS., I should have cancelled it.

Ch. LXII. The purpose of the speaker throughout this chapter is to encourage and animate the sailors, by the assurance δὲ ἀρωγὰ ἐνείδομεν, ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ λιμένος στενότητι, πρὸς τὸν μέλλοντα ὄχλον τῶν νεῶν ἔσεσθαι, καὶ πρὸς τὴν ἐκείνων ἐπὶ τῶν καταστρωμάτων παρασκευὴν,—οἷς πρότερον ἐβλαπτόμεθα—πάντα καὶ ἡμῖν νῦν, ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, μετὰ τῶν κυβερνητῶν ἐσκεμμένα ἡτοίμασται. 2. καὶ γὰρ τοξόται πολλοὶ καὶ ἀκοντισταὶ ἐπιβήσονται, καὶ ὄχλος, ᾧ, ναυμαχίαν μὲν ποιούμενοι ἐν πελάγει, οὐκ ἂν ἐχρώμεθα, διὰ τὸ βλάπτειν ἂν τὸ τῆς ἐπιστήμης τῇ βαρύτητι τῶν νεῶν· ἐν δὲ τῇ ἐνθάδε ἠναγκασμένῃ ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν πεζομαχίᾳ πρόσφορα ἔσται. 3. εὕρηται δ' ἡμῖν ὅσα χρὴ ‡ ἀντιναυπηγεῖσθαι, καὶ πρὸς τὰς τῶν ἐπωτίδων αὐτοῖς παχύτητας—ᾗπερ δὴ μάλιστα ἐβλαπτόμεθα—χειρῶν σιδηρῶν ἐπιβολαὶ, αἳ σχήσουσι τὴν πάλιν-ἀνάκρουσιν τῆς προσπεσούσης νεὼς, ἢν τὰ ἐπὶ τούτοις οἱ ἐπιβάται ὑπουργῶσιν. 4. ἐς τοῦτο γὰρ δὴ ἠναγκάσμεθα, ὥστε πεζομαχεῖν ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν, καὶ τὸ μήτε αὐτοὺς ἀνακρούεσθαι μήτ' ἐκείνους ἐᾶν ὠφέλιμον φαίνεται, ἄλλως τε καὶ τῆς γῆς, πλὴν ὅσον ἂν ὁ πεζὸς ἡμῶν ἐπέχῃ, πολεμίας οὔσης. LXIII. ὧν χρὴ μεμνημένους διαμάχεσθαι ὅσον ἂν δύνησθε, καὶ μὴ ἐξωθεῖσθαι ἐς αὐτὴν,—ἀλλὰ, ξυμπεσούσης νηὶ νεὼς, μὴ πρότερον ἀξιοῦν ἀπολύεσθαι, ἢ τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ πολεμίου καταστρώματος ὁπλίτας that their commanders had employed every expedient to counteract the disadvantages of narrow sea-room, and to ensure victory even against vessels stronger in the build, and more skilful in the system of naval tactics, which was alone practicable in so confined a spot.

1. ἀρωγὰ—πρὸς τὴν ἐκείνων ἐπὶ τῶν καταστρωμάτων παρασκευὴν] 'helpful against the apparatus of troops on the decks.' Of the adjective ἀρωγὸς thus followed by πρός τινα, 'against any one,' I know no other example. The words ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ λιμένος στενότητι I have pointed off, because these form an interposed construction; the sense being, 'at, or under, the circumstance of the narrowness of the port.' This use of ἐπὶ and a dative after ἀρωγὸς, though not in regimen with it, is so rare, that I know of only one example elsewhere, namely, Hom. Il. iv. 235, οὐ γὰρ ἐπὶ ψευδέσσι (in mendaciis) πατὴρ Ζεὺς ἔσσετ' ἀρωγός. It occurs, however, with the equivalent ἐν in Eurip. Rhes. 638, δοκοῦσ' ἀρωγὸς, ἐν πόνοις, παραστατεῖν (scil. αὐτῷ, as τισι in the passage of Homer above cited); and finally in a passage of the Old Testament, Psalm xlvi. 1, (Sept.) ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν—βοηθὸς ἐν θλίψεσι.

2. διὰ τὸ—τῶν νεῶν] Render, 'because they would, [by increasing] the weight of the ships, be a hindrance to our skill.' In this sense βλάπτειν occurs also in Hom. Il. Z. 38. Ψ. 586, and Æschyl. Ag. 118. At πρόσφορα, a little after, (answering to which is ἐπιτήδεια in Herodot. vii. 28.) supply ταῦτα, meaning the above expedients so contrived.

3. For vulg. ἀντιναυπηγεῖσθαι, Bekker has edited, on the authority of a few MSS., ἀντιναυπηγῆσαι. But in a case like this, where of two readings one is as good as the other, and internal evidence draws two ways, weight of external authority ought to decide.

χειρῶν σιδηρῶν ἐπιβολαὶ] On these χεῖρες σιδηραῖ see note at iv. 25, 4. Of this use (far from common) of the noun ἐπιβολὴ, examples occur elsewhere in Polyæn. i. 40, 9, τὰς [ναῦς] χειρῶν σιδηρῶν ἐπιβολαῖς ἐφεῖλκε (where read ἀφεῖλκε). Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1389, ὠθισμοί τε καὶ χειρῶν ἐπιβολαὶ, and 2079, 9. Joseph. p. 171, σανίδων ἐπιβολαῖς. Dio Cass. 97, 93. With the expression here, τὴν πάλιν-ἀνάκρουσιν, 'the back-tacking,' compare τῆς πάλιν-ἀνακρούσεως at ch. 44.

τὰ ἐπὶ τούτοις] Meaning 'what is further requisite,' i. e. in the discharge of their duty, namely, to board the enemy's ships, and carry them as it were by storm. With the construction τὰ ἐπὶ τούτοις ὑπουργῶσιν, (which is one not unfrequent in the old Attic writers,) Poppo compares Soph. Phil. 15, τὰ λοιπὰ ὑπηρετεῖν.

Ch. LXIII. 1. ἢ—ἀπαράξητε] 'than

Καὶ ταῦτα τοῖς ὁπλίταις οὐχ ἧσσον τῶν ναυτῶν παρακελεύομαι, ὅσῳ τῶν ἄνωθεν μᾶλλον τὸ ἔργον τοῦτο. ὑπάρχει δ' ἡμῖν ἔτι νῦν γε τὰ πλείω τῷ πεζῷ ἐπικρατεῖν. 3. τοῖς δὲ ναύταις παραινῶ, καὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τῷδε καὶ δέομαι, μὴ ἐκπεπλῆχθαί τι ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς ἄγαν, τήν τε παρασκευὴν ἀπὸ τῶν καταστρωμάτων βελτίω νῦν ἔχοντας, καὶ τὰς ναῦς πλείους. 4. ἐκείνην τε τὴν ἡδονὴν ‡ ἐνθυμεῖσθε ὡς ἀξία ἐστὶ διασώσασθαι, οἳ τέως Ἀθηναῖοι νομιζόμενοι ye shall have mowed down, swept off, the heavy-armed from the enemy's deck.' Compare Herodot. viii. 90, τοὺς ἐπιβάτας ἀπὸ τῆς κ. νηὸς βάλλοντες ἀπήραξαν. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1542, 9, καὶ πολλάκις ἐπιβαίνοντας τοῦ τείχους τοὺς πολεμίους ἀπήραξαν (for such should there be read, for vulg. ἀπήρραξαν, which was not well altered to ἀπερράξαν by Reiske). The expression was originally derived from Hom. Il. Ξ. 497, ἐυνσσάμενος ξίφος ὀξύ, Αὐχένα μέσσον ἔλασσεν· ἀπήραξεν δὲ χαμᾶζε, Αὐτῇ σὺν πήληκι, κάρη, of which a close imitation may be recognised in a passage of Eurip. Suppl. 717, κἀπικείμενον κάρα κυνέας θερίζωπ, κἀποκαυλίζων ξύλῳ.

2. From hence to the conclusion of the address the speaker briefly adverts to the advantages for which each has to contend, and closes with an exhortation to act accordingly.

τῶν ἄνωθεν] Meaning, the ἐπιβάται a little before spoken of, who occupied the upper deck; while the rowers, the under deck. For vulg. ὑμῖν, found in all the MSS., and retained by Poppo, I have, with Bekker and Goeller, edited ἡμῖν; for, besides that the authority of MSS. in so minute a matter is trifling, the ἡμῖν is greatly preferable on this ground,—namely, that though generally it is indifferent whether the speaker uses the pronoun ἡμεῖς or ὑμεῖς, yet here the latter would be avoided, lest it should be (as it has actually been by one translator, Hobbes) referred to τοῖς ὁπλίταις: whereas the sense is meant to be general; thus: 'now it is in our power even yet to come off far superior, by the aid of the land-force.' Such is, I apprehend, the true import of the words, which has been lost sight of by a misconception of the construction, where the accusative is not governed of ἐπικρατεῖν; but τὰ πλείω is to be taken adverbially, like τὸ πλέον and τὸ πλεῖστον; the sense being, 'for the most part,' 'upon the whole.' So Dio Cass. 246, 84, (a passage evidently written with a view to the present,) ὥστε ὑπάρχειν αὐτοῖς—ἐπικαταθέουσι πλεονεκτεῖν τὰ πλείω, and Herodot. vi. 138, πολλὸν ἐπεκράτεον. Æschyl. Sept. 23, πυργηρουμένοις (scil. ἡμῖν) καλῶς τὰ πλείω πόλεμος, ἐκ θεῶν, κυρεῖ, and, finally, another passage of our author, viii. 46, διενοεῖτο τὸ πλέον οὕτως ὁ Τισσ. Whether, indeed, ἐπικρατεῖν ever does take an accusative, may be doubted. For as to a passage supra iv. 19, ἐπικρατήσας τὰ πλείω τοῦ πολέμου, such is not the sense there intended: the Scholiast there very well explains it to be, κατὰ πόλεμόν τις πλεονεκτήσας τῶν ἐναντίων. Indeed, in ἐπ. τοῦ πολέμου we have a recondite form of expression, for the more common one ἐπ. τῷ πολέμῳ, (with which compare the frequent one in Herodot. ἐπικρ. τῇ μάχῃ,) the sense being, 'to get the mastery over,'—as we say, to master a subject or a science.

The γε after νῦν, not found in some MSS., might be thought useless; but it belongs to τῷ πεζῷ, which is a dative of instrument. Render, 'at least, at any rate, by the aid of the land-force.'

3. τοῖς ναύταις παραινῶ, καὶ—δέομαι] Compare Hom. Od. viii. 30, Ὀμπὴν δ' ὀτρύνει, καὶ λίσσεται ἔμπεδον εἶναι.

4. ἐκείνην τε τὴν ἡδονὴν ἐνθυμεῖσθε] There is here a transition, from the soldiers and sailors of the Athenians, to those of the metœci; and the scope of the remaining part of the chapter is to set forth the value of the privileges they enjoyed, and of that reflected glory, which, from the glory of Athens redounding to themselves regarded as Athenians, they were accordingly bound, in honour, to uphold. After which follows an animated exhortation to fight strenuously for that which they prized highly. Now, considering the existence of this marked transition, I cannot think that our author would have obscured it by making the present to closely connect with the preceding construction (whereas by all the translators the two are kept, by means of a period, separate and distinct). I cannot but suspect that, for ἐνθυμεῖσθαι, Thucydides wrote ἐνθυμεῖσθε, which has place in the Cod. Reg., and formerly existed in Cod. Clar. Nay, καὶ μὴ ὄντες ὑμῶν, τῆς τε φωνῆς τῇ ἐπιστήμῃ καὶ τῶν τρόπων τῇ μιμήσει, ἐθαυμάζεσθε κατὰ τὴν Ἑλλάδα, καὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς τῆς ἡμετέρας οὐκ ἔλασσον κατὰ τὸ ὠφελεῖσθαι ἔς τε τὸ φοβερὸν τοῖς ὑπηκόοις, καὶ τὸ [μὴ] ἀδικεῖσθαι, πολὺ πλεῖον μετείχετε. 5. ὥστε, κοινωνοὶ μόνοι ἐλευθέρως ἡμῖν τῆς ἀρχῆς ὄντες, δικαίως [ἂν] αὐτὴν νῦν μὴ ‡ καταπροδίδοτε· καταφρονήσαντες δὲ Κορινθίων τε, οὓς

I see not how otherwise any construction can be made; while, reading ἐνθυμεῖσθε, we obtain one quite unexceptionable; for, ἐνθυμεῖσθέ τε ὡς ἄξιόν ἐστι διασώσασθαι ἐκείνην τὴν ἡδονήν, i. e. 'which you felt, namely, in being honoured throughout Greece, in having the same benefit from empire as we Athenians over a greater.' Οἳ construed with ὑμῶν signifies, 'those of you who.' Of the words following, τέως Ἀθηναῖοι νομιζόμενοι καὶ μὴ ὄντες, &c. the sense is, 'esteemed as Athenians, though not such really, by your knowledge of our tongue, and your imitation of our manners, held in honour throughout Greece.' Compare supra i. 38. Then is set forth, in the next words, the solid profit which accompanied the pleasure above mentioned,—namely, that of enjoying the same commercial advantages, that the Athenians, from their extended empire, possessed.

The words ἔς τε τὸ φοβερὸν (which stand for ἔς τε τὸ φοβεροὺς εἶναι) are to be joined with what precedes, not with what follows; for the μέτοικοι were certainly not more the objects of fear to the subjects of Athens, than the Athenians themselves, but only as much such: and to seek to remove the difficulty by regarding this, with Dr. Arnold, as an exaggeration, is too palpably a mere device for the nonce to be safely adopted. Moreover, in ἐς we have no other than simply a certain varied form of expression for κατὰ, though with the same sense. Finally, in τὸ μὴ—μετείχετε the construction is, καὶ [κατὰ] τὸ μὴ ἀδικεῖσθαι πολὺ πλεῖον μετείχετε [τῆς ἀρχῆς τῆς ἡμετέρας]. How the μέτοικοι could be said to be better off than the actual Athenians, expositors have not made it appear. To suppose the words to import, as Dr. Arnold understands them, that they stood on a more favoured position than the actual citizens, is surely too much, even though this also should be regarded in the light of an exaggeration. They should seem rather to advert to certain grievances which the Athenian citizens had to bear, from which the μέτοικοι were exempt: and what were these grievances? No other, I apprehend, than those adverted to at i. 77, 1, καὶ ἐλασσούμενοι γὰρ ἐν ταῖς ξυμβολαίαις πρὸς τοὺς ξυμμάχους δίκαις, where see note, and compare a similar use in a passage of the New Testament, 1 Cor. vi. 7, διατί οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἀδικεῖσθε; i. e. 'why are ye not disposed to put up with injury?' Here, indeed, the argument urged is, like many others elsewhere occurring, somewhat sophistical; for it might be asked how individuals of the μέτοικοι could be benefited by the moderation of the Athenian government towards its subject-states. Yet this does not necessarily involve any thing of exaggeration.

The μὴ before ἀδικεῖσθαι, though absent from almost every good MS., has been nevertheless retained by all the recent editors; who, in so doing, have departed from their usual course of proceeding, by which they have on many other occasions cancelled it on far weaker grounds. Not only, indeed, is the word opposed by external evidence, but by internal, as existing in the circumstance, that while easy is it to account for its addition, most difficult were it for its omission. In short, this is one of those passages (of no unfrequent occurrence in the classical writers) in which the sense is the very same whether the negative particle be present or absent, since it is implied. Accordingly, the sense here, fully expressed, is, 'and as regards the being injured;' meaning, 'whether you should be injured or not injured.' Similarly in a passage of Xen. Mag. Eq. vi. 5, πάντα ἄρα ταῦτα προκόπτει τι, εἰς τὸ μὴ καταφρονεῖσθαι, the word μὴ has been brought in by the later editors,—solely, it appears, on the conjecture of Brodæus,—on the ground of its being, as they suppose, indispensable to sense. But this is by no means the case; the meaning there intended being, 'for all these matters avail something, as to the being contemned [or not].'

5. ὥστε κοινωνοὶ—μὴ καταπροδίδοτε] The argument here urged is, that 'they could not in justice betray to its ruin that empire of which they alone were free partakers with the holders thereof:' an argument somewhat akin to that at i. 39, πάλαι δὲ (χρὴ) κοινώσαντας τὴν δύναμιν κοινὰ καὶ τὰ ἀποβαίνοντα ἔχειν, &c.

πολλάκις νενικήκατε, καὶ Σικελιωτῶν,—ὧν οὐδ' ἀντιστῆναι οὐδεὶς, ἕως ἤκμαζε τὸ ναυτικὸν ἡμῖν, ἠξίωσεν,—ἀμύνασθε αὐτοὺς, καὶ δείξατε ὅτι καὶ μετὰ ἀσθενείας καὶ ξυμφορῶν ἡ ὑμετέρα ἐπιστήμη κρείσσων ἐστὶν ἑτέρας εὐτυχούσης ῥώμης. Yet to bring the words within the rules of grammatical propriety, is almost hopeless. While the argument of the context requires the use of the optative with ἂν, the words following call for the imperative: and while the imperative requires μὴ, the optative demands οὐ. To remove this difficulty, we may either, with Goeller and Dr. Arnold, regard δικαίως as an adverb standing for a clause, (i. e. ὡς τὸ δίκαιον βούλεται,) like ξυμφόρως at iii. 40, and ἀπίστως at i. 21, (see also iv. 86, and vi. 58.) or we may, with Poppo, consider the sentence as containing a mixture of two modes of expression, δικαίως οὐκ ἂν καταπροδίδοτε, and μὴ καταπροδίδοτε without δικαίως. Of which two modes of removing the difficulty, the latter, however harsh, seems deserving of the preference; for no instance do I know of this sensus prægnans in the case of an adverb, except when that is interposed in the middle, or placed at the end, of a clause.

ἠξίωσεν] For ἄξιον, ἀξιόχρεων ἑαυτὸν ἡγήσατο, 'ventured,' as Abresch explains, who compares supra iv. 122. Æschyl. Pers. 335, and Plato, Menex. 9. See note on v. 14, 1.

καὶ δείξατε — ῥώμης] Render, 'and show that even amidst weakness and mishaps your skill is better than the power, accompanied with good fortune, of others.' Similar in cast of thought to the present animated address, is that of the same speaker, at vi. 18, 4, καὶ τὴν παροῦσαν ἀνάγκην καὶ ἀπορίαν φοβερωτέραν ἡγησάμενοι τῶν πολεμίων. Parallel to ἀσθενείας here is ἀῤῥωστία at ch. 47, 1, supra. Evidently written in imitation of the present is a passage of Dio Cass. 1003, 29, δείξετε τοῖς ὀλέθροις τούτοις, ὅσον, καὶ δυστυχοῦντες, αὐτῶν προφέρομεν.

Ch. LXIV. The speaker, now turning to the Athenians, reminds them that the state possesses no future resources to repair defeat, should it come; that they must conquer, or else the country would be unable to repel the combined attacks of their foes at home and abroad; that, in short, their all is at stake, both individually and nationally, the lives and liberties of persons, and the safety of the commonwealth.

1. εἴ τε ξυμβήσεταί τι ἄλλο ἢ τὸ κρατεῖν] An euphemism for, 'should we suffer defeat:' on which see Valcken. on Herodot. iii. 62. With ἐπ' ἐκεῖνα πλευσουμένους compare Eurip. Iph. T. 904, κάπ' ἐκεῖν' ἐλθεῖν χρεών.

οἷς αὐτοὶ — ἐπήλθετε] Thus hinting at the treatment which they had to expect from, by a reference to the evils they meant to inflict on, the Syracusans.

2. In this section (forming the ἐπίλογοι, or conclusion) the speaker reminds them that the present was a crisis worthy of their utmost skill and valour; for not one fleet or army, but the whole power, the last hopes,—in short, the great name of Athens was there staked on their success. Compare Lucret. vi. 2, 'præclaro nomine, Athenæ.' Plut. Romul. init. and Camill. 17, τὸ μέγα τῆς Ῥώμης ὄνομα. Eurip. Troad. 1273, ὦ Τροία, τὸ κλεινὸν ὄνομ' ἀφαιρήσει τάχα.

ἐπιστήμῃ ἢ εὐψυχίᾳ, οὐκ ἂν ἐν ἄλλῳ μᾶλλον καιρῷ ἀποδειξάμενος, αὐτός τε αὐτῷ ὠφέλιμος γένοιτο καὶ τοῖς ξύμπασι σωτήριος."

LXV. Ὁ μὲν Νικίας, τοσαῦτα παρακελευσάμενος, εὐθὺς ἐκέλευε πληροῦν τὰς ναῦς. τῷ δὲ Γυλίππῳ καὶ τοῖς Συρακοσίοις παρῆν μὲν αἰσθάνεσθαι, ὁρῶσι καὶ αὐτὴν τὴν παρασκευήν, ὅτι ναυμαχήσουσιν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, προηγγέλθη δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ ἡ ἐπιβολὴ τῶν σιδηρῶν χειρῶν. 2. καὶ πρός τε τἆλλα ἐξηρτύσαντο ὡς ἕκαστα, καὶ πρὸς τοῦτο· τὰς γὰρ πρώρας καὶ τῆς νεὼς ἄνω ἐπὶ πολὺ κατεβύρσωσαν, ὅπως ἂν ἀπολισθάνοι καὶ μὴ ἔχοι ἀντιλαβὴν ἡ χεὶρ ἐπιβαλλομένη. 3. καὶ ἐπειδὴ πάντα ἑτοῖμα ἦν, παρεκελεύσαντο ἐκείνοις οἵ τε στρατηγοὶ καὶ Γύλιππος, καὶ ἔλεξαν τοιάδε.

LXVI. "Ὅτι μὲν καλὰ τὰ προειργασμένα, καὶ ὑπὲρ καλῶν τῶν μελλόντων ὁ ἀγὼν ἔσται, ὦ Συρακόσιοι καὶ ξύμμαχοι, οἵ τε πολλοὶ δοκεῖτε ἡμῖν εἰδέναι (οὐδὲ γὰρ ἂν οὕτως αὐτῶν προθύμως ἀντελάβεσθε), καὶ εἴ τις μὴ, ἐπὶ ὅσον δεῖ, ᾔσθηται, σημανοῦμεν. 2. Ἀθηναίους γὰρ, ἐς τὴν χώραν τήνδε ἐλθόντας πρῶτον μὲν ἐπὶ τῆς Σικελίας καταδουλώσει, ἔπειτ', εἰ κατορθώσειαν, καὶ τῆς Πελοποννήσου καὶ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος, καὶ ἀρχὴν τὴν ἤδη μεγίστην τῶν τε πρὶν Ἑλλήνων καὶ τῶν νῦν κεκτημένους, πρῶτοι ἀνθρώπων ὑποστάντες τῷ ναυτικῷ, ᾧπερ πάντα κατέσχον, τὰς μὲν νενικήκατε ἤδη ναυμαχίας, τὴν δ' ἐκ τοῦ εἰκότος νῦν νικήσετε. 3. ἄνδρες γὰρ ἐπει-

Ch. LXV. 2. τῆς νεὼς ἄνω ἐπὶ πολὺ] For ἐπὶ πολὺ τῆς ἄνω, 'over a great part of the upper works of the ship,' i. e. of each ship: a use of the article by no means common.

κατεβύρσωσαν] i. e. to use the words of Pausan. x. 13, 2, νεοδάρτοις ταῖς βύρσαις κατεστόρεσαν.

ὅπως ἂν ἀπολισθάνοι] 'that it might slip off.' So Eurip. Phœn. 1398, ὅπως σίδηρος ἐξολισθάνοι. Polyæn. p. 706, ὅπως αἱ μάχαιραι ἀπολισθάνοιεν. Aristoph. Eq. 490, ἔχε νῦν, ἄλειψον τὸν τράχηλον τουτωῖ, Ἵν' ἐξολισθαίνειν δύνῃ τὰς — διαβολὰς, where the word expected was λαβὰς, as here ἀντιλαβὴν, 'hand-hold.' So Lucian, t. i. 142, ὡς ὀλισθηρὸς καὶ δυσκάθεκτος (scil. εἶ), ὦ Πλοῦτε, οὐδεμίαν ἀντιλαβὴν παρεχόμενος.

3. οἵ τε στρατηγοὶ καὶ Γύλιππος] 'both their own generals and Gylippus.'

Ch. LXVI. This and the two next chapters contain an harangue such as we might expect from generals carried forward by the tide of success, and addressed to forces somewhat boastful at all times, and now anticipating an early and complete success; and the arguments urged are highly suitable to such persons.

1. This first section contains the proem, in which the speaker first lays down as a truth acknowledged by most of them, that 'their past victories were highly honourable to them, and might be regarded as a sure earnest of future success:' and then, to convince such as might be disposed to regard this as a too highly coloured representation, he proceeds, in the remaining part of this chapter, and the whole of the next, to show it to be entirely correct. In ch. 68 we have the conclusion, which is in its general character hortatory.

2. This section is occupied with the proof of the foregoing assertion, ὅτι καλὰ τὰ προειργασμένα, to have defeated those who possessed the greatest empire ever held by Greeks, and to have been the first to withstand, and at length utterly defeat, that navy by which they had borne down every thing, and still maintained their empire, cannot but be highly honourable, and present the fairest hopes of success on the present occasion.

ᾧπερ πάντα κατέσχον] 'by which they bore down every thing.' See note on iv. 92.

3. Here the speaker shows that while they themselves might well anticipate victory, their enemies will look forward to nothing but defeat, and consequently will δὰν, ᾧ ἀξιοῦσι προὔχειν, κολουθῶσι, τό γ' ὑπόλοιπον αὐτῶν τῆς δόξης ἀσθενέστερον αὐτὸ ἑαυτοῦ ἐστιν ἢ εἰ μηδ' ᾠήθησαν τὸ πρῶτον· καὶ τῷ παρ' ἐλπίδα τοῦ αὐχήματος σφαλλόμενοι, καὶ παρὰ ἰσχὺν τῆς δυνάμεως ἐνδιδόασιν· ὃ νῦν Ἀθηναίους εἰκὸς πεπονθέναι. LXVII. Ἡμῶν δὲ τό τε ὑπάρχον πρότερον,—ᾧπερ, καὶ ἀνεπιστήμονες ἔτι ὄντες, ἀπετολμήσαμεν,—βεβαιότερον νῦν, καὶ τῆς δοκήσεως προσγεγενημένης αὐτῷ, τὸ κρατίστους εἶναι εἰ τοὺς κρατίστους ἐνικήσαμεν, διπλασία ἑκάστου ἡ ἐλπίς. τὰ δὲ πολλὰ, πρὸς τὰς ἐπιχειρήσεις ἡ μεγίστη ἐλπὶς μεγίστην καὶ τὴν προθυμίαν παρέχεται. 2. τά τε τῆς ἀντιμιμήσεως αὐτῶν τῆς παρασκευῆς ἡμῶν τῷ μὲν ἡμετέρῳ τρόπῳ ξυνήθη τέ ἐστι, καὶ οὐκ ἀνάρμοστοι πρὸς fail to exert the power which they have,—being reduced by their late defeats to a despondency proportioned to the persuasion they had before entertained of their naval superiority. That this is no more than may be expected, he shows by an appeal to what is found to be generally the case; 'it being,' he says, 'an acknowledged truth, that after men have been worsted in that wherein they thought they excelled, their self-opinion is henceforward lower than it would have been if they had never thought so highly of themselves; and by coming short of their expectation in that wherein they prided themselves, they fall short in their efforts to draw forth the real strength they could exert.' Such is the general sense here intended. To descend to particular details and philological proof and illustration,—of κολουθῶσι the sense is, literally, 'have been cut down,' 'fallen short.' Compare Plut. Fab. ᾤοντο κεκολοῦσθαι. On the idiom in ἀσθενέστερον αὐτὸ ἑαυτοῦ, 'weaker than it was before,' see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 452. At ᾠήθησαν supply, not κολούεσθαι, but προὔχειν. At τῷ παρ' ἐλπίδα I would, with Goeller, supply ἀποβάντι, as at iv. 63, τῷ παρ' ἐλπίδα μὴ χαλεπῶς σφαλλέσθω. The genitive αὐχήματος depends on σφαλλόμενοι; the sense being, 'by an unexpected course of events frustrated of their vaunt, or their arrogant making sure of victory.' Similarly in a passage of St. James, iv. 16, we have, καυχᾶσθε ἐν ταῖς ἀλαζονείαις ὑμῶν, 'ye pride yourselves in your vauntful projects,' i. e. what you boasted you should do. Such is also the use of αὔχημα in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1558, 8. In καὶ παρὰ ἰσχὺν τῆς δυνάμεως ἐνδιδόασιν, 'they give way beyond even the power of their strength,' even that which they have really the power to achieve, there is not, what might be thought, any thing of pleonasm; but in ἰσχὺς, and also κράτος, we have words of middle signification simply denoting the force or power, be that small or great, which any one is able to exert. In such a case the word may be followed by τῆς δυνάμεως without any pleonasm, as here, and in a passage of Philo de Mundo, ἀήττητός ἐστι κατὰ πολλὴν ἰσχύος ῥώμην.

CH. LXVII. 1. The speaker now strengthens his argument by contrasting the state of the enemy with that of their own. Ἡμῶν τὸ ὑπάρχον πρότερον. Meaning, as Poppo points out, the pristine and innate courage pertaining to us as Dorians. Of the words, a little after, τῆς δοκήσεως —ἐνικήσαμεν, the sense is, 'and the opinion being [now] superadded to it, that we are the best, since we have conquered the best.'

2, 3. There is here an anticipation of two possible arguments, 1. that 'the enemy have a far better chance of success than before, from the new arrangements and better preparations' adverted to, supra ch. 62. To which the answer is, that 'their new inventions were but crude imitations of the Syracusan tactics, and have been fully provided against: moreover, that the very use of those tactics by those unaccustomed to them would produce irremediable confusion,—especially among the crowds of landsmen which covered their decks. 2. That as for the superior number of their ships, they would, from the narrowness of the space, give them no real advantage, but rather make them a broader mark for the Syracusan attacks.'

2. τὰ τῆς ἀντιμιμήσεως] This is not, as Bauer imagines, for ἡ ἀντιμίμησις ἡμῶν, (for that would lead to an absurd sense,) but is put for τὰ (πράγματα) ἐν οἷς ἀντιμιμοῦνται ἡμᾶς.

παρασκευῆς] 'fitting up, equipment, and dispositions in general.'

ἕκαστον αὐτῶν ἐσόμεθα· οἱ δ', ἐπειδὰν πολλοὶ μὲν ὁπλῖται ἐπὶ τῶν καταστρωμάτων παρὰ τὸ καθεστηκὸς ὦσι, πολλοὶ δὲ καὶ ἀκοντισταὶ χερσαῖοι, ὡς εἰπεῖν, Ἀκαρνᾶνές τε καὶ ἄλλοι ἐπὶ ναῦς ἀναβάντες, οἳ οὐδ' ὅπως καθεζομένους χρὴ τὸ βέλος ἀφεῖναι εὑρήσουσι, πῶς οὐ σφαλοῦσί τε τὰς ναῦς, καὶ ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς πάντες, οὐκ ἐν τῷ αὐτῶν τρόπῳ κινούμενοι, ταράξονται; 3. ἐπεὶ καὶ τῷ πλήθει τῶν νεῶν οὐκ ὠφελήσονται,—εἴ τις καὶ τόδε ὑμῶν, ὅτι οὐκ ἴσαις ναυμαχήσει, πεφόβηται—ἐν ὀλίγῳ γὰρ πολλαὶ ἀργότεραι μὲν ἐς τὸ δρᾶν τι ὧν βούλονται ἔσονται, ῥᾷσται δὲ ἐς τὸ βλάπτεσθαι ἀφ' ὧν ἡμῖν παρεσκεύασται. 4. τὸ δ' ἀληθέστατον γνῶτε, ἐξ ὧν ἡμεῖς οἰόμεθα σαφῶς πεπύσθαι· ὑπερβαλλόντων γὰρ αὐτοῖς τῶν κακῶν, καὶ βιαζόμενοι ὑπὸ τῆς παρούσης ἀπορίας, ἐς ἀπόνοιαν καθεστήκασιν, οὐ παρασκευῆς πίστει μᾶλλον ἢ τύχης ἀποκινδυνεύσει ἕκαστον] So Bekker edits, for the common reading τὴν ἑκάστην, where Poppo shows that the article cannot be tolerated; and he edits, from two MSS., ἑκάστην. Thus we must supply ἀντιμίμησιν. The authority however for this reading is too weak.

In ἀκοντισταὶ χερσαῖοι, 'landsmen darters,' the term χερσαῖοι is used contemptuously, as when our sailors speak of landsmen or land-lopers. Such is its use also in Eurip. Androm. 457, ναύτην ἐθῆκεν ἀντὶ χερσαίου κακόν: and so, in another passage of our author, supra i. 142, we have, ἄνδρες γεωργοὶ, καὶ οὐ θαλάσσιοι, 'mere clowns, not seamen.'

οὐδ' ὅπως — εὑρήσουσι] literally, 'will not even find out how they may launch the dart (meaning their darts) sitting:' for that required a standing posture, and space for free motion. Of the words following, πῶς οὐ σφαλοῦσι τὰς ναῦς, the sense is, 'how will they not tip up, upset, (or, in nautical phraseology, capsize,) the ship,' namely, by their awkward attempts to rise, in order to launch their darts. Such I believe to be the true meaning of the words,—which has been missed by the commentators: and no wonder; for of the phrase σφάλ. τὴν ναῦν so rare is the use, that I have noted only two examples elsewhere,—namely, Polyæn. Str. iii. 11, 13, οὐκ ἐξανίσταντο διὰ τὸν φόβον, οὐδὲ τὴν ναῦν ἔσφαλλον (a passage probably written with a view to the present). Plut. Themist. τὰς ναῦς ἔσφαλλε καὶ παρεδίδου πλαγίας τοῖς Ἕλλησι. Finally, a direct allusion to this sense exists in Xen. Hipp. iii. οἱ ὑπέρφοβοι ἵπποι ('over-frightened horses') τὸν ἀναβάτην ἔσφηλαν: as we should say, 'capsize the rider.' Hesychius, too, explains σφάλλειν by κλίνειν, meaning to sway on one side, as we should say to tip up. This sense of the term arises easily out of the primitive one, to trip up, as said of a wrestler.

οὐκ ἐν τῷ αὐτῶν τρόπῳ] Meaning, not in the form or manner they were used to while on terra firma, and not tottering on the ship's deck.

4. ὑπερβαλλόντων—πράξαντες χεῖρον] Meaning that 'they need not be afraid of the counter-preparations of the enemy, since they are the last efforts of men driven to desperation by the extremity of present evils, and fain to try every chance of escape.' Such is undoubtedly the general sense here intended; though to fairly elicit it from the words as they stand, is a matter of some difficulty. Now, this difficulty, centering in the words ἀπόνοιαν καθεστήκασιν, is sought to be obviated by supposing, with Dr. Arnold, the form of expression ἐς ἀπόνοιαν καθεστήκασιν as equivalent to ἀπονεμομένων ἀνθρώπων βουλεύματι ἐπιχειροῦσι, 'they are reduced to make a desperate effort.'

The next words, οὐ παρασκευῆς πίστει — ἀποκινδυνεύσει, stand for the plainer οὐκ ἐν παρ. πίστει, &c., 'not so much in reliance on their actual force, as on the hazardry of fortune.' In the words οὕτως ὅπως δύνανται another difficulty presents itself; for these cannot be construed with those immediately preceding. If the mode of taking ἐς ἀπόνοιαν καθ. proposed by Dr. Arnold could be relied on, they might at least be referred to them: but so precarious, and hence little satisfactory, is this view, that it is better to leave to the words their ordinary sense, 'were reduced to desperation,' and suppose the words οὕτως ὅπως δύνανται to have been, by inadvertence on the part of the writer, without οὕτως ὅπως δύνανται—ἵν', ἢ βιασάμενοι ἐκπλεύσωσιν, ἢ κατὰ γῆν μετὰ τοῦτο τὴν ἀποχώρησιν ποιῶνται, ὡς τῶν γε παρόντων οὐκ ἂν πράξαντες χεῖρον. LXVIII. Πρὸς οὖν ἀταξίαν τε τοιαύτην, καὶ τύχην ἀνδρῶν ἑαυτὴν παραδεδωκυῖαν πολεμιωτάτων, ὀργῇ προσμίξωμεν· καὶ νομίσωμεν ἅμα μὲν νομιμώτατον εἶναι πρὸς τοὺς ἐναντίους, οἳ ἂν ὡς ἐπὶ τιμωρίᾳ τοῦ προσπεσόντος δικαιώσωσιν, ἀποπλῆσαι τῆς γνώμης τὸ θυμούμενον, ἅμα δὲ ἐχθροὺς ἀμύνασθαι ‡ ἐγγενησόμενον ἡμῖν, [καὶ] τὸ λεγόμενόν που ἥδιστον εἶναι. 2. ὡς such a word as they could be referred to; in which case, the only way to obtain a construction and complete sense is mentally to supply ἀποκινδυνεύοντες from ἀποκινδυνεῦσαι. As to the conjecture of Duk. (which Goeller and Arnold seem half-inclined to adopt,) it would, indeed, remove the difficulty complained of, but at the too serious sacrifice of that violence to the words ἐς ἀπόνοιαν, involved in the method of Arnold above mentioned. I say violence; for I do not even know of a single passage in which the phrase ἐς ἀπόνοιαν does not terminate a clause. Indeed the sense is too absolute to admit of any addition.

Of the words ἢ κατὰ γῆν μετὰ τοῦτο the full sense is, 'or else, should they not force the passage, they may afterwards,' &c. With τῶν γε παρόντων, 'under present circumstances,' compare ὡς ἐκ παρόντων, iv. 17.

For vulg. πράξοντες, (which, though retained and defended by Poppo, is not permitted by the norma loquendi of ancient Atticism,) I read, with Bekker, Dobree, and Goeller, on the authority of one of the best MSS., πράξαντες. Render, 'they would not make their situation worse.'

Ch. LXVIII. 1. ἀταξίαν] 'a confused rabble;' put, by a bold hypallage, for ἀνθρώπους ἀτάκτους. Compare Æschin. c. Ctes. § 15, μηθ' ὑμεῖς ποτε εἰς τοσαύτην ἀταξίαν τῶν νόμων προβαιῆτε. Of the words following, τύχην — πολεμιωτάτων, the sense is, 'against the beaten down and craven fortune of our bitter enemies.'

καὶ νομίσωμεν — θυμούμενον] Of this perplexed sentence the construction is well laid down by Goeller thus: καὶ νομίσωμεν, ἅμα μὲν νομιμώτατον εἶναι πρὸς τοὺς ἐναντίους, τὸ δικαιῶσαι, ὡς ἐπὶ τιμωρίᾳ τοῦ προσπεσόντος, ἀποπλῆσαι τῆς γνώμης τὸ θυμούμενον, ἅμα δὲ καὶ τὸ λεγόμενόν που ἥδιστον εἶναι, ἐχθροὺς ἀμύνασθαι ἐγγενησόμενον ἡμῖν. He adds, that 'the former part of the sentence might have been thus expressed: καὶ νομίσωμεν, ἅμα μὲν νομιμώτατα πρᾶξαι, οἳ ἂν—δικαιώσωσιν ἀποπλῆσαι τῆς γνώμης τὸ θυμούμενον.' As it is, there is a blending of two constructions, frequent in Thucydides. Heilm. paved the way to a right understanding of the sentence, by being the first to perceive that οἳ is not to be referred to the antecedent ἐναντίους, but is to be conjoined with νομιμώτατον, of which predicate all the next words, πρὸς τοὺς ἐναντίους, οἳ ἂν—δικαιώσωσιν ἀποπλῆσαι τῆς γν. τὸ θυμ., form the subject. In this view Dobree and Poppo coincide; referring, for examples of similar constructions, to other passages of our author, ii. 41. iv. 18. With respect to the term ἀποπλῆσαι, this is, like ἐμπλ. and ἐκπλ., not unfrequently used with nouns subst. denoting any passion, especially anger; and signifies to satiate or glut. See note on iii. 82, 8. Τὸ θυμούμενον stands for τὸν θυμὸν, as in Eurip. Hec. 30, and Chrys. t. iv. 661. Dio Cass. 1201. Ἐγγενησόμενον is to be joined with νομίσωμεν.

I agree with Poppo in thinking that the καὶ before τὸ λεγόμενον, absent from one MS. (to which add Mus. Brit.) is better away. The expression τὸ λεγόμενον is frequently used of sentiments either proverbial, or, as here, so trite and well known as to require no more than an allusion to them. Of που thus subjoined to this form τὸ λεγόμενον, I have noted no example elsewhere; but που is found in a form of rough quotation in a passage of the New Testament, Heb. ii. 6, διεμαρτύρετο δέ που τις, &c. Supposing the καὶ to be genuine, Dr. Arnold proposes two modes of construction, one of which, making the words τὸ λεγόμενόν που to stand by themselves, is quite inadmissible, because I know of no instance of the form τὸ λεγόμενον followed by που. As to the other mode, by which ἐχθροὺς ἀμύνασθαι and τὸ λεγόμενόν που ἥδιστον are connected, both being regarded as the subject to ἐγγενησόμενον,—that involves so much harshness, that, rather than to adopt a mode of construction so unsatisfactory, better is it at once to regard the καὶ as insititious, and so suppose the sense to be as follows: 'And let us account that it is δὲ ἐχθροὶ καὶ ἔχθιστοι πάντες ἴστε, οἵ γε ἐπὶ τὴν ἡμετέραν ἦλθον δουλωσόμενοι· ἐν ᾧ, εἰ κατώρθωσαν, ἀνδράσι μὲν ἂν τἆλγιστα προσέθεσαν, παισὶ δὲ καὶ γυναιξὶ τὰ ἀπρεπέστατα, πόλει δὲ τῇ πάσῃ τὴν αἰσχίστην ἐπίκλησιν. 3. ἀνθ' ὧν μὴ μαλακισθῆναί τινα πρέπει, μηδὲ τὸ ἀκινδύνως ἀπελθεῖν αὐτοὺς κέρδος νομίσαι· τοῦτο μὲν γὰρ καὶ ἐὰν κρατήσωσιν, ὁμοίως δράσουσι· τὸ δὲ, πραξάντων ἐκ τοῦ εἰκότος ἃ βουλόμεθα, τούσδε τε κολασθῆναι καὶ τῇ πάσῃ Σικελίᾳ καρπουμένῃ καὶ πρὶν ἐλευθερίαν βεβαιοτέραν παραδοῦναι, καλὸς ὁ ἀγών. 4. καὶ κινδύνων οὗτοι σπανιώτατοι, οἳ ἂν, ἐλάχιστα ἐκ τοῦ σφαλῆναι βλάπτοντες, πλεῖστα διὰ τὸ εὐτυχῆσαι ὠφελῶσιν."

LXIX. Καὶ οἱ μὲν τῶν Συρακοσίων στρατηγοὶ καὶ Γύλιππος, τοιαῦτα καὶ αὐτοὶ τοῖς σφετέροις στρατιώταις παρακελευσάμενοι, ἀντεπλήρουν τὰς ναῦς εὐθύς, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ᾐσθάνοντο. 2. ὁ δὲ Νικίας ὑπὸ τῶν παρόντων ἐκπεπληγμένος, καὶ ὁρῶν οἷος ὁ κίνδυνος, καὶ ὡς ἐγγὺς ἤδη ἦν,—ἐπειδὴ καὶ ὅσον οὐκ ἔμελλον ἀνάγεσθαι,—καὶ νομίσας, (ὅπερ πάσχουσιν ἐν τοῖς μεγάλοις ἀγῶσι) πάντα τε ἔργῳ ἔτι σφίσιν ἐνδεᾶ εἶναι, καὶ λόγῳ αὐτοῖς οὔπω ἱκανὰ εἰρῆσθαι, αὖθις τῶν τριηράρχων ἕνα ἕκαστον ἀνεκάλει, πατρόθεν τε ἐπονομάζων, καὶ αὐτοὺς ὀνομαστὶ καὶ φυλήν, ἀξιῶν τό τε καθ' ἑαυτὸν, ᾧ ὑπῆρχε λαμπρότητός τι, μὴ προδιδόναι τινὰ, καὶ τὰς πατρικὰς ἀρετὰς, ὧν ἐπιφανεῖς ἦσαν οἱ πρόγονοι, μὴ ἀφανίζειν, most rightful for men, in respect of their enemies, to think it allowable for them, in taking vengeance on the aggressor, to glut their hearts' fury; and moreover, that in thus taking vengeance we shall gain what is somewhere said to be the sweetest of enjoyments.'

3. μὴ μαλακισθῆναι] 'not to be softened into compassion.' Compare iii. 41, 7, μὴ μαλακισθέντες, where see note. Κέρδος νομίσαι, 'to think it a clear gain,' and thus to be quite satisfied with it; an expression also occurring at iii. 33, and equivalent to the more usual one κέρδος ἡγεῖσθαι, on which see note at ii. 44, 4. Ἀκινδύνως, 'without bringing any danger [on us].' Compare ch. 81, 4.

τὸ δὲ, πραξάντων—καλὸς ὁ ἀγών] At πραξ. is to be supplied ἡμῶν; and the word ἐλευθερίαν is to be taken twice. Render, 'but, after having done,—as in all probability we shall,—what we wish, to avenge ourselves of these, and to deliver to all Sicily a freedom before enjoyed, but then more secure and stable;—that were an achievement worthy of all honour!'

4. σπανιώτατοι] 'the rarest,' 'most to be prized.' Compare i. 33, εὐπραξία σπανιωτέρα.

Ch. LXIX. In recounting the preparations for the engagement, Thucydides brings forward that which, without a word of panegyric on Nicias, yet stamps his conduct on this occasion as truly great. Not content was he with having addressed the mariners in a manner the most calculated to allay their fears and rouse their courage; but, calling around him the captains of ships, just as they were embarking, he addressed them in a strain of still deeper earnestness, reminding them of every distinction, hereditary or personal, that might rouse their emulation, and of every tie, political, domestic, and religious, that could stir up their courage.

2. πατρόθεν ἐπονομάζων] On this Goeller compares a passage of Hom. Il. x. 68, πατρόθεν ἐκ γενεῆς ὀνομάζων ἄνδρα ἕκαστον. Other passages to the same purpose occur in various writers,—as Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 15. Plut. Brut. 49. Soph. Œd. Col. 215. Tzetz. on Lycophr. 1204. Arrian, E. A. ii. 10, 3. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1764. Here, then, calling each by his father's name, as well as his own, Nicias employed a method pre-eminently adapted to rouse courage and excite zeal in a case of extremity.

τῆς ἐν αὐτῇ ἀνεπιτάκτου—ἐξουσίας] literally, 'of the undictated-to liberty of action therein as to their manner of life.' Compare ii. 37, 2. The term δίαιτα bears the same sense here as at ii. 16.

ἄλλα τε λέγων ὅσα—ἐπιβοῶνται] Render, 'And adding more besides, and other arguments, such as are brought forward on every occasion, about men's wives and children, and the gods of their fathers, not fearing lest any should charge them with repeating old and stale topics, but freely uttering all that men do utter in such moments, believing it to be useful in the present emergency.' (Dr. Arnold.) As illustrative of this sense of ἀρχαιολογεῖν, (literally, to tell old tales, i. e. to dwell on stale or hacknied topics,) compare Lucian, ii. 337, ἀνηγόμην γε ὡς ἀρχαιολογήσων ὑμῖν, and Isocr. ad Nicocl. p. 40, εἰ δὲ δή τι καὶ τῶν ἀρχαίων εἰπεῖν

3. ἀναγκαῖα] 'what must suffice.' See note on i. 61, 2, and ii. 70, 3.

4. παραλειφθέντα] So I have edited, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, on the authority of the best MSS., for vulg. καταλειφ., which admits of no defence. Yet I have little doubt that περιλειφ., conjectured by Bekker, is the true reading, since while it is hardly to be imagined that any part of the ζεῦγμα had been neglected to be closed; on the other hand, by reading περιλειφ. we obtain, for a sense unsatisfactory, one entirely to be approved,—namely, 'yet left, or remaining, unclosed;' the ζεῦγμα being, it seems, not quite finished. And agreeable to this reading is the explanation of the Scholiast, τοῦτο τὸ μέρος ὃ οὐκ ἔζευκτο, ἀλλ' ἀνεῴγει, τοῦ στόματος. Nothing, indeed, is there in the former, or the latter part of the present narrative, conveying an express mention of the fact; but, considering the shortness of the time, it is such as to carry a high degree of probability: and not unfrequent in our author (and indeed in ancient historians in general) are the instances of such petty circumstances not expressly mentioned, yet afterwards adverted to as if they had been mentioned: though, indeed, the words at ch. 70, 1, κατὰ τὸν ἔκπλουν—ἐφύλασσον, plainly advert to the fact of there being yet an opening; for otherwise why should a squadron have been stationed κατὰ τὸν ἔκπλουν? Certain it is that the two terms παραλείπω and περιλ. are frequently confounded. Thus, for instance, in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1758, for vulg. περιλ., παραλειφθέντα has been well emended, though only on conjecture, by Hudson and Reiske. As to the objection which (after Goeller) Arnold advances against διέκπλουν, namely, that the term διέκπλους is no where else in Thucydides used in any other sense than that of breaking the enemy's line,—that has very little force; for why, it may be asked, should not the word here bear its proper sense, as used to signify transitus, exitus?—a sense also found in Herodot. vii. 36, (which passage seems to have been here had in mind by Thucydides,) διέκπλοον κατέλιπον, and iv. 179, διέκπλοον τῶν βραχέων δεικνύναι. Arrian, Ind. xxii. 8. Plato, p. 115. Dio Cass. p. 972. The word has, moreover, the support of Dionys. Hal., who has, in his Jud. de Hist. Thucyd. ch. 26, cited this very passage of our author. Finally, as to the method proposed by Poppo and Goeller, of removing the difficulty, supposed to exist in these words, by cancelling καὶ τὸν παραλ. διέκπλουν,—that would be cutting the knot, which may, we see, be untied; and is moreover forbidden by two passages (evidently written with a view to the present) of Dio Cass. p. 615, 82, ἵνα βιάσωνται τὸν ἔκπλουν, 'force the outlet,' and 293, 69. That writer certainly had the latter of the above words, and consequently the former; though, from the turn he gives to the passage, it was unnecessary for his purpose. The words βουλόμενοι βιάσασθαι ἐς τὸ ἔξω must, as Duker shows, be taken together in the sense 'wishing to force their way to the outside [of the bar].' So Lucian, cited by Duker, ἀπὸ τῆς καθ' αὑτὰ τάξεως εἰς ἀλλοτρίαν [τάξιν] βιάζεσθαι. I add Xenoph. Cyrop. iii. 3, 69, δείσας μὴ—εἰ βιάσαιντο εἴσω, sc. τοῦ ῥύματος.

CH. LXX. 1. προεξαγαγόμενοι] Goeller, Arnold, and Didot edit, from Dionys., προεξαναγ., which is preferred by Duk. and Poppo, and which Krueger maintains to alone be correct, on the ground that, 'however the former might be proper as applied to land-forces, (see vii. 3 & 7. viii. 28.) it would not be such as used of ships.' But, not to say that the very existence of the latter term has to be proved, it may be doubted whether the distinction in question be not altogether founded in fancy. Certain it is that we are by no means justified in running counter to the stream of external evidence on such speculative grounds.

παραβοηθοῖ] So Bekker edits, on the authority of four MSS. (to which add Cod. Clar. 2 manu,) further confirmed by the evidence of four others, for vulg. παραβοηθῇ, which is retained by Poppo and Goeller; but not on good grounds. As to the reading of Dionys., παρεβοήθει, it does not deserve a moment's consideration; though Arnold has edited it, under the impression, little founded in reason, of the common reading involving an absurdity. Certainly, as far as respects the sense, (for a statement of which, see my Translation,) such a change is not only unnecessary, but detrimental.

2. οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι] The ἄλλοι between οἱ and Ἀθηναῖοι Poppo has inserted in brackets, on the authority of many of the best MSS., and at the recommendation of Krueger, who takes it as standing for οἱ ἄλλοι, Ἀθηναῖοι ὄντες. That would, however, involve here no little harshness, and, as Goeller observes, would require, for ἄλλοι, ἕτεροι to have been written.

τὰς κλῄσεις] i. e. the fastenings by which the ships were bound together.

3. ὁπότε κελευθείη] scil. τις, meaning the κελευστὴς, who performed an office something like that of our boatswain. See Bp. Blomfield on Æschyl. Pers. 403, and note on ii. 84. Εὐθεράπευον, 'were studiously careful;' as vi. 61, θεραπεύοντες μὴ θορυβεῖν. By τὰ ἀπὸ τοῦ καταστρώματος is meant, as Dr. Arnold explains, the service on deck.

4. ξυμπεσουσῶν — ἐναυμάχησαν] See Plut. Anton. ch. 66 & 67.

ἐμβολαὶ — προσβολαὶ] The difference between these terms is, that the former denoted the regular charge with the beak; the latter, any sort of impetus by running right along-aside, broadside to each other. Ἀνακρούσεις. On this term see note at vii. 36: and on διέκπλους, just after, see note at i. 49.

5. προσφέροιτο] 'might bear down upon.' Τοῖς ἀκοντίοις—ἐχρῶντο, 'resorted to the use of,' &c. Compare Acts xxvii. 17, βοηθείαις ἐχρῶντο.

6. δύο τε—ξυνηρτῆσθαι] Evidently written in imitation of these are the words of Dio Cass. p. 627, δύο τε γὰρ ἢ καὶ τέσσαρα τῇ αὐτῇ νηὶ προσπίπτουσαι, &c.

περιστάναι] The term, as Jacobs observes, properly signifies circumstare, and that as understood both literally and figuratively of danger, necessity, &c. (see note at iii. 54, and vi. 61.) but here it bears the sense obruere.

7. πολλὴ γὰρ δὴ ἡ παρακέλευσις καὶ βυὴ, &c.] Imitated from these are the words of Appian, i. 478, βοῆς δὲ καὶ παρακελεύσεως ἑκατέρωθεν. Compare also Æschyl. Pers. 386, τάξις δὲ τάξιν παρεκάλει, 'squadron exhorted squadron;' and Sallust, Catil. ch. 6, 'alius alium hortari.' The sense here is well expressed by the version of Acacius, 'exhortationes utrimque, multæ vociferationes magistrorum erant, quas vel ars vel præsens concertatio postulabat.' With εἴ ποτε καὶ αὖθις compare Lycophr. 732, καί ποτ' αὖθις. Of ἀντιλαβέσθαι, a little after, the sense is 'to strive for,' as in seizing hold of any thing. See Arrian, E. A. iv. 29, 14. Ἐπαυξῆσαι, 'to strengthen, consolidate [its power];' as supra ii. 36, τὰ δὲ πλείω αὐτῆς—ἐπηύξαμεν.

Render, 'whether they retreat, as esteeming the most hostile land more their own (or belonging to them) than the sea acquired with no small labour.' After ὀλίγου I have, with Bekker and Goeller, received into the text (on the authority of Dionys. Hal., Cod. Vat., Schol., and Valla) the word πόνου, as yielding a far better sense than what has been supplied after ὀλίγου, namely, the word χρόνου. See ii. 36 & 62. On the use, which is rare, of the participle κεκτημένος in a passive sense, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 496, e. In the words, further on, φεύγοντας φεύγουσι, there is much point and vigour imparted by the bringing together of two words mutually opposed: and in φεύγοντας, Jacobs well observes, the iteration of a sense already expressed is adopted for the sake of the opposition.

CH. LXXI. 1. πολὺν τὸν ἀγῶνα — εἶχε] 'sustained a mighty conflict and commotion of mind.' Some doubt has been entertained as to what is the true reading here. For vulg. ξύστασιν, Duker thinks the Scholiast must have read ξύντασιν: and indeed ξύντασιν seems to have been read by Valla, and is found in what is little less than a transcript of this passage in Dio Cass. p. 307, ἀντιπάλου γὰρ τῆς μάχης — τῆς ψυχῆς συντάσει, συνιέναι εἴλοντο. On the other hand, the reading ξύστασιν is supported by a passage, as evidently written in close imitation of the present, at p. 575 & 576 of the same writer: ὁ πεζὸς—συστάσει τῆς γνώμης συνέσχοντο. Such, too, there is every reason to think, was read by Plutarch, who in a passage, p. 347, D, cited by Duker, writes, with reference to the present passage, ἄλαστον ἀγῶνα καὶ σύστασιν τῆς γνώμης ἔχων (for there either σύντασιν or σύστασιν, and not, what is altogether indefensible, vulg. σύνταξιν, may justly be presumed to be the true reading. Σύστασιν, however, to which ἄλαστον points rather than σύντασιν, is there to be preferred, and perhaps is the true reading. Dio Cass. p. 307). Finally, the reading ξύστασιν is further supported by a passage of Plut. Vit. Hom. § 207, ἡ σύστασις τῆς ψυχῆς ἀνίεται καὶ τὰ μέλη τοῦ σώματος λύεται, and by Eurip. Hippol. 987, Πάτερ, μένος μὲν ξύστασίς τε τῶν φρενῶν Δεινή.

To advert to the sense of ξύστασιν, the term may be supposed to signify conflict, as in certain passages adduced from Hdot. vi. 117, and vii. 167: and so Plut. cited by Krueg. has, ὅταν μάλιστα σύστασιν ὁ ἀγὼν ἔχῃ. So understood, then, the words καὶ ξύστασιν τῆς γνώμης are exegetical of τὸν ἀγῶνα preceding. Render, 'the land-forces of each party themselves sustained a great fight, even a conflict of mind:' a highly expressive agonistic metaphor, with which compare one occurring in a passage of the New Testament, Heb. x. 32, πολλὴν ἄθλησιν ὑπεμείνατε παθημάτων, τοῦτο μὲν, ὀνειδισμοῖς τε καὶ θλίψεσι θεατριζόμενοι, τοῦτο δὲ, κοινωνοὶ ('partakers by sympathy') τῶν οὕτως ἀναστρεφομένων γενηθέντες. Similarly Dionys. Hal. Ant. (by an evident imitation of this narrative,) describing the feelings of the Roman and of the Alban armies, while looking on at the combat of the Horatii and Curiatii, writes, τὸ πρὸς τοὺς οἰκείους ἀγωνιστὰς ἑκάστους συμπαθὲς ἐπὶ τὸ βεβουλευμένον ἐλάμβανε τὰ πρασσόμενα.—Ὥστε πολλοί, ἐκ τοῦ φιλονεικεῖν τε καὶ συμπαθεῖν τοῖς σφετέροις, ἔλαθον αὐτοὺς τοῦ τῶν κινδυνευόντων μεταλαμβανόντων πάθους, ἀγωνισταὶ, μᾶλλον ἐβούλοντο, ἢ θεαταὶ, τῶν δρωμένων γεγονέναι.

ὁ αὐτόθεν] scil. πεζός. Meaning, the soldiery of that country. By οἱ ἐπελθόντες understand the invaders. On the construction see Matth. Gr. § 562, 1, note 1.

2. πάντων γὰρ δὴ ἀνακειμένων—ἐς τὰς ναῦς] 'every thing with the Athenians depending on the ships.'

καὶ διὰ τὸ—ἔχειν] Here there exists a certain perplexity, arising, it is admitted, from corruption in the text, which, however, the MSS. extant do not enable us to emend. The conjecture of Bekker, δι' αὐτὸ, for διὰ τὸ, has the support of Codd τῆς τύχης ἀνώμαλον, ἀνώμαλον καὶ τὴν ἔποψιν τῆς ναυμαχίας ἐκ τῆς γῆς ἠναγκάζοντο ἔχειν. 3. δι' ὀλίγου γὰρ οὔσης τῆς θέας, καὶ οὐ πάντων ἅμα ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ σκοπούντων, εἰ μέν τινες ἴδοιέν πη τοὺς σφετέρους ἐπικρατοῦντας, ἀνεθάρσησάν τε ἂν, καὶ πρὸς ἀνάκλησιν θεῶν, μὴ στερῆσαι σφᾶς τῆς σωτηρίας, ἐτρέποντο· οἱ δ' ἐπὶ τὸ ἡσσώμενον βλέψαντες ὀλοφυρμῷ τε ἅμα μετὰ βοῆς ἐχρῶντο, καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν δρωμένων τῆς ὄψεως, καὶ τὴν γνώμην μᾶλλον τῶν ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ ἐδουλοῦντο. 4. ἄλλοι δὲ καὶ πρὸς ἀντίπαλόν τι τῆς ναυ-

Venet. and Clar., but in the latter of these MSS. the reading in question is an altered one. Moreover, (as Poppo, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold point out,) no tolerable sense thus arises. In his 2nd edition Goeller has edited, from conjecture, καὶ διὰ τὸ ἀγχώμαλον, ἀνώμαλον καὶ τὴν ἔποψιν, &c., according to which the sense will be, 'propterea quod pugna anceps diu fuit, et pugna et aspectus inæquales fuerunt:' a highly ingenious conjecture, which derives some support from the words at § 5, ἀγχώμαλα ἐναυμάχουν, and which Poppo is inclined to adopt. But I am far from certain whether this be altogether satisfactory: and when Goeller urges that the similarity of the two words ἀγχώμαλον and ἀνώμαλον caused one of them to be overlooked and lost, he forgets that this would serve to account for the loss of ἀγχώμαλον only after, not before ἀνώμαλον: and τὸ ἀγχώμαλον occurs, I believe, nowhere else; and what is more, the καὶ, just after, is adverse to this view, and rather tends to bear out that propounded by Bauer, and adopted by myself in my small edition, as also by Jacobs, Dobree, and Arnold. Now, however, I doubt whether ἀνώμαλον, thus taken twice, can be justified by the example of any good early Attic writer, and I suspect that ἀνώμαλον must be written twice; the καὶ having reference to this second ἀνώμαλον. But there exists, I apprehend, a somewhat greater deficiency than that of one word, since the sense even thus is incomplete. I suspect that our author wrote, for the words as they now stand, καὶ διὰ τὸ ἀνώμαλον τῆς τύχης, ἀνώμαλον καὶ τὴν ἔποψιν τῆς ναυμαχίας, κ. τ. λ. Thus the antithesis will be complete. Easily might the words τῆς τύχης ἀνώμαλον be lost by the circumstance of ἀνώμαλον occurring twice. Of the expression τὸ ἀνώμαλον τῆς τύχης an example occurs in Liban. Orat. p. 716: and so in Appian i. 378, we have ἀνώμαλον δαιμόνιον, 'fortuna inconstans.' Eurip. Scyr. Frag. ii. 1, τῶν βροτείων ὡς ἀνώμαλοι τύχαι, and Diod. Sic. t. ix. 73, ἀνωμαλία τῆς τύχης, and viii. 143. See also Manetho Apotel. ii. 216. iii. 306, and Schol. on Eurip. Hipp. 1102. So reading, then, we may render, 'And by reason of the fluctuating inconstancy (or vicissitude) of fortune, [sometimes verging one way, and sometimes another,] they were obliged to have their view of the sea-fight from land also fluctuating (meaning, that they had to see at one time their countrymen conquering, at another defeated).' Similarly in a passage of Plut. Nic. 25, written with a view to sections 1 and 2 of this chapter, we have, ἡ δὲ ναυμαχία—γενομένη, καὶ μηδὲν ἐλάττονα πάθη καὶ θορύβους παρασχοῦσα τοῖς θεωμένοις, ἢ τοῖς ἀγωνιζομένοις, διὰ τὴν παντὸς ἐπίβλεψιν τοῦ (I conj. του) ἔργου ('because of every one's having his eyes on a battle') ποικίλας μεταβολὰς καὶ ἀπροσδοκήτους ἐν ὀλίγῳ (scil. χρόνῳ) λαμβάνοντος. Little doubt is there but that Plutarch had in his copy ἀνώμαλον τῆς τύχης: and so perhaps had Josephus, who in a passage of his Bell. Jud. vi. 2, 7, evidently written with a view to the present, has, ἀεὶ δ' ἐφ' ὁποτέρων βρίσειε ῥέπων ('fluctuans') ὁ πόλεμος, παρακέλευσις μὲν τῶν πλεονεκτούντων οἰμωγαὶ δὲ τῶν τρεπομένων. Οὔτε δ' αἱ φυγαὶ τόπον εἶχον, οὔθ' αἱ διώξεις· ἀλλ' ἀνώμαλοι ῥοπαὶ—ἐγένοντο, 'the scales of fortune were inconstant, hovering first one way, and then another.' See note on v. 103, 2, ἐπὶ ῥοπῆς—ὄντες.

So certain appears the emendation above proposed, that I have ventured to insert the words in question in the text (though in small characters); especially as Goeller had not hesitated to insert the word ἀγχώμαλον.

3. ἀπὸ τῶν—ἐδουλοῦντο] Render, 'nay, at the sight of what was done, they were even more daunted in mind than those engaged in the action.' On the force of the expression τὴν γνώμην ἐδουλοῦντο see note at iv. 34, 1, and ii. 61, where we have, δουλοῖ γὰρ φρόνημα τὸ αἰφνίδιον καὶ, &c.: a close imitation of the present is found in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 19, ἔπειτα ἀναβοήσεις τε ἀθρόαι παρ'

μαχίας ἀπιδόντες, διὰ τὸ ἀκρίτως ξυνεχὲς τῆς ἀμίλλης, καὶ τοῖς σώμασιν αὐτοῖς ἴσα τῇ δόξῃ περιδεῶς ξυναπονεύοντες, ἐν τοῖς χαλεπώτατα διῆγον· ἀεὶ γὰρ παρ' ὀλίγον ἢ διέφευγον, ἢ ἀπώλλυντο. 5. ἦν τε ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ στρατεύματι τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἕως ἀγχώμαλα ἐναυμάχουν, πάντα ὁμοῦ ἀκοῦσαι· Ὀλοφυρμὸς, βοή· νικῶντες, κρατούμενοι·—ἄλλα ὅσα ἐν μεγάλῳ κινδύνῳ μέγα στρατόπεδον πολυειδῆ ἀναγκάζοιτο φθέγγεσθαι. παραπλήσια δὲ καὶ οἱ ἐπὶ τῶν νεῶν αὐτοῖς ἔπασχον, πρίν γε δὴ οἱ Συρακόσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, ἐπὶ πολὺ ἀντισχούσης τῆς ναυμαχίας, ἔτρεψάν τε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ ἐπικείμενοι λαμπρῶς, πολλῇ κραυγῇ καὶ διακελευσμῷ χρώμενοι κατεδίωκον ἐς τὴν γῆν. 6. τότε δὲ ὁ μὲν ναυτικὸς στρατὸς, ἄλλος ἄλλῃ—ὅσοι μὴ μετέωροι ἐάλωσαν—κατενεχθέντες ἐξέπεσον ἐς τὸ στρατόπεδον· ὁ δὲ πεζὸς οὐκέτι διαφόρως, ἀμφοτέρων αὐτῶν ἐγίνοντο, καὶ παρακελεύσεις τοῖς μαχομένοις, ἐναλλὰξ, εὐχαί τε καὶ οἰμωγαὶ, καὶ παντὸς ἄλλου πάθους ἐναγωνίου φωναὶ συνεχεῖς, αἱ μὲν πρὸς τὰ δρώμενά τε καὶ ὁρώμενα ὑφ' ἑκατέρων, αἱ δὲ πρὸς τὰ μέλλοντά τε καὶ ὑποπτευόμενα· καὶ ἦν πλείω τὰ εἰκαζόμενά τε καὶ δρώμενα τῶν γινομένων, where in δρώμενά τε καὶ ὁρώμενα we have what answers to τῶν δρωμένων τῆς ὄψεως of Thucyd. But with respect to the words τε καὶ δρώμενα after εἰκαζόμενα, these, instead of being emended, as they have been by Sylburg, into τε καὶ ὑφορώμ., or into τε καὶ μὴ ὁρ., as they have been by Stephens, are, inasmuch as they have no place there, to be cancelled, on the authority of the Cod. Vat. and Lapus. They may be supposed to have sprung from a marginal var. lect. on the words a little before,—namely, ὁρώμενά τε καὶ δρώμενα. With the general sentiment in τὴν γνώμην—ἐδουλοῦντο compare a passage of Eurip. Phœn. 1403, Πλέων δὲ τοῖς ὁρῶσι ἐστάλασσ' ἱδρὼς, Ἢ τοῖσι δρῶσι, διὰ φίλων ὀρρωδίαν, where, for vulg. πλείων, Porson edited, what is far preferable, πλέων. Though even that, I suspect, does not make all right: and in order to remove what so refined a poet as Euripides would, we may imagine, be most solicitous to avoid,—namely, an unnecessary prominency thus given to so homely an image as that contained in the former member of the sentence,—I propose to there read what will correspond with ἤ, namely, πλέον, and that as taken to stand not simply for μᾶλλον, but as understood to bear a sense not unfrequent in the early Attic writers,—namely, magis, 'in a greater degree.'

4. διὰ τὸ ἀκρίτως ξυνεχὲς] For διὰ τὸ ξυνεχῶς ἄκριτον, 'by reason of the continual undecidedness [of the contest].' In the passage (written with a view to the present portion) of Plut. Nic. 25, above cited, for διὰ τὰς συντάξεις ὡς, ought undoubtedly, from these words of our author, to be read (according to the emendation proposed by Goeller, and which had long before been propounded by myself) διὰ τὸ ἀκρίτως. The words in question have every appearance of being a mere marginal gloss, to supply what we may suppose to have been lost out of the text, from the letters τὸ ἀκριτ having been either faded away by time, or eaten away by a worm, in some very ancient archetype from which all the copies of Plutarch which we possess have been derived.

καὶ τοῖς σώμασιν—ξυναπονεύοντες] The Schol. well explains, συνεξομοιοῦντες τὰ σώματα τῇ περὶ τῶν γιγνομένων προσδοκίᾳ, ἀπένευον τῷ σώματι τῇδε κἀκεῖσε. Evidently written with a view to the present passage are the words of Dio Cass. ubi supra, καί τι καὶ τοῖς σώμασιν, ὡς καὶ ἰδεῖν καὶ νοῆσαι δυναμένοις σφίσι, ἐνεδείκνυντο, and Appian i. 497, καὶ ἐς τὰς φαντασίας τῶν λεγομένων τῷ σχήματι τοῦ σώματος συνεφέροντο. Philostr. Icon. p. 864. Max. Tyr. Diss. x. 1, 18. xi. p. 198. Plut. Mar. ch. 45.

5. πάντα ὁμοῦ ἀκοῦσαι—φθέγγεσθαι] Compare Æschyl. Agam. 312, Οἶμαι βοὴν ἄμικτον ἐν πόλει πρέπειν.—Καὶ τῶν ἁλόντων καὶ κρατησάντων δίχα Φθογγὰς ἀκούειν ἐστὶ, συμφορᾶς διπλῆς. Æschyl. Pers. 407, καὶ παρῆν ὁμοῦ κλύειν πολλὴν βοήν. Eurip. Phœn. 1208.

from the ships to the camp.' Compare Joseph. B. J. vii. 11, 1, διαπεσὼν εἰς Κυρήνην.

οὐκέτι διαφόρως—τὰ γιγνόμενα] At διαφόρως supply διετέθεντο. It is meant that 'the confused clamour of the land-forces, spectators of their comrades on board the ships, was now changed for one universal wail of agony and despair.' In δυσανασχετοῦντες τὰ γιγνόμενα we have a somewhat rare construction, though examples occur in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 596, 22, δυσαν. τὴν παῤῥησίαν αὐτοῦ, and 1379, δυσαν. τὰς ἀπειλάς. Evidently written in imitation of these are the words of Dio Cass. 576, ἐνταῦθα ἤδη ἄθροοι καὶ μιᾶς ὁρμῆς, οἱ μὲν ἐπαιώνισαν, οἱ δὲ ὠλοφύροντο.

ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς παρεβοήθουν] 'went to give their aid at the ships.' Thucydides did not write παρ. ταῖς ναυσὶ, doubtless because he considered it not correct to employ the verb παραβ. with a dative of thing; this almost invariably carrying with it a dative of person. Accordingly he chose to write, (what has a parallel in παρεβ. ἐπὶ τὸν αἰγιαλὸν, ch. 37,) παρεβοήθουν ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς; a phrase this quite uncommon, though something nearly approaching to it is found in one frequently used by Polyb. in this sense,—namely, παραβοηθεῖν εἰς τὴν πόλιν, i. e. 'to go and carry help to a beleaguered city, in order to defend it against the enemy.'

7. ἦν τε—οὐδεμιᾶς—ἐλάσσων ἔκπληξις] Comp. supra ii. 94. I have, a little after, with Poppo and Arnold, edited αὐτοῖς, on the authority of several of the best MSS. (to which add Cod. Mus. Brit.) instead of vulg. αὐταῖς, which has been retained by Bekker and Goeller; but on insufficient grounds; since, as Dr. Arnold points out, 'this would make ships the principal subject of the sentence,—"the ships lost their men,"—whereas the meaning is rather that they lost their men with them.'

CH. LXXII. 3. γνώμην ἐποιεῖτο—βιάσασθαι τὸν ἔκπλουν] A most prudent counsel, which, if carried into action, would probably have saved the fleet and all of the sailors and soldiers, except the sick and wounded.

καταπεπλῆχθαι τῇ ἥσσῃ καὶ μὴ ἂν ἔτι οἴεσθαι κρατῆσαι. καὶ οἱ μὲν ὡς κατὰ γῆν ἀναχωρήσοντες ἤδη ξύμπαντες τὴν γνώμην εἶχον.

CH. LXXIII. 1. ἐσηγεῖται] So I edit, with Bekker, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold, on the authority of several of the best MSS. (to which add Cod. Mus. Brit.) for vulg. ἐφην., retained by Didot, which admits of no tolerable sense; whereas that yielded by ἐσην., 'gave counsel,' suasit, is highly suitable, and such as the term is found to bear in the best Attic writers, especially Xen. and Plato, e. g. Plato, p. 176, εἰσηγοῦμαι τὴν αὐληταρίδα χαίρειν ἐᾶν. In Xen. Hist. i. 6, 8, we have the fuller form of expression ἐσηγεῖσθαι γνώμην. For ἃ καὶ some MSS. have καὶ ἅ; and others, what is evidently a mere commixture of both readings, ἃ καὶ ἃ, all alterations, alike unnecessary. Inadmissible, too, on various grounds, are the conjectures of Bauer and Dobree, ἃ καὶ αὐτοῖς and ἃ καὶ Γυλίππῳ. Supposing the words, as they stand, to be free from corruption, the full meaning intended is, (as Haack, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold point out,) that 'saying what he did, Hermocrates spoke of their retreat as a notion or conjecture of his own, not proceeding from any certain information as to what the Athenians designed to do:' and Dr. Arnold supposes it to have been here the intent of our author to notice, as a proof of Demosthenes's sagacity, his thus divining what the Athenians were really purposing to execute. But surely it required no great sagacity to divine in such a matter; for what other course was left to the Athenians? Nay, from ch. 67 it plainly appears that the Syracusans had before divined what course the Athenians would take, in case they should not be able to force the ζεῦγμα and make their way out,—namely, to retreat over-land; since, under existing circumstances, they could not make their situation worse. Such being the case, I cannot but suspect that the words λέγων ταῦτα ἃ καὶ αὐτῷ ἐδόκει are an insertion from some marginal scholium: a suspicion which derives some confirmation from two MSS., the Leyden and Mus. Brit., having εἶναι subjoined.

προφθάσαντας] For this, the reading of one MS., edited by Bekker, διαλαβόντας, is manifestly a mere marginal gloss: and the common reading, which I have thought proper, with Poppo and Goeller (2nd edition), to retain, is,—besides being defended by all the MSS. except one,—strongly supported by passages (evidently written in imitation of the present) of Dio Cass. 590, 63, τὰ στενόπορα προκαταλαμβάνοντες, and Diod. Sic. t. v. 228, τὰ στενόπορα τῶν ὁδῶν προκ.: and, considering that the phrase in question occurs, as far as I know, nowhere else,—every reason is there to suppose that those historians had προφθ. in their copies of Thucydides.

2. ὑπὸ τοῦ περιχαροῦς τῆς νίκης] 'from joy at the victory.' Τὸ περιχαρὲς, for περιχάρεια, which occurs in Dio Cass. 499, 19, and Plut. Camill. 20. See note on ii. 51. Evidently written with a view to the present is a passage of Dio Cass. 191, 72, ὡς μέντοι τά τε μηχανήματα τῶν ἀνδρῶν γυμνωθέντα αὖθις εἶδον, καὶ ἐκείνους προθύμῳ διανοίᾳ ἐπὶ νίκῃ τετραμμένους ᾔσθοντο, μετέγνωσαν· καὶ ἀναθαρσήσαντες, &c., where, for the confessedly

LXXIV. Οἱ δὲ πρὸς τὸ ἄγγελμα ἐπέσχον τὴν νύκτα, νομίσαντες οὐκ ἀπάτην εἶναι. καὶ ἐπειδὴ καὶ ὡς οὐκ εὐθὺς ὥρμησαν, ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς καὶ τὴν ἐπιοῦσαν ἡμέραν περιμεῖναι, ὅπως ξυσκευάσαιντο ὡς ἐκ τῶν δυνατῶν οἱ στρατιῶται ὅτι χρησιμώτατα, καὶ τὰ μὲν ἄλλα πάντα καταλιπεῖν, ἀναλαβόντες δὲ αὐτὰ ὅσα περὶ τὸ σῶμα ἐς δίαιταν ὑπῆρχεν ἐπιτήδεια ἀφορμᾶσθαι. 2. Συρακόσιοι δὲ καὶ Γύλιππος, τῷ μὲν πεζῷ προεξελθόντες, τάς τε ὁδοὺς τὰς κατὰ τὴν χώραν, ᾗ εἰκὸς ἦν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἰέναι, ἀπεφράγνυσαν, καὶ τῶν ῥείθρων καὶ ποταμῶν τὰς διαβάσεις ἐφύλασσον, καὶ ἐς ὑποδοχὴν τοῦ στρατεύματος, ὡς κωλύσοντες, ᾗ ἐδόκει, ἐτάσσοντο· ταῖς δὲ ναυσὶ προσπλεύσαντες τὰς ναῦς τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀπὸ τοῦ αἰγιαλοῦ ἀφεῖλκον, ἐνέπρησαν δέ τινας ὀλίγας, ὥσπερ διενοήθησαν αὐτοὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, τὰς δ' ἄλλας καθ' ἡσυχίαν, οὐδενὸς κωλύοντος, ὡς ἑκάστην ποι ἑκπεπτωκυῖαν, ἀναδησάμενοι ἐκόμιζον ἐς τὴν πόλιν.

corrupt προθύμῃ διανοίᾳ ἐπὶ νίκῃ τετρ., I propose to read and point, ἀπροθύμῳ διανοίᾳ, ἐπὶ νίκῃ, τετρ., thus explaining ἀπροθ. διανοίᾳ to signify, 'an idle, slothful mind,' one disinclined to action; ἀπρ. διαν., for ἐς ἀπρόθυμον διάνοιαν.

3. ἦσαν — διάγγελοι] 'had been informers,' i. e. who had given information of what took place in Syracuse. So Jos. Ant. xv. 8, 4, εἷς δὲ τῶν ὑφ' Ἡρώδου πολυπραγμονεῖν καὶ διαγγέλλειν τὰ τοιαῦτα τεταγμένων.

Ch. LXXIV. 1. οὐκ ἀπάτην εἶναι] It is well pointed out by Poppo, that the negative οὐκ, and not μή, is used because the contrary, ἀλλ' ἀλήθειαν, is had in view. Καὶ ὡς οὐκ εὐθὺς stands, as Dr. Arnold explains, for οὐδ' ὡς εὐθύς. Ὅσα —ἐπιτήδεια, 'such things as were necessary for bodily subsistence,' meaning, food and clothing, as at vi. 15.

2. ἀπεφράγνυσαν] For this some MSS. have ἐναποφράγ.: but the common reading is sufficiently defended by a passage (evidently written in imitation of the present) in Jos. Ant. p. 88, 41, τὰς δὲ ὁδοὺς ἀπεφράγνυσαν αἷς φεύξεσθαι τοὺς Ἐ. ὑπελάμβανον.

The τῶν found in the common text after ποταμῶν I have, with Bekker and Goeller, cancelled; because, besides that it is worse than useless, far more likely is it that the word was purposely added than accidentally omitted.

LXXV. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο, ἐπειδὴ ἐδόκει τῷ Νικίᾳ καὶ τῷ Δημοσθένει ἱκανῶς παρεσκευάσθαι, καὶ ἡ ἀνάστασις ἤδη τοῦ στρατεύματος τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἀπὸ τῆς ναυμαχίας ἐγίγνετο. 2. δεινὸν οὖν ἦν οὐ καθ' ἓν μόνον τῶν πραγμάτων, ὅτι τάς τε ναῦς ἀπολωλεκότες πάσας ἀνεχώρουν, καὶ ἀντὶ μεγάλης ἐλπίδος καὶ αὐτοὶ καὶ ἡ πόλις κινδυνεύοντες· ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀπολείψει τοῦ στρατοπέδου ξυνέβαινε τῇ τε ὄψει ἑκάστῳ ἀλγεινὰ καὶ τῇ γνώμῃ αἰσθέσθαι. 3. τῶν τε γὰρ νεκρῶν ἀτάφων ὄντων, ὁπότε τις ἴδοι τινὰ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων κείμενον, ἐς λύπην μετὰ φόβου καθίστατο, καὶ οἱ ζῶντες καταλειπόμενοι, τραυματίαι τε καὶ ἀσθενεῖς, πολὺ τῶν τεθνεώτων τοῖς ζῶσι λυπηρότεροι ἦσαν καὶ τῶν ἀπολωλότων ἀθλιώτεροι. 4. πρὸς γὰρ ἀντιβολίαν καὶ ὀλοφυρμὸν τραπόμενοι, ἐς ἀπορίαν καθίστασαν, ἄγειν τε σφᾶς ἀξιοῦντες, καὶ ἕνα ἕκαστον ἐπιβοώμενοι, εἴ τινά πού τις ἴδοι ἢ ἑταίρων ἢ οἰκείων, τῶν τε ξυσκήνων ἤδη ἀπιόντων ἐκκρεμαννύμενοι, καὶ ἐπακολουθοῦντες ἐς ὅσον δύναιντο,—εἴ τῳ δὲ προλίποι ἡ ῥώμη καὶ τὸ σῶμα, οὐκ ἄνευ ὀλίγων ἐπιθειασμῶν καὶ οἰμωγῆς

Ch. LXXV. This chapter contains a graphic description of what immediately preceded the disastrous and fatal retreat of the Athenians, as a sort of proem to the retreat itself at ch. 78—85; and here we have a recital, which is admitted to be among the most pathetic ever penned.

1. ἀνάστασις] The term signifies here, as at ii. 14, (where see note,) 'the breaking up of the encampment for departure.'

2. ἀλλὰ — ξυνέβαινε — αἰσθέσθαι] 'but that objects presented themselves dolorous both to the sight and the mind of each,' meaning objects ghastly to the sight and saddening to the mind.

3. τῶν τε γὰρ νεκρῶν — καθίστατο] These and the words which follow, to the end of the section, are illustrative of the idea intended in ἀλγεινά. Of μετὰ φόβου the sense is, — as Jacobs and Thirlwall explain it, — 'with religious fear,' namely, because it was thought wicked to have the dead unburied. The fear, then, here spoken of was such as related to the consequences of this impiety.

καὶ οἱ ζῶντες — ἀθλιώτεροι] Imitated from this passage and the whole of this chapter is a portion in Dio Cass. p. 269, seq., and Jos. Bell. iv. 2, 4. The terms λυπηρὸς and ἄθλιος here bear the active sense, 'causing grief and wailing.'

4. πρὸς ἀντιβολίαν καὶ ὀλοφυρμὸν] 'by resorting to entreaty and wailing.' Hence may be emended a corrupt passage of Jos. Ant. iv. 2, 4, πρὸς ἀνακλήσεις ἀνδρῶν τε καὶ συγγενῶν ἐθάρσησαν, where, for ἐθάρσησαν, I doubt not ought to be read (even without authority from MSS.) ἐτράπησαν, as the editors there would not have failed to see, had they been aware of the evident imitation of our author there existing.

τῶν ξυσκήνων ἤδη ἀπιόντων ἐκκρεμαννύμενοι] 'hanging by their comrades,' meaning by their persons or their clothes. So Eurip. Herc. Fur. 517, cited by Didot, Δεῦρ', ὦ τέκν', ἐκκρήμνασθε πατρῴων πέπλων, and a passage written in imitation of the present in Appian, t. i. 201, 10. Hence may be emended a corrupt passage of Athenæus, p. 257, τοῦ νεανίσκου τὴν χεῖρα παρεικότος,—ἐκκρεμάμενος ταύτῃ, κατέψυχε, where, for ταύτῃ, read ταύτης, and, for κατέψυχε, κατέψηχε, 'gently stroked it.'

ἡ ῥώμη καὶ τὸ σῶμα] For ἡ τοῦ σώματος ῥώμη. In οὐκ ἄνευ ὀλίγων ἐπιθειασμῶν, &c., the commentators find no little matter of perplexity; the sentiment here presented being, they think, quite the reverse of that which might be expected. Accordingly they seek to remove the difficulty in question either by regarding ὀλίγων as corrupt, and proposing various conjectures by which to emend this supposed corruption, namely, πολλῶν—λυγρῶν—συχνῶν —ὀλολυγῶν,—or, admitting the word to be correct, supposing that the negative is here to be twice repeated, similarly as in Latin non modo stands for non modo non, and like οὐχ ὅτι and οὐχ ὅπως in Greek. As to the conjectures, these, besides lying open, among other objections, to that of ἀπολειπόμενοι· ὥστε δάκρυσι πᾶν τὸ στράτευμα πλησθὲν καὶ ἀπορίᾳ τοιαύτῃ μὴ ῥᾳδίως ἀφορμᾶσθαι, καίπερ ἐκ πολεμίας τε, καὶ μείζω ἢ κατὰ δάκρυα τὰ μὲν πεπονθότας ἤδη, τὰ δὲ περὶ τῶν ἐν ἀφανεῖ δεδιότας μὴ πάθωσι. 5. κατήφειά τέ τις ἅμα καὶ κατάμεμψις σφῶν receding too far from the literarum vestigia, are quite inadmissible, as having not the slightest countenance from the MSS. Again, as to the other method above-mentioned adopted for the removal of the difficulty by Arnold and Didot, it has too much the appearance of a mere device for the nonce, to be thought satisfactory,—and is besides to be rejected on the ground of there being, as Poppo points out, no real affinity between the idioms thus mutually compared. On reconsideration of this disputed point, I am still, as formerly, inclined to think that ὀλίγων is unobjectionable, if it be taken, as it is by Haack in his first edition, as standing for τινων, 'some few,' meaning such as their strength would allow and the time permit; for quid multa? knowing as they did that it was impossible for their comrades to wait for them. Similarly, in Milton's Paradise Lost, xii. 645, seq., Adam and Eve are represented as not wasting many entreaties and wailings, where nought could avail to alter their condition; and, of our first parents is simply said, 'Some natural tears they dropt, but wiped them soon.'

Of ἐπιθειασμῶν the sense is best explained by the gloss of the Scholiast and Suidas, θείων ἐπικλήσεων.

ἀπολειπόμενοι] For this, one MS. has ὑπολ., which has been edited by Bekker (2nd edition) and Arnold. I have chosen, with Poppo and Arnold (2nd edition), to retain the common reading, because (one term being quite as proper as the other) this is one of those cases in which the weight of external evidence must decide. Moreover, ἀπολειπ. occurs a little further on, without any var. lect. It is found also at vi. 49, 3, as also in the best writers, especially Plato.

μείζω ἢ κατὰ δάκρυα πεπονθότας] A peculiar form of comparison, for the grammatical point connected with which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 449, and Jelf's Kühner's Gr. § 863, e. It is meant that the sufferings in question were not in proportion to the tears shed, but far greater: a circumstance most natural; since, in the words of Seneca, 'Curæ leves loquuntur, ingentes stupent:' and the same sentiment presents itself in a sublime passage of Æschyl. Agam. 860, ἔμοιγε μὲν δὴ κλαυμάτων ἐπίσσυτοι Πηγαὶ κατεσβήκασιν, οὐδ' ἕνι σταγών. For this truly elegant turn of expression (more adapted to lyric poetry than the plain prose of historical narrative) our author was probably indebted to a passage of Bacchylides cited by Wasse, μείζον ἢ κατὰ δάκρυα, and possibly Hdot. iii. 14, ἦν μείζω κακὰ ἢ ὥστε ἀνακλαίειν.

I have followed Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, in cancelling the word τι after πάθωσι, found in some MSS.; which cannot be genuine, since there is not even an ellipsis of τι, (see note on vi. 78.) the object of the verb πάθωσι being, as Poppo points out, μείζω.

5. κατήφειά τις—πολλὴ ἦν] Imitated from these are the words of Dio Cass. p. 298, 16, κατήφεια πολλὴ ἦν. Appian, t. i. 414, σιωπὴ πολλὴ καὶ κατήφεια ἦν. Plut. Publ. ἦν κατήφεια καὶ σιωπὴ τῶν ἄλλων. Hence in a passage of Joseph. Bell. Jud. ii. 22, 1, δεινὴ δὲ κατήφεια τῶν μετρίων,—where, for δεινὴ δὲ, I conjecture the true reading to be δ' ἠν κατ. The term κατήφεια properly signifies a hanging down of the head, or a casting down of the eyes, (so Eurip. Med. 1012, τί δὴ κατηφὲς ὄμμα;) and that from grief. So, in the passage of Dio Cass. relating to these transactions, it is added, ἀλλ' ἐγκύψαντες, 'bending [their eyes] to the ground:' and such is the use of the word in Hom. Il. iii. 51, δυσμενέσι μὲν χάρμα, κατηφείην δέ σοι αὐτῷ: as also in a passage of the New Testament, St. James iv. 1, ἡ χαρὰ εἰς κατήφειαν μεταστραφήτω. Elsewhere it denotes a hanging down of the head from shame: and such is its use in Hom. Il. xvii. 556, σοὶ μὲν δὴ κατηφείη καὶ ὄνειδος ἔσσεται, and xvi. 498. Apoll. Rhod. iv. 205, ἠὲ κατηφείην, ἢ καὶ μέγα κῦδος ἀρέσθαι: also in a passage of the Old Testament, Isaiah lxi. 3, 'to give the garment of praise and glory for the spirit of heaviness;' rather, as it would be better rendered, 'a dejected (or desponding) spirit,' what is in the Sept. version expressed by πνεύματος κατηφείας. Hence in Plut. de Vit. Pud. 1, false shame is justly defined, 'an uneasy feeling κάτω βλέπειν ποιοῦσαν.' Finally, the term as used to denote the action appropriate to grief, denotes more than λύπη, and less than ἀπόνοια: a distinction very apparent in Philo, αὐτῶν πολλὴ ἦν. οὐδὲν γὰρ ἄλλο ἢ πόλει ἐκπεπολιορκημένῃ ἐφκεσαν ὑποφευγούσῃ, καὶ ταύτῃ οὐ σμικρᾷ· μυριάδες γὰρ τοῦ ξύμπαντος ὄχλου οὐκ ἐλάσσους τεσσάρων ἅμα ἐπορεύοντο. καὶ τούτων οἵ τε ἄλλοι ἔφερον πάντες ὅ τι τις ἐδύνατο ἕκαστος χρήσιμον, καὶ οἱ ὁπλῖται καὶ οἱ ἱππῆς, παρὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς, αὐτοὶ τὰ σφέτερα αὐτῶν σιτία ὑπὸ τοῖς ὅπλοις,—οἱ μὲν ἀπορίᾳ ἀκολούθων, οἱ δὲ ἀπιστίᾳ·

p. 883, οὐ μόνον λυπουμένου, ἀλλὰ καὶ κατηφοῦντος.

οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ πόλει ἐκπεπολιορκημένῃ ἐφκεσαν ὑποφευγούσῃ] In οὐδὲν ἄλλο—ἔφκεσαν we have a certain irregularity similar to, though yet greater than, that observable at iv. 120, 3, ὄντες οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ νησιῶται (where see note): though it is sufficiently well accounted for on the same principle,—namely, of οὐδὲν ἄλλο being indeclinable; which will apply also to a passage of Æschyl. Pers. 214, ὁ δ' οὐδὲν ἄλλο γ', ἢ πτήξας δέμας παρεῖχε, and several passages cited in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 635, 4. In all these cases, then, οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ is equivalent to ὥσπερ, or ὥσπερ εἰ, nought but, for only. Of ἐκπεπολ. the sense is not, as Arnold understands, 'starved out;' but simply, 'reduced to such straits that the inhabitants cannot any longer maintain the siege, but are obliged to abandon it by stealth. See 2 Kings xxv. 4. Of course the city is here, by a frequent use, put for the inhabitants of the city; — as indeed sufficiently appears from the term following, (a term peculiarly and exclusively appropriate to the idea of the latter,) ὑποφευγούσῃ. Finally, of ἐκπολιορκεῖν in this remarkable use, 'to force any one out of a place, by besieging him in it,'—the only example that I have noted elsewhere is in another passage supra i. 131, 1, ἐκ τοῦ Βυζαντίου βίᾳ ὑπ' Ἀθηναίων ἐκπολιορκηθείς (where see note). In the present case there is a tacit comparison to something else, which they seemed to be, but were not, namely, a formidable force ready to face any enemy.

Evident imitations of the present passage occur in Joseph. Ant. iii. 10, 5, οὐδενί τε ἄλλῳ ἢ πόλει μετανισταμένῃ καὶ καθιδρυμένῃ ἐῴκει. Dio Cass. 270, 46. Dionys. Hal. p. 1444. Plut. Phoc. ch. 28. Livy, iii. 3.

μυριάδες γὰρ—ἐπορεύοντο] Considering that our historian has taken care to state this as the number of the whole multitude, (ξύμπας ὄχλος,) including the very numerous camp-followers of every kind,—not a little strange is the negligence of Ælian (Var. Hist. v. 10) in stating that forty thousand heavy-armed perished in Sicily; though indeed the same error has been committed also by Isocrates de Pace, § 29, p. 280, (Lang.) and Libanius, Orat. p. 399, B.: in both which cases the speakers caught at the number in Thucydides, and founded on it an oratorical exaggeration; so affording another to the many instances which might be adduced, of ancient history corrupted by orators, especially the later ones, as Aristides, Libanius, Dio Chrysostom, and the σοφισταὶ, as Max. Tyr. and Philostratus. But, to return,—the exact information of Thucydides here is peculiarly important, as bearing on a point little noticed by historians, namely, the multitude of attendants and camp-followers in the armies of the Greek republics, not much less than that of the oriental despotic monarchies.

οἵ τε ἄλλοι ἔφερον πάντες—ἕκαστος] So I have edited, with Bekker (2nd edition), for vulg. ἄλλοι πάντες ἔφερον, &c. (retained by Poppo and Goeller,) this position being decidedly preferable, though at the same time likely to be altered, from inadvertence on the part of the copyists. Again, I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller in editing ἕκαστος, for vulg. κατὰ τό. Of this use of τις ἕκαστος (somewhat rare) I have noted the occurrence more than once elsewhere in our author, as iii. 45, 5. iv. 5, ὡς ἕκαστόν τι ξυμβαίνοι. In ὅ τι τις ἐδύνατο no little meaning is conveyed; for to those, like the Grecian soldiery, wholly unaccustomed (as is signified by the expression, a little after, παρὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς) to carry their provisions, such a burden as a Roman soldier carried with ease, would have been insupportable.

ὑπὸ τοῖς ὅπλοις] Of this expression the sense is simply, (as Abresch points out,) 'under arms,' or what were otherwise conveyed by the phrase μεθ' ὅπλων, armati. Absurdly have Hobbes and Smith rendered, 'beneath their armour;' and Portus, sub armis;—perhaps confounding the armour of the Greeks with the rugged trunk-hose of their age.

ἀκολούθων] Not camp-followers, but attendants; as the term signifies also at vi. 28, where see note. Again, by σῖτος, (ἀπηυτομολήκεσαν γὰρ πάλαι τε καὶ οἱ πλεῖστοι παραχρῆμα) ἔφερον δὲ οὐδὲ ταῦτα ἱκανά· σῖτος γὰρ οὐκέτι ἦν ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ. 6. καὶ μὴν ἡ ἄλλη αἰκία, καὶ ἡ ἰσομοιρία τῶν κακῶν — ἔχουσά τινα ὅμως, τὸ μετὰ πολλῶν, κούφισιν—οὐδ' ὡς ῥᾳδία ἐν τῷ παρόντι ἐδοξάζετο, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἀπὸ οἵας λαμπρότητος καὶ αὐχήματος τοῦ πρώτου ἐς οἵαν τελευτὴν καὶ ταπεινότητα ἀφῖκτο. 7. μέγιστον γὰρ δὴ τὸ διάφορον τοῦτο Ἑλληνικῷ στρατεύματι ἐγένετο,—οἷς, ἀντὶ μὲν τοῦ ἄλλους δουλωσομένους ἥκειν, αὐτοὺς τοῦτο μᾶλλον δεδιότας

a little further on, is denoted, not, as Poppo explains, frumentum, but (by a use of the word found in the best writers, from Homer and Herodotus downwards) bread, including food generally, whether farinaceous or otherwise.

6. καὶ μὴν ἡ ἄλλη αἰκία] Of ἡ ἄλλη αἰκία quite erroneous is the rendering offered by Mitford, 'the anguish of others.' The idea intended is, as Jacobs has well seen, the disgrace and ignominy occasioned to them, by having to perform offices the most degrading, for want of servants. Here, then, the term αἰκία bears a sense quite peculiar, and of which the only example that I have noted elsewhere is in Soph. Œd. Col. 747, τὴν ἐγὼ τάλας Οὐκ ἂν ποτ' ἐς τοσοῦτον αἰκίας πεσεῖν Ἐδοξ', ὅσον πέπτωκεν ἥδε δύσμορος — Ἆρ' ἄθλιον τοὔνειδος, 'a wretched disgrace.' Of the words following, καὶ ἡ ἰσομοιρία — κούφισιν, the sense cannot be better expressed than by the version of Poppo, as follows: 'Nam communitas malorum, etsi habet [alias in se, ideoque præbet] quoddam levamentum,—tamen tunc non facilis ad tolerandum videbatur.' With the sentiment Abresch aptly compares Symmach. Epist. 27, 'et illa quidem adversa, quæ cum plurimis pertulisti, more humani ingenii, habent aliquod de societate solatium:' and to the same purpose are the words of Dio Cass. p. 322, 64, ἡ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοπαθεῖς συννουσία ἔφερέ τινα αὐτοῖς κούφισιν.

ῥᾳδία] The word has here its original and primitive sense easy to be borne, as in Eurip. Plisth. frag. 6, ῥᾷστον βάρος φέρειν. In the words, a little after, ἀπὸ οἵας λαμπρότητος—ἀφῖκτο, two points there are worthy of attention—1. the use of οἷος for ὅτι τοιοῦτος (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 480, obs. 3); and 2. the idiom by which two interrogative words are attached to the same verb (on which see Jelf's Kühn. § 883, 1). This idiom is by Casaub. (cited in Duker) noticed as one frequently used by the Greek writers on the subject of some remarkable change of fortune, as Eurip. Alc. 142, οἵας οἷος ὢν ἁμαρτάνεις, and Plato, p. 195, οἷος οἵων αἴτιος ὢν τυγχάνει. At ἀφῖκτο supply, with the Scholiast, στράτευμα, or, with Poppo, στρατόπεδον, from § 5. In λαμπρότητος καὶ αὐχήματος we have a forcible form of expression, in which λαμπρότης signifies splendour of condition, such as carries with it honour and glory (and so iv. 62, τὰς τιμὰς καὶ λαμπρότητας); and by αὔχημα is denoted what in a passage of the New Testament, 2 Cor. xi. 17, is expressed by the similar term καύχησις. Moreover, as καύχημα signifies properly 'that of which any one is justly proud,' (see Pind. Pyth. i. 186,) and also the glory resulting from it,—so it may very well signify, as here, what we understand by our old English term bravery, meaning show, ostentatious galanterie (to use another antiquated term): the best comment on which is the brief description of the first armament, supra vi. 31, 1, παρασκευὴ — εὐπρεπεστάτη, and § 6, ὁ στόλος—ὄψεως λαμπρότητι περιβόητος ἐγένετο. Τελευτὴ signifies catastrophe, and the term is used as better suiting τοῦ πρώτου (which stands for τὸ πρῶτον). Finally, the words καὶ ταπεινότητα are further explanatory of τελευτὴ, meaning such an end as sinks into the depths of meanness and wretchedness.

7. τὸ διάφορον] Not 'difference,' as Hobbes and others render; but 'reverse of fortune.' The τῷ found in all the copies before Ἑλληνικῷ I have, with Bekker, Goeller, and Dobree, thought proper to cancel, because there is no place for the article in this phrase; and that Thucydides uses it not, is certain from another passage supra v. 60, στρατόπεδον γὰρ δὴ τοῦτο κάλλιστον Ἑλληνικὸν τῶν μέχρι τοῦδε ξυνῆλθεν. Easily might the τῷ here arise from the τὸ preceding. As to the enclitic τῳ, edited by some, no reason is there to think that it was used in a case like this. Οἷς is, as Bauer and Poppo point out, for μὴ πάθωσι ξυνέβη ἀπιέναι, ἀντὶ δ' εὐχῆς τε καὶ παιάνων, μεθ' ὧν ἐξέπλεον, πάλιν τούτων τοῖς ἐναντίοις ἐπιφημίσμασιν ἀφορμᾶσθαι, πεζούς τε ἀντὶ ναυβατῶν πορευομένους, καὶ ὁπλιτικῷ προσέχοντας μᾶλλον ἢ ναυτικῷ. ὅμως δὲ, ὑπὸ μεγέθους τοῦ ἐπικρεμαμένου ἔτι κινδύνου, πάντα ταῦτα αὐτοῖς οἰστὰ ἐφαίνετο.

LXXVI. Ὁρῶν δὲ ὁ Νικίας τὸ στράτευμα ἀθυμοῦν, καὶ ἐν μεγάλῃ μεταβολῇ ὄν, ἐπιπαριὼν, ὡς ἐκ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων ἐθάρσυνέ τε καὶ παρεμυθεῖτο, βοῇ τε χρώμενος ἔτι μᾶλλον ἑκάστοις, καθ' οὓς γίγνοιτο ὑπὸ προθυμίας, καὶ βουλόμενος ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον γεγωνίσκων ὠφελεῖν. LXXVII. "Ἔτι καὶ ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ ξύμμαχοι, ἐλπίδα χρὴ ἔχειν (ἤδη τινὲς καὶ ἐκ δεινοτέρων ἢ τοιῶνδε ἐσώθησαν), μηδὲ καταμέμψασθαι ὑμᾶς ἄγαν αὐτοὺς μήτε ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς μήτε ταῖς παρὰ τὴν ἀξίαν νῦν κακοπαθείαις.

αὐτοῖς; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 480. Τούτων τοῖς ἐναντίοις, for τοῖς τούτων ἐν. See note on vi. 64, fin., and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 366, note 2. Ἐπιφημίσμασιν. This is well explained by the gloss of Hesych., οἰωνίσμασι, omens, meaning presages of evil: on which Poppo refers to Baehr on Herodot. iii. 124, ἐπεφημίζετο. The word is extremely rare, insomuch that the only examples that I have noted elsewhere are in Jos. Bell. vii. 5, 1, and Ant. xvii. 5, 2, and Liban. Or. p. 509.

προσέχοντας] animos advertentes, 'giving their minds to,' 'attending to,' as their only trust.

ὅμως δὲ — ἐφαίνετο] Of these words an evident imitation exists in Dio Cass. 56, 75, οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ ἐκεῖνα, καίπερ χαλεπώτατα ὄντα,—οἰστὰ ἐδόκει εἶναι. In either passage the sense intended is, as Bp. Thirlwall explains, that 'nevertheless the sadness of the present spectacle, and the bitterness of the recollections it awakened, were more tolerable than the thought of the dangers which were still impending.'

Ch. LXXVI. ἐπιπαριὼν] juxta incedens, 'as he passed along the line.' See Eurip. Phœn. 1263, and compare iv. 94. Ὡς ἐκ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων, 'as far as circumstances would admit,' or, as far as he could find topics of consolation.

Ch. LXXVII. Of this affecting address of Nicias (which has been held in as much admiration as the conduct of Nicias himself on this most trying occasion) the purpose is not so much to exhort as to console. To raise the drooping spirits of the desponding Athenians, the speaker exerts himself to impart hopes such as he did not really feel; and, accordingly, he endeavours to extract encouragement even but of the depths of calamity. He shows, that their situation, however perilous, was not utterly desperate. By firmness, steadiness, and persevering energy they might yet hope to see again their homes and their families; and thus their country might be preserved.

Undeniable is it that the conduct of Nicias throughout this sad reverse claims our highest praise, and is such as we must contemplate with no ordinary feelings of admiration and esteem: but to say, with Mitford, that 'his whole character rose' on this trying occasion, is more than I would venture to do. The characters of men of mediocre understanding, but great moral rectitude and high moral feeling, cannot well be said to rise; and yet, from the strength communicated by adversity, they will assume an apparent elevation; though when the circumstances which have called forth their energies shall no longer operate to stimulate their efforts, they never fail to fall back to their natural and accustomed level.

1. Here the speaker, dismissing all useless preamble, proceeds at once to the various topics on which it is his purpose to treat, for consolation on the one hand, and encouragement on the other.

ἔτι] For this Bekker edits, on the authority of one MS., τι, to connect with ὠφελεῖν in the preceding chapter. But, besides its deficiency in external evidence, the alteration in question tends not a little to detract from the force and energy of the words, and is as unnecessary as it is unwarranted. Καὶ ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, 'and under the present circumstances.' On this use of ἢ in ἐκ δεινοτέρων ἢ τοιῶνδε see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 448, 1, a.

μήτε ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς—κακοπαθείαις] Ξυμφοραὶ in universum sunt fortunæ vices

2. Κἀγώ τοι, οὐδενὸς ὑμῶν οὔτε ῥώμῃ προφέρων (ἀλλ' ὁρᾶτε δὴ ὡς διάκειμαι ὑπὸ τῆς νόσου), οὔτ' εὐτυχίᾳ δοκῶν που ὕστερός του εἶναι κατὰ τὸν ἴδιον βίον καὶ ἐς τἆλλα, νῦν ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ κινδύνῳ τοῖς φαυλοτάτοις αἰωροῦμαι· καίτοι πολλὰ μὲν ἐς θεοὺς νόμιμα δεδιήτημαι, πολλὰ δὲ ἐς ἀνθρώπους δίκαια καὶ ἀνεπίφθονα. ἀνθ' ὧν ἡ μὲν ἐλπὶς ὅμως θρασεῖα τοῦ μέλλοντος, αἱ δὲ ξυμφοραὶ οὐ κατ' ἀξίαν δὴ

(malæ præsertim) et hic in universum clades acceptas spectant, quum κακοπαθ. miserandam exercitus conditionem, ch. 75 descriptam, significet. (Krueger.)

2. κἀγώ τοι] 'I, for my part, truly.' In the words, a little after, ἀλλ' ὁρᾶτε δή, not a little elegant is the use of δή so situated; of which examples occur in Xen. Cyr. iii. 2, 12. Plato, p. 24, and elsewhere. In ὡς διάκειμαι we have a phrase used by the best writers, of attacks of disease; e. g. Eurip. Troad. 113, δύστηνος ἐγὼ τῆς βαρυδαίμονος Ἄρθρων κλίσιος, ὡς διάκειμαι. With this affecting appeal, adverting to his own feeble frame, compare Soph. Trach. 1081, ἰδοὺ θεᾶσθε πάντες ἄθλιον δέμας· Ὁρᾶτε τὸν δύστηνον, ὡς οἰκτρῶς ἔχω.

οὔτ' εὐτυχίᾳ δοκῶν] 'who was accounted behind no one in good fortune.' So supra vi. 17, Alcibiades says, ἕως ἐγὼ ἔτι ἀκμάζω μετ' αὐτῆς, καὶ ὁ Νικίας εὐτυχὴς δοκεῖ εἶναι.

αἰωροῦμαι] 'am tossed about, exposed to, involved in,' namely, as a tempest-tost mariner to the storms. So Eurip. Cycl. 694, πολὺν θαλάσσῃ χρόνον ἐναιωρούμενον. Plato, p. 112, αἰωρεῖται καὶ κυμαίνει ἄνω καὶ κάτω. Of the term as used in a figurative sense examples are not unfrequent; though of this peculiar kind of figurative sense I know no example elsewhere. Yet nearly approaching to this use of αἰωρεῖσθαι is that of jactari in Latin, as used in a passage of Quint. Curtius, where we have 'jactari varietate fortunæ.'

καίτοι πολλὰ—δίκαια] 'And yet, or notwithstanding that, I have lived,' &c. In the words ἐς θεοὺς νόμιμα—δίκαια there seems to be simply a sort of customary designation of one who in conduct has been blameless in all its relations, both as regards God and man: and such is the idea intended in a passage of the New Testament, St. Luke i. 6, ἦσαν δίκαιοι—ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, πορευόμενοι ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ἐντολαῖς καὶ δικαιώμασι τοῦ Κυρίου ἄμεμπτοι.

The Scholiast explains δεδιήτημαι by πεπολίτευμαι, which Dr. Arnold pronounces right, since διαιτᾶσθαι expresses a man's private life, as πολιτεύεσθαι his public life. Yet public life is not what is here denoted, neither did the Scholiast mean this, who doubtless understood πεπολίτευμαι of conduct generally (in the sense to conduct oneself, frame one's conduct by some rule, as citizens of any state are accustomed to do); a use of the term confined to the later writers. Of διαιτᾶσθαι in this use, which is rare, as referred to the conduct of one's life, examples occur in Xen. Mem. i. 6, 2, and ii. 3, 2. (ed. Th.) and of the noun διαιτα, in the sense moral conduct, examples occur not only in the philosophers, (as Plato and Xen.) but also in Æschylus and Euripides. So Æschyl. Prom. 488, and Eurip. Phœn. Frag. 9, σκοπῶν δίαιταν ἥντιν' ἐμπορεύεται, 'the course of life he goes, or pursues.' See my Lex. N. T. in v. πορεύεσθαι ἐν. Why διαιτᾶσθαι here takes the accusative, is because it contains an implied idea of acting or performing.

But to turn from words to things,—the piety of Nicias is attested by Aristoph. Eq. 30, and Plut. Nic. 3; and the blamelessness of his life is adverted to in a passage of our author further on, ch. 86, 5, διὰ τὴν πᾶσαν ἐς ἀρετὴν ἐπιτήδευσιν. The good man 'struggling with the storms of fate' was, we cannot doubt, a frequent subject of sore perplexity to the serious thinkers of antiquity, as of taunt and scorn to its scoffers. The language of the latter, who could not reconcile the hard fate which pursued Nicias with the virtues that adorned him, is evidently put into the mouth of Demosthenes in the following dialogue, Aristoph. Eq. 33, where Nicias is represented as saying, Ὅτιὴ θεοῖσιν ἐχθρός εἰμ' οὐκ εἰκότως. To which Demosthenes replies, εὖ προσβιβάζεις μ', 'you well, or rightly, bring me to the conclusion,' viz. that there are no gods.

ἀνθ' ὧν ἡ μὲν ἐλπὶς—μέλλοντος] 'wherefore (i. e. because I have been thus blameless in all my dealings towards the gods and towards men) I entertain a confident hope,' &c. Here we have, as Mitford observes, a passage not a little interesting, as serving to mark the opinion entertained of the Divine Providence by a man of exalted rank, of extensive information and experience, just, and religiously disposed, but never taught to consider this life as a state of probation, and to expect, in futurity, the reward of good, or the punishment of evil deeds. Such, it may be added, was the general impression of the heathens as to the merits of good works as claiming reward of right: and to this purpose are the words of Virg. Æn. ii. 689, 'Jupiter omnipotens—hoc tantum—et, si pietate meremur, Da deinde auxilium.'

The words following, αἱ δὲ ξυμφοραὶ—φοβοῦσι, must, as well as those which preceded, be referred to Nicias: the sense of the whole clause being, that on this account he has, notwithstanding present evils, on the one hand, a confident hope of the future; though, on the other, calamities unmerited do indeed cause alarm. Perhaps, however, the words αἱ δὲ ξυμφοραὶ οὐ κατ' ἀξίαν δὴ φοβοῦσι may be said to contain the turning-point where Nicias makes the transition from himself to his comrades. In οὐ κατ' ἀξίαν we have a phrase for the adjective ἀναξίαν, or adv. ἀναξίως; as in Xen. Cyr. viii. 4, 15, (ed. Th.) μὴ κατ' ἀξίαν ὠφελεῖν τοὺς φίλους. Plato, p. 496, ὅταν αὐτῇ πλησιάζοντες ὁμιλῶσι μὴ κατ' ἀξίαν. Lucian, t. ii. 802, οὐ κατ' ἀξίαν πράττω παρ' αὐτοῖς. Thus it is equiv. to the phrase παρ' ἀξίαν. Finally, answering to this is the expression in the passage of Aristoph. Eq. 34, above cited, οὐκ εἰκότως.

3. τάχα δ' ἂν καὶ λωφήσειαν] Here is expressed the reason why they should not despond, but take comfort,—namely, that after the misfortunes they had experienced, —which were such as to appease the envy and move the pity of the gods,—they may confidently hope that fortune will change for the better. On the force of the term λώφησις see notes at ii. 49, and vi. 12. The words εἴ τῳ θεῶν ἐπίφθονοι ἐστρατεύσαμεν may sufficiently well be explained (as they are by Poppo and others) with reference to that opinion of the heathens, by which the gods were supposed to feel envy at human success of any great kind. See Valck. on Herodot. iii. 20. Wachsm. Ant. ii. 2, p. 212, and compare Aristoph. Eq. 1233, ed. Mitchell.

ἦλθον γὰρ—ἕξειν] The argument is, that 'since others have, more humano, done as they have done, and suffered evils that might be borne, (see Hom. Od. xx. 83.) so may they, after the ample punishment they have received, hope for milder treatment from the gods.'

In the words following, οἴκτου γὰρ—φθόνου, Wasse remarks, the speaker ill dissembles the fear he feels, (though such he ought to have done, according to the apophthegm of Æschylus, Ἀεὶ δ' ἀνάκτων ἐστὶ δεῖμ' ἐξαίσιον,)—nay, says what may fairly be termed ominous.

καὶ, ὁρῶντες ὑμᾶς—μὴ καταπέπληχθε ἄγαν] 'And truly when you look at yourselves, and see how numerous and brave are the embattled squadrons of heavy-armed in which we march forth, ye need not feel utter despondency.'

With the sentiment in αὐτοὶ πόλις εὐθύς ἐστε, ὅποι, &c. compare the words of Ovid, 'omne solum forti patria est.'

4. The speaker now adverts to the means by which alone they could effect their preservation; and, having suggested various considerations calculated to console and encourage, now addresses them in the language of exhortation, inculcating the necessity of their observing strict order and vigilance in their march, and pursuing it unintermittingly, since famine was close upon them.

5. σπουδὴ—τῆς ὁδοῦ] 'a hastening on νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν ἔσται τῆς ὁδοῦ· τὰ γὰρ ἐπιτήδεια βραχέα ἔχομεν· καὶ ἢν ἀντιλαβώμεθά του φιλίου χωρίου τῶν Σικελῶν, (οὗτοι γὰρ ἡμῖν, διὰ τὸ Συρακοσίων δέος, ἔτι βέβαιοι εἰσὶ) ἤδη νομίζετε ἐν τῷ ὀχυρῷ εἶναι. προπέπεμπται δ' ὡς αὐτοὺς καὶ ἀπαντᾷν εἰρημένον καὶ σιτία ἄλλα κομίζειν. 6. τὸ δὲ ξύμπαν, γνῶτε, ὦ ἄνδρες στρατιῶται, ἀναγκαῖόν τε ὂν ὑμῖν ἀνδράσιν ἀγαθοῖς γίγνεσθαι, ὡς μὴ ὄντος χωρίου ἐγγὺς, ὅποι ἂν μαλακισθέντες σωθείητε,—καὶ, ἢν νῦν διαφύγητε τοὺς πολεμίους, οἵ τε ἄλλοι τευξόμενοι ὧν ἐπιθυμεῖτέ που ἐπιδεῖν, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὴν μεγάλην δύναμιν τῆς πόλεως, καίπερ πεπτωκυῖαν, ἐπανορθώσοντες. ἄνδρες γὰρ πόλις, καὶ οὐ τείχη οὐδὲ νῆες ἀνδρῶν κεναί."

LXXVIII. Ὁ μὲν Νικίας, τοιάδε παρακελευόμενος, ἅμα ἐπῄει τὸ στράτευμα, καὶ, εἴ πη ὁρῴη διεσπασμένον καὶ μὴ ἐν τάξει χωροῦν, ξυνάγων καὶ καθιστὰς,—καὶ ὁ Δημοσθένης οὐδὲν ἧσσον, τοῖς καθ' ἑαυτὸν τοιαῦτά τε καὶ παραπλήσια λέγων. 2. τὸ δὲ ἐχώρει ἐν the journey.' Compare with this the expression σπουδὴ τοῦ πλοῦ at iii. 46.

ὀχυρῷ] This, for vulg. ἐχυρῷ, I have ventured to receive into the text, on the authority of almost all the best MSS. (including the three which I have collated,) because, to retain the common reading were to run counter to the united stream of evidence external and internal; which ought never to be done except on some stronger ground than the distinction instituted by the grammarians between ἐχυρὸς as used of persons, and ὀχυρὸς of things; a distinction of which the futility has been fully set forth by Blomf. on Æschyl. Pers. 79.

For vulg. προπέμπετε, I have, with all the recent editors, adopted the reading προπέπεμπται, (though found only in three MSS., supported by a few others,) because the former involves an absurdity: and almost equally objectionable is another reading, προπέμπεται.

εἰρημένον] 'directions having been given.' Σιτία ἄλλα. Meaning, 'other provisions besides the present scanty stock,' i. e. a further supply.

6. This section contains the conclusion, which is hortatory. With the sentiment in ἄνδρες γὰρ—κεναί compare the following in Dio Cass. 811, 49, ἄνθρωποι γάρ που πόλις ἐστὶν, ἀλλ' οὐκ οἰκίαι, οὐδὲ στοαί, οὐδὲ ἀγοραί, ἀνδρῶν κεναί. (where, for ἐστὶν, I conjecture the true reading to be, what is alike required by propriety of language, and by the sense, εἰσίν.) Themist. p. 184, A. εἴ γε ἄνδρες ἡ πόλις. See also Lucian, t. ii. 900, 13. Philostr. Vit. Apoll. i. 8, 18. Æschyl. Pers. 355. Eurip. Phryx. Frag. 9. Finally, this passage of our author was evidently had in view by Aristid. t. ii. 371, C; and at t. iii. 339, of the same writer, it is affirmed that this sentiment, so generally brought forward, was originally derived from Alcæus. See Alcæus, Frag. ix. (Mus. Crit. i. 426.) whose words Aristides has cited as follows, Οὐ λίθοι, οὐδὲ ξύλα, οὐδὲ τέχνη τεκτόνων αἱ πόλεις εἰσὶν· Ἀλλ' ὅπου ποτ' ἂν ὦσιν ΑΝΔΡΕΣ αὐτοὺς σώζειν εἰδότες, Ἐνταῦθα τείχη καὶ πόλεις.

Ch. LXXVIII. From hence to ch. 85, we have the retreat of the Athenians, immediately preceding the final catastrophe of the disastrous Sicilian expedition. On the geographical and military points connected with this, see the Appendix.

1. ἐπῄει τὸ στράτευμα] exercitum adibat, or obibat, as in Herodot. v. 74. ix. 95. Pol. iv. 83, 5. Arrian, E. A. iv. 16, 5. Diod. Sic. t. ii. 10. Plut. Themist. and Pericl. ἐπῄεσαν τοὺς τόπους. There seems to be an implied idea of going over for the purpose of surveying or reviewing, as in the Latin obire, used for adire, as in Plin. Epist. iii. 7, 'cum exercitum oculis obiisset.' Thus the phrase is equiv. to the Latin lustrare exercitum, 'to review or inspect an army:' and that such is its import, appears from the words following, which serve to further unfold the idea.

οὐδὲν ἧσσον] This is not well construed with λέγων, since it belongs to some verb (such as ἐποίει) to be fetched from the general context; and οὐδὲν ἧσσον stands for ἴσον or ὅμοιον,—by a use found in the best Attic writers, especially Plato,—τοῖς καθ' ἑαυτόν. See note at iv. 91, fin.

πλαισίῳ τεταγμένον. πρῶτον μὲν ἡγούμενον τὸ Νικίου, ἐφεπόμενον δὲ τὸ Δημοσθένους· τοὺς δὲ σκευοφόρους καὶ τὸν πλεῖστον ὄχλον ἐντὸς εἶχον οἱ ὁπλῖται. 3. καὶ ἐπειδή τε ἐγένοντο ἐπὶ τῇ διαβάσει τοῦ Ἀνάπου ποταμοῦ, εὗρον ἐπ' αὐτῷ παρατεταγμένους τῶν Συρακοσίων καὶ ξυμμάχων,—καὶ τρεψάμενοι αὐτοὺς, καὶ κρατήσαντες τοῦ πόρου, ἐχώρουν ἐς τὸ πρόσθεν· οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι παριππεύοντές τε προσέκειντο, καὶ ἐσακοντίζοντες οἱ ψιλοί. 4. καὶ ταύτῃ μὲν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ προελθόντες σταδίους ὡς τεσσαράκοντα, ηὐλίσαντο πρὸς λόφῳ τινί οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι· τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ πρωὶ ἐπορεύοντο, καὶ προῆλθον ὡς εἴκοσι σταδίους, καὶ κατέβησαν ἐς χωρίον ἄπεδόν τι, καὶ αὐτοῦ ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντο, βουλόμενοι ἔκ τε τῶν οἰκιῶν λαβεῖν τι ἐδώδιμον (ᾠκεῖτο γὰρ ὁ χῶρος), καὶ ὕδωρ μετὰ σφῶν αὐτῶν φέρεσθαι αὐτόθεν· ἐν γὰρ τῷ πρόσθεν ἐπὶ πολλὰ στάδια, ᾗ ἔμελλον ἰέναι, οὐκ ἄφθονον ἦν. 5. οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι ἐν τούτῳ, προελθόντες, τὴν δίωδον τὴν ἐν τῷ πρόσθεν ἀπετείχιζον· ἦν δὲ λόφος καρτερὸς καὶ ἑκατέρωθεν αὐτοῦ χαράδρα κρημνώδης· ἐκαλεῖτο δὲ Ἀκραῖον λέπας. 6. τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι προῆσαν, καὶ οἱ τῶν Συρακοσίων καὶ ξυμμάχων αὐτοὺς ἱππῆς καὶ ἀκοντισταὶ, ὄντες πολλοὶ, ἑκατέρωθεν ἐκώλυον, καὶ ἐσηκόντιζόν τε καὶ παρίππευον. 7. καὶ χρόνον μὲν πολὺν ἐμάχοντο οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἔπειτα ἀνεχώρησαν πάλιν ἐς τὸ αὐτὸ στρατόπεδον· καὶ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια οὐκέτι ὁμοίως εἶχον. οὐ γὰρ ἔτι ἀποχωρεῖν οἷόν τ' ἦν ὑπὸ τῶν ἱππέων. LXXIX. Πρωὶ δὲ ἄραντες, ἐπορεύοντο αὖθις, καὶ ἐβιάσαντο πρὸς τὸν λόφον

2. ἐχώρει] 'proceeded [on the march],'—namely, towards the interior, and the country of the Siculi, as appears from the latter part of Nicias's speech. On the phrase ἐν πλαισίῳ see note at vi. 67, 1. With τοὺς σκευοφόρους—ἐντὸς εἶχον οἱ ὁπλῖται compare Polyæn. iii. 10, 7, ἔταξε τὸ στράτευμα—τὰ σκευοφόρα εἰς τὸ μέσον λαβών. See also Xen. Anab. iii. 2, 36.

3. τῇ διαβάσει τοῦ Ἀνάπου] 'the [well-known] passage or ford of the Anapus.'

5. Ἀκραῖον λέπας] lit. 'the peaky rock.' Probably so called as forming the summit of the mountain ridge. Compare Eurip. Herc. Fur. 121, πετραῖον λέπας. The term λέπας is by Hesych. explained, ἀκρότατον, ὀρεινὸν, (where, for ὀρεινὸν, I conjecture the true reading to be ὀρεινοῦ, scil. χωρίου, an emendation confirmed by the gloss of Pollux, forming the complete expression, ὀρεινὰ χωρία,) and answering to this is the explanation of the word by the Scholiast on Theocr. Idyll. i. 40, τοῦ ὄρους τὸ ἄκρον. Its original signification is, I suspect, a bare rock, (from λέπω, 'to strip bare,') i. e. a rock without any soil, and consequently destitute of herbage. Whence arose the adjective λεπρὸς, 'rough, rugged,' which occurs in Hippocr. de Aëre, § 19, οὔρεσι λεπροῖσι, and Lycophr. Cassand. 642, ἀκτὰς ἐμβατήσοντας λεπράς. Hence in Theocr. Idyll. i. 40, πέτρα τε τέτυκται Λεπρὰς, the sense is merely, a rock-cliff, subst. for adj.: with which comp. in Anonym. ap. Ducange Gloss. ὀρινοπετροβουνὸς, 'a rocky-mountain knoll.'

6. ἑκατέρωθεν] This, I have, with Bekker (2nd edition), received, on the authority of two MSS., for vulg. ἑκάτεροι, (retained by Poppo and Goeller,) because the word is to be construed with ἐκώλυον following, and consequently ἑκάτεροι cannot well stand.

7. ἀποχωρεῖν] secedere ex, 'to go forth [from the camp],' namely, to seek for food, or to make off, as opportunity might offer. So Arrian, E. A. iii. 21, 3, ἐπὶ τὰ αὐτῶν ἕκαστος ἀπεχώρησαν. Demosth. 1155, διαφεύγουσιν—οἱ οἰκέται, καὶ ἄλλος ἄλλοσε ἀπεχώρησε, 'went off.' The words here left understood are expressed in Plato, p. 394, ἀποχωρήσας—ἐκ τοῦ στρατοπέδου.

Ch. LXXIX. 1. ἐβιάσαντο—ἐλθεῖν]

[ἐλθεῖν] τὸν ἀποτετειχισμένον, καὶ εὗρον πρὸ ἑαυτῶν ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἀποτειχίσματος τὴν πεζὴν στρατιὰν παρατεταγμένην, οὐκ ἐπ' ὀλίγων ἀσπίδων· στενὸν γὰρ ἦν τὸ χωρίον. 2. καὶ προσβαλόντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐτειχομάχουν, καὶ βαλλόμενοι ὑπὸ πολλῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ λόφου, ἐπάντους ὄντος, (διϊκνοῦντο γὰρ ῥᾷον οἱ ἄνωθεν) καὶ οὐ δυνάμενοι βιάσασθαι, ἀνεχώρουν πάλιν καὶ ἀνεπαύοντο. 3. ἔτυχον δὲ καὶ βρονταί τινες ἅμα γενόμεναι καὶ ὕδωρ, οἷα, τοῦ ἔτους πρὸς μετόπωρον ἤδη ὄντος, φιλεῖ γίγνεσθαι· ἀφ' ὧν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι μᾶλλον ἔτι ἠθύμουν, καὶ ἐνόμιζον ἐπὶ τῷ σφετέρῳ ὀλέθρῳ καὶ ταῦτα πάντα γίγνεσθαι. 4. ἀναπαυομένων δὲ αὐτῶν, ὁ Γύλιππος καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι πέμπουσι μέρος τι τῆς στρατιᾶς ἀποτειχιοῦντας αὖ ἐκ τοῦ ὄπισθεν αὐτούς, ἢ προεληλύθεσαν· ἀντιπέμψαντες δὲ κἀκεῖνοι σφῶν αὐτῶν τινας διεκώλυσαν. 5. καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα πάσῃ τῇ στρατιᾷ ἀναχωρήσαντες πρὸς τὸ πεδίον μᾶλλον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ηὐλίσαντο. τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ προὐχώρουν, καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι προσέβαλλόν τε πανταχῇ αὐτοῖς κύκλῳ, καὶ πολλοὺς κατετραυμάτιζον· καὶ εἰ μὲν ἐπίοιεν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ὑπεχώρουν, εἰ δ' ἀναχωροῖεν, ἐπέκειντο, καὶ μάλιστα τοῖς ὑστάτοις προσπίπτοντες, εἴ πως, κατὰ βραχὺ τρεψάμενοι, πᾶν τὸ στράτευμα φοβήσειαν. 6. καὶ ἐπὶ πολὺ μὲν τοιούτῳ τρόπῳ ἀντεῖχον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι· ἔπειτα προελθόντες πέντε ἢ ἓξ σταδίους ἀνεπαύοντο ἐν τῷ πεδίῳ· ἀνεχώρησαν δὲ καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἐς τὸ ἑαυτῶν στρατόπεδον.

LXXX. Τῆς δὲ νυκτὸς τῷ Νικίᾳ καὶ Δημοσθένει ἐδόκει, ἐπειδὴ κακῶς σφίσι τὸ στράτευμα εἶχε τῶν τε ἐπιτηδείων πάντων ἀπορίᾳ

'strove, to their uttermost force, to enter:' a use, Poppo observes, so rare, that he knows no example elsewhere: and, indeed, none are adduced even in the latest edition of Steph. Thes. I cannot, however, but suspect that the word ἐλθεῖν was introduced from the margin, where it was entered down by some one who wished to make the sense more complete. Similarly in a passage of the New Testament, Luke xvi. 16, καὶ πᾶς εἰς αὐτὴν βιάζεται: a few MSS. and the Pesch. Syr. Version subjoin the verb εἰσελθεῖν, which, if βιάζεται could signify strives, would certainly well help out the sense, and, as such, might not without reason be introduced into the text. Since, however, that is not the case, it must unquestionably be rejected. Now, the same, I apprehend, applies to ἐλθεῖν in the present passage, which being cancelled, the construction will stand exactly as that in the passage just cited, and another of our author, supra ch. 69, fin., where we have βιάσασθαι—ἐς τὸ ἔξω: and the sense will be as follows, 'they forced their way to the very ridge [of the hill],' which, it seems, they had not reached the day before.

οὐκ ἐπ' ὀλίγων ἀσπίδων] Render, 'ranged not a few deep.' For Duker has shown that the expression is to be understood, not εἰς μῆκος, but εἰς βάθος: a sense confirmed not only by a passage of Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 11, adduced by the above commentator, but by another of our author, iv. 93, 4, ἐπ' ἀσπίδας πέντε καὶ εἴκοσι ἐτάξαντο, 'ranged themselves 25 deep.' Indeed this sense is required by the words which follow: they ranged them many deep, because the narrowness of the place did not admit of their spreading out the forces in long line.

2. ἐτειχομάχουν] See note on i. 102.

5. προὐχώρουν] Meaning, that they proceeded on the same course that they had first taken, towards the highlands and the country of the Siculi.

Ch. LXXX. 1. ἀπορίᾳ] So I have ἤδη, καὶ κατατετραυματισμένοι ἦσαν πολλοὶ ἐν πολλαῖς προσβολαῖς τῶν πολεμίων γεγενημέναις, πυρὰ καύσαντες ὡς πλεῖστα ἀπάγειν τὴν στρατιάν, μηκέτι τὴν αὐτὴν ὁδὸν ᾗ διενοήθησαν, ἀλλὰ τοὐναντίον ἢ οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐτήρουν, πρὸς τὴν θάλασσαν. ἦν δὲ ἡ ξύμπασα ὁδὸς αὕτη οὐκ ἐπὶ Κατάνης τῷ στρατεύματι, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸ ἕτερον μέρος τῆς Σικελίας, τὸ πρὸς Καμάριναν καὶ Γέλαν καὶ τὰς ταύτῃ πόλεις καὶ Ἑλληνίδας καὶ βαρβάρους. 2. καύσαντες οὖν πυρὰ πολλά, ἐχώρουν ἐν τῇ νυκτί· καὶ αὐτοῖς,—οἷον φιλεῖ καὶ πᾶσι στρατοπέδοις, μάλιστα δὲ τοῖς μεγίστοις, φόβοι καὶ δείματα ἐγγίγνεσθαι, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἐν νυκτί τε καὶ διὰ πολεμίας, καὶ [ἀπὸ] πολεμίων οὐ πολὺ ἀπεχόντων—ἰοῦσιν ἐμπίπτει ταραχή. 3. καὶ τὸ μὲν Νικίου στράτευμα, ὥσπερ ἠγεῖτο, ξυνέμενέ τε, καὶ προὔλαβε edited, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, for vulg. ἀπορία: and to the imperfect evidence for this reading which they adduce from one MS., which has ἀπορίαι, I am enabled to add the direct testimony of Cod. Mus. Brit., which has ἀπορίᾳ, as had formerly Cod. Clarend. At the verb κατατετραυματισμένοι ἦσαν, just after, ὅτι would seem necessary; but Poppo has instanced a similar omission of the word at v. 61, 4.

ἦν δὲ ἡ ξύμπασα—καὶ Γέλαν] The purpose of these words is merely to instruct the less-informed reader what was the direction of the course they were now going to pursue. This, it is shown, was not to Catana, but in the opposite direction: and as most knew how Catana was situated in respect of Syracuse, they would also know what was the course the Athenians were now about to take. Yet some ancients, as Diodorus and Pausanias, and several moderns, maintain from this passage, that their route had hitherto been in the direction of Catana; which cannot be true, from what Thucydides has just said. Their route, he tells us, had been in the opposite direction to the sea-coast: but such could not take them to Catana.

2. φόβοι καὶ δείματα] Render, 'fears and frights.' Of these two terms (similarly united in Hesiod, Theog. 934. Hom. Il. xi. 37. Plutarch de Super. 7.) the latter is (as plainly appears from Eurip. Hel. 319, φόβος εἰς τὸ δεῖμά μ' ἄγει,) a far stronger one than the former, denoting not only a more violent, (so Æschyl. Prom. 581, οἰστρηλάτῳ δείματι,) but a sudden fear, which, as it were, scares the person experiencing it as would a spectre. So in Hom. Il. v. 682, amidst the successes of the Greeks Hector suddenly appears δεῖμα φέρων Δαναοῖσι. Compare also Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 883, φάσματα—δείματα φέροντα. Now this term is especially applicable to such terrors as seize persons from sudden danger or during the helplessness of night, (so Lycophr. Cass. 225, νυκτόφοιτα δείματα. Soph. El. 410, ἐκ δείματος τοῦ νυκτέρου,) or such as are inspired by terrific dreams. So Æschyl. Choeph. 517, ἐκ τ' ὀνειράτων καὶ νυκτιπλάγκτων δειμάτων πεπαλμένη, compared with Apoll. Rhod. iv. 685, ἡ δ' ὅτε δὴ νυχίων ἀπὸ δείματα πιμψεν ὀνείρων. Hence it is peculiarly suited to denote those panic fears which are apt to seize on an army, particularly by night, and which, seeming humanly causeless, were by the ancients ascribed to some hostile deity. So Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1475, ταραχαὶ—ἐνέπιπτον ἐκ δειμάτων δαιμονίων, and 1985, 1, τὰ θεῖα (divinitus immissa) δείματα. In the present instance panic fears and frights seem, from the context, to be intended,—and that according to the proper acceptation of the term δεῖμα, as said of a terror divinitus immissus: and the fear in question we may justly suppose to have been occasioned by extreme despondency on the part of the suffering army, produced by the occurrence of the thunder and lightning on the day before, in which their ominous fears recognised an awful portent of coming destruction.

Finally, the words φόβοι καὶ δείματα ἐγγίγνεσθαι form, as Goeller says, an explanation of οἷον φιλεῖ preceding, as ἀσαφῶς ἐκπλήγνυσθαι, one of ὅπερ, in a similar passage at iv. 125, 1.

3. ξυνέμενε] 'kept together,' 'preserved its order.' At προὔλαβε πολλῷ, 'got far ahead,' supply τῆς ὁδοῦ, as in Xen. Cyr. v. 19, 6, and 19, 77. Diod. Sic. vii. 221. Polyæn. ii. 2, 2. Ἀπεσπάσθη, 'was separated [from the van],' viz. by a space of distance. So Xen. An. vii. 3, 2, (Th.) νύκτωρ ἀποσπασθῆναι, and ii. 2, 5, ἵνα ὡς πλεῖστον ἀποσπασθῶμεν ἀπὸ τοῦ βασιλ. στρατεύματος. For this the more usual term is διασπᾶσθαι, (which occurs supra, ch. 78, and also in Xen. Cyr. v. 3, 16, and Anab. i. 5, 9.) but, as Abresch points out, ἀποσπ. is here used, because the space of distance was now much greater, upwards of five miles.

4. μετέπεμψαν] For this Bekker edits, on the authority of one MS., μεταπέμψαντες; but I prefer, with Poppo and Goeller, to retain the common reading.

5. ταύτῃ—ἐκέλευον] Meaning simply, that they directed them to go thither, viz. to the Erineus; perhaps as thinking that the valley of the Cacyparis would not be practicable, as pre-occupied by the Syracusans. Yet the guides could not mean them to go to the interior country by the valley of the Erineus, which, indeed, is no valley at all, but merely a κόλπος having no communication with the interior. Little doubt is there that they meant them to go forward, at least the next day, to the Assinarus: and Nicias seems, from the time that he found the Siculi not at the Cacyparis, as he had hoped, to have intended to go on to the Assinarus, which afforded the only valley communicating with the interior after he had passed the Cacyparis. But see more in the Appendix.

Ch. LXXXI. 1. ἐν αἰτίᾳ—εἶχον ἐκόντα ἀφεῖναι] for ᾐτιάσαντο ἀφ. Compare with this the fuller and plainer wording at ii. 59, init., τὸν Περ. ἐν αἰτίᾳ εἶχον ὡς πείσαντα.

2. ξυνῆγον ἐς ταὐτὸ] Similar to this is the expression at ii. 84, ξυν. ἐς ὀλίγον. In either case, the intention was to throw the attacked into disorder.

3. ἑκόντας εἶναι] 'as far as their will went.' See note at ii. 89, 8, ἑκὼν εἶναι. Τοσαῦτα μαχομένους ὅσα ἀναγκάζονται, τοὺς Συρακοσίους διώκοντας, οὐ προύχώρει, μᾶλλον ἢ ἐς μάχην ξυνετάσσετο, ἕως, ἐνδιατρίβων κυκλοῦταί τε ὑπ' αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐν πολλῷ θορύβῳ αὐτός τε καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ Ἀθηναῖοι ἦσαν· ἀνειληθέντες γὰρ ἔς τι χωρίον, ᾧ κύκλῳ μὲν τειχίον περιῆν, ὁδὸς δὲ ἔνθεν τε καὶ

'fighting just so far [only] as they are compelled.' See note supra ch. 34.

4. ἀνειληθέντες] For this Lobeck conjectures συνειλ., and Didot, ἐνειλ. The latter is preferable, but no change is necessary, since ἀνειλ., however rare a term, does elsewhere occur. So Arr'an, E. A. iv. 5, 13, (cited by Arnold,) οἱ δὲ τοὺς διαβαίνοντας, ἀντιμέτωποι ταχθέντες, ἀνειλουν ἐς τὸν ποταμόν. The sense, however, is not, what Arnold assigns, 'being driven back in confusion,' but 'being hemmed up, and so thrown into confusion.' Similarly in Jos. Bell. iv. 1, 4, we have, ἀνειλοῦντο καὶ περὶ σφᾶς ἔπιπτον, 'were hemmed up, and fell foul of each other;' and in Plut. J. Cæs. 66, it is said of Julius Cæsar, assailed on all sides by his assassins, διελαυνόμενος, ὥσπερ θηρίον, ἐνειλεῖτο ταῖς πάντων χερσίν: for so I would there point, and, for ἐνειλεῖτο, I conjecture the true reading to be ἀνειλ.

ἔς τι χωρίον] Namely, as Plut. Nic. 27, tells us, (perhaps after Timæus,) Ὁλυζήλειος αὐλή, where, though the sense of αὐλή is uncertain, yet it seems to denote the fold into which, in the early ages, the cattle were driven at night, for security against wild beasts and robbers. See Hom. Il. iv. 433, compared with v. 138—142, and x. 183. This αὐλή used, for security sake, to be guarded by a high fence, or wall of rough stones (to which purpose compare Hom. Od. ix. 184, περὶ δ' αὐλὴ Ὑψηλὴ ἐΐδμητο κατωρυχέεσσι λίθοισι, where by κατωρυχέεσσι understand dug up, as distinguished from those regularly cut out of the quarry by art and squared); and sometimes it consisted of a cave. See Hom. Od. ix. 239. 338. 462. In either case it had but one entrance, namely, by a strong door not capable of being forced, and which was guarded by a θυρωρός. See a passage of the New Testament, John x. 3, which will throw no little light on this subject. Finally, the term in question is one not only applied by Homer (above cited) to the subterranean cave of Polyphemus, but employed by Sophocles to denote the subterranean domicile of Philoctetes. See Soph. Phil. 150—160.

The place here spoken of seems to have been originally a mere deep dell or hollow, a sort of cave, though not subterranean, subsequently formed into an αὐλή for the security of the cattle of an extensive tract of country by Polyzelus, and accordingly furnished with a strong wall around, allowing only one entrance. In after-times, when such security became no longer necessary, it was converted into an olive-ground, only the entrance was widened. I say an olive-ground, with Bp. Thirlwall and Dr. Arnold; though the words ἐλάας δὲ οὐκ ὀλίγας εἶχε suggest, not the idea of a regular olive-ground, but rather of a plot of ground only partially planted with olives; and the rest (i. e. the ground around the olive-trees) cultivated as a garden, — a sort of cultivation not unfrequent in the rich parts of Southern Europe. Thus it was a situation not very dissimilar to that at i. 106, described as χωρίον — ᾧ ἔτυχεν μέγα περιεῖργον, καὶ οὐκ ἦν ἔξοδος. In the latter particular the two places exactly correspond; for, it seems, there was no outlet, just such as the furculæ Caudinæ mentioned in Liv. ix, 2, 3 & 14, (of the form of a A,) in which the Roman army was similarly caught, as in a trap.

By the ὁδὸς, a little after spoken of, understand, not, as Smith explains, an issue or access; but simply, according to the view of the sense adopted by Hobbes, a way, or, as the word is better rendered by Arnold, Poppo, and Thirlwall, a road. It is meant, then, that a road ran both on this side and on that, i. e. on each of the long side of a parallelogram: for such, as appears from the words, further on, ἐβάλλοντο περισταδὸν, must have been the form of the ground,—namely, a parallelogram not more than a double bow-shot, or sling's cast. This upper road either way gave the Syracusans a complete command over the place.

The τε after ἔνθεν, though not found in four MSS. (to which add Cod. Mus. Brit.) I have retained, because, though ἔνθεν καὶ ἔνθεν is used in the best writers, yet here the τε has no little force,—as much, indeed, as καὶ ἔνθεν καὶ ἔνθεν, occurring in two passages of Hippocrates, referred to by Poppo, and, what I have myself noted, a passage of the Septuagint in Numb. xxii. 24.

ἔνθεν, (ἐλάας δὲ οὐκ ὀλίγας εἶχεν,) ἐβάλλοντο περισταδόν. 5. τοιαύταις δὲ προσβολαῖς, καὶ οὐ ξυσταδὸν μάχαις, οἱ Συρακόσιοι εἰκότως ἐχρῶντο· τὸ γὰρ ἀποκινδυνεύειν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἀπονενοημένους οὐ πρὸς ἐκείνων μᾶλλον ἦν ἔτι ἢ πρὸς τῶν Ἀθηναίων· καὶ ἅμα φειδώ τέ τις ἐγίγνετο ἐπ' εὐπραγίᾳ ἤδη σαφεῖ, μὴ προαναλωθῆναί τῳ,—καὶ ἐνόμιζον καὶ ὡς ταύτῃ τῇ ἰδέᾳ καταδαμασάμενοι λήψεσθαι αὐτούς. ἐβάλλοντο περισταδὸν] A somewhat rare phrase, of which I have noted examples elsewhere in Arrian, E. A. v. 17, and Jos. Ant. xvii. 10, 2.

5. ξυσταδὸν μάχαις] i. e. μάχαις σταδίαις. So Herodian, vi. 7, 19, πρὸς τὴν ξ. μάχην. Herodot. vii. 225.

ἀποκινδυνεύειν πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἀπονενοημένους] This the ancients always dreaded: and hence the saying σφαλερὸν συμπλέκεσθαι τοῖς ἐξ ἀπονοίας ἀναμαχομένοις. So also Xen. Hist. vii. 5, 12, τοῖς ἀπονενοημένοις οὐδεὶς ἂν ὑποσταίη: and see i. 82, 4.

καὶ ἅμα φειδώ τις ἐγίγνετο] 'And there was a sort of parsimony [of life],' literally, an abstaining from giving it up unnecessarily, (so Hom. Il. vii. 409, οὐ γάρ τις φειδὼ νεκύων κατατεθνηότων Γίγνετ',) namely, that they might enjoy the fruits of their victory. So Eurip. Hippol. καλυπτ. frag. x. Ὕβριν τε τίκτει πλοῦτος, ἢ φειδὼ βίου, compared with Diod. Sic. t. vi. 47. vii. 311, φειδὼ ποιούμενος τοῦ ζῆν.

In the next words, μὴ προαναλωθῆναί τῳ, the τῳ is to be joined with φειδὼ preceding: and the προ in προαναλωθῆναι is best referred (as it is by the Scholiast, Abresch, and Poppo) to the words ἢ ὅλως αὐτοὺς καταδαμάσαιντο, taken from the following context.

Ch. LXXXII. 1. ἀπιέναι] A vox prægnans, of which the sense is, 'to leave the Athenians, and go over to the Syracusans.'

3. ἐσβαλόντες] 'having cast it into.' So the expression βάλλειν χαλκὸν εἰς in a passage of the New Testament, Mark xii. 41.

ἀσπίδας ὑπτίας] literally, 'shields laid on their back:' an expression apparently formed on the phrase ὑπτία χείρ, 'the back of the hand.'

ναίων ξυμβῆναι, ὅσα ἀνάλωσαν χρήματα Συρακόσιοι ες τον πόλεμον ταῦτα ἀποδοῦναι, ὥστε τὴν μετ' αὐτοῦ στρατιὰν ἀφεῖναι αὐτούς· μέχρι οὗ δ' ἂν τὰ χρήματα ἀποδοθῇ, ἄνδρας δώσειν Ἀθηναίων ὁμήρους, ἕνα κατὰ τάλαντον. 3. οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι καὶ Γύλιππος οὐ προσεδέχοντο τοὺς λόγους, ἀλλὰ προσπεσόντες, καὶ περιστάντες πανταχόθεν, ἔβαλλον καὶ τούτους μέχρι ὀψέ. 4. εἶχον δὲ καὶ οὗτοι πονήρως σίτου τε καὶ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων ἀπορίᾳ. ὅμως δὲ τῆς νυκτὸς φυλάξαντες τὸ ἡσυχάζον, ἔμελλον πορεύεσθαι. καὶ ἀναλαμβάνουσί τε τὰ ὅπλα, καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι αἰσθάνονται καὶ ἐπαιώνισαν. 5. γνόντες δὲ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ὅτι οὐ λανθάνουσι, κατέθεντο πάλιν, πλὴν τριακοσίων μάλιστα ἀνδρῶν· οὗτοι δὲ διὰ τῶν φυλάκων βιασάμενοι, ἐχώρουν τῆς νυκτὸς ᾗ ἐδύναντο. Νικίας δὲ, ἐπειδὴ ἡμέρα ἐγένετο, ἦγε τὴν στρατιάν· οἱ δὲ Συρακόσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι προσέκειντο τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον, πανταχόθεν βάλλοντές τε καὶ κατακοντίζοντες. 2. καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἠπείγοντο πρὸς τὸν Ἀσσίναρον ποταμόν, ἅμα μὲν βιαζόμενοι ὑπὸ τῆς πανταχόθεν προσβολῆς ἱππέων τε πολλῶν καὶ τοῦ ἄλλου ὄχλου, οἰόμενοι ῥᾷόν τι σφίσιν ἔσεσθαι, ἢν διαβῶσι τὸν ποταμόν, ἅμα δὲ ὑπὸ τῆς ταλαιπωρίας καὶ τοῦ πιεῖν ἐπιθυμίᾳ. 3. ὡς δὲ γίγνονται ἐπ' αὐτῷ, ἐσπίπτουσιν οὐδενὶ κόσμῳ ἔτι, ἀλλὰ πᾶς τέ τις διαβῆναι αὐτὸς πρῶτος βουλόμενος, καὶ οἱ πολέμιοι ἐπικείμενοι, χαλεπὴν ἤδη τὴν διάβασιν ἐποίουν· ἀθρόοι γὰρ ἀναγκαζόμενοι χωρεῖν, ἐπέπιπτόν τε ἀλλήλοις καὶ κατεπάτουν, περί τε τοῖς δορατίοις καὶ σκεύεσιν οἱ μὲν εὐθὺς διεφθείροντο, οἱ δὲ ἐμπαλασσόμενοι κατέῤῥεον. 4. ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ θάτερά τε τοῦ ποταμοῦ παραστάντες οἱ

Ch. LXXXIII. 2. ἕνα κατὰ τάλαντον] See note at iii. 70.

4. εἶχον πονήρως] 'they were in a wretched condition;' as Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 26. Τῆς νυκτὸς τὸ ἡσυχάζον, 'the stilly [period] of the night.'

Ch. LXXXIV. 3. περὶ τοῖς δορατίοις—διεφθείροντο] The full sense is, 'perished by running foul of the spears.' The περὶ stands for περιπειρόμενοι. So Plut. Sylla, 18. (cited by Jacobs,) κατὰ πρανοῦς φερόμενοι τοῖς ὄρεσι περιέπιπτον αὐτοὶ τοῖς ἑαυτῶν. Diod. Sic. t. vii. 190, ξίφεσι καὶ λόγχαις περιπειρόμενοι, and Agath. 100, 9, τοῖς τῶν φιλτάτων ξίφεσι περιπταίοντες (where, for περιπταίοντες, I conjecture the true reading to be περιπίπτοντες). An allusion to this idea is found in Joseph. Bell. iii. 7, 31, πολλοὶ δὲ τοῖς ἰδίοις περιεπείροντο κακοῖς. Strange is it that Dr. Arnold should take the term σκεύεσιν to refer to κατέῤῥεον, further on; which is surely forbidden by all the rules of exact construction. It is sufficient to suppose that they ran themselves, or wounded themselves by running, foul of the various articles of baggage (as cooking utensils) dropped in the general confusion, and also, perhaps, little carts for conveying baggage. It can scarcely be doubted that Thucydides had in mind the words of Hom. Il. xviii. 23, (here cited by Didot,) ὄλοντο—Ἀμφὶ σφοῖς ὀχέεσσι καὶ ἔγχεσι. At any rate those words serve to confirm and illustrate the above view of the sense.

οἱ δὲ ἐμπαλασσόμενοι κατέῤῥεον] Dr. Arnold explains κατέῤῥεον to mean 'sunk to the ground,' namely, from exhaustion; adducing, in proof of this signification of the word, two passages of Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 19, and Soph. Ant. 1010: but, as Poppo shows, in neither of these does the term bear that sense; and assuredly it does not here. The import of these words ἐμπαλασσόμενοι κατέῤῥεον is plainly this, 'entan-

Συρακόσιοι, (ἦν δὲ κρημνῶδες) ἔβαλλον ἄνωθεν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, πίνοντάς τε τοὺς πολλοὺς ἀσμένους, καὶ ἐν κοίλῳ ὄντι τῷ ποταμῷ ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ταρασσομένους. 5. οἵ τε Πελοποννήσιοι, ἐπικαταβάντες, τοὺς ἐν τῷ ποταμῷ μάλιστα ἔσφαζον. καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ εὐθὺς διέφθαρτο· ἀλλ' οὐδὲν ἧσσον ἐπίνετό τε ὁμοῦ τῷ πηλῷ, ᾑματωμένον, καὶ περιμάχητον ἦν τοῖς πολλοῖς. LXXXV. Τέλος δὲ νεκρῶν τε πολλῶν ἐπ' ἀλλήλοις ἤδη κειμένων ἐν τῷ ποταμῷ καὶ διεφθαρμένου τοῦ στρατεύματος, τοῦ μὲν κατὰ τὸν ποταμὸν, gled together they were hurried down,' viz. to the bottom of the deep ravine which (as we learn from Capt. Smythe) the Assinarus here forms, nearly at its embouchure into the sea; the banks being very high and precipitous, and the stream flowing (probably in a deep, though narrow, channel) at the bottom. With respect to the metaphor in κατέῤῥεον, it is one derived ἀπὸ τῶν ποταμίων ῥευμάτων, as in Aristoph. Acharn. 26, Ἐλθόντες ἀλλήλοισι— ἀθρόοι καταῤῥέοντες, where the Scholiast well points out the ratio metaphoræ, referring, in illustration of it, to a passage of Hom. Il. xi. 723, τὰ δ' ἐπέῤῥεεν ἔθνεα πεζῶν, 'poured on.' Finally, the view of the sense above propounded is placed beyond doubt by a passage of Polyb. viii. 16, 6, ἐκλιπόντες τὸν Ἀκρόλισσον, κατέῤῥεον ταῖς ἀνοδίαις εἰς τοὺς ὁμαλοὺς τόπους, 'rushed tumultuously down,' &c. And such is occasionally the use of our verb to pour, as observable in a passage of Pope, cited in Johnson's Dictionary: 'a ghastly band of giants All pouring down the mountains crowd the shore.' Ἐμπαλασσόμενοι stands for ἐμπλεκόμενοι; a use also found in Hdot. vii. 85, ἐν ἕρκεσι ἐμπαλασσόμενοι διαφθείρονται. Again, the simple παλάσσω for πλέκω occurs in Homer and Hesiod: and ἐμπελάζεσθαι, a cognate form, is found in Dio Cass. p. 105, 40, (a passage evidently written with a view to the present,) ἀλλήλοις ἐμπελαζόμενοι ἐφθείροντο, and Phalaris, Ep. 34, ἐμπελασθεὶς λέουσι. Finally, such is the use of ἐμπλάσσεσθαι in Polybius, Ælian, and Plutarch.

4. καὶ ἐν κοίλῳ—ταρασσομένους] The construction is, καὶ ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ταρασσ. ἐν τῷ ποταμῷ, κοίλῳ ὄντι. By κοίλῳ understand, 'with steep and precipitous banks,' at the bottom of which rolls the stream: a remarkable use of the term κοῖλος, with which Jacobs compares the following in Polyb. xxii. 20, 4, ἐγεφύρωσε τὸν Σ. ποταμὸν, τελέως κοῖλον ὄντα καὶ δύσβατον. But there the epithet has reference to the river itself, not its banks, and signifies, as not unfrequently elsewhere, deep or rather voraginous, as at i. 60, and Arrian, E. A. vi. 18, 9, κοῖλον ἐποίει τὸν ποταμόν. More to the present purpose were it to compare a similar expression in Hom. Od. xxii. 385, οὔθ' ἁλιῆς Κοῖλον ἐς αἰγιαλὸν πολιῆς ἔκτοσθε θαλάσσης Δικτύῳ ἐξέρυσαν, where κοῖλον denotes the hollow and steep part of the sea-shore, called the beach, immediately above the sea, but below the strand, or more level part of the shore.

5. καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ εὐθὺς διέφθαρτο] 'and immediately the water was discoloured!' a circumstance graphically thrown in, by way of designating the extent of the slaughter — like the well-known description in Burne's Tam O'Shanter, 'And in an instant all was dark!' In the same light I would regard the words, a little after, καὶ περιμάχητον ἦν τοῖς πολλοῖς, where περιμάχητον means, not, as the Scholiast explains, σπουδαιότατον, 'much sought after,'—for that the water must have been to all,—but rather, according to the proper sense of the term,—'nay, it was an object of contest to most.' Such is the use of the word in Plato de Legg. 815, περιμάχητος ἦν αὐτοῖς ἡ τροφή. Procop. de Ædif. p. 27, 17. Aristot. Eth. ix. 8. Polyæn. p. 750, διὸ καὶ περιμάχητά ἐστιν. Diod. Sic. t. ii. p. 196, 1.

Strange is the criticism of Longinus de Subl. sect. 38, according to which this passage of our author is adduced as supplying an example of 'the hyperbole so well managed as not to appear such, from the exceeding pathos and the circumstances of the case making it credible;' as illustrative of which principle he compares a passage of Herodotus, ἀλεξομένους μαχαίρῃσι καὶ χερσὶ καὶ στόμασι: a principle any thing but applicable to the present passage, in which we have a simple matter of fact related, which, however strange, is by no means incredible. Nay, it would not be difficult to adduce parallels in the records of history, even yet more extraordinary.

τοῦ δὲ—καὶ εἴ τι διαφύγοι—ὑπὸ τῶν ἱππέων,—Νικίας Γυλίππῳ ἑαυτὸν παραδίδωσι, πιστεύσας μᾶλλον αὐτῷ ἢ τοῖς Συρακοσίοις· καὶ ἑαυτῷ μὲν χρῆσθαι ἐκέλευεν ἐκεῖνόν τε καὶ Λακεδαιμονίους ὅ,τι βούλονται, τοὺς δὲ ἄλλους στρατιώτας παύσασθαι φονεύοντας. 2. καὶ ὁ Γύλιππος μετὰ τοῦτο ζωγρεῖν ἤδη ἐκέλευε· καὶ τούς τε λοιποὺς ὅσους μὴ ἀπεκρύψαντο, (πολλοὶ δὲ οὗτοι ἐγένοντο) ξυνεκόμισαν ζῶντας, καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς τριακοσίους, οἳ τὴν φυλακὴν διεξῆλθον τῆς νυκτὸς πέμψαντες τοὺς διωξομένους, ξυνέλαβον. 3. τὸ μὲν οὖν ἀθροισθὲν τοῦ στρατεύματος ἐς τὸ κοινὸν οὐ πολὺ ἐγένετο, τὸ δὲ διακλαπὲν πολύ· καὶ [δι]επλήσθη πᾶσα Σικελία αὐτῶν, ἅτε οὐκ ἀπὸ ξυμβάσεως, ὥσπερ τῶν μετὰ Δημοσθένους, ληφθέντων. 4. μέρος δέ τι οὐκ ὀλίγον καὶ ἀπέθανε· πλεῖστος γὰρ δὴ φόνος οὗτος καὶ οὐδενὸς ἐλάσσων τῶν ἐν τῷ Σικελικῷ πολέμῳ τούτῳ ἐγένετο. καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἄλλαις προσβολαῖς ταῖς κατὰ τὴν πορείαν, συχναῖς γενομέναις, οὐκ ὀλίγοι ἐτεθνήκεσαν. πολλοὶ δὲ ὅμως καὶ διέφυγον, οἱ μὲν καὶ παραυτίκα, οἱ δὲ καὶ δουλεύσαντες καὶ διαδιδράσκοντες ὕστερον· τούτοις δ' ἦν ἀναχώρησις ἐς Κατάνην.

Ch. LXXXV. 1. ἑαυτῷ μὲν χρῆσθαι—ὅ,τι βούλονται] Formula obvia in conditionibus deditionum, also occurring at ii. 4. iv. 69. This simple circumstance, alone brought forward by Thucydides,—namely, that Nicias surrendered himself to Gylippus, at the same time begging quarter for the troops,—is worked up by Plutarch into a dramatic narrative. He makes Nicias fall at the feet of Gylippus; and he puts a speech into his mouth, (like that of Crœsus to Cyrus, in Herodotus,) alike unsuited to the man and to the occasion.

2. ἀπεκρύψαντο] in suum usum occultarunt.

3. ἐς τὸ κοινὸν] in publicum, as in a passage (on the same subject) of Plut. Timol. 29. Διεπλήσθη. This I have edited, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, on the authority of the greater part of the best MSS., for the common reading κατεπλ., because the word, however rare, being found in Dio Cass., seems to have had place in that historian's copy of Thucydides: though, when I consider how little likely it is that the καὶ before διεπλήσθη should have been substituted for δι, I cannot but suspect that our author wrote neither δι nor κατα, and that the two prepositions δι and κατα crept in, from inadvertence on the part of the scribes, some of whom manufactured κατὰ from the preceding καί; and others, ΔΙ from the preceding ΑΙ, which latter was, I doubt not, the earlier corruption, since it would occur only in the uncial character. That the simple verb is sufficient to express the full sense here required, might be shown by a multitude of examples occurring in the best of the early writers (where the simple is found used in cases where the later ones would have employed the compound ανα or ἐμπλήθω): and the compound were here the less to be approved, as it would involve something of exaggeration.

Ch. LXXXVI. 2. κατεβίβασαν ἐς τὰς Λιθοτομίας] 'thrust them down into the Lithotomiæ.' Comp. Plato, p. 539, καταβιβαστέοι ἔσονταί σοι εἰς τὸ σπήλαιον. Herodot. viii. 119, ἐκ τοῦ καταστρώματος ἐς κοίλην νῆα ('the hold'). So Hesych. explains καταβιβάσαντες by κατασπῶντες: and hence will appear the full force

Strange is the criticism of Longinus de Subl. sect. 38, according to which this passage of our author is adduced as supplying an example of 'the hyperbole so well managed as not to appear such, from the exceeding pathos and the circumstances of the case making it credible;' as illustrative of which principle he compares a passage of Herodotus, ἀλεξομένους μαχαίρῃσι καὶ χερσὶ καὶ στόμασι: a principle any thing but applicable to the present passage, in which we have a simple matter of fact related, which, however strange, is by no means incredible. Nay, it would not be difficult to adduce parallels in the records of history, even yet more extraordinary.

Cн. LXXXV. 1. ἑαυτῷ μὲν χρῆσθαι—ὅ,τι βούλονται] Formula obvia in conditionibus deditionum, also occurring at ii. 4. iv. 69. This simple circumstance, alone brought forward by Thucydides,—namely, that Nicias surrendered himself to Gylippus, at the same time begging quarter for the troops,—is worked up by Plutarch into a dramatic narrative. He makes Nicias fall at the feet of Gylippus; and he puts a speech into his mouth, (like that of Crœsus to Cyrus, in Herodotus,) alike unsuited to the man and to the occasion.

2. ἀπεκρύψαντο] in suum usum occultarunt.

3. ἐς τὸ κοινὸν] in publicum, as in a passage (on the same subject) of Plut. Timol. 29. Διεπλήσθη. This I have edited, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, on the authority of the greater part of the best MSS., for the common reading κατεπλ., because the word, however rare, being found in Dio Cass., seems to have had place in that historian's copy of Thucydides: though, when I consider how little likely it is that the καὶ before διεπλήσθη should have been substituted for δι, I cannot but suspect that our author wrote neither δι nor κατα, and that the two prepositions δι and κατα crept in, from inadvertence on the part of the scribes, some of whom manufactured κατὰ from the preceding καί; and others, ΔΙ from the preceding ΑΙ, which latter was, I doubt not, the earlier corruption, since it would occur only in the uncial character. That the simple verb is sufficient to express the full sense here required, might be shown by a multitude of examples occurring in the best of the early writers (where the simple is found used in cases where the later ones would have employed the compound ana or ἐμπλήθω): and the compound were here the less to be approved, as it would involve something of exaggeration.

Cн. LXXXVI. 2. κατεβίβασαν ἐς τὰς Λιθοτομίας] 'thrust them down into the Lithotomiæ.' Comp. Plato, p. 539, καταβιβαστέοι ἔσονταί σοι εἰς τὸ σπήλαιον. Herodot. viii. 119, ἐκ τοῦ καταστρώματος ἐς κοίλην νῆα ('the hold'). So Hesych. explains καταβιβάσαντες by κατασπῶντες: and hence will appear the full force of the figure in a passage of the New Testament, Matt. xi. 23, ἕως ᾅδου ('the pit of hell') καταβιβασθήσῃ.

The article τὴν before τήρησιν. not found in very many MSS., is by Haack, Dobree, and Arnold (with the approbation of Poppo) proposed to be cancelled. I have chosen, with Bekker and Goeller, to retain it, because wholly insufficient appears to me the reason for cancelling it,—namely, the absence of the article at vii. 42, ξυντομωτάτην ἠγεῖτο διαπολέμησιν, for that circumstance will only serve to prove that the article has been there left out, not that it has here no place. Moreover, the article is more necessary in the one case than in the other. Finally, considering that above half the MSS. have the article, and that internal evidence is equal, it ought surely to be retained.

καλὸν τὸ ἀγώνισμα ἐνόμιζέν οἱ] 'would think it an exploit highly honourable to him:' on which sense of the term ἀγώνισμα see notes at i. 22. vii. 56. 59. viii. 17.

4. After ἥκιστα Bekker and Goeller introduce, on the authority of one MS., διὰ τοῦτο. But, besides the insufficiency of external evidence in their favour, the words are, I maintain, worse than useless, and originated, I suspect, in a marginal gloss on ἀνθ' ὧν, a little before.

5. διὰ τὴν πᾶσαν—ἐπιτήδευσιν] The words ἐς τὸ θεῖον, found in the common text before νενομισμένην, I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, thought proper to cancel, because they are absent from almost every good MS. (I have not found them in Codd. Clar. and Mus. Brit.) and may justly be supposed to have crept in from the margin, where they were intended to supply the reference which was wanting to νενομισμένην, where the words which I have here ventured, with the above editors, to introduce into the text, on the authority of eight MSS.,—namely, πᾶσαν ἐς ἀρετὴν,—were, it seems, accidentally omitted in consequence of the occurrence of the τὴν —τήν. Construe, διὰ τὴν νενομισμένην ἐπιτήδευσιν ἐς πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν, the words being equivalent, as the Scholiast points out, to διὰ τὸ πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν νομίμως ἐπιτετηδευκέναι, 'because he had regularly discharged every kind of virtue:' where πᾶσαν is added by way of generalizing the idea expressed by ἀρετὴν, and denoting virtue in its widest acceptation, as understood of right action generally, or the acting agreeably to those relations in which men stand to their fellow-creatures and to their common Creator: a sense which ἀρετὴ bears also in two passages of the New Testament, 2 Pet. i. 5, ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει τὴν ἀρετὴν, and Philipp. iv. 8, εἴ τις ἀρετὴ καὶ εἴ τις ἔπαινος. Finally, the epithet νενομισμένην has here no little

Λιθοτομίαις οἱ Συρακόσιοι χαλεπῶς τοὺς πρώτους χρόνους μετεχείρισαν. ἐν γὰρ κοίλῳ χωρίῳ ὄντας, †καὶ ὀλίγῳ πολλοὺς, οἵ τε ἥλιοι τὸ πρῶτον καὶ πνῖγος ἔτι ἐλύπει διὰ τὸ ἀστέγαστον, καὶ αἱ νύκτες ἐπιγιγνόμεναι τοὐναντίον μετοπωριναὶ καὶ ψυχραὶ τῇ μεταβολῇ ἐς ἀσθένειαν ἐνεωτέριζον· πάντα τε ποιούντων αὐτῶν διὰ στενοχωρίαν ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ, καὶ προσέτι τῶν νεκρῶν ὁμοῦ ἐπ' ἀλλήλοις ξυννενημένων, οἳ ἔκ τε τῶν τραυμάτων καὶ διὰ τὴν μεταβολὴν καὶ τὸ τοιοῦτον ἀπέθνησκον· 2. καὶ ὁσμαὶ ἦσαν οὐκ ἀνεκτοὶ, καὶ λιμῷ ἅμα καὶ δίψει ἐπιέζοντο (ἐδίδοσαν γὰρ αὐτῶν ἑκάστῳ ἐπὶ ὀκτὼ μῆνας κοτύλην ὕδατος καὶ δύο κοτύλας σίτου)· ἄλλα τε ὅσα εἰκὸς ἐν τοιούτῳ χωρίῳ ἐμπεπτωκότας κακοπαθῆσαι, οὐδὲν ὅ τι οὐκ ἐπεγένετο αὐτοῖς. 3. καὶ ἡμέρας μὲν ἑβδομήκοντά τινας οὕτω διῃτήθησαν ἀθρόοι· ἔπειτα, πλὴν Ἀθηναίων καὶ εἴ τινες Σικελιωτῶν ἢ Ἰταλιωτῶν ξυνεστράτευσαν, τοὺς force, as importing that the observances in question were rendered νομίμως, ritè, et ex patriæ legibus. Of ἐπιτήδευσις ἐς the sense is, 'zealous pursuit of or application to:' and thus ἐπιτήδευσιν ἐς ἀρετὴν is equivalent to ἐπιτήδευσιν ἀρετῆς, a phrase occurring in Plato, p. 85, 3, πρὸς ἐπιτήδευσιν ἀρετῆς: and so ἐπιτηδεύειν ἀρετὴν at vi. 54; as also in Isocrates and other of the best Attic writers. No other example have I noted of this construction of the verbal noun ἐπιτήδευσις, but one instance of the verb (namely, ἐπιτηδεύειν) in the Septuagint, at Malachi, ii. 11, ἐπετήδευσεν ἐς θεοὺς ἀλλοτρίους, 'studiosè sectatus est deos alienos.'

CH. LXXXVII. 1. χαλεπῶς—μετεχείρισαν] 'treated them harshly:' a rare use of μεταχ., which I have noted nowhere else in the active; though in the middle it occurs in Plato, p. 519, ὅταν τινὰ—μεταχειρίζηται ὡς ἀδικοῦντα. Demosth. p. 753, 13, μ. τοὺς πολλοὺς ὁμῶς. Dio Cass. p. 22, 6, ὡς βουλομένους ἀδικεῖν τραχύτατα μετεχειρίζετο.

I have followed Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, in receiving into the text the words καὶ ὀλίγῳ, though only found in one MS., because, besides that they yield an excellent sense, the probability of their being omitted outweighs that of their being inserted. Yet, considering that the article is here imperatively required by the sense, (namely, 'many crowded into a small space,') I would propose to read κἀν, standing for καὶ ἐν.

οἱ ἥλιοι] Meaning, 'the heats, or coups de soleil:' a sense which the term bears also in Ælian, V. Hist. xiii. 1, (cited by Duker,) πεφοίνικτο ὑπὸ τῶν ἡλίων αὐτῷ τὸ πρόσωπον. Dionys. Perieg. 39, μαλεροῖσι κεκαυμένος ἠελιοῖσι. Such, too, is the use of καύματα (as Soph. Œd. Col. 330, ἡλίου τε καύμασι μοχθοῦσα): and parallels are found in Lat. soles and æstus, and Eng. heats. By πνῖγος is denoted that sort of stifling heat which is found in deep hollows like that of the Lithotomiæ, where the direct and the reflected rays of an otherwise scorching sun would be such as scarcely any strength could bear.

τῇ μεταβολῇ ἐς ἀσθένειαν ἐνεωτέριζον] 'brought them, by the change, into a sickly condition,' i. e. operated such a change in the body as produced sickness: a rare use of the word, which is illustrated by Arrian, E. A. iv. 8, 3, νεωτ. ἐς τὸ βαρβαρικώτερον, and vii. 13, 5, ἐνεωτέρ. ἐς ὕβριν. By the change here spoken of is to be understood either the change of season, (to which purpose compare Hdot. ii. 77, ἐν γὰρ τῇσι μεταβολῇσι τοῖσι ἀνθρώποισι αἱ νοῦσοι μάλιστα γίνονται—τῶν ὡρέων μάλιστα: and so Hippocrates, as cited in Foes. Lex. in v., says of the south wind suddenly coming after the north: τὸ σῶμα ποιέει—μεταβάλλειν ἐκ τῶν ἀνέμων τούτων ἐν τῇσι μεταλλαγῇσιν,) or the change in the habit of body produced by the alteration in the temperature. To which purpose compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 2132, τῶν γὰρ σωμάτων βαρεῖα καὶ δυσώδης προσπίπτουσα—ἡ τοῦ πνεύματος ἀποφορὰ ταχείας ἔφερε τοῖς σώμασι τὰς τροπὰς, and Hippocr. de Naturâ Hominis, p. 229, ἢν γὰρ μεταβάλῃ ταχέως τὴν δίαιταν, κίνδυνος καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς μεταβολῆς νεώτερόν τι γίνεσθαι.

πάντα τε ποιούντων] Said, verecundè, to denote what is more fully and explicitly conveyed by the words of Plutarch, Artax. 16, πάντα ποιοῦντος, ὅσα ποιεῖν ἀναγκαῖόν ἄλλους ἀπέδοντο. 4. ἐλήφθησαν δὲ οἱ ξύμπαντες,—ἀκριβείᾳ μὲν χαλεπὸν ἐξειπεῖν, ὅμως δὲ οὐκ ἐλάσσους ἑπτακισχιλίων. 5. ξυνέβη τε ἔργον τοῦτο Ἑλληνικὸν τῶν κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον τόνδε μέγιστον γενέσθαι, δοκεῖν δ' ἔμοιγε καὶ ὧν ἀκοῇ Ἑλληνικῶν ἴσμεν, καὶ τοῖς τε κρατήσασι λαμπρότατον καὶ τοῖς διαφθαρεῖσι δυστυχέστατον· κατὰ πάντα γὰρ πάντως νικηθέντες, καὶ οὐδὲν ὀλίγον ἐς οὐδὲν κακοπαθήσαντες, πανωλεθρίᾳ δή, τὸ λεγόμενον, καὶ πεζὸς καὶ νῆες—καὶ οὐδὲν ὅ τι οὐκ ἀπώλετο. καὶ ὀλίγοι ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐπ' οἴκου ἀπενόστησαν. Ταῦτα μὲν τὰ περὶ Σικελίαν γενόμενα.

5. οὐδὲν ὀλίγον ἐς οὐδὲν κακοπαθήσαντες] A form of expression with which Duker compares another, supra ch. 59, ὀλίγον οὐδὲν ἐς οὐδὲν ἐπενόουν. In πανωλεθρίᾳ δή we have that peculiar anomaly of construction treated of in Poppo, Proleg. i. 1, p. 99, by which the verb is accommodated to the apposition, or predicate; or, as Dr. Arnold expresses it, 'the words πεζὸς καὶ νῆες καὶ οὐδὲν ὅ τι οὐκ belong properly to the predicate of the proposition, and not to its subject.' Whatever be the view taken of the anomaly, it has ample excuse in a passage like the present, in which the deep feeling of the writer, labouring for terms whereby adequately to express the extent of the calamity which befel his countrymen, makes him forget the ordinary rules of construction; and hence at καὶ πεζὸς καὶ νῆες the construction is altogether abandoned.

The sense may be thus expressed, 'nay, both army and fleet were [so to speak] root and branch destroyed, nor was there aught that did not come to utter ruin; and a few out of many returned home.' Strange is it that the editors should not have seen that the sentence terminates at ἀπώλετο, whereas they have there merely placed a comma. Suffice it to say, that such a form of expression as οὐδὲν ὅ τι οὐκ ἀπώλετο admits of nothing to be added: and of the words καὶ ὀλίγοι ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐπ' οἴκου ἀπενόστησαν the exact sense is not that assigned to them by editors and translators in general, 'but a few out of many returned home,' but, 'and a few out of many returned home.' So at iii. 112, we have, ὀλίγοι ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐσώθησαν ἐς τὴν πόλιν, words evidently borrowed by Herodian vii. 9, 17.

ΞΥΓΓΡΑΦΗΣ Θ.

I. Ἐς δὲ τὰς Ἀθήνας ἐπειδὴ ἠγγέλθη, ἐπὶ πολὺ μὲν ἠπίστουν καὶ τοῖς πάνυ τῶν στρατιωτῶν ἐξ αὐτοῦ τοῦ ἔργου διαπεφευγόσι καὶ σαφῶς ἀγγέλλουσι, μὴ οὕτω γε ‡ ἅγαν πανσυδὶ διεφθάρθαι·

BOOK VIII.

Of this book the authenticity (though, as we find by Marcellinus and an anonymous biographer of Thucydides, denied by certain among the ancients) may be argued from various circumstances, and established on the strongest grounds: for not to say that books vii. and viii. are closely connected in grammatical construction, (the last words of bk. vii. being introduced by a μὲν, corresponding to which is the δὲ in the first clause of bk. viii.) 'no one (as Arnold truly observes) who possesses any familiar acquaintance with the history of Thucydides can mistake either the tone of his mind or the cast of his thoughts, or that impartial spirit so characteristic of the writer.' The phraseology, too, of this book is substantially the same as that presented to us in the preceding ones; though, from the circumstance of its having been left imperfect, (probably by the sudden death, or incapacity, of the writer,) it is in a state far less perfect than that of the foregoing. Such being the case, I have thought proper to pursue a plan somewhat differing from that adopted by me thus far in the present work: and since the MSS. of our author extant here fail us in exact proportion to our greater need of them, it is often almost hopeless to attempt bringing the phraseology to any thing like what could be pronounced correct. The reader will find that I have henceforward adopted the text of Bekker's second edition as the basis, from which all deviations are marked with an asterisk, and briefly accounted for in the notes. Attempts to adjust all the remarkable anomalies not unfrequently occurring in this book, would be out of place. As to the explanation of the phraseology, here whatever the Notes may fail to furnish, the copious Index of Greek words and phrases will be found sufficiently to supply.

Ch. I. On the intelligence of the calamity in Sicily reaching Athens, the people at first disbelieve it; but when no longer any doubt as to its truth can be entertained, a general consternation prevails, and withal a violent feeling of exasperation against those who originally promoted the expedition. Nevertheless they courageously set about doing what they can to repair the disaster, and resolve to still maintain the contest, alike with vigour and with prudent economy of their remaining resources.

1. ἐς δὲ τὰς Ἀθήνας ἐπειδὴ ἠγγέλθη] Supply τὰ περὶ Σικελίαν γενόμενα from the last words of bk. vii. Ἐς here bears the sense at.

τοῖς πάνυ τῶν στρατιωτῶν] Meaning, by a certain idiom, (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 272.) 'the most respectable of the soldiers.' So ch. 89, τοῖς πάνυ στρατηγῶν. By αὐτοῦ τοῦ ἔργου, 'the affair itself,' understand the very catastrophe. Of these soldiers who had escaped the dreadful scene of action there were not a few, (see vii. 85, 4.) and the place of their refuge, we are told, was Catana. Σαφῶς ἀγγέλλουσι: an expression of which the sense is here 'to relate a thing

ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἔγνωσαν, χαλεποὶ μὲν ἦσαν τοῖς ξυμπροθυμηθεῖσι τῶν ῥητόρων τὸν ἔκπλουν, ὥσπερ οὐκ αὐτοὶ ψηφισάμενοι, ὠργίζοντο δὲ καὶ τοῖς χρησμολόγοις τε καὶ μάντεσι, καὶ ὁπόσοι τι τότε αὐτοὺς with certain assurance,' as those do who have been eye-witnesses: parallel to which is that at iv. 98, σαφῶς εἰπεῖν, and iii. 12, σαφῶς εἰδέναι, 'to know for certain.'

For vulg. οὕτω γε ἂν—retained by Poppo, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold—I have, with Bekker, edited, from one of the best MSS. οὕτω γε ἄγαν. As to Poppo's defence of the former, from the expression at ii. 102, ἐδόκει ἂν κεχῶσθαι, it is any thing but valid, since the passage appealed to is not sufficiently similar. Again, utterly unreasonable is Dindorf's objection to ἄγαν πασσυδὶ on the score of tautology; for why should not ἄγαν be taken, as Goeller suggests, with οὕτω, and πασσυδὶ be considered as a sort of explanation of οὕτω ἄγαν? Thus it is joined therewith in Eurip. Elect. 1105, οὐχ οὕτως ἄγαν χαίρω: and not unfrequently is it combined with an adverb, as Xen. Vectig. v. 6, ὁμῶς ἄγαν δόξασα πρυστατεύειν. Indeed the reading ἄγαν is placed beyond doubt by the altogether similar phraseology at i. 75, μὴ οὕτως ἄγαν ἐπιφθόνως διακεῖσθαι.

I have recalled the vulg. πανσυδὶ (altered by the recent editors to πασσυδὶ) because, together with strong external testimony in its favour, (being found in almost all the best MSS.) it possesses no inconsiderable weight of internal evidence, as existing in the high probability of the later orthography πασσ. displacing the earlier. Again, πανσ., besides being used in various passages of Dio Cass., Appian, Dionys. Hal., and Joseph. (though πασσ. is also there found, probably as introduced by the copyists,) is borne out by the authority of Ælius Dionys. ap. Eustath., Suidas, Hesych., Etym. Mag., Zonaras, and, finally, Pollux v. 162, who says, πανσυδίᾳ· γράφεται δὲ καὶ πανσυδί. He should have added, that πανσυδίᾳ is the poetic form, (occurring in Hom. Il. ii. 12, and xi. 708, ἦλθον ὁμῶς αὐτοί τε πολεῖς καὶ μώνυχες ἵπποι Πανσυδίῃ, Apollon. Rhod. i. 711. ii. 1065. iv. 859, and Musæus v. 44.) the Attic form of which is πανσυδίᾳ, found in Eurip. Troad. 801, (ed. Matth.) τινος ἐνδέομεν, μὴ οὐ πανσυδίᾳ Χωρεῖν ὀλέθρου διὰ παντός; Heyne, on Homer, has very properly preserved the reading πανσ. (for which some MSS. have πασσ.) because this form was restored by Aristarchus, on the authority of the best copies of Homer in his time, and the rougher form was more likely to be ancient than the smoother, which would, in process of time, naturally succeed to it. Finally, I have, with Poppo, preferred the termination ι, to that adopted by Bekker and Goeller, ει, because the former, besides being found in almost every MS., is confirmed by analogy, as found in other words; on which see Blomfield on Æschyl. Prom. 206. As to the sense of πανσυδὶ, that is correctly represented by the gloss of Photius, παντελῶς, utterly. Though, as there seems to be here a reference to the words, a little before, καὶ πεζὸς καὶ νῆες, and taking into account the above passages of Hom. Il. xi. 708, and Eurip. Troad. 801, the full import of the expression πανσυδὶ διεφθάρθαι may be thus expressed: 'ruined utterly by the destruction of the whole force, horse and foot and all.'

τοῖς ξυμπροθυμηθεῖσι—ἔκπλουν] Of these words the true sense (mistaken by Portus and Steph.) is, 'to those of the orators who had co-operated with them in bringing about the expedition.' Of which rare use of ξυμπροθ. examples are found in Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 13, ξυμπρ. ταῦτα, and so the simple verb occurs in other passages of our author, v. 17 and 39. viii. 90. The force of the prep. ξυν (as referring to the people at large) is well illustrated by the words supra iii. 43, πρὸς ὀργὴν,—ἤντινα τύχητε σφαλέντες, τὴν τοῦ πείσαντος μίαν γνώμην ζημιοῦτε, καὶ οὐ τὰς ἡμετέρας αὐτῶν, εἰ πολλαὶ οὖσαι ξυνεξήμαρτον.

χρησμολόγοις καὶ μάντεσι] On the subject of the χρησμ. see note supra ii. 8. That they had urged on the Sicilian expedition, is attested by Pausan. viii. 11, 6, and Aristid. ii. p. 186, referred to by Poppo. The next words, καὶ ὁπόσοι—Σικελίαν, are meant chiefly of the soothsayers and oracle-mongers just mentioned. Θειάσαντες ἐπήλπισαν, &c. Render, 'by uttering pretended oracles, put them on hoping,' &c. The Scholiast explains θειάσ. by θεῖά τινα ἐπιφθεγξάμενοι. But the full import of the term is best seen by comparing the phrase θειασμῷ προσκείμενος at vii. 50, since that phrase there, like the term θειάσ. here, is to be taken in sensu deteriori; also in Dio Cass. lib. lxii. 18, (cited by Dr. Arnold,) εἴτε καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς θεομαντείᾳ τινὶ προλεχθὲν, (scil. τὸ λόγιον, 'the oracle that was sung,') εἴτε καὶ τότε ὑπὸ τοῦ ὁμίλου πρὸς τὰ παρόντα θειασ-

θέν. Ἐπελπίζω used in this active sense, while rare in the earlier writers, is of no unfrequent occurrence in the later ones, especially those who have imitated our writer, as Dio Cass., Appian, and Josephus.

2. πάντα—ἐλύπει—φόβος τε καὶ κατάπληξις] Here our historian evinces an intimate knowledge of the human heart by noticing the first expressions of the popular feeling, as shown in violent ebullitions of anger and rage, to which succeed deeply settled grief at the past, and extreme alarm for the future.

περιειστήκει] scil. αὐτοὺς, circumstabat ipsos. See notes at iii. 54, and vi. 61. Τῷ κοινῷ. On this expression see note at i. 80. Οὐδ' ὑπηρεσίας ταῖς ναυσὶ, 'nor crews to man the ships.' On which sense of ὑπηρ. see note at vi. 31, 3.

3. ὅθεν ἂν δύνωνται] These words belong to ξυμπορισαμένους.

τῶν τε κατὰ—σωφρονίσαι] These words Duker rightly explains, not, with the Scholiast, of the expenses of private persons; but (as the words κατὰ τὴν πόλιν require us to understand them) of the expenses of the state, both civil (as law-judgments, spectacles, and games) and ecclesiastical, as sacrifices, and the feasts pertaining thereto. See ii. 38, 1. Of the very rare phrase ἐς εὐτέλειαν σωφρονίσαι the best explanation is found in the plainer phrases occurring at ch. 4, καὶ τἄλλα, εἴ τι ἔδοκει ἀχρεῖον ἀναλίσκεσθαι, ξυστελλόμενοι ἐς εὐτέλειαν, and 86, 6, εἰ ἐς εὐτέλειάν τι ξυντέτμηται, the former of which expressions signifies to draw in expenses to the measure of due economy; and the latter, to cut them down, when excessive. So Dio Cass. 731, τὰ συσσίτια πρὸς τὸ σωφρονέστερον συνέστειλε. Xen. Vectig. iv. 3, εἰς μεῖόν τι συστελλόμενος. Demosth. 309, συστ. εἰς ἐλάχιστον. In the present phrase the metaphor is somewhat different; there being a double allusion,—namely, both to the bringing of any one back to a right mind, by correcting the extravagances of vice or folly, and to the so regulating any machine, which measures time or weight, as to correct and bring its indication to the sober truth: and such is the use of Lat. castigare in Pers. Sat. i. 6, 'examen improbum in illâ Castiges trutinâ;' meaning, so to correct and adjust the tongue of the balance, that there shall be an æquilibrium. The same application, per catachresin, of what properly regards the moral to the physical is found in Eurip. Herc. Fur. 849, διαστρόφους εἰλίσσει σῖγα γοργώπους κόρας Ἀμπνοὰς δ' οὐ σωφρονίζει, ταῦρος ὣς ἐς ἐμβολὴν ('like a bull at butt') δεινὰ μυκᾶται δέ. For so Matth. there rightly edits, from the conjecture of Canter, for δεινός; a conjecture which he might have confirmed from a passage of Virg. Æn. xii. 102—4, (where the poet has so imitated as to improve on the beauty of the turn,) 'oculis micat acribus ignis. Mugitus, veluti cum prima in prælia taurus Terrificos ciet, atque irasci in cornua tentat.'

ἐλέσθαι, οἵτινες περὶ τῶν παρόντων, ὡς ἂν καιρὸς ᾖ, προβουλεύσουσι. 4. πάντα τε, πρὸς τὸ παραχρῆμα περιδεές,—ὅπερ φιλεῖ δῆμος ποιεῖν—ἑτοῖμοι ἦσαν εὐτακτεῖν. καὶ ὡς ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἐποίουν ταῦτα, καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

II. Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος πρὸς τὴν ἐκ τῆς Σικελίας τῶν Ἀθηναίων μεγάλην κακοπραγίαν εὐθὺς οἱ Ἕλληνες πάντες ἐπηρμένοι ἦσαν, οἱ μὲν μηδ' ἑτέρων ὄντες ξύμμαχοι, ὡς, ἤν τις καὶ μὴ παρακαλῇ σφᾶς, οὐκ ἀποστατέον ἔτι τοῦ πολέμου εἴη, ἀλλ' ἐθελοντὶ ἰτέον ἐπὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους,—νομίσαντες κἂν ἐπὶ σφᾶς ἕκαστοι ἐλθεῖν αὐτούς, εἰ τὰ ἐν τῇ Σικελίᾳ κατώρθωσαν, καὶ ἅμα βραχὺν ἔσεσθαι τὸν λοιπὸν πόλεμον, οὗ μετασχεῖν καλὸν εἶναι· οἱ δ' αὖ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ξύμμαχοι ξυμπροθυμηθέντες, ἐπὶ πλέον ἢ πρίν, ἀπαλλάξεσθαι διὰ τάχους πολλῆς ταλαιπωρίας. 2. μάλιστα δὲ οἱ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ὑπήκοοι ἑτοῖμοι ἦσαν καὶ παρὰ δύναμιν αὐτῶν ἀφίστασθαι, διὰ τὸ ὀργῶντες κρίνειν τὰ πράγματα, καὶ μηδ' ὑπο-

Finally, εὐτέλεια here bears the sense, not parsimony, but frugality, as denoting a due measure, in expense, so as to avoid extremes either way: and thus the term is used at ii. 40, φιλοκαλοῦμεν μετ' εὐτελείας. It is applied to denote frugality of fare in Antiphanes ap. Athen. p. 60, μάζα—πρὸς εὐτέλειαν ἐξωπλισμένη, i. e. frugally prepared, ἐσκευασμένη answering to the expression δόρπον ὁπλίζεσθαι in Homer.

ὡς ἂν καιρὸς ᾖ] 'as the time or occasion should require.'

4. εὐτακτεῖν] The term is to be taken, not transitively, (as it has been by Portus, Hobbes, Smith, and Gail,) but intransitively, according to its use in Xen. Cyr. viii. 5, 7, and Mem. iii. 5, 21. iv. 4, 1. Here, however, it may be supposed, while including military, to chiefly denote civil obedience,—namely, that of walking orderly, so as to keep the law. See Acts xxi. 24. The transitive sense above adverted to is one nowhere found, and in the present case it mars the profound moral maxim here conveyed, namely, that 'when in fear for their safety, the multitude will then be found to yield a ready obedience.' True is the remark of Plutarch, Lucull. ch. 2, οὐδὲν γὰρ ἀνθρώπου δυσαρκτότερον εὖ πράσσειν δοκοῦντος, οὐδ' αὖ πάλιν δεκτικώτερον ἐπιστασίας συσταλέντος ὑπὸ τῆς τύχης, i. e. held in check by adversity. Possibly the historian may there have had in mind a passage of Isocr. Symm. 29, τοὺς μὲν ἄλλους αἱ συμφοραὶ συστέλλουσι καὶ ποιοῦσι σωφρονεστέρους.

Ch. II. In this chapter is described the feeling in Greece at the late events in Sicily,—namely, a general disposition among the states to take part against Athens, and among the allies of Athens to revolt and attempt to recover their liberty. In consequence of this, the Lacedæmonians are emboldened to exert themselves to bring the war to a conclusion.

1. ἐπηρμένοι ἦσαν] See note on ii. 8, and compare iv. 108, 3. For μηδετέρων, I have, on the authority of five MSS. adduced by Poppo, (to which I am enabled to add that of Cantab.) edited μηδ' ἑτέρων, because, as Dr. Arnold observes, the μὴ belongs, not to ἑτέρων, but to the subject οἱ ὄντες ξύμμαχοι; the sense being, 'those, whoever they might be, that were not in alliance with either of the belligerents.'

I have, with Bekker (2nd edition), cancelled the word ἡγούμενοι after ἅμα, because, though absent from only one good MS., internal evidence strongly opposes it. It has every appearance of being, what Goeller considers it, a mere marginal additament to prop up what seemed a failing construction.

2. διὰ τὸ ὀργῶντες—πράγματα] The sense is, 'because they formed their judgment of affairs under the influence of passion, and with a strong desire that the things they reckoned on should happen.' So in a kindred passage at iv. 108, τὸ δὲ πλέον βουλήσει κρίνοντες ἀσαφεῖ ἢ προνοίᾳ ἀσφαλεῖ. Hence may be emended a passage of Joseph. Ant. xvii. 9, 2, (evidently written with a view to the present,) ὁρμηκότες ταῖς γνώμαις, καὶ νόμιμόν τε καὶ δίκαιον ἡγούμενοι ὅ τι μελλήσοι ἡδονὴν αὐτοῖς φέρειν, where, for ὁρμηκότες, read, from the Vat. MS., ὀργηκότες.

λείπειν λόγον αὐτοῖς, ὡς τό γ' ἐπιὸν θέρος οἷοί τ' ἔσονται περιγενέσθαι. 3. Ἡ δὲ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων πόλις πᾶσί τε τούτοις ἐθάρσει, καὶ μάλιστα ὅτι οἱ ἐκ τῆς Σικελίας αὐτοῖς ξύμμαχοι πολλῇ δυνάμει —κατ' ἀνάγκην ἤδη τοῦ ναυτικοῦ προσγεγενημένου—ἅμα τῷ ἦρι, ὡς εἰκός, παρέσεσθαι ἔμελλον. 4. πανταχόθεν τε εὐέλπιδες ὄντες, ἀπροφασίστως ἅπτεσθαι διενοοῦντο τοῦ πολέμου,—λογιζόμενοι, καλῶς τελευτήσαντος αὐτοῦ, κινδύνων τε τοιούτων ἀπηλλάχθαι ἂν τὸ λοιπόν, οἷος καὶ ὁ ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων περιέστη ἂν αὐτούς, εἰ τὸ Σικελικὸν προσέλαβον, καὶ, καθελόντες ἐκείνους, αὐτοὶ τῆς πάσης Ἑλλάδος ἤδη ἀσφαλῶς ἡγήσεσθαι. III. Εὐθὺς οὖν Ἄγις μὲν ὁ βασιλεὺς αὐτῶν ἐν τῷ χειμῶνι τούτῳ ὁρμηθεὶς στρατῷ τινι ἐκ Δεκελείας, τά τε τῶν ξυμμάχων ἠργυρολόγησεν ἐς τὸ ναυτικόν, καὶ τραπόμενος ἐπὶ τοῦ Μηλιῶς κόλπου, Οἰταίων τε, κατὰ τὴν παλαιὰν ἔχθραν, τῆς λείας τὴν πολλὴν ἀπολαβών, χρήματα ἐπράξατο, καὶ μηδ' ὑπολείπειν λόγον αὐτοῖς—περιγενέσθαι] I am now inclined to admit the view of the sense here adopted by Krueger and Dr. Arnold, 'nor did they, in their estimate, leave the Athenians a single chance of lasting out through the following summer.' That λόγον may bear the sense reckoning, cannot be doubted. But considering that the word is in six of the best MSS. (to which add Codd. Clar. and Cantab.) not found, it is possibly not genuine; in which case, as Poppo remarks, the whole enunciation beginning from ὡς will be the object of the verb ὑπολείπειν.

3. κατ' ἀνάγκην ἤδη τοῦ ναυτικοῦ προσγεγενημένου] The full sense is, 'the navy [belonging to them] being now, of necessity, added to their own].' The necessity here spoken of was one arising from the nature of the thing or the circumstances of the case; which made it the true interest of the Sicilian Greeks to now furnish real aid in the place of nominal alliance. Of ἀνάγκη in this sense (which is not unfrequent) examples occur in Xen. Cyr. ii. 1, 15, and occasionally in the New Testament, as Matth. xviii. 7. Heb. vii. 12. ἐξ ἀνάγκης καὶ νόμου μετάθεσις γίνεται, and ver. 27. ix. 16. 23, and also in Joseph. Ant. xvi. 9, 3.

4. ἀπροφασίστως ἅπτεσθαι διενοοῦντο τοῦ πολέμου] 'to apply to the war zealously and unhesitatingly.' So i. 49, ἀπροφ. ἐπικουρεῖν, and iii. 82, ἀπροφ. τολμᾶν, and vi. 72, ἀπροφ. παρασκευασθῆναι. Of ἀπηλλάχθαι ἂν the sense is simply, 'would be rid of,' 'would be free from.'

Ch. III. To carry into effect these resolves, the Lacedæmonians collect money from their allies for the building of 100 ships, of which they contribute a fourth.

1. ἐς τὸ ναυτικὸν] 'for the formation of a navy.' Κατὰ τὴν παλαιὰν ἔχθραν, 'on the old grudge,' namely, that occasioned by the transactions narrated at iii. 92. Of the words Οἰταίων—τῆς λείας τὴν πολλὴν ἀπολαβών the sense is, 'having carried off the greater part of the spoil of the Œteans,' meaning, as Dr. Arnold thinks is to be understood, their pillageable property, their cattle; for which use of λεία he refers to a passage of Xen. Hist. i. 3, 2, τὴν λείαν ἅπασαν, where the expression is explained by what follows in the next sentence, τὰ χρήματα ('their property') κατέθεντο ἐς τοὺς Θρᾷκας. But the passage in question supplies no proof that λεία ever bore the sense pillageable property; a sense which here would involve no little harshness, and could scarcely be tolerated even in lyric poetry. Again, that the term often signifies pillaged property, is nothing to the present purpose, because such a sense were here not suitable. I agree with Müller in explaining it here simply to denote cattle, as it does in Hesiod. Theog. 444, λητὸν ἀέξειν, and Hom. Il. xi. 767, Λητὼ δ' ἐκ πεδίου συνελάσσαμεν ἤλιθα πολλήν: and as property, in the early ages, consisted almost entirely in cattle, so, considering that that would chiefly constitute the spoil of an enemy's property, (to which purpose compare a passage of the Old Testament, 1 Sam. xiv. 32, Sept. ἐκλίθη (or ὥρμησε) εἰς τὰ σκῦλα, καὶ ἔλαβε προμνια, &c.) so it came to denote property in cattle, as here, and in the passage of Xen. cited by Dr. Arnold. Ἀπολαβεῖν here bears the sense auferre, 'to carry off,' as in Xen. Hist.

Ἀχαιοὺς τοὺς Φθιώτας καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους τοὺς ταύτῃ Θεσσαλῶν ὑπηκόους, μεμφομένων καὶ ἀκόντων τῶν Θεσσαλῶν, ὁμήρους τέ τινας ἠνάγκασε δοῦναι καὶ χρήματα, καὶ κατέθετο τοὺς ὁμήρους ἐς Κόρινθον, ἔς τε τὴν ξυμμαχίαν ἐπειρᾶτο προσάγειν. 2. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ τὴν πρόσταξιν ταῖς πόλεσιν ἐκατὸν νεῶν τῆς ναυπηγίας ἐποιοῦντο, καὶ ἑαυτοῖς μὲν καὶ Βοιωτοῖς πέντε καὶ εἴκοσιν ἑκατέροις ἔταξαν, Φωκεῦσι δὲ καὶ Λοκροῖς πεντεκαίδεκα, καὶ Κορινθίοις πεντεκαίδεκα, Ἀρκάσι δὲ καὶ Πελληνεῦσι καὶ Σικυωνίοις δέκα, Μεγαρεῦσι δὲ καὶ Τροιζηνίοις καὶ Ἐπιδαυρίοις καὶ Ἑρμιονεῦσι δέκα· τά τε ἄλλα παρεσκευάζοντο ὡς εὐθὺς πρὸς τὸ ἔαρ ἐξόμενοι τοῦ πολέμου.

IV. Παρεσκευάζοντο δὲ καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι, ὥσπερ διενοήθησαν, ἐν τῷ χειμῶνι τούτῳ τήν τε ναυπηγίαν, ξύλα ξυμπορισάμενοι, καὶ Σούνιον τειχίσαντες, ὅπως αὐτοῖς ἀσφάλεια ταῖς σιταγωγοῖς ναυσὶν εἴη τοῦ περίπλου· καὶ τό τε ἐν τῇ Λακωνικῇ τείχισμα ἐκλιπόντες, ὃ ἐνῳκοδόμησαν παραπλέοντες ἐς Σικελίαν, καὶ τἆλλα, εἴ πού τι ἐδόκει ἀχρεῖον ἀναλίσκεσθαι, ξυστελλόμενοι ἐς εὐτέλειαν, μάλιστα δὲ τὰ τῶν ξυμμάχων διασκοποῦντες, ὅπως μὴ σφῶν ἀποστήσονται.

v. 1, 21, περιπλέων ('cruising about') ἀπελάμβανεν ὅ τι ἠδύνατο: and of the expression χρήματα ἐπράξατο the meaning is, 'exacted money by way of redeeming and getting back the property.'

2. τὴν πρόσταξιν—ἐποιοῦντο] Render, 'made the requisition (meaning that mentioned at § 1) to the states [of the confederation] for the building of 100 ships.'

CH. IV. The counter-preparation of the Athenians, by the building of new ships, the retrenchment of all useless public expenditure, and the fortifying of Sunium, for the security of vessels passing between Eubœa and Athens, and bringing provision to the beleaguered city.

ταῖς σιταγωγοῖς ναυσὶν εἴη τοῦ περίπλου] lit. 'that there might be a security for the coasting round of their corn ships [to Athens].' Comp. vii. 28. On ξυστελλόμενοι see note supra ch. 2.

CH. V. The allies of the Athenians are every where inclined to revolt. The Eubœans first, and then the Lesbians, make offers of revolt to Agis. The Chians and Erythræans, likewise, resort for the same purpose to the government at Sparta, accompanied by an ambassador of Tissaphernes, whose aim it was to bring the Peloponnesians over to the king of the Persians, that he might, with their assistance, deprive the Athenians of the Ionian cities.

1. ὄντων—ἐν κατασκευῇ τοῦ πολέμου] Here οὐδὲν ἄλλο is to be explained as at ch. 75, or iv. 120, the word ὄντων being, as Poppo suggests, taken twice in thought. Compare Herodian iii. 10, 12, οὐδὲν ἕτερον, ἀλλ' ἢ μερισάμενος πρὸς αὐτὸν τὴν ἀρχήν. Supposing κατασκευῇ to be correct, we may take it as used in the sense of παρασκευῇ. Since, however, its correctness is not well established, and considering the occurrence at ii. 14, of the phrase ἐν παρασκευῇ τοῦ πολέμου, in Demosth. and other good writers of εἶναι ἐν παρασκευῇ, I agree with Goeller in thinking that παρασκευῇ, found in two MSS., is here the true reading. Indeed, this seems called for by the term ἀρχόμενοι preceding.

ἄρχοντας ὡς ἐς τὴν Εὔβοιαν· οἱ δ' ἦλθον ἔχοντες τῶν Νεοδαμωδῶν ὡς τριακοσίους, καὶ παρεσκεύαζεν αὐτοῖς τὴν διάβασιν. 2. ἐν τούτῳ δὲ καὶ Λέσβιοι ἦλθον, βουλόμενοι καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀποστῆναι. καὶ ξυμπρασσόντων αὐτοῖς τῶν Βοιωτῶν, ἀναπείθεται Ἄγις ὥστε Εὐβοίας μὲν πέρι ἐπισχεῖν· τοῖς δὲ Λεσβίοις παρεσκεύαζε τὴν ἀπόστασιν, Ἀλκαμένη τε ἁρμοστὴν διδοὺς, ὃς ἐς Εὔβοιαν πλεῖν ἔμελλε, καὶ δέκα μὲν Βοιωτοὶ ναῦς ὑπέσχοντο, δέκα δὲ Ἄγις. 3. καὶ ταῦτα ἄνευ τῆς Λακεδαιμονίων πόλεως ἐπράσσετο· ὁ γὰρ Ἄγις ὅσον χρόνον ἦν περὶ Δεκέλειαν, ἔχων τὴν μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ δύναμιν, κύριος ἦν καὶ ἀποστέλλειν εἴ ποί τινα ἐβούλετο στρατιάν, καὶ ξυναγείρειν, καὶ χρήματα πράσσειν. καὶ πολὺ μᾶλλον, ὡς εἰπεῖν, κατὰ τοῦτον τὸν καιρὸν, αὐτοῦ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ὑπήκουον ἢ τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει Λακεδαιμονίων· δύναμιν γὰρ ἔχων * αὐτὸς, ἐκασταχόσε δεινὸς παρῆν. 4. αὐτὸς] For this, the reading of all the MSS. except one, Bekker, Goeller (1st edition), and Poppo introduced, on the authority of that one MS., εὐθύς. But since most difficult were it to account for the existence here of εὐθὺς, from the improbability, as involved in their dissimilarity, of the two words εὐθὺς and αὐτὸς having been accidentally interchanged, and the equal improbability of εὐθὺς having been purposely altered to αὐτὸς (a change for which no good reason can be imagined); while, on the other hand, not difficult is it to account for the existence of εὐθὺς, namely, as originating in conjecture: hence I have chosen, as formerly, to retain the common reading, to which, if taken with ἔχων, there is no objection: and this has since, I find, been restored by Dr. Arnold and by Goeller (2nd edition). The exact force here of the word (which the commentators have failed to perceive) is, (what it not unfrequently presents elsewhere,) that of emphatic mention, or that kind of emphasis which results from the words designating any person as standing alone in doing any action, or transacting any business, and hence not needing the authority of others. So supra iv. 113, ὃ εἶχον αὐτοί, i. e. 'without, apart from, the Tironæans.' Xen. Cyr. viii. 4, 1, ὅποτε μὲν συνδειπνοῖέν τινες, ὅποτε δὲ αὐτὸς εἶς, i. e. 'without others.' Plato, p. 63, πότερον αὐτὸς ἔχων τὴν διάνοιαν ταύτην, ἐν νῷ ἔχειν ἀπίέναι. Compare also Hom. Il. xiii. 729. The full sense, then, here intended is, 'having a force himself,' i. e. of himself, at his own disposal, ἄνευ τῶν Ἐφόρων.

4. τῶν κάτω] scil. τόπων, 'of the lower parts of Asia Minor, the maritime regions.'

5. ἐπήγετο] arcessebat: a sense which the word bears also at i. 3. ii. 2. iii. 34. Πεπραγμένος, further on, is well explained by the Scholiast, ἀπῃτημένος, postulatus, 'he had had the tributes demanded of him:' on which sense of πράσσεσθαι see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 424, 1. Of ἐπωφείλησε in this sense, 'to be in arrears,' several examples are found in Dio Cass.

Ch. VI. Deputations also come from the cities of the Hellespont, supported by the interest of Pharnabazus, satrap of Bithynia: after much debate as to which application for aid should be first attended to, the Chians, through the interest of Alcibiades with Endius the Ephor, are preferred.

3. πατρικὸς—ξένος] Of these words the sense is fixed by that of the following ones, ὅθεν καὶ τοὔνομα—ἔσχεν, and the whole has the meaning assigned by Valcken. on Herodot. viii. 17, and Duk., Goeller, and Poppo on the present passage. Compare Prov. xxvii. 10, (Sept.) τὰς πατρικὰς ἀρετάς.

4. ἔλασσον] This is, as usual, when joined to numerals, undeclined.

5. αὐτοὶ] So Haack, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold edit, from most of the best MSS., for vulg. αὐτοῖς, which Bekker has retained, but not on good grounds; since internal evidence is as strong as external authority in favour of αὐτοὶ, which Dobree and Poppo concur in preferring.

Ch. VII. All despatch is now used, at the isthmus of Corinth, to have the fleet in readiness to sail from thence to Chios.

1. τοῦ δὲ] Bekker edits, from one MS., ἅμα δὲ τῷ ἦρι τοῦ: while Poppo and Goeller have rightly retained the common reading, according to which, the latter commentator has shown, the spring-time is sufficiently indicated. Ἐπειγομένων stands for ἐπειγόντων, which Dobree parallels with other expressions at viii. 9 & 82. Ὑπερενεγκόντες τὰς ναῦς τὸν Ἰσθμόν. See note on iv. 81.

Ch. VIII. The Lacedæmonians use all despatch to get the fleet ready, and conveyed over the isthmus.

1. ὑπὲρ τοῦ Φαρναβάζου] 'on the part of Pharnabazus.' Οὐκ ἐκοινοῦντο τὸν στόλον ἐς τὴν Χίον. Of this use (which is rare) of κοινοῦσθαι with an accusative of thing, Poppo refers for examples to Pflugk on Eurip. Alc. 426; and such are found in Dio Cass. Ἐς τὴν ἀποστολήν, 'to forward the setting forth of the ships for sea.'

2. καταφρονήσαντες τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀδυνασίαν] 'ascribing weakness to the Athenians.' See note on i. 95.

Ch. IX. While the Corinthians are delaying, the Athenians obtain information of what is going on, and expostulate with the Chians, demanding of them, as the Ἄγις δὲ αὐτοῖς ἑτοῖμος ἦν ἐκείνους μὲν μὴ λύειν δὴ τὰς Ἰσθμιάδας σπονδάς, ἑαυτοῦ δὲ τὸν στόλον ἴδιον ποιήσασθαι. 2. οὐ ξυγχωρούντων δὲ τῶν Κορινθίων, ἀλλὰ διατριβῆς ἐγγιγνομένης, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἤσθοντο τὰ τῶν Χίων μᾶλλον, καὶ πέμψαντες ἕνα τῶν στρατηγῶν, Ἀριστοκράτην, ἐπητιῶντο αὐτούς· καὶ ἀρνουμένων τῶν Χίων, τὸ πιστὸν ναῦς σφίσι ξυμπέμπειν ἐκέλευον ἐς τὸ ξυμμαχικόν· οἱ δ' ἔπεμψαν ἑπτά. 3. αἴτιον δ' ἐγένετο τῆς ἀποστολῆς τῶν νεῶν οἱ μὲν πολλοὶ τῶν Χίων οὐκ εἰδότες τὰ πρασσόμενα, οἱ δὲ ὀλίγοι ξυνειδότες, τό τε πλῆθος οὐ βουλόμενοί πω πολέμιον ἔχειν, πρίν τι καὶ ἰσχυρὸν λάβωσι, καὶ τοὺς Πελοποννησίους οὐκέτι προσδεχόμενοι ἥξειν, ὅτι διέτριβον.

X. Ἐν δὲ τούτῳ τὰ Ἴσθμια ἐγίγνετο, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι (ἐπηγγέλθησαν γὰρ) ἐθεώρουν ἐς αὐτά, καὶ κατάδηλα μᾶλλον αὐτοῖς τὰ τῶν Χίων ἐφάνη. καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἀνεχώρησαν, παρεσκευάζοντο εὐθὺς ὅπως μὴ λήσουσιν αὐτοὺς αἱ νῆες ἐκ τῶν Κεγχρειῶν ἀφορμηθεῖσαι. 2. οἱ δὲ μετὰ τὴν ἑορτὴν ἀνήγοντο μιᾷ καὶ εἴκοσι ναυσὶν ἐς τὴν Χίον, ἄρχοντα Ἀλκαμένην ἔχοντες. καὶ αὐτοῖς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὸ πρῶτον ἴσαις ναυσὶ προσπλεύσαντες, ὑπῆγον ἐς τὸ πέλαγος. 3. ὡς δ' ἐπὶ πολὺ οὐκ ἐπηκολούθησαν οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι, ἀλλ' ἀπετράποντο, ἐπανεχώρησαν καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι· τὰς γὰρ τῶν Χίων ἑπτὰ ναῦς ἐν τῷ ἀριθμῷ μετὰ σφῶν ἔχοντες οὐ πιστὰς ἐνόμιζον· ἀλλ' ὕστερον ἄλλας προσπληρώσαντες, ἑπτὰ καὶ τριάκοντα, παραπλέοντας αὐτοὺς quota called for by the terms of alliance, seven sail of ships.

2. ἐπητιῶντο] 'charged them with,' viz. the act of rebellion. The words τὸ πιστὸν are (as Duker, Goeller, and Poppo are agreed) in apposition with ναῦς σφίσι ξυμπέμπειν, as though ὃ τὸ πιστὸν εἴη had been written. See Matth. Gr. § 410 and 432. Duker rightly joins τὸ πιστὸν with ἐς τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν, rendering, 'quæ fidem facerent sive pignoris loco essent, eos in societate mansuros.' Compare supra iii. 11, τὸ ἀντίπαλον δέος μόνον πιστὸν ἐς ξυμμαχίαν.

3. In the words αἴτιον δ' ἐγένετο the verb ἐγένετο is, as Goeller observes, to be ascribed to the predicate, not to the subject, as at iv. 26, αἴτιον δ' ἦν οἱ Λακ. προειπόντες. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 307.

Ch. X. — XII. Being confirmed in their suspicion of what is going on, from participating in the Isthmia at Corinth, the Athenians, when the Peloponnesian ships put to sea, meet with and drive them into port Piræus, on the Corinthian coast; and, having vanquished them, blockade them there. The Lacedæmonians are much discouraged by this defeat; yet Alcibiades prevails on them to despatch him and Chalcidius with the five ships to Chios.

Ch. X. 1. ἐπηγγέλθησαν] 'for the time has been proclaimed;' where there is an ellipse of αἱ σπονδαί, which Bekker has, indeed, on the authority of one MS., inserted in the text: but it has every appearance of being a mere marginal gloss. On the phrase ἐθεώρουν ἐς αὐτὰ see iii. 104, and note on v. 16.

2. ὑπῆγον ἐς τὸ πέλαγος] 'began to draw off (i. e. retreat) to the open sea.' So the expression ὑπάγειν ἐπὶ τῆς Ἠιόνος at v. 10, compared with iv. 127, ὑπῆγε τὸ στράτευμα.

3. ἐπανεχώρησαν] 'retreated back [to port].'

ἄλλας προσπληρώσαντες, ἑπτὰ &c.] So I have pointed, because I doubt not (for the reasons urged by Arnold) that the real sense intended is that which Poppo timidly proposes as possibly such, namely, 'aliis insuper impletis, ut uni-

Piræus (which, as Col. Leake shows, answers to the land-locked harbour now called Frang-Limiona) had, I imagine, its name from its being the regular place of embarkation for those wanting to go by sea from the north-east port of Peloponnesus to Athens. Thus our name Ferry-port.

4. καταυραυματίζουσι] See note on vii. 41.

Ch. XI. 1. τὸ νησίδιον] An islet lying off the mouth of the harbour, and now, Colonel Leake informs us, called Evreonisi.

3. ὡρμημένων αὐτῶν] 'being bent upon, and hastening to it.' See note on v. 29. vi. 1—6.

Ch. XII. 1. μὴ ἀποκνῆσαι τὸν πλοῦν]

'not to shrink from, or give up the voyage.' So iii. 30, μὴ ἀποκνήσωμεν τὸν κίνδυνον.

2. ἀγώνισμα] 'a glorious achievement.'

Ch. XIII. The sixteen Peloponnesian ships which had been aiding the Syracusans in Sicily, reach home after being somewhat damaged in losing one ship from an Athenian squadron, which intercepts them on the way.

1. The αἱ before ἀπὸ, not found in several MSS., was cancelled by Bekker, but has been restored by Goeller. Internal evidence being rather, I apprehend, in its favour, (compare ch. 26 & 43. vi. 93, in which cases the article is, as Arnold says, explained by the clause following,) hence I have, with Poppo and Arnold, merely bracketed the word.

κοπεῖσαι] Nearly equivalent to τραυματισθεῖσαι, and Latin afflictæ: and so we say cut up, for damaged.

Ch. XIV. When the Lacedæmonians arrive, Chios, Erythræ, and Clazomenæ revolt from Athens.

1. τοῦ μὴ ἐξάγγελτοι γενέσθαι] 'that their coming might not be bruited abroad.' On the construction see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 539, 1.

2. λεγομένων] Bekker reads, from one MS., γενομένων; while Poppo and Goeller retain λεγομένων; rightly; though internal evidence is in favour of γενομένων. See note on iii. 36, 1.

3. Πολίχναν] So called, as being a sort of suburban borgo to Clazomenæ.

καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀφεστῶτες πάντες τε ἐν τειχισμῷ ἦσαν καὶ παρασκευῇ πολέμου.

πάντες τε ἐν τειχισμῷ] Bekker and Goeller edit, from one MS., ἐν τειχισμῷ τε πάντες: but though that position is more elegant than the former, it is, I suspect, from emendation; and, considering the neglected style of the whole of this eighth book, I have chosen, with Poppo, to retain the common reading.

Ch. XV. On the news of the revolt of Chios, the Athenians resort to the thousand talents set apart for some case of pressing emergency.

1. τά τε χίλια τάλαντα] See note at ii. 24. Ἐγλίχοντο, 'they anxiously desired.' Γλίχεσθαι is a very strong term, signifying properly 'to be stuck to,' and then figuratively 'to set one's heart upon.;' like our old verb to cleave to.

2. κατέδησαν] 'put them in bonds.'

καὶ ὀλίγον — Χίον] 'nec quidquam parum adversus Chium, aut segnè moliebantur.' (Acacius.)

Ch. XVI. Teos now proceeds to join in the revolt.

2. προανήγετο] For this, Bekker edits, on the authority of one MS., ἐξαν.: but this has so much the appearance of being a mere correction to get rid of a tautology, that I have chosen, with Goeller and Poppo, to retain the common reading.

μετεωρισθεὶς ἐν τῷ πελάγει] 'when off at sea.' Compare Philostr. Vit. Ap. vi. 12, μετεωρίσαι τὴν ναῦν εἰς τὸ πέλαγος.

ὡς ἔφυγον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐσηγάγοντο. καὶ ἐπέσχον μὲν οἱ πεζοί, [καὶ] Χαλκιδέα ἐκ τῆς διώξεως περιμένοντες· ὡς δὲ ἐχρόνιζε, καθῄρουν αὐτοὶ τὸ τεῖχος, ὃ ἀνῳκοδόμησαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τῆς Τηΐων πόλεως τὸ πρὸς ἤπειρον· ξυγκαθῄρουν δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ τῶν βαρβάρων ἐπελθόντες οὐ πολλοί, ὧν ἦρχεν ‡Ὀτάγης ὕπαρχος Τισσαφέρνους.

Καὶ ἡ πρὸς βασιλέα ξυμμαχία Λακεδαιμονίοις ἡ πρώτη, Μιλησίων εὐθὺς ἀποστάντων, διὰ Τισσαφέρνους καὶ Χαλκιδέως ἐγένετο ἥδε.

3. καὶ] Though the editors make no remark, I cannot but suspect that the καὶ after πεζοὶ has crept in from the Χαλκιδέα following. At any rate it is here not in place. After αὐτοὶ, further on, Bekker and Goeller have inserted, on the authority of one MS., τε; but not on sufficient grounds; for, besides that the word is found only in one MS., it would involve a somewhat irregular and uncalled-for correspondence at ξυγκαθῄρουν.

Ὀτάγης] This I have, from a regard to the authority of MSS., edited instead of the common reading ὁ Τάγης, which is, on various grounds, objectionable. Goeller and Poppo have edited, from one MS., Στάγης: but this, though countenanced by a passage of Xen. Hist. Gr. i. 2, 5, is so much at variance with all other MSS., that it must be regarded as precarious. All the MSS. agree in the ὁ; and the difference between the letters ὁ and σ is so slight, that it were a wonder if one MS., out of so many, did not present the variation. Little doubt is there that either Ὀτάγης or Ὀτάνης is the true reading; though to determine which, is, from the difference between the letters γ and ν being so minute, a point of no little difficulty. I have given the preference to the former, because though it be true that Ὀτάγης may (as Goeller affirms) no where else occur, and that Ὀτάνης does; yet, even in the passages to which Goeller adverts, Ὀτάγης may possibly be the true reading; at least, every editor will, in such a case, do better to adhere to the authority of his MSS., and leave the doubtful point, if such there be, to the general critic.

Ch. XVII. The revolt of Miletus, in consequence of the Athenians arriving too late to prevent it. The first alliance concluded between the Lacedæmonians and Tissaphernes on the part of the king of Persia.

2. τε] This Bekker and Goeller have cancelled, on the authority of one MS., B.: but I have followed Poppo and Arnold in retaining the word, because, besides the small amount of negative testimony derived from one MS., nothing can be more precarious than the authority of MSS. for the omission of particles which may easily be dispensed with.

1. For ταῦτα, Bekker edits, from one MS., τοῦτο: but the latter is opposed by evidence internal as well as external.

Ch. XVIII. Form of a treaty of alliance between the king of Persia and the Lacedæmonian confederation.

Ch. XX. The Peloponnesian ships blockaded at Piræus, making a sally, break out and defeat the blockading fleet of the Athenians, and having reached Cenchrea, prepare to sail for Ionia, under the command of Astyochus, who had succeeded to Chalcideus as commander of the fleet, but with yet fuller powers, extending not only to the naval forces of the Lacedæmonians, but also of the allies;—in short, as high-admiral, probably with the power also of general of the land forces of the allies.

Ch. XXI. A popular revolution in Samos.

1. The ὑπὸ after ἐπανάστασις, not found in five good MSS., has been cancelled by Poppo and Haack. I have chosen, with Bekker and Goeller, to retain it, because with external authority quite in its favour, it possesses no inconsiderable weight of internal evidence, as existing in the equal probability of the word being cancelled by rash critics, as of being inserted by sciolists. Arnold thinks the ὑπὸ should certainly be omitted, on the ground that ἡ ἐπανάστασις ὑπὸ τοῦ δήμου cannot be a correct expression. Perhaps it is not, strictly speaking, accurate; but it is as much so as many others occurring in the course of this book. The inaccuracy, however, does not rest on the ὑπὸ, but on the ἡ, which, in strict propriety, ought not to be there; or if there, the ὑπὸ ought to be excluded, as the early critics saw, who cancelled it. But it is, in effect, too forcible a form of expression to be relinquished, the sense thus meant to be conveyed being, 'on the part of the populace.' I should be inclined to think the ἡ insititious, did it not seem likely that Thucydides wished to characterize this outbreak as the well-known revolution from an aristocracy to an unbalanced democracy in Samos: — and having thus chosen to designate it, neglected to remove the ὑπὸ as though he would leave here 'a crust for the critics.' Suffice it to say, that the verbal here (as not unfrequently in our author) takes the case of its verb, especially the dative, as at i. 122, ἐπιτειχισμὸς τῇ χώρᾳ.

By the οἱ δυνατοὶ here mentioned are to be understood the optimates, the wealthy, especially the land-proprietors, called just after γεωμόροι; — an appellation almost peculiar to the Samians and Syracusans; though the term occurs also in Æschyl. Suppl. 621, and Appian, ii. 810. Finally, the γεωμόροι among the Syracusans are mentioned in Herodot. vii. 155, and Dionys. Hal. vi. 62.

Ch. XXII. A Chian fleet now proceeds to Lesbos, and brings over Methymna and Mytilene to revolt from the Athenians.

1. περίοικος] i. e. one of the Perioeci.

Ch. XXIII. The Lacedæmonian high-admiral proceeds from Cenchreæ to Chios, to assume the command. But, before he proceeds to do any thing, an Athenian squadron attacks Lesbos, and succeeds in recovering the whole island; as also Clazomenæ.

5. I have followed Bekker in receiving the word πεζὸν after στρατὸν, on the authority of one of the best MSS. As to the objection to it urged by Poppo and Goeller, on the ground that τὸν στρατὸν τὸν πεζὸν, for τὸν στρατὸν τὸν πεζὸν, involves something no less than barbarous in phraseology,—I doubt whether it be worse Greek than much which we meet with in this book: though, considering that the word has the support of only one MS., and may possibly have originated in a mere marginal scholium, I have not τῶν †νεῶν πεζός, ὃς ἐπὶ τὸν Ἑλλήσποντον ἐμέλλησεν ἰέναι. καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν Κεγχρειᾷ ξυμμαχίδων Πελοποννησίων νεῶν ἀφικνοῦνται αὐτοῖς ἓξ μετὰ ταῦτα ἐς τὴν Χίον. 6. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι τά τε ἐν τῇ Λέσβῳ πάλιν κατεστήσαντο, καὶ πλεύσαντες ἐξ αὐτῆς, Κλαζομενίων τὴν ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ Πολίχναν τειχιζομένην ἑλόντες, διεκόμισαν πάλιν αὐτοὺς ἐς τὴν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ πόλιν, πλὴν τῶν αἰτίων τῆς ἀποστάσεως· οὗτοι δὲ ἐς Δαφνοῦντα ἀπῆλθον. καὶ αὖθις Κλαζομεναὶ προσεχώρησαν Ἀθηναίοις.

XXIV. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους οἵ τ' ἐπὶ Μιλήτῳ Ἀθηναῖοι, ταῖς εἴκοσι ναυσὶν ἐν τῇ Λάδῃ ἐφορμοῦντες, ἀπόβασιν ποιησάμενοι ἐς Πάνορμον τῆς Μιλησίας, Χαλκιδέα τε τὸν Λακεδαιμόνιον ἄρχοντα, μετ' ὀλίγων παραβοηθήσαντα, ἀποκτείνουσι, καὶ τροπαῖον τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ὕστερον διαπλεύσαντες ἔστησαν, ὃ οἱ Μιλήσιοι, ὡς οὐ μετὰ κράτους τῆς γῆς σταθέν, ἀνεῖλον· καὶ Λέων καὶ Διομέδων, ἔχοντες τὰς ἐκ Λέσβου Ἀθηναίων ναῦς, ἔκ τε Οἰνουσσῶν τῶν πρὸ Χίου νήσων καὶ ἐκ Σιδούσσης καὶ ἐκ Πτελεοῦ, ἃ ἐν τῇ Ἐρυθραίᾳ εἶχον τείχη, καὶ ἐκ τῆς Λέσβου ὁρμώμενοι, τὸν πρὸς τοὺς Χίους πόλεμον ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν ἐποιοῦντο· εἶχον δ' ἐπιβάτας τῶν ὁπλιτῶν ἐκ καταλόγου ἀναγκαστούς. 2. καὶ ἔν τε Καρδαμύλῃ, ἀποβάντες, καὶ ἐν Βολίσσῳ τοὺς προσβοηθήσαντας τῶν Χίων μάχῃ νικήσαντες καὶ πολλοὺς διαφθείραντες, ἀνάστατα ἐποίησαν τὰ ταύτῃ χωρία. καὶ ἐν Φάναις αὖθις ἄλλῃ μάχῃ ἐνίκησαν, καὶ τρίτῃ ἐν ‡ Λευκωνίῳ. καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο οἱ μὲν Χῖοι ἤδη οὐκέτι ἐπεξῆσαν, οἱ δὲ τὴν χώραν, καλῶς κατεσκευασμένην καὶ ἀπαθῆ οὖσαν ἀπὸ τῶν Μηδικῶν μέχρι received it as certainly genuine, but placed it in brackets, as probably such.

ὁ ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν πεζός] Supposing the word νεῶν to be genuine, (which, however, is more than doubtful,) we may explain the sense, with Krueger, Goeller, and Arnold, 'the forces of the Asiatic cities, (τῶν αὐτόθεν ξυμμάχων,) who, together with the Peloponnesian land-forces, had accompanied the Chian fleet in its expedition to Lesbos. After the failure of this expedition, Astyochus embarked the Peloponnesians on board his ships, and carried them back to Chios, whilst the Asiatics dispersed to their respective cities.'

Ch. XXIV. The Athenians make an attack on the coast of Miletus, in which Chalcideus, the Spartan ναύαρχος, is slain. They proceed to invade Chios, and after repeatedly defeating the Chians, compel them to take refuge within the walls of the city; and then they proceed to ravage the whole island.

1. ὡς οὐ μετὰ κράτους τῆς γῆς] Hence it is plain that no trophy could lawfully be erected except where there was such an advantage as enabled an army to keep the field of battle. Otherwise, if they retreated, and afterwards only returned and erected the trophy by stealth, it was held of no avail.

2. καλῶς κατεσκευασμένην] 'well cultivated.' Of the term in this rare sense the only examples that I have noted elsewhere are in Xen. Œcon. iv. 15, ὡς κάλλιστα κατεσκευασμένοι οἱ παράδεισοι. An allusion to this sense (which was probably almost peculiar to the language of common life) is found in Plato, p. 400, τὴν εὖ τε καὶ καλῶς τὸ ἦθος κατεσκευασμένην διάνοιαν, 'a mind well cultivated as to disposition and character.' In its physical sense, the word has an exact parallel in our term to dress, as said of ground. Hence is confirmed the interpretation adopted by me of the words at vi. 90, 7, οἷς ἡ χώρα κατεσκεύασται, 'those τότε, διεπόρθησαν. 3. Χῖοι γὰρ μόνοι μετὰ Λακεδαιμονίους, ὧν ἐγὼ ἠσθόμην, εὐδαιμονήσαντες ἅμα καὶ ἐσωφρόνησαν, καὶ ὅσῳ ἐπεδίδου ἡ πόλις αὐτοῖς ἐπὶ τὸ μεῖζον, τόσῳ καὶ ἐκοσμοῦντο ἐχυρώτερον. 4. καὶ οὐδ' αὐτὴν τὴν ἀπόστασιν -- εἰ τοῦτο δοκοῦσι παρὰ τὸ ± ἀσφαλέστερον πρᾶξαι -- πρότερον ἐτόλμησαν ποιήσασθαι, ἢ μετὰ πολλῶν τε καὶ ἀγαθῶν ξυμμάχων ἔμελλον ξυγκινδυνεύσειν, καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἠσθάνοντο οὐδ' αὐτοὺς ἀντιλέγοντας ἔτι μετὰ τὴν Σικελικὴν ξυμφοράν, ὡς οὐ πάνυ πόνηρα σφῶν βεβαίως τὰ πράγματ' εἴη· εἰ δέ τι ἐν τοῖς ἀνθρωπείοις τοῦ βίου παραλόγοις ἐσφάλησαν, μετὰ πολλῶν, οἷς ταὐτὰ ἔδοξε, τὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ταχὺ *ξυναιρεθήσεσθαι, τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ξυνέγνωσαν. 5. εἰργομένοις †οὖν αὐτοῖς τῆς θαλάσσης καὶ κατὰ γῆν πορθουμένοις, ἐνεχείρησάν τινες πρὸς Ἀθηναίους ἀγαγεῖν τὴν πόλιν· οὓς αἰσθόμενοι οἱ ἄρχοντες, αὐτοὶ μὲν ἡσύχασαν, by whom the country had been cultivated,' meaning the slaves who were the agricultural labourers: an interpretation, indeed, placed beyond doubt by another passage vii. 27, 5, ἀνδραπόδων πλέον ἢ ὀκτὼ μυριάδες ἠτομολήκεσαν.

3. τόσῳ καὶ ἐκοσμοῦντο ἐχυρώτερον] 'so much the more securely were their plans regulated.'

4. ἀσφαλέστερον] For this Bekker (2nd edition) has edited, on the authority of MS. B. ἀσφαλέστατον: but I have chosen, with Poppo and Goeller, to retain the comparative, not only from the weight of external evidence in its favour, but because it is more suitable to the true nature of the phrase, in which, as Abresch points out, τοῦ ἔοντος, or such like, is left to be understood. At any rate there can only be a comparison between two things, —the engaging, or the not engaging in, the revolt.

πόνηρα βεβαίως] for βεβ. πόν. So vii. 48, ἐνόμιζε πόνηρα σφῶν τὰ πράγματα εἶναι. With respect to the word βεβαίως, it is best explained, as it is by Bauer, profecto, haud dubie;—an explanation confirmed by that of the Scholiast, ὄντως. This, indeed, Poppo has rejected on the score of want of examples: but his own interpretation, firmè, i. e. modo insanabili, is not only equally destitute of such authority, but is quite devoid of that probability which, in the other case, is sufficient to supply the place of examples: for why, it may be asked, should not βεβαίως bear the sense, which is assigned to it in the lexicons, indubitanter, undoubtedly? In which case it may be considered as if separate from the rest of the construction, as the corresponding word in our own language not unfrequently is. And for this use of βεβαίως we may well account on the principle of its then standing for a short clause, such as are βεβαιοῦσθαι φήναι or οἴεσθαι.

ἐν τοῖς ἀνθρωπείοις τοῦ βίου παραλόγοις] This is, as Em. Port. explains it, a brief mode of expression for ἐν τοῖς πράγμασι, τοῖς ἐν τῷ ἀνθρωπείῳ βίῳ παρὰ τὸν λόγον καὶ παρ' ἐλπίδα συμβαίνειν εἰώθασι. Compare iii. 84, 2, ξυνταραχθέντος τοῦ βίου. I have not ventured to follow Bekker and Goeller in reading, from one MS., ξυναναιρεθήσεσθαι, because the authority for this reading is insufficient, and the ανα would be worse than useless: for, as Arnold well observes, ξυναιρεῖν is, corripere, conficere, as ii. 51, τὸ νόσημα πάντα ξυνῄρει, and so in the present passage τὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ξυναιρεθήσεσθαι seems to signify, that the power of the Athenians would speedily be cut short or destroyed. And so Dio Cass. xxxvii. 13, speaking of Mithridates, says, τὸ φάρμακον οὐ συνεῖλεν αὐτὸν, 'did not despatch him.'

5. εἰργομένοις—τῆς θαλάσσης] 'being thus excluded from the sea.' Compare ii. 85, 1, εἴργεσθαι τῆς θαλάσσης. For οὖν, Bekker conjectures the true reading to be ὅ' οὖν, which has certainly more propriety; but conjectures of this kind on the present book are precarious.

6. οὓς αἰσθόμενοι] Though the editors here make no remark, οὓς cannot be right. I doubt not that for οὓς our author wrote ὧν: supply ἐπιχειρημάτων, taken from ἐπεχείρησαν. Certain it is the two words οὓς and ὧν are so much alike in MS. abbreviations that they might easily be confounded. Comp. i. 72, 2, καὶ ὡς ᾔσθοντο τῶν λόγων.

CH. XXV. This and the two next chapters narrate the ineffectual attempt of a powerful Athenian and Argive force under the command of Phrynichus and others to reduce Miletus. In the present we have related their disembarkation on the coast of the Milesian territory, their defeat of the Milesians, and their setting down to besiege the city.

1. ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντο] Supply ἐς αὐτὴν from ἐς Μίλητον, by a sort of double construction, of which another instance occurs in Herodian, iii. 7, 2, περαιωθεὶς δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς Βρεττανίας ἐς τὴν ἀντικειμένην Γαλλίαν, ἐστρατοπέδευσεν. Here, then, the full sense intended is, 'having passed over to Miletus, he encamped at (or before) it.' So in a passage of the Old Testament, Deut. i. 40, (Sept.) we have, καὶ ἐπιστραφέντες στρατοπεδεύσατε εἰς τὴν ἔρημον, put for ἐπιστρ. εἰς τὴν ἔρημον στρατοπεδ. ἐς αὐτήν, for ἐν αὐτῇ : and so Gen. xii. 9, πορευθεὶς ἐστρατοπέδευσεν ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ. This somewhat rare construction with ἐς occurs also in Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 17.

2. τι ξενικὸν] For vulg. τὸ, I have, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, received the reading τι, and to the MSS. adduced in its support add Mus. Brit. True it is, that, as Dr. Arnold says, τὸ is sufficiently intelligible in itself ; but τι yields a more suitable sense, and was more likely to be mistaken for τὸ than the reverse : and the authority of MSS. backed by internal evidence is in all cases to be yielded to. With respect to the word following, ξενικὸν, this Schaefer would cancel, and Bekker has bracketed ; but on insufficient grounds ; for though ξενικὸν and ἐπικουρικὸν are synonymous expressions, they are sometimes united, as Poppo shows, who refers to iii. 109, τὸν μισθοφόρον ὄχλον τὸν ξενικὸν, and Xen. Hist. vi. 1, 4, μισθοφόρους ἔχειν ξένους. Of ἐπικουρικὸν thus used substantively examples occur also at iv. 52, and viii. 55.

3. προεξάξαντες] This Dindorf and Bekker (2nd edition) have received on the authority of MS. B., instead of vulg. προεξάξ., retained by Poppo, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold : and, supposing it to be the true reading, we must take the expression to signify, as Dr. Arnold renders it, 'advancing from the line before the rest.' This, however, is a sense too little forcible to comport with the next words καὶ καταφρονήσαντες, which must necessarily be joined closely with προεξάξαντες, in the sense, 'yea, out of contempt,' as denoting the impulsive cause of the action ; an idiom found occasionally in the best writers ; e. g. Xen. Symp. i. 5, ἀεὶ ἐπισκώπτεις ἡμᾶς καταφρονῶν, and Hist. iv. 8, 36, ἀπεπορεύετο οὐδὲ τῶν ἱερῶν γεγενημένων, ἀλλὰ καταφρονήσας, ('nay, in utter contempt [of the enemy],') ὅτι ἀπὸ φιλίας ἐπορεύετο : and so in a passage of our author, supra ii. 11, πολλάκις τὸ ἔλασσον πλῆθος δεδιὸς, ('by fearing,) ἀμεινον

μένους ἀτακτότερον χωροῦντες, νικῶνται ὑπὸ τῶν Μιλησίων, καὶ διαφθείρονται αὐτῶν ὀλίγῳ ἐλάσσους τριακοσίων ἀνδρῶν· Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ τούς τε Πελοποννησίους πρώτους νικήσαντες, καὶ τοὺς βαρβάρους καὶ τὸν ἄλλον ὄχλον ὡσάμενοι, τοῖς Μιλησίοις οὐ ξυμμίξαντες,—ἀλλ᾽ ὑποχωρησάντων αὐτῶν ἀπὸ τῆς τῶν Ἀργείων τροπῆς ἐς τὴν πόλιν ὡς ἑώρων τὸ ἄλλο σφῶν ἡσσώμενον,—πρὸς αὐτὴν τὴν πόλιν τῶν Μιλησίων, κρατοῦντες ἤδη, τὰ ὅπλα τίθενται. 4. καὶ ξυνέβη ἐν τῇ μάχῃ ταύτῃ τοὺς Ἴωνας ἀμφοτέρωθεν τῶν Δωριῶν κρατῆσαι· τούς τε γὰρ κατὰ σφᾶς Πελοποννησίους οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐνίκων καὶ τοὺς Ἀργείους οἱ Μιλήσιοι. στήσαντες δὲ τροπαῖον, τὸν περιτειχισμὸν—ἰσθμώδους ὄντος τοῦ χωρίου—οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι παρεσκευάζοντο, νομίζοντες, εἰ προσαγάγοιντο Μίλητον, ῥᾳδίως ἂν σφίσι καὶ τἆλλα προσχωρήσειν. XXVI. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ, περὶ δείλην ἤδη ὀψίαν, ἀγγέλλεται αὐτοῖς τὰς ἀπὸ Σικελίας καὶ Πελοποννήσου πέντε καὶ πεντήκοντα ναῦς ὅσον οὐ παρεῖναι. τῶν τε γὰρ Σικελιωτῶν —Ἑρμοκράτους τοῦ Συρακοσίου μάλιστα ἐνάγοντος ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι [καὶ] τῆς ὑπολοίπου Ἀθηναίων καταλύσεως—εἴκοσι νῆες Συρακοσίων ἦλθον καὶ Σελινούντιαι δύο, αἵ τε ἐκ Πελοποννήσου, ἃς παρεσκευάζοντο, ἑτοῖμαι ἤδη οὖσαι· καὶ Θηραμένει τῷ Λακεδαιμονίῳ ξυναμφότεραι ὡς Ἀστύοχον τὸν ναύαρχον προσταχθεῖσαι κομίσαι, κατέπλευσαν ἐς Λέρον πρῶτον τὴν πρὸ Μιλήτου νῆσον· ἔπειτα ἐκεῖθεν, αἰσθόμενοι ἐπὶ Μιλήτῳ ὄντας Ἀθηναίους, ἐς τὸν Ἰασικὸν κόλπον πρότερον πλεύσαντες ἐβούλοντο εἰδέναι τὰ περὶ τῆς Μιλήτου. ἐλθόντος δὲ Ἀλκιβιάδου ἵππῳ ἐς Τειχιοῦσσαν τῆς Μιλησίας, οἵπερ τοῦ κόλπου πλεύσαντες ἠύλισαντο, πυνθάνονται τὰ περὶ τῆς μάχης· παρῆν γὰρ ὁ Ἀλκιβιάδης καὶ ξυνεμάχετο ἠμύναντο τοὺς πλέονας, διὰ τὸ καταφρονοῦντας, ('by despising their foes,') ἀπαρασκεύους γενέσθαι. But admitting this to be the true meaning intended, it will follow that προεξάξ. is greatly preferable in sense ; for men do not advance forward out of contempt of their foes, but rush forward. As to the argument urged by Goeller, that our author nowhere else uses the term προεξαΐσσω, it is utterly without force, unless it could be shown that the word in question was not in use in his age. But so far from this, its use is proved by a passage of Herodot. ix. 62, (cited by Dindorf,) προεξαΐσσοντες κατ᾽ ἕνα—ἐσέπιπτον ἐς τοὺς Σπαρτιήτας. As to the other argument urged by Goeller, that when the whole wing of an army is advanced forward, it is not at so good a pace as would be denoted by προεξαΐσσειν, —that proceeds upon a principle of criticism quite out of place in a composition so unstudied as that of the eighth book of Thucydides.

4. ἰσθμώδους ὄντος τοῦ χωρίου] Ἰσθμ. stands, per crasin, for ἰσθμωειδής, which word occurs in Pont. Eux. Peripl. 7. See note at i. 26. Thus the sense may be, as Portus renders, 'in isthmi modum angustus.'

CH. XXVI. A strong Lacedæmonian and Sicilian fleet arrives at this very crisis, and proceeds to the relief of Miletus.

ἐνάγοντος ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι] 'urging them on.' Compare Dionys. Hal. viii. 4, 1511, ἐγίνετο δὲ ταῦτα τοῦ Τύλλου μάλιστα ἐνάγοντος, 'at his instigation.' Of ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι τῆς καταλύσεως the sense is, 'to take part in, aid in, help to bring about,' as at vi. 70. Compare Polyb. x. 25, 3, συνεπελάβοντο τῆς καταλύσεως τοῦ, &c. Herodot. iii. 48, συνεπελάβοντο τοῦ στρατεύματος.

Ch. XXVII. The Athenians, following the counsel of Phrynichus, declining the contest, embark their troops, and return to Samos.

2. ὅπου γὰρ ἔξεστιν, &c.] Owing to the length and involved nature of the construction here, (chiefly occasioned by this forming, together with the next, two long sentences, the elements of a speech never worked up into form,) there exist certain varieties of reading and differences of opinion among commentators. Dr. Arnold supposes the word ἔσται to have been added unnecessarily, the writer having forgotten that ἔξεστιν went before. But it should rather seem that one of the two words, most probably ἔσται, came from the margin, where it was intended to present a plainer sense. Dobree proposes to cancel, and Bekker (2nd edition) has bracketed, the word. I have double-bracketed it.

Αἰσχρῷ is used with ὀνείδει, as being properly a vox mediæ significationis. So Plato (cited by Abresch) has ἐν αἰσχροῖς γεγονέναι ὀνείδεσιν, and in Eurip. Phœn. 828, we have, κάλλιστον ὄνειδος, and Heracl. 464, κακὸν ὄνειδος.

3. μετὰ καιροῦ] cum opportunitate. At αἴσχιον, &c. the construction is, as Poppo points out, ἀλλὰ αἴσχιον ξυμβήσεσθαι ἢν μετὰ ὁτουοῦν τρόπου ἡσσηθῶσι, 'but that would rather turn out a disgrace if they should, under whatever circumstances, be defeated.'

ᾗ μόλις ἐπὶ—προτέρᾳ ποι ἐπιχειρεῖν] Of these words the sense is well expressed by the version of Poppo, as follows, 'cui propter clades [in Siciliâ] acceptas vix licere cum firmo apparatu suâ sponte vel [si tali apparatu careat] magnâ admodum necessitate coactæ priori aliquos aggredi.'

For ποῦ δὴ Goeller and Poppo are inclined to read, from the conjecture of Lindau, ἦπου δή, a form of expression found at i. 142, and vi. 37: and, indeed, the above conjecture derives some support from the reading of four MSS., σπουδή. But no urgent necessity for change here exists; the common reading (as taken with ἐνδέχεσθαι, which is here, of course, to be repeated) bearing the sense expressed by Dr. Arnold, 'how then can it be shown to be allowable to incur self-chosen dangers without necessity?' Compare Hdot. ii. 11, (cited by Dr. Arnold,) κοῦ γε δὴ—οὐκ ἂν χωσθείη κόλπος;

The γε after βιαζομένῃ belongs to the ποῦ δή preceding: for as the particle γε is very often separated from ἦπου δή, so may it be from ποῦ δή. With respect to the sense of the ποῦ, this the commentators suppose to be, quomodo, 'how;' and Dr. Arnold adduces as an example of the same use, Soph. Aj. 1100, ποῦ σὺ στρατηγεῖς τοῦδε; But in both passages I should prefer to render, quâ ratione? and such is the sense which the expression bears in Xen. Cyr. iv. 2, 19, (Th.) ποῦ δ' ἂν ἐν κινδύνους ἰέναι; 4. *ὡς τάχιστα δὲ ἐκέλευε τούς τε τραυματίας ἀναλαβόντας καὶ τὸν πεζὸν καὶ τῶν σκευῶν ὅσα ἦλθον ἔχοντες, ἃ δ' ἐκ τῆς πολεμίας εἰλήφασι καταλιπόντας, ὅπως κοῦφαι ὦσιν αἱ νῆες, ἀποπλεῖν ἐς Σάμον, κἀκεῖθεν ἤδη ξυναγαγόντας πάσας τὰς ναῦς, τοὺς ἐπίπλους, ἢν που καιρὸς ᾖ, ποιεῖσθαι. 5. ὡς δ' ἔπεισε, καὶ ἔδρασε ταῦτα· καὶ ἔδοξεν οὐκ ἐν τῷ αὐτίκα μᾶλλον ἢ ὕστερον, οὐκ ἐς τοῦτο μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐς ὅσα ἄλλα Φρύνιχος κατέστη, οὐκ ἀξύνετος εἶναι. 6. καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι ἀφ' ἑσπέρας εὐθὺς τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ ἀτελεῖ τῇ νίκῃ ἀπὸ τῆς Μιλήτου ἀνέστησαν, καὶ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι κατὰ τάχος καὶ πρὸς ὀργὴν τῆς ξυμφορᾶς ἀπέπλευσαν ἐκ τῆς Σάμου ἐπ' οἴκου. Plato, p. 307, ποῦ δὴ λέγεις; and p. 584, ποῦ δή—καὶ ποίας [ἡδονὰς] λέγεις; where we have the very formula under present consideration.

Ch. XXVIII. After the departure of the Athenians, the Peloponnesians, after aiding Tissaphernes in taking Iasus, the stronghold of Amorges, a Persian rebel, establish their head-quarters at Miletus.

1. ἐπικατάγονται] 'come to port after [the departure of the Athenians to Miletus]:' on which sense of ἐπικ. see note at iii. 49. 4. By τὰ σκεύη, further on, understand the baggage, consisting (as Haack and Dr. Arnold point out) not only of clothing and utensils of every kind, but also of spare masts, yards, sails, and tackle; all of which were usually removed before battle, to lighten the ship for action. In ἐξείλοντο we have a vox solennis de hac re, occurring also at viii. 90, (where see note.) Herodot. iv. 196, and Strabo, p. 954, 35.

2. κατεῖχε] se continebat. So infra ch. 100, καὶ νομίσας αὐτὸν καθέξειν αὐτοῦ. Eurip. Elect. 1034, καὶ νύμφα δῶμ' Ἐν τοῖς αὐτοῖς δώμασιν κατειχόμην. The term is highly applicable to one occupying a strong-hold.

3. παλαιόπλουτον] 'of ancient wealth,' viz. as said of a place which has been always wealthy, as distinguished from one νεόπλουτον. Of this term (which is somewhat rare) see examples in Ælian de Anim. ii. 11. Var. Hist. vi. 9. Dio Cass. 41, 32. Nearly equivalent to it is the term ἀρχαιόπλουτος found in Aristotle:

Τισσαφέρνει παραδόντες καὶ τἀνδράποδα πάντα, καὶ δοῦλα καὶ ἐλεύθερα, ὧν καθ' ἕκαστον στατῆρα Δαρεικὸν παρ' αὐτοῦ ξυνέβησαν λαβεῖν, ἔπειτα ἀνεχώρησαν ἐς τὴν Μίλητον. 5. καὶ Πεδάριτόν τε τὸν Λέοντος ἐς τὴν Χίον ἄρχοντα Λακεδαιμονίων πεμψάντων ἀποστέλλουσι πεζῇ μέχρι Ἐρυθρῶν, ἔχοντα τὸ παρὰ Ἀμόργου ἐπικουρικόν, καὶ ἐς τὴν Μίλητον αὐτοῦ Φίλιππον καθιστᾶσιν. καὶ τὸ θέρος ἐτελεύτα.

Τοῦ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου χειμῶνος, ἐπειδὴ τὴν Ἴασον κατεστήσατο ὁ Τισσαφέρνης ἐς φυλακήν, παρῆλθεν ἐς τὴν Μίλητον, καὶ μηνὸς μὲν τροφὴν, ὥσπερ ὑπέστη ἐν τῇ Λακεδαίμονι, ἐς δραχμὴν Ἀττικὴν ἑκάστῳ πάσαις ταῖς ναυσὶ διέδωκεν, τοῦ δὲ λοιποῦ χρόνου ἐβούλετο τριώβολον διδόναι, ἕως ἂν βασιλέα ἐπέρηται· ἢν δὲ κελεύῃ, δώσειν ἔφη ἐντελῆ τὴν δραχμήν. 2. Ἑρμοκράτους δὲ ἀντειπόντος τοῦ Συρακοσίου στρατηγοῦ (ὁ γὰρ Θηραμένης οὐ ναύαρχος ὢν, ἀλλ' Ἀστυόχῳ παραδοῦναι τὰς ναῦς ξυμπλέων, μαλακὸς ἦν περὶ τοῦ μισθοῦ) ὅμως δὲ παρὰ πέντε ναῦς πλέον ἀνδρὶ ἑκάστῳ ἢ τρεῖς ὀβολοὶ ὡμολογήθησαν. ἐς γὰρ πέντε ναῦς τρία τάλαντα ἐδίδου τοῦ μηνός· καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις, ὅσῳ πλείους νῆες ἦσαν τούτου τοῦ ἀριθμοῦ, κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον τοῦτον ἐδίδοτο.

XXX. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος τοῖς ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ Ἀθηναίοις, προσαφιγμέναι γὰρ ἦσαν καὶ οἴκοθεν ἄλλαι νῆες πέντε καὶ τριάκοντα καὶ στρατηγοὶ Χαρμῖνος καὶ Στρομβιχίδης καὶ Εὐκτήμων, καὶ τὰς ἀπὸ Χίου καὶ τὰς ἄλλας πάσας ξυναγαγόντες, ἐβούλοντο διακληρωσάμενοι ἐπὶ μὲν τῇ Μιλήτῳ τῷ ναυτικῷ ἐφορμεῖν, πρὸς δὲ τὴν Χίον καὶ ναυτικὸν καὶ πεζὸν πέμψαι. καὶ ἐποίησαν οὕτως· Στρομβιχίδης μὲν γὰρ καὶ Ὀνομακλῆς καὶ Εὐκτήμων τριάκοντα ναῦς ἔχοντες, καὶ τῶν ἐς Μίλητον ἐλθόντων χιλίων ὁπλιτῶν μέρος ἀγαγόντες ἐν ναυσὶν ὁπλιταγωγοῖς, ἐπὶ Χίον λαχόντες ἔπλεον, οἱ and answering to it is the expression in Liv. iv. 59, 'oppidum veteri fortuna opulentum.'

Ch. XXIX. Disputes arise between Tissaphernes and the Peloponnesians as to the monthly sum to be furnished by him for the payment of their seamen.

1. κατεστήσατο ἐς φυλακήν] See note on iv. 41, 2.

2. μαλακὸς ἦν] 'was soft,' meaning, that he was wanting in firmness and zeal. See note on vi. 78, 4, and compare Joseph. Bell. iv. 4, 4, ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ ἐκεῖνοι τῆς χρείας μαλακώτεροι. Of ὅμως, just after, the sense is, not that assigned by Goeller, 'quamquam Theramenes non adversabatur,' but, 'however, or nevertheless, (i. e. though) it was more than he at first intended.' Thus παρὰ πέντε ναῦς stands for (as considered plainer than) πέντε νανσί: a construction found in Jos. Ant. xviii. 6, 3, ἀναγκάζει τὸν Μάρσυαν πεντακοσίαις καὶ δισχιλίαις ἐλάσσονα λαμβάνειν. It is not improbable that that writer had there in view this passage of our author; and if so, he must have taken παρὰ in the sense above stated.

Ch. XXX. The Athenians at Samos, after receiving from home a reinforcement of 35 ships, divide their forces; sending part against Chios, and reserving the other to make attacks on the enemy at Miletus.

διακληρωσάμενοι] Compare vii. 42 and 62. For ἐπίπλουν, Krueger conjectures the true reading to be ἐπίπλους; which Didot and Bekker consider highly probable, and in support of this conjecture adduce the phrase ἐπίπλους ποιεῖσθαι at ch. 38: and they might also have cited another passage of our author at ch. 27, and the words of Dio Cass. p. 338, (probably written with a view to the present,) τῇ Σικελίᾳ—ἐπίπλους ἐποιοῦντο. But no reason is there to doubt the genuineness of the common reading, since the singular may be taken in a generic sense; and of the phrase ἐπίπλουν ποιεῖσθαι another example occurs at ch. 79, 6, ἐπίπλουν ποιοῦνται τῇ Μιλήτῳ, and it is also found in Arrian, E. A. ii. 1, ἐπίπλουν ποιήσασθαι ταῖς Κυπρίαις ναυσὶν, 'to make attack on.' Polyb. i. 29, 4, τὸν ἐπίπλουν ποιεῖσθαι ἐπ' αὐτὴν Καρχηδόνα, and ch. 50, 8.

Ch. XXXI. Astyochus attempts unsuccessfully to retake Pteleum and Clazomenæ.

1. τοὺς ὁμήρους καταλεγόμενος] sibi deligebat (for sumebat) obsides: a very rare phrase, of which I know no other example. Τούτου ἐπέσχε, 'desisted from this.' Compare ii. 76, 2, τοῦτο ἐπέσχον. With the expression, further on, τοὺς τὰ Ἀθηναίων φρονοῦντας, compare Diod. Sic. xx. 35, οἱ τὰ Ῥωμαίων φρονοῦντες, and Herodot. ii. 162, τὰ ἐκείνου ἐφρόνεον. Of ἀνοικίζεσθαι the sense is, 'to remove inland:' and προσχωρεῖν σφίσι signifies, ad partes suas transire.

2. ἐσβολὴν] Dr. Arnold agrees with Poppo in thinking that for this should be read προσβολὴν, since the common reading is hardly Greek. More correct were it to say, that, though not pure Greek, it was probably used in the inexact language of common life, and derived from that ancient use of the verb ἐσβάλλειν followed by ἐς and an accusative of place, by which it signifies 'to break into a town by hostile attack.' So Herodot. i. 16, ἐς Κλαζομενὰς ἐσέβαλε, and i. 15, ἐσβ. ἐς Μίλητον, and v. 76, ἐς Ἐλευσῖνα ἐσέβαλε. Subsequently the term was employed to denote the breaking into a country. But that the old idiom was not quite obsolete even then, appears from a passage of the Old Testament, Ezek. vii. 22, (Symm.) εἰσβάλλοντες εἰς αὐτὰ (i. e. τὰ ἅγια), and 2 Macc. xiv. 43, τῶν ὄχλων εἴσω τῶν θυρωμάτων εἰσβαλλόντων, 'breaking in at the doors.' That the phrase ἐσβολὴν ποιήσασθαι is quite equivalent to ἐσβάλλειν, cannot be denied.

ceeds to Miletus, to take the command of the Lacedæmonian fleet, which had been lately reinforced.—Ch. XXXIV. In his way thither, he narrowly escapes some ships of the Athenians, which were passing from Samos to Chios; but, after being tossed about by a violent storm, and losing three of their ships, the rest succeeded in getting to Lesbos.

Ch. XXXII. 3. ἐπαγγελλ. τὴν ἀπόστ.] lit. 'promising revolt,' for 'promising to revolt:' a very unusual phrase, in which the doing of the action in question is implied. So Demosth. p. 231, ὑμῖν μὲν εἰρήνην, ἐκείνοις δὲ βοήθειαν ἐπηγγείλατο. Dio Cass. p. 429, φιλίαν αὐτῷ ἐπηγγείλατο. For σφᾶς, further on, Bekker says should be read σφεῖς.

Ch. XXXIII. 2. ἐκ τοῦ ἐπὶ θάτερα] This is put, Goeller says, by an inversion of the words, for καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἐπὶ θάτερα λόφου καθορμισάμενοι διείργοντο τῷ λόφῳ. Compare supra iii. 68, (where there is a similar inversion,) αὖθις τὸ αὐτὸ ἕνα ἕκαστον παραγαγόντες καὶ ἐρωτῶντες. He further remarks, that the gen. λόφου depends on θάτερα, as the gen. τοῦ ἐπὶ θάτερα on ἐκ, which has the same sense as in τὸ ἐκ τοῦ ἰσθμοῦ τεῖχος at i. 69.

3. παρὰ τοσοῦτον ἐγένετ' αὐτῷ, &c.] 'within so little was he of falling upon (i. e. into the hands of) the Athenians.' Compare vii. 2, fin. and see note on iii. 49, 5.

4. ὡς εὗρον ἅπαν—προφασισθὲν] 'when they found that the whole was but a pretence devised by the men for their liberation from Samos.' On this sense of προφασίζεσθαι see note at i. 123.

Ch. XXXV. A Peloponnesian squadron arrives at Cnidus, which had revolted from the Athenians, but which, cruising off Triopium, is near being cut off by the Athenians.

1. For vulg. ἀπὸ, which admits of no defence, I have, with Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller, received ὑπό; the sense being, 'at the instigation of.' As the latter reading has never yet been found in any MS., it may be opportune for me to remark, that such was, I find, formerly the reading of the Cod. Clarend.

2. ταῖς δὲ] Meaning, 'with the [other half].' Triopium is described as a promontory with a temple upon it, (of Apollo, as appears from Herodot. i. 144.) which was also the case with Sunium, and, indeed, most other considerable promontories, where temples were built to excite the devotion of the passing mariners. It is worthy of observation, that this passage of our author, and that of Herodot. i. 144, above mentioned, and also iv. 38, (where we have τείνει μέχρι Τριοπείου ἄκρης,) were evidently had in view by Hesych. on the article Τριόπιον; his words being, ἡ Κνίδος, καὶ ἱερὸν ἔνθα ἑορτάζουσιν. Yet Cnidus was never called Triopium; nor Triopium, Cnidus: and hence, for the words as they now stand, I suspect should be read, Τριόπιον· ἡ Κνίδου ἄκρα, καὶ ἱερὸν, κ. τ. λ. It is very probable that the word ἄκρα was eaten away by a worm in the archetype of the only copy of that lexicographer that has been preserved to us. This, however, will not justify the rendering here of Dean Smith, 'and a temple of Apollo;' for, not to mention that καὶ would thus be indispensable, it were surely nothing less than absurd to say that the promontory was a temple. In short, ἱερὸν is evidently an adjective, and with the genitive means, 'sacred to;' a sense frequent in Herodot., and occasionally found in Xen. and Plato.

Finally, Τριόπιον is properly an adjective, signifying three-faced, (so Hesych. τριόπιος, τριόφθαλμος.) and seems to have been applied to the promontory in question, by an ellipsis of ἄκρον, as an appellative, because this has (as we learn from Dr. Clarke, Travels, vol. ii. 214) three faces, by its jutting out in three directions. The present name Krio arose from some fancied resemblance to a ram's head, of which the two horns represent the three faces.

ξυλλαμβάνειν] Duker has rightly seen that ξυλλαμβάνειν here bears the sense comprehendere, 'to seize or capture a place,' as in Xen. Anab. v. 1, 15, ἀμελήσας τοῦ συλλαβεῖν πλοῖα.

CH. XXXVIII. The Athenians overrun the whole of Chios. The Chians apply for aid to Astyochus, who refuses it. Whereupon Pedaritus sends a strong representation to Lacedæmon.

1. ἀποπλέων ἐν κέλ. ἀφανίζεται] There is something peculiar in the use of the term ἀφανίζεται, the force of which it is not easy to fix with certainty; and of which, accordingly, various interpretations have been propounded. Abresch thinks it uncertain whether the meaning be, e medio decesserit, or naufragio perierit; yet he prefers the former view; while Didot inclines to the latter one, comparing supra iv. 80, ἠφάνισάν τε αὐτούς, 'made away with them:' and Plut. Lys. 7, καταναυμαχηθεὶς ἠφανίσθη. These two passages, however, are not of the same kind; and why, it may be asked, should Theramenes have been made away with? This, indeed, would be supposing Thucydides to write in ænigma. I am still of opinion, as formerly, that the term is simply meant to express that he 'took himself off,' disappeared from the scene of action, was no longer seen; as used of those who retire from public life, whether from pique at ill usage, or from not wishing to draw attention to their public conduct. So Xen. Ages. ix. 1, νομίζων αἰσχρουργίᾳ μὲν τὸ ἀφανίζεσθαι: a view this subsequently, I find, adopted by Poppo, and in some measure by Dr. Arnold, who adds, that 'possibly Theramenes was afraid of being called to account at Sparta for his undue compliances with Tissaphernes in the matter of the pay; and therefore disappeared on his voyage home.'

διαβεβηκότες ἐς] The ἐς, though not found in the MSS., has been inserted by all the recent editors because it is in prose indispensable, and is used at i. 114, ἐς αὐτὴν διαβεβηκότες, and Arrian, E. A. i. 22, 2, and 14, 3, δ. ἐς νῆσον. Polyb. iv. 5, 2, δ. εἰς τὴν Ἤπειρον, and iv. 66, 5. Diod. Sic. i. 166, δ. εἰς Εὐρώπην. If it be asked how what is indispensable came to be omitted in perhaps every MS., I answer, because in ancient MSS. (like the Mus. Brit.) the words would be written διαβεβηκζ ἐς, and thus the first ἐς might easily be lost.

present purpose than the passage adduced by Haack, v. 81, τὰ ἐν Σικυῶνι ἐς ὀλίγους —κατέστησαν οἱ Λακ. Though that will by no means justify this use of ὀλίγον for ὀλιγαρχία, which is, I believe, unprecedented elsewhere.

Ch. XXXIX. In consequence of the remonstrance of Pedaritus, the Lacedæmonians sent out to Ionia a strong naval force to co-operate with Pharnabazus in destroying the dominion of Athens in those parts, and also eleven commissioners to inquire into the conduct of Astyochus, and to act as counsellors to him in future.

3. πλέουσαι — πελάγιαι] i. e. taking their course not along shore, or by the islands of the Ægean, but across the πέλαγος, or high sea: an idiom, of which other examples occur at ch. 60, 2, καθορῶσι τὰς ναῦς—πελαγίας ἀπὸ τῆς X. πλεούσας, and ch. 101, ἀπαίρουσιν ἐκ τῆς Χίου οὐ πελάγιαι—ἀλλ', &c., and though rare out of Thucydides, it is found in Demosth. p. 1213, πλοῦν καὶ πολὺν καὶ πελάγιον ('per altum mare, non ripas legendo,' as Reiske explains). Xen. Anab. ii. 1, 11, ἀνήγοντο οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐπὶ τῆς Χίου πελάγιοι.

4. τοῦ ξυμπαρακομισθῆναι] 'in order to be conveyed [by them].'

Ch. XL.—XLII. The Chians again apply for aid to Astyochus, which he is preparing to send them, when, receiving intelligence of the arrival of the armament at Caunus, he goes thither with his fleet to meet and convoy them; and, on his passage, he meets with, and, after some partial disaster, defeats an Athenian squadron sent from Samos to watch for the coming of the Peloponnesian fleet. He then proceeds to join the fleet at Caunus, and goes with it to take their station at Cnidus.

2. ἐν ταῖς ἀδικίαις] 'in their offences,' i. e. when they offended. Μετὰ τείχους, 'with (i. e. in possession of) a fort to harbour them.' In αὐτομολίᾳ ἐχώρησαν we have an unusual form of expression for ἐς αὐτομολίαν ἐχ.; with which compare another supra vii. 13, 2, ἐπ' αὐτομολίας—ἀπέρχονται, 'they take to desertions;' and also another similarly anomalous phrase at iii. 46, πρὸς αὐτονομίαν ἀποστάντα.

Ch. XLI. 1. νομίσας ὕστερα εἶναι] for ν. ἐν ἐλευθέρῳ εἶναι, as the Schol. explains; 'deeming every thing of inferior importance compared with —:' a very unusual phrase, the nearest approach to which is ὕστερον ποιεῖσθαι or τιθεσθαι, e. g. Plut. Demosth. πάντα ποιησάμενος ὕστερα, and Plato, p. 896. (where both are combined,) σῶμα δὲ δεύτερόν τε καὶ ὕστερον ψυχῆς γεγονέναι.

2. τὴν χώραν — λείαν ἐποιεῖτο, πλὴν τῶν ἐλευθέρων] Here we have phraseology not a little anomalous: for if, with Matth. Gr. Gr. § 421, 4, we regard λείαν ἐποιεῖτο as a circumlocutory phrase for the cognate verb ἐλεηλάτει, as at ch. 62, σκεύη καὶ ἀνδράποδα ἁρπαγὴν ποιησάμενος, for ἁρπάζων,—that will not go to the root of the matter, nor enable us to account for the words πλὴν τῶν ἐλευθέρων, in which consists the main difficulty,—a difficulty only to be removed by supposing (with Bauer and Arnold) that there is a sort of hypallage, by which the literal sense, 'he made the country his spoil,' is regarded as equivalent to 'he made spoil of all that it contained,' and especially the persons of the inhabitants, except the free persons (of both sexes). Now the slaves were taken for the sea service, in its most laborious department, for which the free persons would have been wholly unfit. Astyochus made spoil of every thing else. Of the phrase λείαν ποιεῖσθαι, which is rare, I have noted examples elsewhere in Synes. Epist. 107, λείαν ἅπαντα π., and Plut. Coriol. τά τε σώματα λείαν ἐποιήσατο, καὶ τὰ χρήματα διήρπασε, where we have a form of expression of great propriety; the phrase in question being almost solely applied to the taking persons captive, as is perhaps the case here; for as to the property, it had doubtless, for the most part, been carried off to the mountain fastnesses by the men who took refuge there. Of the cognate phrase λῃστὴν θέσθαι ἀφικόμενος ἐς τὴν Κνίδον νυκτὸς, ἀναγκάζεται ὑπὸ τῶν Κνιδίων παραινούντων μὴ ἐκβιβάσαι τοὺς ναύτας, ἀλλ' ὥσπερ εἶχεν πλεῖν εὐθὺς ἐπὶ τὰς τῶν Ἀθηναίων ναῦς εἴκοσιν, ἃς ἔχων Χαρμῖνος, εἷς τῶν ἐκ Σάμου στρατηγῶν, ἐφύλασσε ταύτας τὰς ἑπτὰ καὶ εἴκοσι ναῦς ἐκ τῆς Πελοποννήσου προσπλεούσας, ἐφ' ἅσπερ καὶ ὁ Ἀστύοχος παρέπλει. 4. ἐπύθοντο δὲ οἱ ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ ἐκ τῆς Μήλου τὸν ἐπίπλουν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἡ φυλακὴ τῷ Χαρμίνῳ περὶ τὴν Σύμην καὶ Χάλκην καὶ Ῥόδον καὶ περὶ τὴν Λυκίαν ἦν· ἤδη γὰρ ᾐσθάνετο καὶ ἐν τῇ Καύνῳ οὖσας αὐτάς. an example occurs in Hdot. v. 202, τοὺς λοιποὺς λητὴν ἐκέλευσε θέσθαι, 'made slaves of them.' No wonder is it that the phrase should have this force, since λεία, like præda in Latin, according to Gellius, xiii. 24, denotes properly and primarily, 'corpora rerum quæ capta sunt.' The harshness in the present instance consists in the country being here put for the inhabitants thereof, — a harshness which would alone be tolerated in poetry; though we have something approaching to it in Sallust, Jug. ch. 15, 'Regnum ejus, sceleris sui prædam fecit,' for 'regnum ejus sceleratè prædatus est;' equivalent to, 'he made a prey of whatever was spoilable.'

Ch. XLII. 1. On the phrases ὥσπερ εἶχε and πρὶν ἔκπυστος γενέσθαι, see notes at iii. 30. Of περιλάβοι τὰς ναῦς the sense is literally, 'might get hold of,' 'take them,' as Herodot. v. 23, and viii. 106. Τὰ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ Dr. Arnold explains to signify, 'the state of the atmosphere;' though he has not adduced any proof that the phrase is capable of that sense. Such, however, may be found in a passage of Hippocrates, where we have the equivalent expression τὰ οὐράνια to denote the atmosphere; yet as used in that peculiar sense also observable in our word atmosphere as signifying the state of the temperature thereof as to wet or dry, or what we understand by the weather. So also in a passage of Dio Cass. p. 234, 91, (probably written with a view to the present,) we have, ὁ οὐρανὸς — συναίρεται πρὸς ἀμφότερα, and a little further on, καὶ ὁ οὐρανὸς ὁ ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ξηρότατος. Again, in Herodot. vii. 37, ἐπινεφέλων ὄντων, ('the atmosphere being cloudy,') and in Aristot. Probl. xxiv. 17, cited by Wessel., there is an ellipsis of τῶν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, or τῶν οὐρανίων. Why, indeed, ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ should have been said, and not simply τοῦ οὐρανοῦ,—still remains to be accounted for. As to Dr. Arnold's explanation of the expression, 'appearances arising from the atmosphere,'—it is most jejune, and the sense thus yielded any thing but suitable. We may best regard this as one of those many instances of negligent and disjointed composition occurring in this book, and of which Dr. Arnold has treated at ch. 33. It should seem, too, that there is here a remarkable brevity of expression for what, if written at large, would stand thus: καὶ αὐτῷ ὑετὸς ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ξυννέφελα ὄντα. Similarly in a passage of the Old Testament, Isaiah lv. 10, we have, ὡς γὰρ ἂν καταβῇ ὁ ὑετὸς — ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ: and in Genesis viii. 2, συνεσχέθη ὁ ὑετὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. Finally, so in another passage of our author, supra ii. 77, ὕδωρ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ. Thucydides, we may suppose, the more easily fell into this negligence, because as rain, snow, &c. are, in familiar parlance, said to come ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, so may the weather generally, and thus the ἐκ would in some measure serve for both.

πλάνησιν — παρέσχε] 'occasioned a wandering [from their right course].' Compare the expression αἴσθησιν παρέσχε at ii. 50.

Ch. XLIII. 1. τὰ σκεύη τῶν νεῶν] Meaning the masts, yards, rigging, and tackling, left before battle. See note at ch. 28.

2. While the combined fleet was stationed at Cnidus, and the ships were undergoing necessary repairs and refitments, the lately arrived commissioners state broadly to Tissaphernes their objections to both of the late treaties of Lacedæmon with Persia, and confer with him on the best mode of carrying on the war in future most advantageously for both parties.

Ch. XLIV. The Peloponnesian fleet now sails to Rhodes, in consequence of overtures from some of the principal persons to bring over the island to the Lacedæmonian alliance. They succeed, obtain some money from the Rhodians, and remain there for eighty days.

βατῶν πλήθει καὶ πεζῷ προσάξεσθαι, καὶ ἅμα ἡγούμενοι αὐτοὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπαρχούσης ξυμμαχίας δυνατοὶ ἔσεσθαι, Τισσαφέρνην μὴ αἰτοῦντες χρήματα, τρέφειν τὰς ναῦς. 2. πλεύσαντες οὖν εὐθὺς ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ χειμῶνι ἐκ τῆς Κνίδου, καὶ προσβαλόντες Καμείρῳ τῆς Ῥοδίας πρώτῃ νανσὶ τέσσαρσι καὶ ἐνενήκοντα, ἐξεφόβησαν μὲν τοὺς πολλοὺς οὐκ εἰδότας τὰ πρασσόμενα, καὶ ἔφευγον, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἀτειχίστου οὔσης τῆς πόλεως· εἶτα ξυγκαλέσαντες οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τούτους τε καὶ τοὺς ἐκ τοῖν δυοῖν πολέοιν, Λίνδου καὶ Ἰηλυσοῦ, Ῥοδίους ἔπεισαν ἀποστῆναι Ἀθηναίων. καὶ προσεχώρησε Ῥόδος Πελοποννησίοις. 3. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον ταῖς ἐκ τῆς Σάμου ναυσὶν, αἰσθόμενοι, ἔπλευσαν μὲν, βουλόμενοι φθάσαι, καὶ ἐφάνησαν πελάγιοι, ὑστερήσαντες δὲ οὐ πολλῷ, τὸ μὲν παραχρῆμα ἀπέπλευσαν ἐς Χάλκην, ἐντεῦθεν δ' ἐς Σάμον· ὕστερον δ' ἐκ τῆς Χάλκης καὶ ἐκ τῆς Κῶ καὶ ἐκ τῆς Σάμου τοὺς ἐπίπλους ποιούμενοι ἐπὶ τὴν Ῥόδον ἐπολέμουν. οἱ δὲ χρήματα μὲν ἐξέλεξαν ἐς δύο καὶ τριάκοντα τάλαντα οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι παρὰ τῶν Ῥοδίων, τὰ δ' ἄλλα ἡσύχαζον ἡμέρας ὀγδοήκοντα, ἀνελκύσαντες τὰς ναῦς.

3. ἐξέλεξαν] exegerunt, 'levied,' 'made a requisition.' So Demosth. 435, 7, εἴκοσι δραχμὰς ἐξέλεξε παρ' ἑκάστῳ, and p. 49 and 713, 4. Æschin. p. 504, τέλη τοὺς καταπλέοντας ἐξέλεγον. Ἐς δύο καὶ τριάκοντα τάλαντα, 'to the amount of thirty-two talents.' In the expression τὰ δ' ἄλλα ἡσύχαζον is conveyed a concealed sarcasm; it being meant, that in the eighty days of their stay at Rhodes they kept quiet, engaging in no offensive operations, merely acting on the defensive, though the Athenians were engaged in active hostilities against the island. Of ἡσυχάζω as used in this sense other examples occur at iii. 71. v. 54, and vii. 11. The inactivity here spoken of is set in a strong point of view by the words which follow, ἀνελκύσαντες τὰς ναῦς.

ἀνελκύσαντες τὰς ναῦς] Meaning that the ships were drawn up on shore, as with us ships are laid up in dock, when not on service. So Pollux, vii. 190, καὶ οὐκέτι πλέουσα ναῦς νεωλκημένη — ἀνειλκυσμένη.

CH. XLV. Alcibiades now becomes an object of suspicion to the Lacedæmonians; insomuch that they order Astyochus to put him to death. He withdraws himself to Tissaphernes, whom he by degrees alienates from the Peloponnesians, and does them all the harm in his power. Thus he counsels Tissaphernes to lessen his issues of money to them.—CH. XLVI. He shows that it was more for the king's interest to hold the balance between the two belligerents, than to aid either party in destroying the other, but rather to wear out one against the other, and thus remove all fear from either.

1. ἐκάκου — τὰ πράγματα] Evidently written in imitation of this is an expression in Arrian, iii. 11, τοῦτο ἐκάκωσε τοῖς Πέρσαις τὰ πράγματα: and parallel to this is one in Herodot. iii. 17, οἱ κακοῦντες τὰ κοινά. The present passage was also τήν τε μισθοφορὰν ξυνέτεμεν, ἀντὶ δραχμῆς Ἀττικῆς ὥστε τριώβολον, καὶ τοῦτο μὴ ξυνεχῶς, δίδοσθαι,—λέγειν κελεύων τὸν Τισσαφέρνην πρὸς αὐτοὺς ὡς Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐκ πλείονος χρόνου ἐπιστήμονες ὄντες τοῦ ναυτικοῦ, τριώβολον τοῖς ἑαυτῶν διδόασιν, οὐ τοσοῦτον πενίᾳ, ὅσον ἵνα αὐτῶν μὴ οἱ ναῦται, ἐκ περιουσίας ὑβρίζοντες, οἱ μὲν τὰ σώματα χείρω ἔχωσιν, δαπανῶντες ἐς τοιαῦτα ἀφ' ὧν ἡ ἀσθένεια ξυμβαίνει, οἱ δὲ τὰς ναῦς ἀπολείπωσιν, ὑπολιπόντες ἐς ὀμηρείαν τὸν προσοφειλόμενον μισθόν· καὶ τοὺς τριηράρχους καὶ evidently had in view by Plutarch, Alcib. 25, ἀπογνοὺς ('in despair') τὰ τῶν Σπαρτιατῶν—ἐκάκου, καὶ διέβαλλε πρὸς τὸν Τισσ. Hence it plainly appears that the sense here intended is, 'injured the affairs, or interests, of the Lacedæmonians, with Tissaphernes, by calumniating their actions and intentions.' Of the words διδάσκαλος πάντων — ξυνέτεμεν the full sense is, 'and by being the suggester and originator of all the measures pursued by Tissaphernes to the Lacedæmonians, he was the means of the pay being cut down; so that, instead of a drachm, only a triobolus,' &c. With the expression τὴν μισθοφορὰν ξυνέτεμε (Ang. 'cut down, curtailed the pay') compare Xen. Hier. iv. 9, τὰς δαπάνας συντέμνειν. By ἐπιστήμονες τοῦ ναυτικοῦ is meant, 'skilful in naval affairs.' So supra i. 142, 4, τῆς θαλάσσης ἐπιστήμονες γενέσθαι.

δαπανῶντες ἐς τοιαῦτα ἀφ' ὧν ἡ ἀσθένεια ξυμβαίνει] Alluding to drunkenness and debauchery. In the next words, οἱ δὲ τὰς ναῦς ἀπολείπωσιν, ὑπολιπόντες ἐς ὀμηρείαν, there is a variety of reading, which is by Dr. Arnold justly said to argue some corruption in the text, at least that of all copies but a very few, namely, MS. A., marg. of Venet., and Clarend. 2 manu, which I doubt not present the true reading, as edited in my former edition of our author, which has since been adopted by Didot, Haack (2nd ed.), and Arnold; while Bekker (edd. 1 & 2) edits ἀπολείπωσιν οὐχ ὑπολιπόντες, and Poppo and Goeller insert the οὐχ in brackets,—perhaps in deference to the authority of Bekker; for they both of them admit that it yields no tolerable sense. The word may fairly be presumed to have arisen from a certain critic who supposed (though erroneously) a negative to be wanting, and accordingly supplied οὐχ; while another, seeing that οὐχ would be a solecism, wrote μὴ, which is found in the MSS. Lugd. and Mus. Brit.: yet each is worse than useless; the sense of the whole passage being plainly that assigned in my former edition as follows: 'that their seamen might not (becoming insolent from superfluity) some of them be in a worse bodily condition, by spending [their pay] on such things as only tended to weakness, and others abandon their ships, leaving their arrears of pay as a pledge [for their return].' It seems that Athenian sailors sometimes got permission from their officers to go on shore; (namely, to attend to some private affairs of their own: see vii. 13.) the officers supposing that the arrears of pay left in their hands would be a kind of pledge to ensure their return. That the Athenian seamen did not receive the whole of their pay down, but that a certain portion was left in arrear, is an undoubted fact. What that portion was, would depend on the amount of pay, which varied at different periods. When the pay was, —as before the last disasters in Sicily, and again in the time of Iphicrates,—a full drachm, it seems that three oboli were paid, and the fourth held in hand. So Polyæn. Strateg. iii. 9, 51, says, Ἰφικράτης ἦρξε τοῦ πλείστου στρατεύματος πεζοῦ καὶ ναυτικοῦ, καθ' ἕκαστον μῆνα ὑφαιρῶν τὸ τέταρτον μέρος ὥσπερ ἐνέχυρον ἑκάστου κατέχων, ἵνα μὴ λίποιεν τὸ στρατόπεδον, where Casaub. shows that such, too, was the custom of the Roman soldiery. It has always been that of the British navy. Now this obolus, before left in hand, but always regarded as due to the sailors, and in the end discharged, was, it would seem, docked off at the time when the other curtailments were made for necessary economy. See viii. 1. Not a little remarkable is the expression here employed to denote the arrears of pay in question. And such is a not unfrequent sense of προσοφ. as used to denote the leaving a sum yet unpaid out of a larger which has been paid. See vii. 40. Xen. Œcon. xx. 1. Indeed, in Polybius frequent is the use of the phrase τὰ προσοφειλόμενα τῶν ὀψωνίων to denote the arrears of a soldier's pay. Of the term ὁμηρεία, which is rare, examples are found in Dionys. Hal.

τοὺς στρατηγοὺς τῶν πόλεων ἐδίδασκεν ὥστε δόντα χρήματα αὐτὸν πεῖσαι, ὥστε ξυγχωρῆσαι ταῦτα ἑαυτῷ, πλὴν †τῶν Συρακοσίων· τούτων δὲ Ἑρμοκράτης [τε] ἠναντιοῦτο μόνος ὑπὲρ τοῦ *ξύμπαντος ξυμμαχικοῦ. 2. τάς τε πόλεις δεομένας χρημάτων ἀπήλασεν αὐτὸς, ἀντιλέγων ὑπὲρ τοῦ Τισσαφέρνους ὡς οἱ μὲν Χῖοι ἀναίσχυντοι εἶεν, πλουσιώτατοι ὄντες τῶν Ἑλλήνων, ἐπικουρίᾳ δ' ὅμως σωζόμενοι ἀξιοῦσι καὶ τοῖς σώμασι καὶ τοῖς χρήμασιν ἄλλους ὑπὲρ τῆς ἐκείνων ἐλευθερίας κινδυνεύειν. 3. τὰς δ' ἄλλας πόλεις ἔφη ἀδικεῖν, αἳ ἐς Ἀθηναίους πρότερον ἢ ἀποστῆναι ἀνάλουν, εἰ μὴ καὶ νῦν καὶ τοσαῦτα καὶ ἔτι πλείω ὑπὲρ σφῶν αὐτῶν ἐθελήσουσιν ἐσφέρειν. 4. τόν τε Τισσαφέρνην ἀπέφαινε νῦν μὲν, τοῖς ἰδίοις χρήμασι πολεμοῦντα, εἰκότως φειδόμενον· ἢν δέ ποτε τροφὴ καταβῇ παρὰ βασιλέως, ἐντελῆ αὐτοῖς ἀποδώσειν τὸν μισθὸν, καὶ τὰς πόλεις τὰ εἰκότα ὠφελήσειν. XLVI. παρῄνει δὲ καὶ τῷ Τισσαφέρνει μὴ ἄγαν ἐπείγεσθαι διαλῦσαι τὸν πόλεμον, μηδὲ βουληθῆναι κομίσαντα ἢ ναῦς Φοινίσσας ἅσπερ παρεσκευάζετο, ἢ Ἕλλησι πλείοσι μισθὸν πορίζοντα, τοῖς αὐτοῖς τῆς τε γῆς καὶ τῆς θαλάσσης τὸ κράτος δοῦναι, ἔχειν δ' ἀμφοτέρους ἐᾷν δίχα τὴν ἀρχὴν, καὶ βασιλεῖ ἐξεῖναι ἀεὶ ἐπὶ

Ant. 34, 47. Appian, i. 405 & 821; and ἐφ' ὁμηρείαν occurs in Joseph. Ant. xviii. 2, 4. Of the use of ὁμηρεία in this figurative sense to signify pignus, I have noted no other example, except that the Gloss. Cyrill. explains clarigatio by ἐνεχυριασία, a security, ὁμηρεία,—evidently treating them as synonymous. And in the lexicons of Phavorinus and Zonaras we have, Ὁμηρεία, ἡ τοῦ ὁμήρου, καὶ ἡ συναλλαγὴ, καὶ ἀντιπρόσοψις, where the editor Tittmann justly regards ἀντιπρόσοψις as corrupt, though he attempts nothing in the way of emendation. I doubt not, that, for ἀντιπρόσοψις, the true reading is ἀντιπρόσδοσις, and I propose to read and point thus: Ὁμηρεία· ἡ τοῦ ὁμήρου καὶ συναλλαγὴ καὶ (read καὶ ἡ) ἀντιπρόσδοσις, the sense being, that 'the word ὁμηρεία means both the intervention of the pledge for security, (so the Gloss. ὅμηρος. τὸ ἐνέχυρον, 'the handsel,') and the pawn, or thing given to pledge as a security.'

πλὴν τῶν Συρακοσίων] Supposing the reading to be correct, we must supply here τοῦ στρατηγοῦ, from the preceding τοὺς στρατηγούς: yet, so harsh is the ellipsis, that I suspect our author wrote πλὴν τοῦ Συρακοσίων, scil. στρατηγοῦ. The τε, just after, is bracketed by all the recent editors; who ought rather to have cancelled it, since it cannot have place here, and is in the best of the MSS. not found. It arose, I suspect, from a var. lect. of the δὲ, just before. For ξύμπαντος, Bekker edits παντὸς, from one MS.; but as external authority and internal evidence unite in supporting ξύμπαντος, I have retained it.

CH. XLVI. 1. ἢ Ἕλλησι πλείοσι μισθὸν πορίζοντα] 'or to take more Greeks into pay.' So Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller rightly edit, on the authority of a few good MSS. and the version of Valla, for vulg. μελλήσει, which admits of no defence; whereas the other reading yields an excellent sense. The error may justly be supposed to have arisen from a confounding of the H with M, these two letters having, in the ancient MSS., a near resemblance. For vulg. αὐτοὺς, the later editors adopt, on the authority of several of the best MSS. (to which add Mus. Brit.) what is, on various grounds, preferable, αὐτοῦ: and supposing this to be the true reading, the sense will be, as Poppo and Arnold point out, 'against his annoyers,' οἱ λυπηροὶ being taken as used substantively, like οἱ ἐχθροί: and so the term κακοῦργος is not unfrequently used in Thucydides, Xenophon, and other writers: yet no proof do they adduce that λυπηρὸς ever was used substantively: and although there is something to countenance it in Aristoph. Ach. 456, λυπηρὸς ἴσθ' ὢν, κἀποχώρησον δόμων, 'know that you are a troublesome fellow, and get you gone out of the house,'—yet there the word τοὺς *αὐτῷ λυπηροὺς τοὺς ἑτέρους ἐπάγειν. 2. γενομένης δ' ἂν καθ' ἓν τῆς ἐς γῆν καὶ θάλασσαν ἀρχῆς, ἀπορεῖν ἂν αὐτὸν οἷς τοὺς κρατοῦντας ξυγκαθαιρήσει, ἢν μὴ αὐτὸς βούληται μεγάλῃ δαπάνῃ καὶ κινδύνῳ ἀναστάς ποτε διαγωνίσασθαι. 3. εὐτελέστερα δὲ τὰ δεινὰ βραχεῖ μορίῳ τῆς δαπάνης, καὶ ἅμα μετὰ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ ἀσφαλείας, αὐτοὺς περὶ ἑαυτοὺς τοὺς Ἕλληνας κατατρῖψαι. ἐπιτηδειοτέρους τ' ἔφη τοὺς Ἀθηναίους εἶναι κοινωνοὺς αὐτῷ τῆς ἀρχῆς· ἧσσον γὰρ τῶν κατὰ γῆν ἐφίεσθαι, τόν τε λόγον ξυμφορώτατον καὶ τὸ ἔργον ἔχοντας πολεμεῖν· τοὺς μὲν γὰρ ξυγκαταδουλοῦν ἂν σφίσι τε αὐτοῖς τὸ τῆς θαλάσσης μέρος καὶ ἐκείνῳ ὅσοι ἐν τῇ βασιλέως Ἕλληνες οἰκοῦσιν, τοὺς δὲ τοὐναντίον ἐλευθερώσοντας ἥκειν· καὶ οὐκ εἰκὸς εἶναι Λακεδαιμονίους ἀπὸ μὲν σφῶν [τῶν Ἑλλήνων] ἐλευθεροῦν νῦν τοὺς Ἕλληνας, ἀπὸ δ' ἐκείνων [τῶν βαρβάρων], ἢν μή ποτε αὐτοὺς μὴ ἐξέλωσι, μὴ ἐλευθερῶσαι. 4. τρίβειν οὖν ἐκέλευε πρῶτον ἀμφοτέρους, καὶ ἀποτεμόμενον ὡς μέγιστα ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ἔπειτ' ἤδη τοὺς Πελοποννησίους ἀπαλλάξαι ἐκ τῆς χώρας. 5. λυπ. may be taken as in another passage of Thucyd. vi. 16, οἶδα δὲ τοὺς τοιούτους—λυπηροὺς ὄντας. Again, the presence of the article here, and the usage of our author at i. 76, (where we have λυπηροὺς γενομένους τοῖς ξυμμάχοις,) and at vi. 18, (where we have τοῖς ἐκεῖ ἐχθροῖς ἡμῶν λυπηροὶ ὄντες,) tends to show that αὐτῷ, approved by Duker, Heilm., Dobree, and Arnold, is the true reading: and this, as being found in one MS., I have ventured to receive into the text; the difference between αὐτῶι and αὐτοῦ being inconsiderable.

3. εὐτελέστερα δὲ τὰ δεινὰ] 'that the dangers would be cheaper,' literally, would cost less of blood and treasure. Αὐτοὺς περὶ ἑαυτοὺς κατατρῖψαι, i. e. 'to wear and consume both by opposing one to the other, just as two articles are destroyed by mutual friction.' Compare vi. 18, and see note there.

τὸν λόγον τε — πολεμεῖν] Of these words the sense cannot be better expressed than by the version of Poppo, as follows: 'atque [eos] sermonem et operam utilissimam regi habentes bellare, i. e. atque quod dicant et faciant (i. e. τὸ καταδουλοῦν) utilissimum regi dicentes et facientes bellare.'

τοὺς μὲν γὰρ ξυγκαταδουλοῦν—οἰκοῦσιν] Render, 'for that those would concur in subjugating, both for themselves and for him, such Greeks as, in the king's territories, inhabit the sea-coast.'

ἢν μή ποτε—μὴ ἐλευθερῶσαι] These words involve no little perplexity. Supposing the reading to be correct, we may either, with Goeller and Hermann, regard the repetition of μὴ here, like that of οὐ elsewhere, (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 609, 3.) as intended merely to strengthen the negation, the sense being, as Herm. maintains, 'non esse verisimile Lacedæmonios ab se, qui Græci essent, nunc liberare Græcos, ab illis autem, qui barbari, nisi hi barbari Græcos, quos subditione sua tenerent, etiam delevissent, non liberaturos:'—the emphasis in pronouncing the words being not on the second μὴ, but on ἐξέλωσι.

4. ἀποτεμόμενον] 'cutting,' 'paring down:' a vox sol. de hac re, signifying 'to take away from another and apply to one's own benefit,' and of which examples occur elsewhere in Polyb. ix. 28, 7. Hdot. i. 82. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 990. Jos. Bell. i. 18, 5.

5. διενοεῖτο τὸ πλέον οὕτως] scil. ποιεῖν, 'intended so for the most part to do,' i. e. to act on the general policy of wearing one party against the other. In τῷ Ἀλκ. προσθεὶς ἑαυτὸν we have an idiom occurring also at ch. 50, 3, and which is by the commentators explained κακῶς ἐπόριζε τοῖς Πελοποννησίοις, καὶ ναυμαχεῖν οὐκ εἴα· ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς Φοινίσσας φάσκων ναῦς ἥξειν καὶ ἐκ περιόντος ἀγωνιεῖσθαι, ἔφθειρε τὰ πράγματα, καὶ τὴν ἀκμὴν τοῦ ναυτικοῦ αὐτῶν ἀφείλετο γενομένην καὶ πάνυ ἰσχυράν, τά τε ἄλλα καταφανέστερον, ἢ ὥστε λανθάνειν, οὐ προθύμως ξυνεπολέμει.

XLVII. Ὁ δὲ Ἀλκιβιάδης ταῦτα ἅμα μὲν τῷ Τισσαφέρνει καὶ βασιλεῖ, ὧν παρ' ἐκείνοις, ἄριστα εἶναι νομίζων παρῆνει, ἅμα δὲ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ κάθοδον ἐς τὴν πατρίδα ἐπιθεραπεύων,—εἰδὼς, εἰ μὴ διαφθερεῖ αὐτὴν, ὅτι ἔσται ποτὲ αὐτῷ πείσαντι κατελθεῖν· πεῖσαι δ' ἂν ἐνόμιζε μάλιστα ἐκ τοῦ τοιούτου, εἰ Τισσαφέρνης φαίνοιτο αὐτῷ ἐπιτήδειος ὤν. 2. ὅπερ καὶ ἐγένετο. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ᾤσθοντο αὐτὸν ἰσχύοντα παρ' αὐτῷ οἱ ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ Ἀθηναίων στρατιῶται, τὰ μὲν καὶ Ἀλκιβιάδου προσπέμψαντος λόγους ἐς τοὺς δυνατωτάτους αὐτῶν ἄνδρας, ὥστε μνησθῆναι περὶ αὐτοῦ ἐς τοὺς βελτίστους τῶν ἀνθρώπων ὅτι ἐπ' ὀλιγαρχίᾳ βούλεται, καὶ οὐ πονηρίᾳ οὐδὲ δημοκρατίᾳ τῇ ἑαυτὸν ἐκβαλούσῃ, κατελθὼν καὶ παρασχὼν Τισσαφέρνην φίλον αὐτοῖς ξυμπολιτεύειν, τὸ δὲ πλέον καὶ ἀπὸ σφῶν αὐτῶν οἱ ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ τριήραρχοί τε τῶν Ἀθηναίων καὶ δυνατώτατοι ὥρμηντο ἐς τὸ καταλῦσαι τὴν δημοκρατίαν. XLVIII. καὶ ἐκινήθη πρότερον ἐν as equivalent to προστίθεσθαί τινι found in Herodot. ii. 160, 'accedere ad partes alicujus, voluntati ejus obsequi.' Yet here the addition of the phrase ἐς πίστιν makes a difference, and the sense intended is, literally expressed, 'he gave himself up to him for confidence,' i. e. he gave him his confidence, entirely confided in him. I have, however, met with the phrase no where else. The nearest approach to it is in the phrase προσθεὶς ἑαυτὸν τῇ χείρονι ῥοπῇ occurring in Plut. t. v. 228. Of ἐκ περιόντος the sense is, ex abundante. With the expression τὴν ἀκμὴν τοῦ ναυτικοῦ—ἀφείλετο, comp. vii. 13, fin. τὴν ἀκρίβειαν τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ἀφῄρηνται· ἐπισταμένοις δ' ὑμῖν γράφω, ὅτι βραχεῖα ἀκμὴ πληρώματος.

CH. XLVII. Alcibiades now enters into communication with an oligarchical party among the Athenians at Samos, thinking that, by their means, the Athenians,—induced by the great influence which he had with Tissaphernes, and the power he had to do them good,—would recal him from banishment, and be induced to alter their form of government.

1. τὴν ἑαυτοῦ κάθοδον—ἐπιθεραπεύων] 'taking care to bring out.' Of the expression ἐπιθεραπεύων the sense is, either, as the Schol. explains, μετὰ θεραπείας πραγματευόμενος, or, as Suidas, προμηθούμενος.

2. τὰ μὲν—τὸ δὲ πλέον] These forms mutually correspond, as do also the words καὶ Ἀλκιβιάδου προσπέμψαντος and καὶ ἀπὸ σφῶν αὐτῶν. (Goeller.) By τοὺς βελτίστους are meant persons of wealth and influence. With respect to πονηρίᾳ, Abresch thinks it is best understood from another passage supra vi. 92, φυγάς εἰμι τῆς τῶν ἐξελαυνάντων πονηρίας, which will be very true, supposing the above passage to be properly explained. Here, at least, it should seem that there is a hendiadys, for οὐ δημοκρατίᾳ πονήρᾳ, 'a wretched democracy;' meaning to call it πονηροκρατία, ochlo-cracy, lit. mob-cracy: and so in Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 5, fin. we have, οὐ δήμῳ (meaning democracy) πολεμοῦντες, ἀλλὰ πονηροκρατίαν ὑφορώμενοι. Such, too, is the use of the verb πονηροκρατεῖσθαι in Aristot. Pol. iv. p. 372, δοκεῖ δὲ εἶναι τῶν ἀδυνάτων (of things impossible, an impossibility) τὸ μὴ εὐνομεῖσθαι τὴν ἀριστοκρατουμένην πόλιν, ἀλλὰ πονηροκρατουμένην. Compare Xen. Ath. i. 5, ἐν τῷ δήμῳ ('a democracy') ἔνι ἀμαθία, καὶ ἀταξία, καὶ πονηρία. No wonder, then, is it that δημοκρατία should here be characterized as a πονηρία or state of mob-rule.

CH. XLVIII. Origin and progress of the above plot to put down democracy, and the opposition it met with in its early course.

1. ἐκινήθη] 'was stirred, or agitated.'

τῷ στρατοπέδῳ τοῦτο, καὶ ἐς τὴν πόλιν ἐντεῦθεν ὕστερον. τῷ τε Ἀλκιβιάδῃ διαβάντες τινὲς ἐκ τῆς Σάμου ἐς λόγους ἦλθον· καὶ, ὑποτείνοντος αὐτοῦ Τισσαφέρνην μὲν πρῶτον, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ βασιλέα, φίλον ποιήσειν, εἰ μὴ δημοκρατοῖντο (οὕτω γὰρ ἂν πιστεῦσαι μᾶλλον βασιλέα), πολλὰς ἐλπίδας εἶχον αὐτοί θ' ἑαυτοῖς οἱ δυνατοὶ τῶν πολιτῶν τὰ πράγματα, οἵπερ καὶ ταλαιπωροῦνται μάλιστα, ἐς αὐτοὺς περιποιήσειν, καὶ τῶν πολεμίων ἐπικρατήσειν. ἔς τε τὴν Σάμον ἐλθόντες ξυνίστασάν τε τῶν ἀνθρώπων τοὺς ἐπιτηδείους ἐς ξυνωμοσίαν, καὶ ἐς τοὺς πολλοὺς φανερῶς ἔλεγον ὅτι βασιλεὺς σφίσι φίλος ἔσοιτο καὶ χρήματα παρέξοι, Ἀλκιβιάδου τε κατελθόντος καὶ μὴ δημοκρατουμένων. 2. Καὶ ὁ μὲν ὄχλος, εἰ καί τι παραυτίκα ἤχθετο τοῖς πρασσομένοις, διὰ τὸ εὔπορον τῆς ἐλπίδος τοῦ [παρὰ] βασιλέως μισθοῦ, ἡσύχαζεν· οἱ δὲ ξυνιστάντες τὴν ὀλιγαρχίαν ἐπειδὴ τῷ πλήθει * ἐκοίνωσαν, αὖθις * κἀν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς καὶ τοῦ ἑταιρικοῦ τῷ πλέονι τὰ ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου ἐσκόπουν. 3. καὶ τοῖς μὲν ἄλλοις ἐφαίνετο εὔπορα καὶ πιστά, Φρυνίχῳ δὲ, στρατηγῷ ἔτι ὄντι, οὐδὲν ἤρεσκεν, ἀλλ' ὅ τε Ἀλκιβιάδης—ὅπερ καὶ ἦν—οὐδὲν μᾶλλον ὀλιγαρχίας ἢ δημοκρατίας δεῖσθαι ἐδόκει αὐτῷ, * ἢ ἄλλο τι σκο-

After ὕστερον Bekker and Haack, on the authority of one MS., insert ἦλθεν; and by Goeller and Poppo it is placed within brackets:—a middle course, which I am not induced to adopt, because I consider the word as plainly derived from the margin, where it was, in all probability, supplied by some critic, who was not aware that in ἐκινήθη ἐς τὴν πόλιν we have, as Dr. Arnold has well pointed out, a brief form of expression for the fuller ἐλθὸν ἐς τὴν πόλιν ἐκινήθη ἐν αὐτῇ.

ὑποτείνοντος] 'holding out [hopes];' as the term is also used in Aristoph. Ach. 637, and Xiphilin, p. 1234. I have just after, with Bekker (2nd edition), Haack (2nd edition), and Arnold, edited αὐτοί θ' ἑαυτοῖς for vulg. αὐτοί τε αὐτοῖς, retained by Poppo and Goeller, but which is indefensible, as Poppo now, I find, at length sees, justly awarding the preference to θ' ἑαυτοῖς, on the ground that thus the two expressions mutually correspond, namely, αὐτοί θ' ἑαυτοῖς—περιποίησειν, καὶ τῶν πολεμίων ἐπικρατήσειν.

2. τὸ εὔπορον τῆς ἐλπίδος] 'the readiness of the hope, as involving what is practicable.' So at § 3 we have, εὔπορα καὶ πιστά.

παρὰ βασ.] I have followed Bekker and Goeller in receiving the παρὰ, though within brackets, because, as Poppo shows, it may have come from the margin. Τῷ πλ. ἐκοίνωσαν, 'had imparted their design [to the people].' See supra viii. 1. I have seen no reason to adopt, with Bekker and Goeller, the reading ἐκοινώνησαν, though found in many of the best MSS., because the two words are often confounded by the scribes, and we must not needlessly bring in a reading which, as Poppo and Arnold show, would involve an impropriety of language, considering that ἐκοινώνησαν could properly mean only, 'were partakers together with the multitude.'

For vulg. καὶ, objected to, but still retained in the text by all the editors, I have admitted there κἀν, the no less than certain emendation of Dobree, and which had previously occurred to myself, and was propounded in my former edition of our author. This is decidedly preferable to the καὶ ἐν of Bauer, Poppo, Goeller, and Didot, and involves an alteration so slight as not to need authority from MSS.

τοῦ ἑταιρικοῦ τῷ πλέονι] 'the bulk of their society,' sodalitas, or club-fellows. Compare iii. 82, 8, τὸ ξυγγενὲς τοῦ ἑταιρικοῦ ἀλλοτριώτερον ἐγένετο.

3. ἢ ἄλλο τι] Bekker (2nd edit.) edits, for ἢ, οὐδ', on the conjecture of Dobree, and as strict propriety of language would require; though indeed that is so often violated in this eighth book, that I cannot venture to receive a correction of style wholly unsupported by authority from MSS. I doubt not that our author wrote πεῖσθαι ἢ ὅτῳ τρόπῳ ἐκ τοῦ παρόντος κόσμου τὴν πόλιν μεταστήσας ὑπὸ τῶν ἑταίρων παρακληθεὶς κάτεισιν, σφίσι δὲ περιοπτέον εἶναι τοῦτο μάλιστα, ὅπως μὴ στασιάσωσιν· [τῷ] βασιλεῖ τε οὐκ εὔπορον εἶναι καὶ Πελοποννησίων ἤδη ὁμοίως ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ ὄντων, καὶ πόλεις ἐχόντων ἐν τῇ αὐτοῦ ἀρχῇ οὐ τὰς ἐλαχίστας, Ἀθηναίοις προσθέμενον, οἷς οὐ πιστεύει, πράγματα ἔχειν, ἐξὸν Πελοποννησίους, ὑφ' ὧν κακὸν οὐδέν [πω] πέπονθε, φίλους ποιήσασθαι. 4. τάς τε ξυμμαχίδας πόλεις, αἷς ὑπεσχῆσθαι δὴ σφᾶς ὀλιγαρχίαν, ὅτι δὴ καὶ αὐτοὶ οὐ δημοκρατήσονται, εὖ ἰδέναι ἔφη ὅτι οὐδὲν μᾶλλον σφίσιν οὔθ' αἱ ἀφεστηκυῖαι προσχωρήσονται, οὔθ' αἱ ὑπάρχουσαι βεβαιότεραι ἔσονται· οὐ γὰρ βουλήσεσθαι αὐτοὺς μετ' ὀλιγαρχίας ἢ δημοκρατίας δουλεύειν μᾶλλον, ἢ μεθ' ὁποτέρου ἂν τύχωσι τούτων ἐλευθέρους εἶναι. 5. τούς τε καλοὺς κἀγαθοὺς ὀνομαζομένους οὐκ ἐλάσσω αὐτοὺς νομίζειν σφίσι πράγματα παρέξειν τοῦ δήμου, ποριστὰς ὄντας καὶ ἐσηγητὰς τῶν κακῶν τῷ δήμῳ, ἐξ ὧν τὰ πλείω αὐτοὺς ὠφελεῖσθαι· καὶ τὸ μὲν ἐπ' ἐκείνοις εἶναι, καὶ ἄκριτοι ἂν καὶ βιαιότερον ἀποθνήσκειν, τὸν δὲ δῆμον σφῶν τε καταφυγὴν εἶναι καὶ ἐκείνων σωφρονιστήν. 6. καὶ ταῦτα παρ' αὐτῶν τῶν ἔργων ἐπισταμένας τὰς πόλεις σαφῶς αὐτὸς εἰδέναι ὅτι οὕτω νομίζουσιν. οὔκουν ἑαυτῷ γε τῶν ἀπ' Ἀλκιβιάδου καὶ ἐν τῷ παρόντι πρασσομένων ἀρέσκειν οὐδέν. XLIX. οἱ δὲ ξυλλεγέντες τῶν ἐν τῇ *ξυνωμοσίᾳ, ὥσπερ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον αὐτοῖς ἐδόκει, τά τε παρόντα ἐδέχοντο καὶ ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας πρέσβεις Πείσανδρον καὶ ἄλλους παρεσκευάζοντο πέμπειν, ὅπως περί τε τῆς τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου καθόδου πράσσοιεν καὶ τῆς τοῦ ἐκεῖ δήμου καταλύσεως, καὶ τὸν Τισσαφέρνην φίλον τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ποιήσειαν. L. γνοὺς δὲ ὁ Φρύνιχος ὅτι ἔσοιτο περὶ τῆς τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου καθόδου λόγος, καὶ ὅτι Ἀθηναῖοι ἐνδέξονται αὐτήν, δείσας πρὸς τὴν ἐναντίωσιν τῶν ὑφ' αὐτοῦ λεχθέντων, μὴ ἧν

σφίσι δὲ περιοπτέον εἶναι] 'but their care it should be:' a sense of περιοπτέος derived from that of circumspectare, anxie considerare, on which see i. 54.

5. καλοὺς κἀγαθοὺς] 'the respectable sort of people,' 'the higher classes.' See note on iv. 42, 2, and Wachsmuth, Ant. Gr. From the term being accompanied by ὀνομαζομένους, it plainly appears that it was one as yet not firmly established in use. Πορισταὶ καὶ ἐσηγητάς, 'the contrivers and introducers.' The term πορισταὶ properly signified financiers, and then came, very naturally, to bear the sense projectors. Τὸ ἐπ' ἐκείνοις εἶναι, 'as far as depended upon them.' So Xen. Hist. iii. 5, 8, ὥστε τὸ μὲν ἐκείνοις εἶναι, ἀπορωτάτη. Compare the expression τὸ ἐπὶ σφᾶς εἶναι at iv. 28, from which passage we might suppose the true reading here to be ἐκείνους, which is found in four of the best MSS. On the term σωφρονιστὴς see note at iii. 65.

Ch. XLIX. The conspirators proceed to depute some of their number to go to Samos, and endeavour to bring about the projected revolution.

ξυνωμοσίᾳ] I have here chosen to recede from the text of Bekker, which has ξυμμαχίᾳ, the deficiency in external evidence being compensated by strong internal.

Ch. L. Phrynichus sends word to Astyochus of the plan in agitation. He betrays the secret to Tissaphernes, and to Alcibiades, who communicates to Phrynichus's colleagues his treasonable proceedings.

κατέλθῃ, ὡς κωλυτὴν ὄντα κακῶς δρᾷ, τρέπεται ἐπὶ τοιόνδε τι. 2. πέμπει ὡς τὸν Ἀστύοχον τὸν Λακεδαιμονίων ναύαρχον, ἔτι ὄντα τότε περὶ τὴν Μίλητον, κρύφα ἐπιστείλας ὅτι Ἀλκιβιάδης αὐτῶν τὰ πράγματα φθείρει Τισσαφέρνην Ἀθηναίοις φίλον ποιῶν, καὶ τἄλλα σαφῶς ἐγγράψας· ξυγγνώμην δ' εἶναι ἑαυτῷ περὶ ἀνδρὸς πολεμίου καὶ μετὰ τοῦ τῆς πόλεως ἀξυμφόρου κακόν τι βουλεύειν. 3. ὁ δὲ Ἀστύοχος τὸν μὲν Ἀλκιβιάδην ἄλλως τε καὶ οὐκέτι ὁμοίως ἐς χεῖρας ἰόντα οὐδὲ διενοεῖτο τιμωρεῖσθαι, ἀνελθὼν δὲ παρ' αὐτὸν ἐς Μαγνησίαν καὶ παρὰ Τισσαφέρνην ἅμα λέγει τε αὐτοῖς τὰ ἐπισταλέντα ἐκ τῆς Σάμου καὶ γίγνεται αὐτοῖς μηνυτής, προσέθηκέ τε, ὡς ἐλέγετο, ἐπὶ ἰδίοις κέρδεσι Τισσαφέρνει ἑαυτὸν, καὶ περὶ τούτων καὶ περὶ τῶν ἄλλων [κοινοῦσθαι]· διόπερ καὶ περὶ τῆς μισθοφορᾶς οὐκ ἐντελοῦς οὔσης μαλακωτέρως ἀνθήπτετο. 4. ὁ δὲ Ἀλκιβιάδης εὐθὺς πέμπει κατὰ Φρυνίχου γράμματα ἐς τὴν Σάμον πρὸς τοὺς ἐν τέλει ὄντας οἷα δέδρακεν, καὶ ἀξιῶν αὐτὸν ἀποθνήσκειν. 5. θορυβούμενος δὲ ὁ Φρύνιχος, καὶ πάνυ ἐν τῷ μεγίστῳ κινδύνῳ ὢν διὰ τὸ μήνυμα, ἀποστέλλει αὖθις πρὸς τὸν Ἀστύοχον, τά τε πρότερα μεμφόμενος ὅτι οὐ καλῶς ἐκρύφθη, καὶ νῦν ὅτι ὅλον τὸ στράτευμα τὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἑτοῖμος εἴη τὸ ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ παρασχεῖν αὐτοῖς διαφθεῖραι, γράψας καθ' ἕκαστα, ἀτειχίστου οὔσης Σάμου ᾗ ἂν τρόπῳ αὐτὰ πράξειεν, καὶ ὅτι ἀνεπίφθονόν οἱ ἤδη εἴη περὶ τῆς ψυχῆς δι' ἐκείνους κινδυνεύοντι καὶ τοῦτο καὶ ἄλλο πᾶν δρᾶσαι μᾶλλον ἢ ὑπὸ τῶν ἐχθίστων αὐτὸν διαφθαρῆναι. ὁ δ' Ἀστύοχος μηνύει καὶ ταῦτα τῷ Ἀλκιβιάδῃ. 3. ἐς χεῖρας ἰόντα] literally, 'coming within his clutches,' i. e. coming within his reach. Μαλακ. ἀνθήπτ. lit. 'had been too soft in opposing it.' See note on i. 130, and supra ch. 29. vi. 78, 5. An evident imitation of the present passage is found in Synes. Epist. 67, ἂν μὴ μαλακώτερον (for μαλακωτέρως) τίς ἅπτηται τῆς ζητήσεως;

5. On ἀνεπίφθονον οἱ ἤδη εἴη see notes at i. 75, and vi. 83.

Ch. LI. Extreme peril of Phrynichus; and the device by which he extricated himself from it.

1. κύριος ἦν—πράσσων] Goeller compares supra v. 34, μήτε πριαμένους τι ἢ πωλοῦντας κυρίους εἶναι.

2. καὶ ὡς μέλλουσα] 'even thus,' i. e. under any circumstances, it was going to be fortified. So the words are explained by Dukas and Arnold, who well evolve this elliptical construction as follows: καὶ ἐκ τοῦ τοιούτου μὴ γενομένου καὶ ὡς μέλλουσα τειχίζεσθαι: and Dobree refers, for examples, to i. 44. iii. 33. vii. 81. viii. 56 & 87.

χίσθη· αἱ δὲ παρὰ τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου ἐπιστολαὶ οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον ἦκον, ὅτι προδίδονταί τε τὸ στράτευμα ὑπὸ Φρυνίχου καὶ οἱ πολέμιοι μέλλουσιν ἐπιθήσεσθαι. 3. δόξας δὲ ὁ Ἀλκιβιάδης οὐ πιστὸς εἶναι, ἀλλὰ τὰ ἀπὸ τῶν πολεμίων προειδὼς, τῷ Φρυνίχῳ ὡς ξυνειδότι κατ' ἔχθραν ἀνατιθέναι, οὐδὲν ἔβλαψεν αὐτὸν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ξυνεμαρτύρησε μᾶλλον ταῦτα ἐσαγγείλας.

LII. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο Ἀλκιβιάδης μὲν Τισσαφέρνην παρεσκεύαζε καὶ ἀνέπειθεν ὅπως φίλος ἔσται τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, δεδιότα μὲν τοὺς Πελοποννησίους, ὅτι πλείοσι ναυσὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων παρῆσαν, βουλόμενον δὲ ὅμως, εἰ δύναιτό πως, πεισθῆναι, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἐπειδὴ τὴν ἐν τῇ Κνίδῳ διαφορὰν περὶ τῶν Θηραμένους σπονδῶν ἤσθετο τῶν Πελοποννησίων (ἤδη γὰρ κατὰ τοῦτον τὸν καιρὸν ἐν τῇ Ῥόδῳ ὄντων αὐτῶν ἐγεγένητο), ἐν ᾗ τὸν τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου λόγον πρότερον εἰρημένον περὶ τοῦ ἐλευθεροῦν τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους τὰς ἁπάσας πόλεις ἐπηλήθευσεν ὁ Λίχας, οὐ φάσκων ἀνεκτὸν εἶναι ξυγκεῖσθαι 'κρατεῖν βασιλέα τῶν πόλεων ὧν ποτὲ καὶ πρότερον ἢ αὐτὸς ἢ οἱ πατέρες ἦρχον.' 2. καὶ ὁ μὲν Ἀλκιβιάδης, ἅτε περὶ μεγάλων ἀγωνιζόμενος, προθύμως τὸν Τισσαφέρνην θεραπεύων προσέκειτο· LIII. οἱ δὲ μετὰ τοῦ Πεισάνδρου πρέσβεις τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀποσταλέντες ἐκ τῆς Σάμου, ἀφικόμενοι ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας, λόγους ἐποιοῦντο ἐν τῷ δήμῳ, κεφαλαιοῦντες ἐκ πολλῶν, μάλιστα δὲ ὡς ἐξείη αὐτοῖς Ἀλκιβιάδην καταγαγοῦσι, καὶ μὴ τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον δημοκρατουμένοις βασιλέα τε ξύμμαχον ἔχειν καὶ Πελοποννησίων περιγενέσθαι. 2. ἀντιλεγόντων δὲ πολλῶν καὶ ἄλλων περὶ τῆς δημοκρατίας, καὶ τῶν Ἀλκιβιάδου ἅμα ἐχθρῶν διαβοώντων ὡς δεινὸν εἴη εἰ τοὺς νόμους βιασάμενος κάτεισιν, καὶ Εὐμολπιδῶν καὶ Κηρύκων περὶ τῶν μυστικῶν, δι' ἅπερ ἔφυγε, μαρτυρομένων καὶ ἐπιθειαζόντων μὴ κατάγειν, ὁ Πείσανδρος, παρελθὼν πρὸς πολλὴν ἀντιλογίαν καὶ σχετλιασμὸν, ἠρώτα ἕνα ἕκαστον παράγων τῶν ἀντιλεγόντων, εἴ τινα ἐλπίδα ἔχει σωτηρίας τῇ πόλει Πελοποννησίων ναῦς τε οὐκ ἐλάσσους σφῶν ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἀντιπρώρους ἐχόντων καὶ πόλεις ξυμμαχίδας πλείους, βασιλέως τε αὐτοῖς καὶ Τισσαφέρνους χρήματα παρεχόντων, σφίσι τε οὐκέτι ὄντων, εἰ μή τις πείσει βασιλέα μεταστῆναι παρὰ σφᾶς. 3. ὁπότε δὲ μὴ φαίησαν ἐρωτώμενοι, ἐνταῦθα δὴ σαφῶς ἔλεγεν αὐτοῖς ὅτι "τοῦτο τοίνυν οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμῖν γενέσθαι, εἰ μὴ πολιτευσομέν τε σωφρονέστερον καὶ ἐς ὀλίγους μᾶλλον τὰς ἀρχὰς ποιήσομεν, ἵνα πιστευῇ ἡμῖν βασιλεὺς, καὶ μὴ περὶ πολιτείας τὸ πλέον βουλεύσομεν ἐν τῷ παρόντι ἢ περὶ σωτηρίας (ὕστερον γὰρ ἐξέσται ἡμῖν καὶ μεταθέσθαι, ἢν μή τι ἀρέσκῃ), Ἀλκιβιάδην τε κατ-

3. δόξας δὲ ὁ Ἀλκιβιάδης—ἐσαγγείλας] Render, 'But Alcibiades, being thought unworthy of credit,—nay, rather suspected, from knowledge of the enemy's design, to have endeavoured to fasten on Phrynichus (through enmity to him) a charge of criminal consciousness,—therefore he did him no injury, but rather bore witness to the truth of what Phrynichus had before told them.'

Ch. LII. Alcibiades proceeds to carry into effect his plan of bringing over Tissaphernes to the Athenian interest.

1. παρεσκεύαζε καὶ ἀνέπειθεν ὅπως, &c.] 'brings about and prevails on,' &c., equiv. to 'brings about, effects the persuading,' &c., 'by persuasion causes that they should be,' &c.: a form of expression occurring elsewhere in the Attic writers, as Xen. Cyr. ii. 1, 8, παρεσκεύασε τὰς γνώμας, ὡς ὁμόσε ἰτέον. Of βουλόμενον πεισθῆναι the sense is, (as the Scholiast explains, and according to what Goeller and Poppo have shown to be the import of the expression,) 'feeling disposed to be convinced, if Alcibiades could make out any satisfactory proof that he might do so with safety; and accordingly disposed to pass over to the side of the Athenians.' Compare ch. 56.

ἐπηλήθευσεν ὁ Λίχας] Comp. iv. 85, init.

2. προθύμως τὸν Τισσαφέρνην θεραπεύων προσέκειτο] instabat studiosè demerens. Compare Herodot. i. 123, τῷ Κύρῳ προσέκειτο δῶρα πέμπων. Rare is this absolute use of the term, 'was urgent;' though it is found elsewhere supra vii. 18 and 78. Answering to this is the use of Lat. instare.

Ch. LIII. The conspirators proceed to Athens, and propose a change of constitution, together with the recal of Alcibiades, as the only means of procuring alliance with the king, which could alone enable them to cope with the Lacedæmonians.

1. τῶν Ἀθηναίων] These words Dobree would cancel as spurious. They involve, he thinks, an absurdity, since the ambassadors were sent not by the whole army, but by the conspirators only. Poppo is of opinion that the words may have arisen from ch. 56, 1. Yet the ambassadors were ex Atheniensibus. Nothing is there in the MSS. to countenance Dobree's conjecture; and the possibility of the words being introduced from ch. 56 is too slight a matter to build upon. To me it appears that if τῶν be cancelled, (and the article before proper names is often wrongly added,) all may be right; for Ἀθηναίων may stand for Ἀθηναῖοι: the true sense being, 'those Athenians who were sent from Samos as ambassadors with Pisander,' meaning, Pisander and his colleagues.

In κεφαλαιοῦντες ἐκ πολλῶν we have a condensed form of expression to signify, 'having summed up the substance of many arguments in a few words,' κεφαλαιωδῶς καὶ ξυντετμημένως λέγοντες, as the Scholiast explains. See more at iii. 67, and vi. 91.

2. διαβοώντων ὡς, &c.] i. e. 'clamorously urging that it was hard,' &c. So viii. 78, 1, στρατιῶται—διεβόων, ὡς, &c. Dio Cass. p. 394. Herodian ii. 2, 4, διεβ. ὅτι, &c. Æschyl. Pers. 630, παντάλαν' ἄχη διαβοάσω.

μαρτυρομένων καὶ ἐπιθειαζόντων] 'entreating and adjuring,' i. e. entreatingly adjuring them, 'not to recal.' On the subject of the Εὐμολπίδαι and Κήρυκες, those who enjoyed the hereditary right of ministering at the mysteries of Ceres and the Sacred Heralds, or slayers of the victims in the sacrifices, see Dr. Arnold, and Wachsm. Ant. Gr. ii. 303. On the term ἐπιθειαζόντων see notes at ii. 75. vii. 75, and viii. 1.

παρελθὼν πρὸς πολλὴν ἀντιλογίαν] 'and having come forward for much contradiction,' &c. Compare Polyb. xxviii. 7, 4, πρὸς τὴν ἀντιλογίαν ἀνίσταντο πολλοί. Plato, p. 539, εἰς ἀντιλογίαν ('for contradiction') χρώμενοι, scil. αὐτῷ: and so supra i. 73, 1, ἡ πρέσβευσις ἡμῶν οὐκ ἐς ἀντιλογίαν ἐγένετο. i. 31, ἐς ἀντιλογίαν ἦλθον. Hence in a passage of Herodot. viii. 77, fin. Βάκιδι, ἀντιλογίης χρησμῶν πέρι οὔτε αὐτὸς λέγειν τολμέω, &c., the late editors ought to have received the able conjecture of Wesseling, Βάκιδι δι' ἀντιλογίαν, where δι' ἀντιλογίαν λέγειν signifies, 'to speak by way of disparagement.'

παράγων] proferens, producens [in medium]. See note on iii. 68, 1. In ναῦς ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἀντιπρώρους (scil. αὐτῶν) ἐχόντων there is something graphic; the sense being, in other words, 'ranged in battle against them,' meaning, generally (by a bold figure) 'opposed to them,' ἐναντίων, as in Soph. Trach. 223, Τάδ' ἀντίπρωρα δή σοι βλέπειν Πάρεστ' ἐναργῆ, (where the Scholiast explains by ἐναντία,) and Eurip. El. 850, Ἕστησαν ἀντίπρωρα σείοντες βέλη.

3. σωφρονέστερον καὶ ἐς ὀλίγους μᾶλλον] Implying, not a total change from democracy to aristocracy, but a modification of democracy, so as to attemper it with somewhat of oligarchy. So at § 1 we have, μὴ τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον δημοκρατουμένοις. With the words ἐς ὀλίγους ποιεῖν τὰς ἀρχὰς compare περιποιεῖν ἐς ὀλίγους at ch. 48, 1. See note on ch. 38.

Ὁ δὲ Λέων καὶ Διομέδων ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ χειμῶνι, ἀφιγμένοι ἤδη ἐπὶ τὰς τῶν Ἀθηναίων ναῦς, ἐπίπλουν τῇ Ῥόδῳ ἐποιήσαντο. καὶ τὰς μὲν ναῦς καταλαμβάνουσιν ἀνειλκυσμένας τῶν Πελοποννησίων, ἐς δὲ τὴν γῆν ἀπόβασίν τινα ποιησάμενοι, καὶ τοὺς προσβοηθήσαντας Ῥοδίων νικήσαντες μάχῃ, ἀπεχώρησαν ἐς τὴν Χάλκην, καὶ τὸν πόλεμον ἐντεῦθεν μᾶλλον ἢ ἐκ τῆς Κῶ ἐποιοῦντο· εὐφυλακτότερα γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἐγίγνετο, εἴ ποι ἀπαίροι τὸ τῶν Πελοποννησίων ναυτικόν.

Ch. LIV. Urged by necessity, and soothed by the hope of again resuming what it has conceded, the people pass a decree, by which Pisander and ten others should go to Tissaphernes with full powers to negociate every thing with Tissaphernes and Alcibiades. Phrynichus is deprived of his command. The oligarchical clubs at Athens engage to co-operate with those in the armament at Samos to support their cause in every way and by whatever means.

1. ἐπελπίζων] 'building their hope on this.' So Bekker edits, on the authority of several of the best MSS. (to which add Mus. Brit.); while Goeller and Dr. Arnold retain the common reading ἐλπίζων, urging that 'there was no reason why Thucydides should have departed from his use of the word at ch. 1, and that he is accustomed to vary the meaning of his words, especially those of rare occurrence.' These arguments, however, are little cogent, especially in reference to any thing found in a composition like that of this eighth book; and considering that internal evidence here comes in aid of strong external authority, (the preposition being more likely to be omitted than inserted,) that authority is here to be deferred to as sufficient.

4. ἐπὶ δίκαις καὶ ἀρχαῖς] for the gaining of suits in the courts of law, and the obtaining of the offices of magistracy. See Aristoph. Eq. 57, and Mitchell's note.

Ch. LVII. Tissaphernes now renews his connexion with the Peloponnesians, and, supplying them again with pay, enters into a new treaty with them. Reflecting, therefore, on, and forecasting for, all these contingencies, he (agreeably to his wish of counterpoising the Greeks one against

2. ἐπανισοῦν] 'to counterpoise, to balance.' Goeller observes that this use of ἐπανισοῦν is found in Herodot. and Isocrat.; and refers to Valcken. on Herodot. viii. 13. I would add the following imitation in Polyæn. viii. 16, 2, τὸν πόλεμον ἠγωνοθέτει τοῖς Ἕλλησιν, ἀεὶ προστιθέμενος τοῖς ἡττωμένοις. ἀεὶ γὰρ ἐπανισῶν τὸ ἐλαττούμενον, τὴν ἰσχὺν τοῦ νικῶντος κατέλυεν.

CH. LIX. Tissaphernes declares his intention to bring up the Phœnician fleet to the aid of the Peloponnesians.

CH. LX. The capture of Oropus by the Bœotians. The Peloponnesians occupy their former station at Miletus, and the Athenians theirs at Samos.

1. ἐπιβουλεύοντες ἀπόστασιν τῆς Εὐβοίας] 'plotting the revolt of Eubœa from the Athenian alliance.' Ἐπὶ τῇ Ἐρετρίᾳ, 'over-against Eretria.' Μὴ οὐ is used as at i. 141, οὐ βέβαιον μὴ οὐ προαναλώσειν. On the idiom see Herm. Opusc. p. 237, seqq. and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 609, 3, a.

3. πελαγίας] See note supra ch. 39.

CH. LXI. A legate is sent from Lacedæmon to the Hellespont, in order to excite the states there to revolt. Accordingly Abydus and Lampsacus immediately revolt.

2. ἐπιβάτης] As the word properly signifies a passenger, so it came to denote one who went on board a fleet with no particular office, but was ready to occupy any post where he might be useful. This view of the sense, propounded in my translation and former edition of our author, has since, I find, been adopted by Dr. Arnold and Poppo.

τῶν Ἀθηναίων δύο καὶ τριάκοντα ἀναγαγομένων, ἐναυμάχησαν· καὶ, καρτερᾶς γενομένης ναυμαχίας, οὐκ ἔλασσον ἔχοντες ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ οἱ Χῖοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι (ἤδη γὰρ καὶ ὀψὲ ἦν), ἀνεχώρησαν ἐς τὴν πόλιν. LXII. μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο εὐθὺς τοῦ Δερκυλίδου πεζῇ ἐκ τῆς Μιλήτου παρεξελθόντος, Ἄβυδος ἐν τῷ Ἑλλησπόντῳ ἀφίσταται πρὸς Δερκυλίδαν καὶ Φαρνάβαζον, καὶ Λάμψακος δυοῖν ἡμέραιν ὕστερον. 2. Στρομβιχίδης δ' ἐκ τῆς Χίου, πυθόμενος, κατὰ τάχος βοηθήσας ναυσὶν Ἀθηναίων τέσσαρσι καὶ εἴκοσιν, ὧν καὶ στρατιώτιδες ἦσαν ὁπλίτας ἄγουσαι, ἐπεξελθόντων τῶν Λαμψακηνῶν μάχῃ κρατήσας, καὶ αὐτοβοεὶ Λάμψακον ἀτείχιστον οὖσαν ἑλών, καὶ σκευὴ μὲν καὶ ἀνδράποδα ἁρπαγὴν ποιησάμενος, τοὺς δ' ἐλευθέρους πάλιν κατοικίσας, ἐπ' Ἄβυδον ἦλθεν. 3. καὶ ὡς οὔτε προσεχώρουν οὔτε προσβάλλων ἐδύνατο ἑλεῖν, ἐς τὸ ἀντιπέρας τῆς Ἀβύδου ἀποπλεύσας, Σηστὸν πόλιν τῆς Χερσονήσου, ἣν *τότε Μῆδοι εἶχον, καθίστατο φρούριον καὶ φυλακὴν τοῦ παντὸς Ἑλλησπόντου.

LXIII. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ οἱ Χῖοί τε θαλασσοκράτορες μᾶλλον ἐγένοντο, καὶ οἱ ἐν τῇ Μιλήτῳ καὶ ὁ Ἀστύοχος, πυθόμενος τὰ περὶ τῆς ναυμαχίας, καὶ τὸν Στρομβιχίδην καὶ τὰς ναῦς ἀπεληλυθότα, ἐθάρσησεν. 2. καὶ παραπλεύσας δυοῖν νεοῖν Ἀστύοχος ἐς Χίον, κομίζει αὐτόθεν τὰς ναῦς, καὶ ξυμπάσαις ἤδη ἐπίπλουν ποιεῖται ἐπὶ τὴν Σάμον· καὶ ὡς αὐτῷ διὰ τὸ ἀλλήλοις ὑπόπτως ἔχειν οὐκ ἀντανήγοντο, ἀπέπλευσε πάλιν ἐς τὴν Μίλητον. 3. ὑπὸ γὰρ τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον καὶ ἔτι πρότερον ἡ ἐν ταῖς Ἀθήναις δημοκρατία κατελέλυτο. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ οἱ περὶ τὸν Πείσανδρον πρέσβεις παρὰ τοῦ Τισσαφέρνους ἐς τὴν Σάμον ἦλθον, τά τ' ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ στρατεύματι ἔτι βεβαιότερον κατέλαβον, καὶ αὐτῶν τῶν Σαμίων· προὐτρέψαντο τοὺς δυνατοὺς ὥστε πειρᾶσθαι μετὰ σφῶν ὀλιγαρχηθῆναι, καίπερ ἐπαναστάντας

Ch. LXII. Lampsacus is recovered by the Athenians, who seize on Sestos. An indecisive battle is fought off Chios.

2. σκευὴ—ἁρπαγὴν ποιησάμενος] See note supra ch. 41, and compare Herodian i. 10, 2, τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ ἁρπαγὴν ποιεῖσθαι.

3. τότε] So I read, with Poppo, Goeller, and Dr. Arnold, on the authority of almost all the best MSS., for vulg. ποτε, retained by Bekker (1st and 2nd edition); though on insecure grounds; the sense thus yielded being, as Goeller and Dr. Arnold have shown, quite unsatisfactory; while nothing can be more suitable than that arising from τότε, which means 'then,' as used of time past, with reference to some particular and well-known period thereof; here denoting the time so well known and already pointed out at i. 89. The term εἶχον adverts to the obstinate defence then made by the Median garrison.

Ch. LXIII. & LXIV. The conspiracy to bring in oligarchy proceeds, and endeavours are made to establish it both at Athens and in the subject states.

3. τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ] scil. τὰ πράγματα βεβαιότερον κατέλαβον, lit. 'held down [together] affairs in the army yet more securely,' i. e. secured their interests more firmly. On the nature of the metaphor see note at iv. 86.

προὐτρέψαντο] So I have edited, with Poppo, Dr. Arnold, and Bekker, for vulg. προτρεψάντων, retained by Haack and Goeller, but in reality indefensible, since it obscures, while προὐτρέψαντο imparts light to the whole sentence. See Dr. Arnold. The error might easily arise from a mistaking of the abbreviation for the termination, placed above the word:

αὐτοὺς ἀλλήλοις ἵνα μὴ ὀλιγαρχῶνται. 4. καὶ ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἅμα οἱ ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ τῶν Ἀθηναίων κοινολογούμενοι ἐσκέψαντο Ἀλκιβιάδην μέν, ἐπειδή περ οὐ βούλεται, ἐᾶν (καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἐπιτήδειον αὐτὸν εἶναι ἐς ὀλιγαρχίαν ἐλθεῖν), αὐτοὺς δὲ ἐπὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν, ὡς ἤδη καὶ κινδυνεύοντας, ὁρᾶν ὅτῳ τρόπῳ μὴ ἀνεθήσεται τὰ πράγματα, καὶ τὰ τοῦ πολέμου ἅμα † ἀντέχειν, καὶ ἐσφέρειν αὐτοὺς ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων οἴκων προθύμως χρήματα καὶ ἤν τι ἄλλο δέῃ, ὡς οὐκέτι ἄλλοις ἢ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ταλαιπωροῦντας. and I am enabled to add to the authority of Cod. Vat., that of Codd. Clar., Mus. Brit., and, I doubt not, Cod. Lugd.

4. ἐσκέψαντο] for ἔγνωσαν, 'decided, determined,' as Abresch explains, who adduces as another example of this idiom, Aristid. t. i. p. 249, ἐσκέψαντο μεταστῆσαι πρὸς ἑαυτοὺς τὴν πόλιν.

ἐᾶν] missum facere, 'to let him alone,' not ask him to co-operate with them. Similarly in a passage of the New Testament, Matth. xv. 14, we have ἄφετε αὐτούς. By αὐτοὺς is meant themselves alone by themselves; and the next words, ἐπὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν, are exegetical of the foregoing. Of the expression τὰ τοῦ πολέμου ἅμα ἀντέχειν the sense must be, 'to bear or hold up, sustain the operations of the war,' μὴ ἀνιέναι αὐτά, as the foregoing words suggest. Yet how this sense is to be elicited from the word, I see not. It is long since I conjectured the true reading to be ἀνέχειν, used as at i. 141, αἱ δὲ περιουσίαι τοὺς πολέμους ἀνέχουσι: and this conjecture has since been adopted by Poppo. To Dr. Arnold, indeed, it appears that the sense in question may be extracted from ἀντέχειν without any violation of analogy; though he allows this use to be without example elsewhere. But proof is, in such a case, indispensable; and far more likely is it that the scribes should here (as often) confound the prepositions ἀνὰ and ἀντί, than that our author should let such a barbarism escape him.

Ch. LXIV. 4. φυγὴ αὐτῶν] 'a band of exiles,' as in a passage of Isocr. de Pace, p. 184, (cited by Goeller,) τὰς φυγὰς καταλθούσας. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 429. Κατὰ κράτος ἔπρασσε, 'strenuously practised,' or contrived. Of ὀρθοῦσθαι the sense is here simply, 'to be set right,' regulated on the footing of an aristocratical constitution: an example of the word in this use (which is rare) occurs in Æschyl. Eumen. 678, and Choëph. 762, ἐν ἀγγέλῳ γὰρ κυπτὸς (incurvus) ὀρθοῦται λόγος. Compare Herodot. vii. 103, ὀρθοῖτ' ἂν ὁ λόγος—εἰρημένος.

5. σωφροσύνην λαβοῦσαι] 'having taken (or conceived) prudent caution:' a quality, observes Dr. Arnold, on which aristocracies especially prided themselves, and so termed in opposition to the ἀκολασία of democracies. See vi. 89, 5, and note. For vulg. εὐνομίαν, Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller edit αὐτονομίαν, on the authority of several of the best MSS. But the sense thus yielded is, as Dr. Arnold shows, quite indefensible. Accordingly I have chosen with him to retain the common reading, which is found in the greater part of the MSS. and confirmed by the Scholiast and Dionysius, especially since it is, as Dr. Arnold shows, perfectly suitable in sense, being meant to designate the aristocratical form of government, as opposed to the ἀνομία of mob-rule. Αὐτονομίαν may fairly be presumed to have been a mere false emendation, proceeding from certain who did not perceive the true force of εὐνομίαν. Ὕπουλος is properly a surgical term, used of flesh having an ulcer underneath, and therefore hollow and unsound: but it is figuratively used to denote what is deceitful and false, what seems to be something that it is not. Compare Diod. Sic. t. v. 33, ἡδοναὶ ὕπουλοι. Demosth. 327, ἡσυχίαν ὑπ. Οὐ προτιμήσαντες stands for οὐδὲν φροντίσαντες.

2. ἐκ τρόπου—ἐπιτηδείου] 'in some convenient way.' So Dio Cass. (cited by Arnold,) πολλοὺς—ἐκ τρόπου δή τινος ἐπιτηδείου ἔφθειρον. The word here bears the signification of 'the doing of justice on any offender by trial and punishment:' of which use (extremely rare) the only examples that I have noted elsewhere are in Plut. Artax. ch. 14, τὰς τῶν ἐξαμαρτόντων δικαιώσεις, and Joseph. Ant. xviii. 1, 3, ὑπὸ χθονὸς δικαιώσεις τε καὶ τιμὰς, οἷς ἀρετῆς ἢ κακίας ἐπιτηδείοις ἐν τῷ βίῳ γέγονε, and xviii. 9, 1, οἱ δ' ἐφ' ὕβρει τὴν δικαίωσιν λογιζόμενοι. The verb is so used in Herodot. iii. 29. i. 100, and v. 82, and occasionally in Dio Cass. and Dionys. Hal.

4. προσολοφύρασθαί τινι] 'to bewail himself to any one.' Bekker aptly compares Hor. Epod. xi. 12, 'querebar applorans tibi.'

Ch. LXVII. Through terror the people are induced to appoint Commissioners to frame a new constitution. The project is moved of creating an executive and self-chosen council of 400, and a sovereign assembly of 5000.

2. ξυνέκλῃσαν τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἐς τὸν Κολωνὸν] Dr. Arnold has well seen that this expression has reference to the practice of enclosing the place of assembly with a railing, to keep out persons who had no vote, and prevent the members of the assembly from going before the business was over. Thus, continues he, Pollux, viii. 104, speaking of the same practice, uses the word ξυνήλαυνον: and he refers (with Goeller) to Schoemann de Comit. Athen. p. 63. Poppo, too, remarks that hither are to be referred the Latin terms septa and ovilia, as said of the places of assembly; e. g. Ovid, Fast. i. 53, 'Est quoque, quò populum jus est includere septis.' Ἀνειπεῖν, palam dicere. On the phrase γράψασθαι παρανόμων, and on the ἀρετῇ οὐδενὸς ὕστερος] How our author can extol Antiphon's virtue, however his ability be unquestioned, may, Dr. Arnold thinks, seem extraordinary; and he would refer the term to Antiphon's being a warm and true friend, pure in the domestic relations of life, and honourable in his professional conduct. This (adds he) was so far virtue,—and if he was guilty of cruelty and perfidy towards his enemies, and sacrificed his country to his party, how many eminent men in Roman history, and of like, have done the same! This, however, is, after all, but a sort of special pleading, any thing but convincing. More effectually may we defend Thucydides by supposing the term ἀρετὴ, here used agreeably to its original force, to denote personal merit, by the possession of certain qualities which make a person acceptable (ἀρεστὸν) to his fellow-men. Compare Phil. iv. 8, εἴ τις ἀρετὴ καὶ εἴ τις ἔπαινος, and another passage of our author, supra i. 69, τὴν ἀξίωσιν τῆς ἀρετῆς. Here the merit of talent and capability to serve his fellow-men seems especially meant. Thus it is said a little further on, τοὺς ἀγωνιζομένους—πλεῖστα, εἷς ἀνὴρ,—δυνάμενος ὠφελεῖν. In short, the next words, καὶ κράτιστος—εἰπεῖν, (with which compare those supra ii. 60, 5, οὐδενὸς ἧσσων εἶναι γνῶναί τε τὰ δέοντα καὶ ἑρμηνεῦσαι ταῦτα,) are meant, as well as those afterwards, to exemplify what was said, by pointing out the mode in which he chiefly evinced his merit and capability. In considering him as a public character, and especially as an orator or statesman, Thucydides adverts to the two grand qualifications for usefulness; 1. to think justly, and, 2. to be able to express his thoughts in suitable language. In which view compare Hor. Epist. i. 4, 9, 'qui sapere, et fari possit quæ sentiat.' As to his moral character, as shown in the relations of private life, that cannot, in this designation of him as a public man, be meant. That he was deficient in sobriety, and probably in the virtues cognate therewith, seems pretty clear from a passage of Aristoph. Vesp. 1300, καὶ τῶν ξυνόντων πολὺ παροινικώτατος, Καίτοι παρῆν Ἵππυλος, Ἀντιφῶν, Λύμων, κ. τ. λ. Τούτων ἁπάντων ἦν ὑβριστότατος μακρῷ, where by ὑβριστότατος is denoted the opposite to σώφρων. So in Xen. Ages. x. 2, we have ἢ δίκαιον ἄδικος, ἢ σώφρονα ὑβριστὴς, 'a dissolute person.'

ὑπόπτως τῷ πλήθει διὰ δόξαν δεινότητος διακείμενος] Compare iii. 37. The force of δεινότης here may be that assigned by Didot, which Poppo thinks well corresponds to the words of Plut. Nic. 6, ὁρῶν δὲ τῶν ἐν λόγῳ δυνατῶν ἢ τῷ φρονεῖν διαφερόντων ἀποχρώμενον εἰς ἕνια ταῖς ἐμπειρίαις τὸν δῆμον, ὑφορώμενον δ' ἀεὶ καὶ φυλαττόμενον τὴν δεινότητα καὶ κολούοντα τὸ φρόνημα καὶ τὴν δόξαν, (ὡς δῆλον ἦν—τῇ πρὸς Ἀντιφῶντα τὸν Ῥαμνούσιον ἀπιστίᾳ τῶν πολλῶν,)—ἐπειρᾶτο, κ. τ. λ. After all, however, the sense of the term may be rather, as the Scholiast explains, ῥητορείας.

2. ἐπειδὴ τὰ—μεταπεσόντα] 'where the government of the Four Hundred, having come to downfal,' lit. 'when toppling to a downfal:' a metaphor taken from a substance which, after a violent propulsion, is just toppling to a fall; the μετὰ having reference to the change of position. So Plato, p. 493, μεταπίπτειν ἄνω κάτω, 'to fall topsy-turvy,' and p. 440, εἰ μεταπίπτει πάντα, καὶ μηδὲν μένει. Dinarch. p. 98, 25, μεταπεσούσης τῆς τύχης. Finally, in Herodian we have not unfrequently the use of ἀρχὴ, or δυναστεία, μεταπεσοῦσα εἰς, κ. τ. λ.

4. Ἕλληνες] Supposing this word to be genuine, it is subjoined, as Wasse and Dr. Arnold observe, to express that the ordinary attendants on the magistrates were not Greeks, but Barbarians. Considering, however, that the word has no place in several of the best MSS., and that more easy is its addition to be accounted for than its omission, it may be regarded as spurious. Χειρουργεῖν is used by the same metaphor as we observe in our verb to despatch, as used for ἀναιρεῖν.

Ch. LXXIV. The ship Paralus had been despatched to Athens to announce the defeat of the conspirators. But the revolution having broken out at Athens, the vessel and crew are seized by the Four Hundred, yet one of the crew escapes to Samos, and carries tidings of the violence of the oligarchical government.

1. ἐς τὴν μετάστασιν πρόθυμον] 'zealous for (i. e. in promoting) the change of constitution.' Ἐς is used as at ch. 68.

3. ἐπὶ τὸ μεῖζον πάντα δεινώσας] See note at vi. 34. Τεθνήκωσι. I agree with Dr. Arnold that τεθνήκω is not a verb formed from the perfect τέθνηκα, but that rather, like πεπλήγω and πεφύγω quoted in Duker's note, it was an older form of the verb, which, from the constant tendency of languages to abbreviate their words in proportion to the growth of civilization, became exchanged in most of its tenses for the shorter forms θνήσκω and θανεῖν. Though exceedingly rare, the form occurs also in Hippocr. t. iii. p. 247: Ἐπικαταψευδόμενος, i. e. 'venting further falsehoods against [the oligarchical government].'

Ch. LXXV. Counter-revolutionary spirit among the armament at Samos, and an union between those and the people of Samos.

2. ὤρκωσαν—ὅρκους] See note at iv. 74, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 421, 3. I have, with Poppo, Goeller (2nd edition), and Dr. Arnold, retained vulg. δημοκρατήσεσθαι, for which Bekker has edited δημοκρατηθήσεσθαι, on the authority of several of the best MSS.; but wrongly, since internal evidence is strongly in favour of δημοκρατήσεσθαι, which is confirmed by another passage, infra viii. 48, ὅτι δὴ καὶ αὐτοὶ οὐ δημοκρατήσονται. Indeed, nothing is more frequent in the Attic writers than this use of the Attic middle in a passive sense. In such a case external authority is of little weight. Διοίσειν. See note on vi. 54.

3. ἀποστροφὴν σωτηρίας] refugium salutis. The phrase, which occurs also at iv. 76, is very rare, and should, I suspect, be restored in a passage of Jos. Bell. ii. 11, 4; though it is used with τύχης in Æschyl. Prom. 794.

Ch. LXXVI. & LXXVII. New commanders are chosen at Samos, and a resolution formed to withdraw alike the foreign enemy and the revolutionary government at home. Accordingly the deputies sent from Athens do not venture to Samos, but stay at Delos.

3. καὶ ὡς οὐ δεῖ ἀθυμεῖν, &c.] Goeller remarks, that this whole passage, up to the end of the chapter, which is expressed in oratione obliquâ, contains (like many others) the seeds of orations, which were intended to be worked up in that form when the whole was completed:—a remark, indeed, very applicable to several parts of this eighth book; but there are not a few such passages, containing the germ of orations, in all parts of the history.

ποριμωτέρων] 'better provided.' The word πόριμος is rare, but it occurs in Æschyl. Eum. and Aristoph. Ran. 1429, and Thesm. 1429.

ὡρμῶντο'—πόλιν τε γὰρ σφίσιν ὑπάρχειν Σάμον οὐκ ἀσθενῆ, ἀλλ' ἢ παρ' ἐλάχιστον δὴ ἦλθε τὸ Ἀθηναίων κράτος τῆς θαλάσσης, ὅτε ἐπολέμησεν, ἀφελέσθαι, τούς τε πολεμίους ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ χωρίου ἀμύνεσθαι οὗπερ καὶ πρότερον—καὶ δυνατώτεροι εἶναι σφεῖς ἔχοντες τὰς ναῦς πορίζεσθαι τὰ ἐπιτήδεια τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει. 5. καὶ δι' ἑαυτούς τε ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ προκαθημένους καὶ πρότερον αὐτοὺς κρατεῖν τοῦ ἐς τὸν Πειραῖα ἔσπλου, καὶ νῦν ἐς τοιοῦτον καταστήσονται, μὴ βουλομένων σφίσι πάλιν τὴν πολιτείαν ἀποδοῦναι, ὥστε αὐτοὶ δυνατώτεροι εἶναι εἴργειν ἐκείνους τῆς θαλάσσης ἢ ὑπ' ἐκείνων εἴργεσθαι. 6. βραχύ τέ τι εἶναι καὶ οὐδενὸς ἄξιον, ᾧ πρὸς τὸ περιγίγνεσθαι τῶν πολεμίων ἡ πόλις σφίσι χρήσιμος ἦν, καὶ οὐδὲν ἀπολωλεκέναι, οἵ γε μήτε ἀργύριον εἶχον ἔτι πέμπειν, ἀλλ' αὐτοὶ ἐπορίζοντο οἱ στρατιῶται, μήτε βούλευμα χρηστόν, οὗπερ ἕνεκα πόλις στρατοπέδων κρατεῖ· ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τούτοις τοὺς μὲν ἡμαρτηκέναι τοὺς πατρίους νόμους καταλύσαντας, αὐτοὶ δὲ σώζειν καὶ ἐκείνους πειράσεσθαι προσαναγκάζειν, ὥστε οὐδὲ τούτους, ὑπὲρ ἂν βουλεύοιέν τι χρηστόν, παρὰ σφίσι χείρους εἶναι. 7. Ἀλκιβιάδην τε, ἢν αὐτῷ ἄδειάν τε καὶ κάθοδον ποιήσωσιν, ἄσμενον τὴν παρὰ βασιλέως ξυμμαχίαν παρέξειν. τό τε μέγιστον, ἢν ἁπάντων σφάλλωνται, εἶναι αὐτοῖς τοσοῦτον ἔχουσι ναυτικὸν πολλὰς τὰς ἀποχωρήσεις, ἐν αἷς καὶ πόλεις καὶ γῆν εὑρήσουσιν. 6. καὶ οὐδὲν ἀπολωλεκέναι] The full sense intended is, as expressed by Dr. Arnold, that 'they had lost nothing, in losing those who had no longer either money to send them,' &c.

σώζειν—προσαναγκάζειν] 'se vero illos quoque coacturos, ut ea servarent.'

7. πολλὰς τὰς ἀποχ., ἐν αἷς καὶ πόλεις καὶ γῆν εὑρήσουσιν] An argument similar to that at vii. 77, 4, λογίζεσθε δὲ ὅτι αὐτοί τε πόλις εὐθὺς ἐστε, ὅποι ἂν καθέζησθε,—namely, by colonization. Here colonization on part of the coast of Africa, or of the Pontus Euxinus, seems intimated. Indeed, in the then thinly peopled state of some of the finest parts of what is now the civilized world, opportunities for colonization abounded, and were always looked to as much with hope by the oppressed or unfortunate at home, whether states or individuals, as was America in later ages. Under the influence of this feeling is it that Johnson, in his 'London,' exclaims,

'Has Heaven reserved, in pity to the poor,
No pathless waste or undiscover'd shore?
No secret island in the boundless main?
No peaceful desert yet unclaim'd by Spain?'

I have followed Bekker in admitting into the text the word αὐτοῦ, on the authority of six or seven MSS.; though, as I have no where else in any writer found αὐτοῦ expressed, but rather left understood, as at viii. 39, ἀναχωροῦντες πάλιν ἐς τὴν Σάμον, ἡσύχαζον,—hence I suspect that it came from the margin; and undoubtedly we may better account for its addition than for its omission. True it is, as Pop. remarks, that it might more properly (i.e. by our author) be here subjoined than at ch. 38, because ἡσυχ. in this passage bears the sense, as Abresch has rightly pointed out, not of quieverunt, but substiterunt, (by a use of the term exceedingly rare, but of which another example occurs in Xen. Anab. v. 4, 16, οἱ δὲ πολέμιοι—τέως μὲν ἡσύχαζον· ἐπεὶ δὲ, κ.τ.λ.)

LXXVIII. Ὑπὸ δὲ τὸν χρόνον τοῦτον καὶ οἱ ἐν τῇ Μιλήτῳ τῶν Πελοποννησίων ἐν τῷ ναυτικῷ στρατιῶται κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς διεβόων, ὡς ὑπό τε Ἀστυόχου καὶ Τισσαφέρνους φθείρεται τὰ πράγματα, τοῦ μὲν οὐκ ἐθέλοντος οὔτε πρότερον ναυμαχεῖν, ἕως ἔτι αὐτοί τε ἔρρωντο μᾶλλον καὶ τὸ ναυτικὸν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ὀλίγον ἦν, οὔτε νῦν, ὅτε στασιάζειν τε λέγονται καὶ αἱ νῆες αὐτῶν οὐδέπω ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ εἰσίν, ἀλλὰ τὰς παρὰ Τισσαφέρνους Φοινίσσας ναῦς μένοντες—ἄλλως ὄνομα καὶ οὐκ ἔργον—κινδυνεύσειν διατριβῆναι· τὸν δ' αὖ Τισσαφέρνην τάς τε ναῦς ταύτας οὐ κομίζειν, καὶ τροφὴν ὅτι οὐ ξυνεχῶς οὐδ' ἐντελῆ διδοὺς κακοῖ τὸ ναυτικόν. οὔκουν ἔφασαν χρῆναι μέλλειν ἔτι, ἀλλὰ διανυμαχεῖν. καὶ μάλιστα οἱ Συρακόσιοι and for this very reason I have adopted the word, though within brackets.

CH. LXXVIII. & LXXIX. The Peloponnesians become much displeased with Astyochus. To appease the discontent of the allies, he puts to sea, and offers battle to the Athenians, which they decline; but soon after, being reinforced by a squadron from the Hellespont, they in turn offer battle to the Peloponnesians; who, however, decline it.

διεβόων] rabide clamabant, vociferabantur. Schol. διάτορον ἐβόων. There is an implied notion of loud complaining, as in Dio Cass. p. 394, αὐτὰ—διεβόων, and 742, δεινὰ διαβοώντων. On ἔρρωντο see note at ch. 36.

οὐδέπω ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ εἰσὶν] necdum in eodem loco essent, i. e. 'not yet brought together so as to be in one and the same place.' In the words following, ἄλλως ὄνομα καὶ οὐκ ἔργον, the sense of ἄλλως will depend on the construction, which most commentators join with ὄνομα; Arnold, who thinks it simpler to take it with μένοντες, in the sense 'waiting in vain,' alleging, that, if taken with ὄνομα, the more natural order of the words would be, ὄνομα ἄλλως καὶ οὐκ ἔργον,—a very insufficient reason, since nothing is more frequent in Thucydides than this placing of words out of the natural order. It must undoubtedly be taken, as Duk., Dobree, Scholefield, and Hermann are agreed, with ὄνομα: and strange is it that Dr. Arnold should think that even thus the true translation would be not 'a mere pretence,' but 'an idle pretence,' 'a name spoken in vain.' As to his objection, that it has not been shown how such a meaning arises out of the primitive signification of the word, consistently with the norma loquendi,—it is invalid, this being one of those cases in which our present knowledge of Greek philology fails us. That ἄλλως, when joined with ὄνομα, does sometimes signify nonnisi, nihil nisi, or, what is tantamount thereto, merum, is certain from several examples, as Aristides, t. i. 135, ὄνομα ἄλλως ὄντας, and ii. 502, ἄλλως ὄνομα. Eurip. Troad. 476, οὐκ ἀριθμὸν ἄλλως, ἀλλ' ὑπερτάτους Φρυγῶν, where the sense is, 'not a mere number serving to fill up the list.' So Hor. Epist. i. 2, 27, 'nos numerus sumus.' Aristoph. Nub. 1203, ἀριθμος, πρόβατ', ἄλλως ἀμφορῆς γεννησόμενοι. Phil. Jud. p. 541, ἀριθμον ἄλλως. Dio Cass. p. 1001, καλλώπισμα ἄλλως ἦν. Jos. Ant. xv. 7, 1, τὸν ἔρωτα τοῦ βασιλέως ὑπόκρισιν ἄλλως ὑπελάμβανεν, and Bell. iii. 9, 2, (Huds.) καὶ ὄχλος ἂν ἄλλως, καὶ οὐ στρατιὰ λέγοιντο, in which last passage may be recognised an evident imitation of the present,—which, had the later editors there (Havercamp, Oberthur, and Richter) perceived, they would not so rashly, not to say ignorantly, substituted μὲν in the place of the second καὶ, purely on conjecture.

διατριβῆναι] The Schol. and Hesych., who explain by ἀπολέσθαι, have rightly seen, that the sense of the word is here, 'to be ruined [by procrastination]:' a remarkable use of the word, of which, besides the single example adduced by Duk. from another passage infra viii. 87, I have noted the following, in Hdot. vii. 120, ἢ μὴ ὑπομένειν Ξέρξεα ἐπιόντα, ἢ καταμείναντας, κάκιστα πάντων ἀνθρώπων διατριβῆναι. Joseph. Ant. xvii. 6, 2, τά τε ἄλλα αὐτῷ συντυχεῖν, οἷς παρὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου διετρίβη καὶ δὴ καὶ τὴν νόσον.

For διανυμαχεῖν, Bekk. has edited, from one MS., ναυμαχεῖν: yet I cannot venture to cancel the compound, especially since it is found in the first section of the next chapter, and the stronger sense which it yields

(namely, to fight it out by a decisive naval battle; parallel to which is the use of decertare in Ovid, Metam. xiv. 803, 'Pace tamen sisto bellum, nec in ultima ferro Decertare placet') is here more suitable, and is confirmed by another passage of our author at ch. 79, 2, διακινδυνεῦσαι περὶ τοῦ παντὸς, compared with Polyb. i. 76, 2, ἀλλὰ διακινδυνεύειν καὶ διαναυμαχεῖν ἐσπευδον, 'fortunæ aleam prœlio navali committere aventes.'

6. For διαναυμαχῆσαι Bekker edits ναυμαχῆσαι from one MS. I have chosen, with the other editors, to retain the δια, though in brackets.

Ch. LXXXI. Thrasybulus and others persuade the armament at Samos to invite Alcibiades to go thither. Being recalled, he encourages the Athenians by the hopes of procuring them aid from Tissaphernes.

1. αὐτῆς] So, for vulg. αὐτοῦ, I have edited, with Bekker (second edition) and Arnold, on the authority of two of the best MSS.; such being at once called for by the context, and strongly confirmed by a kindred passage at i. 140, 1, τῆς γνώμης ἀεὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ἔχομαι, κ.τ.λ.

ἐπ' ἐκκλησίας] I have not ventured, with Haack, Poppo, and Goeller (second edition), to retain the old reading ἀπ', but have, with Bekker (second edition) and Arnold, adopted ἐπ', on the authority of many of the best MSS. Certainly, for the reasons assigned by Arnold, ἀπ' ἐκκλ. cannot be right; but not so clear is it that ἐπ' ἐκκλησίας must, as he says, be right. Not without reason does Poppo demand a proof that ἐπ' ἐκκλησίας can be said as answering to the Latin in concione; and until that can be given, I shall continue to suspect that Thucydides wrote ἐπ' ἐκκλησίᾳ. Easily might the c arise from the ε following.

2. ἐπῃτιάσατο] 'blamed,' 'laid the blame of all that he had done against his country.' Ἄγοιεν, ducerent, i. e. haberent.

οἵ τε πολέμιοι—διαβάλλοιντο] Sensus est: 'et ut hostes maximè contra Tissaphernem in invidiam adducerentur, s. maximam in Tiss. invidiam conciperent [quam maximas inimicitias cum Tiss. susciperent].' Compare ch. 83 & 109. (Kistem.) Render, 'that they should be at the greatest enmity with Tissaphernes.' So Plato, Phæd. p. 67, cited by Arnold, ᾧ τε διεβέβληντο [σώματι], τούτου ἀπηλλάχθαι, where διεβ. is opposed to ἦρων. See notes on ch. 83 & 109.

3. ὑπισχνεῖτο δ' οὖν τάδε μέγιστα, ἐπικομπῶν, ὁ Ἀλκιβιάδης, ὡς Τισσαφέρνης αὐτῷ ὑπεδέξατο ἢ μὴν, ἕως ἄν τι τῶν ἑαυτοῦ λείπηται, ἢν Ἀθηναίοις πιστεύσῃ, μὴ ἀπορήσειν αὐτοὺς τροφῆς, οὐδ' ἢν δέῃ τελευτῶντα τὴν ἑαυτοῦ στρωμνὴν ἐξαργυρίσαι, τάς τε ἐν Ἀσπένδῳ ἤδη οὔσας Φοινίκων ναῦς κομεῖν Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ οὐ Πελοποννησίοις· πιστεῦσαι δ' ἂν μόνως Ἀθηναίοις, εἰ αὐτὸς κατελθὼν αὐτῷ ἀναδέξαιτο. LXXXII. οἱ δ', ἀκούσαντες ταῦτά τε καὶ ἄλλα πολλὰ, στρατηγόν τε αὐτὸν εὐθὺς εἵλοντο μετὰ τῶν προτέρων, καὶ τὰ πράγματα πάντα ἀνετίθεσαν· τήν τε παραυτίκα ἐλπίδα ἕκαστος τῆς τε σωτηρίας καὶ τῆς τῶν τετρακοσίων τιμωρίας οὐδενὸς ἂν ἠλλάξαντο, καὶ ἑτοῖμοι ἤδη ἦσαν κατὰ τὸ αὐτίκα τούς τε παρόντας πολεμίους ἐκ τῶν λεχθέντων καταφρονεῖν καὶ πλεῖν ἐπὶ τὸν Πειραιᾶ. 2. ὁ δὲ τὸ μὲν ἐπὶ τὸν Πειραιᾶ πλεῖν, τοὺς ἐγγυτέρω πολεμίους ὑπολιπόντας, καὶ πάνυ διεκώλυσε, πολλῶν ἐπειγομένων· τὰ δὲ τοῦ πολέμου πρῶτον ἔφη, ἐπειδὴ καὶ στρατηγὸς ᾑρητο, πλεύσας ὡς Τισσαφέρνην πράξειν. 3. καὶ ἀπὸ ταύτης τῆς ἐκκλησίας εὐθὺς ᾤχετο, ἵνα δοκῇ πάντα μετ ἐκείνου κοινοῦσθαι, καὶ ἅμα βουλόμενος αὐτῷ τιμιώτερός τε εἶναι, καὶ ἐνδείκνυσθαι ὅτι καὶ στρατηγὸς ἤδη ᾑρηται, καὶ εὖ καὶ

3. τελευτῶντα τὴν ἑαυτοῦ στρωμνὴν ἐξαργυρίσαι] 'to sell at last his own bed,' i. e. to sell every thing down to his very bed. Compare Xen. Anab. vii. 5, 5, καὶ προσδανεισάμενος, εἰ μή γ' ἄλλως ἐδύνω, καὶ ἀποδόμενος τὰ σαυτοῦ ἱμάτια, and Hist. v. 3, where Cyrus says, ἐὰν δὲ καὶ ταῦτα ἐκλίπῃ, καὶ τὸν θρόνον κατακόψειν, ἐφ' ᾧ ἐκάθητο, ὄντα ἀργυροῦν καὶ χρυσοῦν. Themist. 309, C, καί τοι τὰ χρήματά γε ἀφιελόμενον, καὶ τὰς ναῦς, καὶ τοὺς στρατιώτας, καὶ νὴ Δία γε τὸν χιτῶνα τὸν τελευταῖον. Aristoph. Lysist. 114.

As to the debateable question, whether we should read vulg. ἐξαργυρῶσαι, from the great body of the MSS., retained by Poppo, or ἐξαργυρίσαι, on the authority of several of the best MSS., adopted by Bekker and Goeller, I have deferred to the opinion of Bekker, whose judgment in matters of Attic idiom is beyond that of any other scholar of our times. Whichever word be adopted, the literal sense intended is, as we should say, 'to turn into money,' i. e. to convert from any commodity into money. Ἐπικομπῶν, just before, may be rendered, 'vaunting,' i. e. speaking vauntingly. Of this word, which is exceedingly rare, another example occurs supra iv. 126, and in Dio Cass. p. 213 and 700, λέγω δὲ ταῦτα οὐκ ἄλλως (for μάτην) ἐπικομπῶν, and ἐπικομπάζω in Eurip. Herc. Fur. 981, κἀπεκόμπασεν τάδε.

μόνως—ἀναδέξαιτο] The word μόνως must be taken with εἰ, the sense being, that 'he would trust them only if he himself, on being recalled from exile, should undertake for them,' i. e. be a surety to him for them. Between εἰ and αὐτὸς some MSS have ὡς, and others σῶς, which latter reading has been adopted by Poppo. I cannot venture to follow him, because I suspect it to come from the margin; where it was noted down by certain critics, who thought that the sense of the passage required it; which is by no means the case; nay, on the contrary, it yields a sense wholly irrelevant. The learned critic above mentioned was misled by not perceiving the force of κατελθὼν, which signifies, as often in Thucydides and the best Attic writers, not simply return, but return from exile, in consequence of being recalled by his country. No instance occurs to me of σῶς being subjoined to κατέρχεσθαι.

Ch. LXXXII. Alcibiades is elected general-in-chief, and, after checking the bitterness of the army against the Four Hundred, he goes to Tissaphernes, to procure his aid against the Peloponnesians.

1. ἀνετίθεσαν] scil. αὐτῷ, 'committed all affairs to his management.' Compare ii. 65, στρατηγὸν εἵλοντο καὶ πάντα τὰ πράγματα ἐπέτρεψαν.

3. καὶ εὖ καὶ κακῶς οἷός τε—ποιεῖν] Nearly the same words occur in Xen.

κακῶς οἷός τ' ἐστὶν αὐτὸν [ἤδη] ποιεῖν. ξυνέβαινε δὲ τῷ Ἀλκιβιάδῃ τῷ μὲν Τισσαφέρνει τοὺς Ἀθηναίους φοβεῖν, ἐκείνοις δὲ τὸν Τισσαφέρνην.

LXXXIII. Οἱ δὲ Πελοποννήσιοι ἐν τῇ Μιλήτῳ πυνθανόμενοι τὴν Ἀλκιβιάδου κάθοδον, καὶ πρότερον τῷ Τισσαφέρνει ἀπιστοῦντες, πολλῷ δὴ μᾶλλον ἔτι διεβέβλητο. 2. ξυνηνέχθη γὰρ αὐτοῖς μετὰ τὸν ἐπὶ τὴν Μίλητον τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπίπλουν, ὡς οὐκ ἠθέλησαν ἀνταναγαγόντες ναυμαχῆσαι, πολλῷ ἐς τὴν μισθοδοσίαν τὸν Τισσαφέρνην ἀῤῥωστότερον γενόμενον καὶ ἐς τὸ μισεῖσθαι ὑπ' αὐτῶν πρότερον ἔτι τούτων διὰ τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην ἐπιδεδωκέναι. 3. καὶ ξυνιστάμενοι κατ' ἀλλήλους, οἷάπερ καὶ πρότερον, οἱ στρατιῶται ἀνελογίζοντο, καί τινες καὶ τῶν ἄλλων τῶν ἀξίων λόγου ἀνθρώπων καὶ οὐ μόνον τὸ στρατιωτικὸν, ὡς οὔτε μισθὸν ἐντελῆ πώποτε λάβοιεν, τό τε διδόμενον βραχὺ, καὶ οὐδὲ τοῦτο ξυνεχῶς· καὶ εἰ μή τις ἢ διαναυμαχήσει ἢ ἀπαλλάξεται ὅθεν τροφὴν ἕξει[ν], ἀπολείψειν τοὺς ἀνθρώπους τὰς ναῦς· πάντων τε Ἀστύοχον εἶναι αἴτιον, ἐπιφέροντα ὀργὰς Τισσαφέρνει διὰ ἴδια κέρδη. LXXXIV. ὄντων δ' αὐτῶν ἐν τοιούτῳ ἀναλογισμῷ, ξυνηνέχθη καὶ τοιόσδε τις θόρυβος Anab. vii. 3, 17, and the sentiment is one of which various parallels may be seen in my former edition of Thucydides.

Ch. LXXXIII. & LXXXIV. The Peloponnesians feel yet greater discontent against Tissaphernes and Astyochus; against the latter of whom the Syracusans and Thurians are so incensed, that they rise into a tumult, which nearly costs him his life.

1. διεβέβλητο] 'were incensed against him.' See note supra ch. 81.

2. ἐς τὴν μισθοδ. ἀῤῥωστότερον] 'more slack, or remiss, less disposed, to the discharge of the pay.' Of ἄῤῥωστος used in this figurative sense, an example occurs in a passage of Isocr. Panath., where we have, τὴν δὲ φύσιν εἰδὼς πρὸς μὲν τὰς πράξεις ἀῤῥωστοτέραν καὶ μαλακωτέραν τοῦ δέοντος, where the term μαλακ. is exegetical of ἀῤῥ.: and that very term is used (and not ἄῤῥωστος) at viii. 29, μαλακὸς περὶ τοῦ μισθοῦ.

3. ξυνιστάμενοι κατ' ἀλλήλους] I have, with Bekker (second ed.) and Arnold, received, for the common reading πρὸς, retained by Poppo and Goeller, κατὰ, found in MS. B., which, however deficient in external, is strongly supported by internal evidence: and of this use of the preposition, however rare, an example occurs at ii. 88, in the instance of the phrase κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ξυνιστάμενοι. On the force of the singular used for the plural, as said of the persons in question, i. e. οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, see note at iv. 14, 3. We may, however, freely render, 'unless they were led to fight it out.' In ἀπαλλάξεται there is a sensus praegnans for 'should depart thence, and go where.' So the Scholiast explains it as standing for ἀποστήσεται εἰς τόπον ὅθεν.

ἐπιφέροντα ὀργὰς Τισσαφέρνει] This may be freely rendered, 'accommodating himself to, being subservient to, the humours of Tissaphernes;' the literal sense being, 'accommodating his humour to that of Tissaphernes.' Answering to this is the use in Latin of obtemperare for 'ad alterius voluntatem me temperare.' Examples of the word in this sense occur in Dionys. Hal. 434. Eurip. Bacch. 1301. Æschyl. Eum. 846, ὀργὰς ξυνοίσω σοι. Dr. Arnold explains the sense to be, 'supplying, or ministering, such tempers as a man likes;' adducing in illustration and confirmation of the above sense a passage of Shakspeare's King Lear: but this may be pronounced a somewhat distorted view, and such as cannot be admitted on evidence so slender as that derived from a highly metaphorical passage of an English poet.

Ch. LXXXIV. 1. ἀναλογισμῷ] 'a recounting of their grievances.'

περὶ τὸν Ἀστύοχον. 2. τῶν γὰρ Συρακοσίων καὶ Θουρίων ὅσῳ μάλιστα καὶ ἐλεύθεροι ἦσαν τὸ πλῆθος οἱ ναῦται, τοσούτῳ καὶ θρασύτατα προσπεσόντες, τὸν μισθὸν ἀπῄτουν. ὁ δὲ αὐθαδέστερόν τέ τι ἀπεκρίνατο καὶ ἠπείλησεν, καὶ τῷ γε Δωριεῖ ξυναγορεύοντι τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ ναύταις καὶ ἐπανήρατο τὴν βακτηρίαν. 3. τὸ δὲ πλῆθος τῶν στρατιωτῶν, ὡς εἶδον,—οἷα δὴ ναῦται,—ὥρμησαν ‡ ἐγκραγόντες ἐπὶ τὸν Ἀστύοχον ὥστε βάλλειν· ὁ δὲ προϊδὼν καταφεύγει ἐπὶ βωμόν τινα. οὐ μέντοι ἐβλήθη γε, ἀλλὰ διελύθησαν ἀπ' ἀλλήλων. 4. ἔλαβον δὲ καὶ τὸ ἐν τῇ Μιλήτῳ ἐνῳκοδομημένον τοῦ Τισσαφέρνους φρούριον οἱ Μιλήσιοι, λάθρα ἐπιπεσόντες, καὶ τοὺς ἐνόντας φύλακας αὐτοῦ ἐκβάλλουσιν· ξυνεδόκει δὲ καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ξυμμάχοις ταῦτα, καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα τοῖς Συρακοσίοις. 5. ὁ μέντοι Λίχας οὔτε ἠρέσκετο αὐτοῖς, ἔφη τε χρῆναι Τισσαφέρνει καὶ δουλεύειν Μιλησίους καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους τοὺς ἐν τῇ βασιλέως τὰ μέτρια καὶ ἐπιθεραπεύειν, ἕως ἂν τὸν πόλεμον εὖ θῶνται. οἱ δὲ Μιλήσιοι ὠργίζοντό τε αὐτῷ, καὶ διὰ ταῦτα καὶ ἄλλα τοιουτότροπα, [καὶ] νόσῳ ὕστερον ἀποθανόντα αὐτὸν οὐκ εἴασαν θάψαι οὗ ἐβούλοντο οἱ παρόντες τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων. LXXXV. κατὰ δὴ τοιαύτην διαφορὰν ὄντων αὐτοῖς τῶν πραγμάτων πρός τε τὸν Ἀστύοχον καὶ τὸν Τισσαφέρνην, Μίνδαρος διάδοχος τῆς Ἀστυόχου ναυαρχίας ἐκ Λακεδαίμονος ἐπῆλθε, καὶ παραλαμβάνει τὴν ἀρχήν· ὁ δὲ Ἀστύοχος ἀπέπλει. 2. ξυνέπεμψε δὲ καὶ Τισσαφέρνης αὐτῷ πρεσβευτὴν τῶν παρ' ἑαυτοῦ, Γαυλίτην ὄνομα, Κᾶρα δίγλωσσον, κατηγορήσοντα ξυναγορεύοντι τοῖς — ναύταις] 'advocating the claims of his sailors.'

2. τὸ πλῆθος] for κατὰ τὸ πλῆθος, 'as to the bulk of them,' i. e. for the most part.

ἐπανήρατο τὴν βακτηρίαν] 'lifted his truncheon at:' a rare phrase, but which occurs also in Xen. Cyneg. vi. 23, and Plut. Themist. ch. 11, ἐπαραμένου τὴν βακτηρίαν, ὡς πατάξοντος, κ.τ.λ.

3. οἷα δὴ ναῦται] scil. ὄντες, and consequently ἀκρατεῖς. Compare ch. 72, fin. and Eurip. Hec. 607.

ἐγκραγόντες] Poppo edits, from several good MSS., ἐκραγέντες, alleging that ἐκρήγνυσθαι is said 'de eo qui verbis aliquem aggreditur et graviter increpat:' a remark perfectly true in itself, but not to the present purpose, since here simply shouting, not rebuke, is intended to be expressed. Hence I have chosen, with Haack, Goeller, and Bekker, to retain the common reading, which is at once suitable as to sense, and sanctioned by the use of the best Attic writers. Perhaps a preference of ἐκραγέντες on the score of its extreme rarity is not well founded; since nothing is so likely as that ε and ο should be confounded. The ἐκ may fairly be presumed to have arisen from certain correctors, who thought the stronger term here more suitable. Finally, the use of ἐγκράζειν for βοᾶν is quite Attic, and noticed by Hesychius; while that of ἐκκράζειν is later Greek.

5. τὰ μέτρια ἐπιθεραπεύειν] 'to pay him respect in all things moderate,' or tolerable. Of ἐπιθ. in this use, which is rare, an example occurs elsewhere in Dio Cass. p. 68, 66. On this use of εὖ θέσθαι in the sense 'to lay aside on good terms,' see note at i. 25 & 81.

οὗ ἐβούλοντο] Perhaps in some conspicuous part of the city, as in the case of Brasidas.

CH. LXXXV. Astyochus vacates his office, and is succeeded by Mindarus.

2. δίγλωσσον] 'one skilled in both tongues,' Greek and Barbarian, or Persian. The Carians were celebrated for their knowledge of various languages. Thus Valcken. on Herodot. viii. 133, observes, that Mardonius sent a Carian to consult the Greek oracles, and Cyrus the younger employed Carians as interpreters. That the Persians used such at court in the same office, is certain.

τῶν τε Μιλησίων περὶ τοῦ φρουρίου καὶ περὶ αὐτοῦ ἅμα ἀπολογησόμενον, εἰδὼς τούς τε Μιλησίους πορευομένους ἐπὶ καταβοῇ τῇ αὐτοῦ μάλιστα καὶ τὸν Ἑρμοκράτην μετ' αὐτῶν, ὃς ἔμελλε τὸν Τισσαφέρνην ἀποφαίνειν φθείροντα τῶν Πελοποννησίων τὰ πράγματα μετὰ Ἀλκιβιάδου καὶ ἐπαμφοτερίζοντα. 3. ἔχθρα δὲ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἦν αὐτῷ ἀεί ποτε περὶ τοῦ μισθοῦ τῆς ἀποδόσεως· καὶ τὰ τελευταῖα φυγόντος ἐκ Συρακουσῶν τοῦ Ἑρμοκράτους καὶ ἑτέρων ἡκόντων ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς τῶν Συρακοσίων ἐς τὴν Μίλητον στρατηγῶν, Ποτάμιδος καὶ Μύσκωνος καὶ Δημάρχου, ἐνέκειτο ὁ Τισσαφέρνης φυγάδι ὄντι ἤδη τῷ Ἑρμοκράτει πολλῷ ἔτι μᾶλλον, καὶ κατηγόρει ἄλλα τε καὶ ὡς χρήματά ποτε αἰτήσας αὐτὸν καὶ οὐ τυχών, τὴν ἔχθραν οἱ προθεῖτο. 4. ὁ μὲν οὖν Ἀστύοχος καὶ οἱ Μιλήσιοι καὶ ὁ Ἑρμοκράτης ἀπέπλευσαν ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα, ὁ δ' Ἀλκιβιάδης διεβεβήκει πάλιν ἤδη παρὰ τοῦ Τισσαφέρνους ἐς τὴν Σάμον.

LXXXVI. Καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Δήλου ἀπὸ τῶν τετρακοσίων πρεσβευταί, οὓς τότε ἔπεμψαν παραμυθησομένους καὶ ἀναδιδάξοντας τοὺς ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ, ἀφικνοῦνται παρόντος τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου, καὶ ἐκκλησίας γενομένης λέγειν ἐπεχείρουν. 2. οἱ δὲ στρατιῶται τὸ μὲν πρῶτον οὐκ ἤθελον ἀκούειν, ἀλλ' ἀποκτείνειν ἐβόων τοὺς τὸν δῆμον καταλύοντας, ἔπειτα μέντοι μόλις ἡσυχάσαντες ἤκουσαν. 3. οἱ δ' ἀπήγγελλον ὡς οὔτ' ἐπὶ διαφθορᾷ τῆς πόλεως ἡ μετάστασις γίγνοιτο, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ, οὔθ' ἵνα τοῖς πολεμίοις παραδοθῇ (ἐξεῖναι γάρ, ὅτε ἐσέβαλον ἤδη σφῶν ἀρχόντων, τοῦτο ποιῆσαι), τῶν τε πεντακισχιλίων ὅτι πάντες ἐν τῷ μέρει μεθέξουσιν, οἵ τε οἰκεῖοι αὐτῶν οὔθ' ὑβρίζονται, ὥσπερ Χαιρέας διαβάλλων ἀπήγγειλεν, οὔτε κακὸν ἔχουσιν οὐδέν, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τοῖς σφετέροις αὐτῶν ἕκαστοι κατὰ χώραν ἐπαμφοτερίζοντα] 'inclining to either side;' as we should say, 'playing a double game.'

3. οὐ τυχών] 'having not obtained [his request].' Of τὴν ἔχθραν οἱ προθεῖτο the full sense is, 'had taken up and professed the enmity [he afterwards bore] against him.' Similar to this is the phrase προτίθεσθαι ἀνδραγαθίαν at ii. 43, 3.

CH. LXXXVI. The deputies from the Four Hundred proceed from Delos (see ch. 77) to Samos, and endeavour to justify the conduct of the revolutionists at Athens. Alcibiades approves of some of their measures, but demands that the Four Hundred should be put down, and the old Council of Five Hundred restored.

1. ἀναδιδάξοντας] Here ἀναδιδάξειν signifies, as H. Steph. and Valcken. are agreed, 'edocere quempiam de aliqua re secus quam edoctus fuerit, sive dedocere,' as in Herodot. viii. 63, ἀνεδιδάσκετο Εὐρυβιάδης. It is well remarked by Valcken., 'Significat ἀναδιδάσκεσθαι sic priora dedocere, vel dedocendum se præbere, ut quis alia discat istis contraria.' And the same double force is remarked by Poppo to exist in the case of ἀναπείθειν at i. 140, and vii. 21. Thus the term comes to have the sense simply of perdocere, as at iii. 97, and Aristoph. Eq. 152, et al.

3. ἡ μετάστασις] Meaning 'the change of constitution.'

ἐξεῖναι γὰρ — ποιῆσαι] 'for that that was in their power to have done, when the enemy had made an attack; during their government.' Of the words τῶν πεντακ. —μεθέξουσιν, the sense, however obscurely expressed, must be what Bauer, Goeller, and Arnold make it, that 'all the citizens μένουσιν. 4. ἄλλα τε πολλὰ εἰπόντων οὐδὲν μᾶλλον ἐσήκουον, ἀλλ' ἐχαλέπαινον, καὶ γνώμας ἄλλοι ἄλλας ἔλεγον, μάλιστα δ' ἐπὶ τὸν Πειραιᾶ πλεῖν. καὶ ἐδόκει Ἀλκιβιάδης πρῶτον τότε καὶ οὐδενὸς ἔλασσον τὴν πόλιν ὠφελῆσαι· ὡρμημένων γὰρ τῶν ἐν Σάμῳ Ἀθηναίων πλεῖν ἐπὶ σφᾶς αὐτούς, ἐν ᾧ σαφέστατα Ἰωνίαν καὶ Ἑλλήσποντον εὐθὺς εἶχον οἱ πολέμιοι, κωλυτὴς γενέσθαι. 5. καὶ ἐν τῷ τότε ἄλλος μὲν οὐδεὶς ἂν ἱκανὸς ἐγένετο κατασχεῖν τὸν ὄχλον, ἐκεῖνος δὲ τοῦ τ' ἐπίπλου ἔπαυσε, καὶ τοὺς ἰδίᾳ τοῖς πρέσβεσιν ὀργιζομένους λοιδορῶν ἀπέτρεπεν. 6. αὐτὸς δὲ ἀποκρινάμενος αὐτοῖς ἀπέπεμπεν, ὅτι τοὺς μὲν πεντακισχιλίους οὐ κωλύοι ἄρχειν, τοὺς μέντοι τετρακοσίους ἀπαλλάσσειν ἐκέλευεν αὐτούς, καὶ καθιστάναι τὴν βουλὴν ὥσπερ καὶ πρότερον, τοὺς πεντακοσίους· εἰ δὲ ἐς εὐτέλειάν τι ξυντέτμηται, ὥστε τοὺς στρατευομένους μᾶλλον ἔχειν τροφήν, πάνυ ἐπαινεῖν. 7. καὶ τἆλλα ἐκέλευεν ἀντέχειν καὶ μηδὲν ἐνδιδόναι τοῖς πολεμίοις· πρὸς μὲν γὰρ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς σωζομένης τῆς πόλεως πολλὴν ἐλπίδα εἶναι καὶ ξυμβῆναι, εἰ δ' ἅπαξ τὸ ἕτερον σφαλήσεται, ἢ τὸ ἐν Σάμῳ ἢ κεῖνοι, οὐδ' ὅτῳ διαλλαγήσεταί τις ἔτι ἔσεσθαι.

8. Παρῆσαν δὲ καὶ Ἀργείων πρέσβεις, ἐπαγγελλόμενοι τῷ ἐν Σάμῳ τῶν Ἀθηναίων δήμῳ ὥστε βοηθεῖν· ὁ δὲ Ἀλκιβιάδης ἐπαινέσας αὐτοὺς καὶ εἰπὼν ὅταν τις καλῇ παρεῖναι, οὕτως ἀπέπεμπεν. 9. ἀφίκοντο δὲ οἱ Ἀργεῖοι μετὰ τῶν Παράλων, οἳ τότε ἐτάχθησαν ἐν τῇ στρατιώτιδι νηῒ ὑπὸ τῶν τετρακοσίων περιπλεῖν Εὔβοιαν, καὶ ἄγοντες Ἀθηναίων ἐς Λακεδαίμονα ἀπὸ τῶν τετρακοσίων [πεμπτοὺς] πρέσβεις Λαισποδίαν καὶ Ἀριστοφῶντα καὶ Μελησίαν, [οἳ] ἐπειδὴ ἐγένοντο πλέοντες κατ' Ἄργος, τοὺς μὲν should be of the Five Thousand (i. e. of that body) in their turn :' on which force of ἐν τῷ μέρει see note at iv. 11. Of κακὸν ἔχουσιν οὐδέν the literal sense is, 'they have, i. e. suffer, no injury.' The phrase (with which compare a similar one in the Old Testament, Daniel iii. 25, 'they have no hurt') is very rare ; though an example of it elsewhere is adduced by Abresch from Plut. t. ii. p. 161.

4. πρῶτον] So I read, with Bekker and Goeller, from a few MSS., for vulg. πρῶτος, retained by Poppo, but on insufficient grounds ; since that has every appearance of being a mere gloss ; and Poppo himself grants that the adverb is sometimes (as at vi. 3. viii. 100) used where we should expect the adjective. The sense, then, is, 'in unum omnium maximè ;' or, in other words, as Bp. Thirlwall expresses it, that 'it was the first great service he had rendered to his country.' On the expression οὐδενὸς ἔλασσον see note at ii. 94. In ὡρμημένων πλεῖν ἐπὶ σφᾶς αὐτούς we have a very forcible form of expression, to denote the utter folly of the step on which they were bent. Ἐν ᾧ stands for δι' οὗ, 'by which step :' a use on which see note at vi. 55. Εἶχον, 'had obtained,' would have got possession of; for εἶχον ἄν ; on which see note at v. 52. On κωλυτὴς γενέσθαι see note at iii. 25. viii. 50.

5. κατασχεῖν τὸν ὄχλον] 'to hold in (literally, down) the people,' hold them in restraint. So ii. 65, 8, we have, κατεῖχε τὸ πλῆθος, as said of Pericles. No other example of the idiom have I noticed elsewhere.

6. ἐς εὐτέλειάν τι ξυντέτμηται] Compare Xen. Hier. iv. 9, τὰς δαπάνας συντέμνειν εἰς τὰ καθ' ἡμέραν : and see note on viii. 1.

2. λέγεται οὐ κατὰ ταὐτὸ] scil. τὸ πρᾶγμα, 'the matter is variously related.' Γνώμῃ, 'motive.'

Of the word ἐκχρηματίζεσθαι (which is very rare) I have noted examples elsewhere in Dio Cass. 702, 11, ὑπηκόους μήτε ὑβρίζετε μήτε ἐκχρηματίζεσθε, and ix. 25, 78, ὅπως τὰ τῶν Ἰβήρων ἐκχρηματίσηται.

4. τριβῆς ἕνεκα καὶ ἀνακωχῆς] i. e. 'for the sake of wearing out the Grecians one against another, keeping affairs in suspense,' and preserving the balance of power. It is well observed by Didot, that ἀνακωχὴ answers to the French balancement, and that the metaphor is one taken from the nautical use of ἀνακωχεύειν. Ἐπεὶ—ἐνδοιαστῶς, 'nam, eum, si voluisset, bello finem impositurum fuisse, citra dubium evidens est.'

I would compare i. 82, 1, ἐπιβουλεύοντες μὴ καταφωρᾷν, and Dio Cass. 846, 31, τὴν ἐπιτήδευσιν καταφωρᾷν, from whence it appears that the historian read καταφωρᾷ, thus confirming what has been adopted almost entirely from conjecture, though countenanced by two or three of the best MSS.: and indeed such, I have good reason to think, was originally the reading of the Cod. Clarend. At ἐλασσόνων supply δαπανημάτων from the context.

Ch. LXXXVIII. Alcibiades departs from Samos to follow Tissaphernes, engaging to prevent the junction of the Phœnician fleet with that of the Peloponnesians.

ἐς τὴν—φιλίαν—διαβάλλειν] 'to expose him to calumny on account of his friendship to,' &c. Of this use of a noun with ἐς adjoined to the verbs διαβάλλειν, λοιδορεῖν, &c., examples are given by Duker from Herodian iv. 12. Plut. Apophthegm. p. 89 & 327, and another passage of our author, v. 79; and I have noted others in Demosth. p. 317. Plut. Lycurg. 19. Joseph. Bell. i. 11, 2. iv. 3, 9. On the use of εὐθὺ with a genitive of place, see note at ii. 4. Examples elsewhere occur in Herodot. ii. 119. iv. 120. v. 64. vi. 95. vii. 179.

Ch. LXXXIX. Effect produced at Athens on the report of the answer given by Alcibiades to the ambassadors from the Four Hundred. Dissensions and quarrels among the authors of the late revolution. Theramenes abandons his more violent partizans.

πραγμάτων, φοβούμενοι δ', ὡς ἔφασαν, τό τ' ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ στράτευμα καὶ τὸν Ἀλκιβιάδην σπουδῇ πάνυ, τούς τε ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα πρεσβευομένους, ἔπεμπον, μή τι ἄνευ τῶν πλειόνων κακὸν δράσωσι τὴν πόλιν, οὐ τὸ ἀπαλλάξειν τοῦ ἄγαν ἐς ὀλίγους ἐλθεῖν, ἀλλὰ τοὺς πεντακισχιλίους ἔργῳ καὶ μὴ ὀνόματι χρῆναι ἀποδεικνύναι, καὶ τὴν πολιτείαν ἰσαιτέραν καθιστάναι. 3. ἦν δὲ τοῦτο μὲν σχῆμα πολιτικὸν τοῦ λόγου αὐτοῖς, κατ' ἰδίας δὲ φιλοτιμίας οἱ πολλοὶ αὐτῶν τῷ τοιούτῳ προσέκειντο ἐν ᾧπερ καὶ μάλιστα ὀλιγαρχία ἐκ δημοκρατίας γενομένη ἀπόλλυται· πάντες γὰρ αὐθημερὸν ἀξιοῦσιν οὐχ ὅπως ἴσοι, ἀλλὰ καὶ πολὺ πρῶτος αὐτὸς ἕκαστος εἶναι· ἐκ δὲ δημοκρατίας αἱρέσεως γιγνομένης ῥᾷον τὰ ἀποβαίνοντα ὡς οὐκ ἀπὸ τῶν ὁμοίων ἐλασσούμενός τις φέρει. 4. σαφέστατα δ' αὐτοὺς ἐπῆρε τὰ ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου ἰσχυρὰ ὄντα, καὶ ὅτι αὐτοῖς οὐκ ἐδόκει μόνιμον τὸ τῆς ὀλιγαρχίας ἔσεσθαι· ἠγωνίζετο οὖν εἷς ἕκαστος αὐτὸς πρῶτος προστάτης τοῦ δήμου γενέσθαι. XC. οἱ δὲ τῶν τετρακοσίων μάλιστα ἐναντίοι ὄντες τῷ τοιούτῳ εἴδει καὶ προεστῶτες Φρύνιχός τε, ὃς καὶ στρατηγήσας ἐν τῇ Σάμῳ [ποτὲ] τῷ Ἀλκιβιάδῃ τοῖς πρώτοις, notwithstanding that the article seems worse than useless, though countenanced by the equally anomalous expression ἐν τοῖς κοινοῖς at vi. 8. As to Bekker's reading, ἐν τοῖς πρῶτοι, it introduces a harsh anomaly very groundlessly, and is liable to the grave objection stated in Poppo's Proleg. t. ii. 1, p. 160, seq.

φοβούμενοι δ', ὡς ἔφασαν, κ.τ.λ.] I entirely agree with Arnold in regarding this passage as hopelessly corrupt, and not to be emended by any critical conjectures hitherto propounded. Accordingly I have chosen, with Bekker, to retain the confessedly corrupt reading of the MSS., referring, for the various modes of emendation that have been proposed, to the lengthened annotation of Poppo.

σπουδῇ πάνυ] These words I have, with Haack, Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, inserted, on the authority of several of the best MSS., because they serve to strengthen the sense, and also present a form of expression occurring a little further on, and supra ch. 27. The omission of the words in so many MSS. may be accounted for on the supposition that, being corrupted, (probably to πού δῆ,) they yielded no sense. The import of the whole passage may be expressed as follows: 'And they now formed cabals, and found fault with the state of affairs, having for their ringleaders some of the heads of the oligarchy, and those in office, such as Theramenes, son of Hagnon, and Aristocrates, son of Scellias, who principally participated in the management of affairs, but standing in great awe, as they frankly said, of the army in Samos, and of Alcibiades most seriously, and also the ambassadors whom they had sent to Lacedæmon, and fearing lest they (i. e. the ambassadors) should, by negotiating without the consent of the great body of rulers, do the state some injury, did not, indeed, avow that they desired to get rid of the government coming so much into the hands of a few, but frankly confessed that the Five Thousand ought to be appointed not in name only, and that a more equalized form of government should be established.'

3. σχῆμα πολιτικὸν τοῦ λόγου] I have in my Translation rendered, 'This was the scheme of polity which they in words professed.' But that version requires the article; and I am now of opinion that the sense is, 'and this indeed was to them a mere political pretence of words,' or a wordy pretence. Σχῆμα, for πρόσχημα, as in Appian ii. 612, 96, ἀμφότεροι (scil. τῶν ἀντιστασιωτῶν) τῇ τῆς πόλεως σχήματα ταῦτα ἐπρασσον. This signification arises as follows: the word denotes, 1. a habit or dress; 2. a mere habit, or cloak; 3. a fictitious appearance.

Ch. XC. The extreme aristocrats send to Lacedæmon in order to get peace on any terms, and build a fort at the entrance of the harbour of Piræus.

1. προὐθυμοῦντο] 'zealously studied,' 'furthered the cause of;' in which sense the word occurs also at v. 17 & 39. viii. 1. Liban. Epist. 401, τοῦτο δὲ εἰ μὲν ἀγνοῶν, ἐν οἷς ὢν τυγχάνω, προθυμῇ, τάχα οὐ φιλοῦντος ἡ ἄγνοια. See Matth. Gr. Gr. p. 599, fin., and my note on vi. 39.

4. χηλὴ] 'a pier, or jetty;' meaning one of the two promontories which formed the entrance of the port. See Poppo, Proleg. t. ii. 253, and Col. Leake's Map in his Athens and Attica (second edition). One may better understand the plan of the Piræus by carefully weighing the very exact description of that of Cæsarea, formed by Herod the First chiefly on the model of the Piræus. See Joseph. Ant. xv. 9, 6, s. med.

5. ἐξαιρεῖσθαι] 'to unload and deposit:' a significatio prægnans.

προαιροῦντας] 'drawing it from thence.' Προαιρεῖν signifies 'promere velut è penû.' So Aristoph. Thesm. 424, ἃ δ' ἦν ἡμῖν προτοῦ, Αὐταῖσι ταμιεύεσθαι προαιρούσαις λαβεῖν, Ἅλφιτον, ἔλαιον, &c. Theophr. Char. iv. προαίρων δέ τι ἐκ τοῦ ταμιείου δεινὸς φαγεῖν.

CH. XCI. Theramenes exclaims against the erection of this fort; and his fears of its traitorous purpose are confirmed by the appearance of a Lacedæmonian fleet in the Saronic gulf, to favour the revolt of Eubœa from the Athenians.

1. διεθρόει] See note at vi. 46.

τοῖς ξύμπασι] Meaning, as Haack explains, to the Athenian people at large, as distinguished from the oligarchs alone, with whom the Lacedæmonians were disposed to treat.

2. τοῖς τειχίζουσι] A dat. commodi.

3. ἀπὸ τῶν τὴν κατηγορίαν ἐχόντων] 'on the part of those who brought the charge.' See note on ch. 87.

ἐξειργόμενοι καὶ τούτου] 'excluded even from this,' i. e. from its use. Compare ii. 13, ἦν—ἐξείργωνται πάντων.

ὑπὸ τοῦ δήμου γε αὖθις γενομένου] 'by the democracy again set on foot,' i. e. restored. Of the words following, ἄνευ τειχῶν—ἔχειν, the construction is, ξυμβῆναι ἔχειν τὰ τῆς πόλεως ἄνευ τειχῶν καὶ νεῶν, καὶ ὁπωσοῦν, 'even in any manner,' or 'on any terms whatsoever.' Of τοῖς σώμασι σφῶν ἄδεια ἔσται the sense is, 'there should be freedom from all bodily hurt,' 'safety for life and limb.' Compare Jos. Ant. xv. 5, 5, πᾶν ὁτιοῦν ὑφιστάμενοι, καὶ τυχεῖν εἰς τὸ παρὸν ἀδείας ἠξιωκότες. Isocr. ad Nicocl. πάλιν ὁπωσοῦν ζῆν ἡγοῦνται λυσιτελεῖν μᾶλλον, ἢ μετὰ τοιούτων συμφορῶν ἁπάσης τῆς Ἀσίας βασιλεύειν.

CH. XCII. The ferment at length growing ripe, issues in a deed of blood. Phrynichus is assassinated, and a tumult breaks out, tacitly encouraged by Theramenes. The obnoxious fort is destroyed, and the suppression of the Four Hundred, and the establishment of the sovereign assembly of the Five Thousand is carried by acclamation.

2. τῶν περιπόλων] 'the younger militia, employed in the home-service.' See note on iv. 67.

ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ πληθούσῃ] 'in the full market-place,' (the place where the chief market-business was transacted,) celeberrimo fori, as Tacitus expresses it, Annal. iv. 67.

3. κατακολπίσαι] 'to make the gulf:' a use of the word found also in Polyb. xxxiv. 12, 10.

7. θόρυβος πολὺς καὶ ἐκπληκτικὸς] 'a tumult terrific, or astounding.' With the words following, οἵ τε γὰρ ἐν τῷ ἄστει, &c. compare ii. 94, init.

8. μόλις τῶν πρεσβυτέρων διακωλυόντων] aegrè, 'hardly staying,' &c. Compare Acts xiv. 13, μόλις κατέπαυσαν τοὺς ὄχλους. Such is also the frequent use of μόλις in Plato. See my note on i. 12.

9. ὅσον καὶ ἀπὸ βοῆς ἕνεκα] I am still, as formerly, of opinion that we have here a familiar and colloquial form of expression to denote, 'as far as shouting went,' and nearly equivalent to ὡς καταβοῆς ἕνεκα supra ch. 87, or μέχρι βοῆς θρασὺ in Herodian vii. 8, 12, or ὅσον βοῆσαι in Chrysost. t. v. 6, 16. An extremely apposite passage occurs in Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 31, (cited by Duker,) ἐπεὶ δ᾽ οὐκ ἐπείθοντο, προσέβαλλεν, ὅσον ἀπὸ βοῆς ἔνεκεν, ὅπως μὴ δῆλος εἴη εὐμενὴς αὐτοῖς ὤν. In this phrase there is a remarkable pleonasm, since either ὅσον ἀπὸ βοῆς, or ὅσον βοῆς ἕνεκα, would have been sufficient. Thus we have in this sense ὅσον ἀπὸ βοῆς in Dio Cass. 260, 10, and 640, 46, and ὅσα ἀπὸ βοῆς in 987, 39; ὅσον or ὡς βοῆς ἕνεκα, supra ch. 87. So ὅσον πειρᾶς ἕνεκα in Lucian de Saltat. ii. 269. Similar is the use of ἕνεκα in a passage of Menander, Dram. frag. i. Ὁ μὴ δεχόμενος τῶν θεῶν τὸ σύμφορον Αὐτῷ ἰδιόντων ἕνεκα τοῦ ζῆν, and Dionys. Hal. Ant. vii. 2. 1315, 14, ἀνὴρ οὐκ ἐπιτυχόντων ἕνεκα γένους: and Hermann, de Ellips. et Pleonasm., compares passages of Plato, p. 701, τίνος δὴ χάριν ἕνεκα, and Soph. Phil. 554, ἀμφὶ σοῦ ’νεκα.

*ὁπλίταις· ὁ δ᾽ Ἀρίσταρχος καὶ οἱ ἐναντίοι τῷ * ἀληθεῖ ἐχαλέπαινον.* 10. οἱ δὲ ὁπλῖται ὁμόσε τε ἐχώρουν οἱ πλεῖστοι τῷ ἔργῳ, καὶ οὐ μετεμέλοντο, καὶ τὸν Θηραμένην ἠρώτων εἰ δοκεῖ αὐτῷ ἐπ᾽ ἀγαθῷ τὸ τεῖχος οἰκοδομεῖσθαι, καὶ εἰ ἄμεινον εἶναι καθαιρεθέν. ὁ δὲ, εἴπερ καὶ ἐκείνοις δοκεῖ καθαιρεῖν, καὶ ἑαυτῷ ἔφη ξυνδοκεῖν. καὶ ἐντεῦθεν εὐθὺς ἀναβάντες οἵ τε ὁπλῖται καὶ πολλοὶ τῶν ἐκ τοῦ Πειραιῶς ἀνθρώπων κατέσκαπτον τὸ τείχισμα. 11. ἦν δὲ πρὸς τὸν ὄχλον ἡ παράκλησις ὡς χρὴ, ὅστις τοὺς πεντακισχιλίους βούλεται ἄρχειν ἀντὶ τῶν τετρακοσίων, ἰέναι ἐπὶ τὸ ἔργον. ἐπεκρύπτοντο γὰρ ὅμως ἔτι τῶν πεντακισχιλίων τῷ ὀνόματι, μὴ ἄντικρυς δῆμον ὅστις βούλεται ἄρχειν ὀνομάζειν, φοβούμενοι μὴ τῷ ὄντι ὦσι καὶ πρός τινα εἰπών τίς τι ἀγνοίᾳ σφαλῇ. καὶ οἱ τετρακόσιοι διὰ τοῦτο οὐκ ἤθελον τοὺς πεντακισχιλίους οὔτ᾽ εἶναι οὔτε μὴ ὄντας δήλους εἶναι, τὸ μὲν καταστῆσαι μετόχους τοσούτους ἄντικρυς ἂν δῆμον ἡγούμενοι, τὸ δ᾽ αὖ ἀφανὲς φόβον ἐς ἀλλήλους παρέξειν.

τῷ ἀληθεῖ ἐχαλέπαινον] I have now, with Haack, ventured to edit, on the authority of one or two MSS., the Schol., and Valla's Version, ἀληθεῖ, for vulg. πλήθει, retained by Bekker, which, turn it as we may, is capable of no tolerable sense, whether as construed with ἐναντίοι or with ἐχαλέπαινον. As to Arnold's interpretation of ἐχαλέπαινον, 'were for violent measures,' it is utterly destitute of proof, or even probability. Hence I must, with Duker, Levêque, and Haack, give the decided preference to the reading ἀληθεῖ, which is strongly borne out by the context, (there being here an opposition between feigned and real indignation,) as also by the usus linguæ; for, as Duker shows by various examples, τὸ ἀληθὲς and ἡ ἀλήθεια are often opposed to the idea of simulation, as expressed by πρόφασις: and the same is shown by Hemsterh. on Lucian, Tim. 98. Finally, though no example has yet been adduced of τῷ ἀληθεῖ used in opposition to πρόφασιν μέν, yet several have been noted by Haack and Poppo of the equivalent phrase τῇ δ᾽ ἀληθείᾳ. Compare also ἐς τὸ ἀληθὲς, supra iii. 64, 4 (where see note). As to the objections urged by Goeller to ἀληθεῖ, they are not sufficiently forcible to claim any serious attention: and although external evidence is quite in favour of the reading πλήθει, yet the other, ἀληθεῖ, is equally supported by internal, as existing in the far greater likelihood of ἀληθεῖ passing into πλήθει, than πλήθει into ἀληθεῖ; and the letters α and π being in old MSS. very similar, (thus, A and Π,) the former might easily be mistaken for the latter.

10. ὁμόσε ἐχώρουν—τῷ ἔργῳ, καὶ οὐ μετεμέλοντο] 'went forward with the work, and did not repent of it (i. e. of having engaged in it);' or, rather, 'having closed with the work, set about it.' Compare supra iii. 83, 3, πρὸς τὰ ἔργα ἐχώρουν. i. 49. 11, 2, ἔργου ἔχεσθαι.

11. πρὸς τὸν ὄχλον ἡ παράκλησις] Meaning that 'the cry used to the multitude, to urge on the work, was,' &c.

ἐπεκρύπτοντο—ἔτι τῶν πεντακισχιλίων] The Scholiast well explains this,

XCIII. Τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ οἱ μὲν τετρακόσιοι ἐς τὸ βουλευτήριον ὅμως καὶ τεθορυβημένοι ξυνελέγοντο· οἱ δ' ἐν τῷ Πειραιεῖ ὁπλῖται τόν τε Ἀλεξικλέα ὃν ξυνέλαβον ἀφέντες καὶ τὸ τείχισμα καθελόντες, ἐς τὸ πρὸς τῇ Μουνυχίᾳ Διονυσιακὸν θέατρον ἐλθόντες καὶ θέμενοι τὰ ὅπλα ἐξεκλησίασαν, καὶ δόξαν αὐτοῖς εὐθὺς ἐχώρουν ἐς τὸ ἄστυ καὶ ἔθεντο ἐν τῷ Ἀνακείῳ τὰ ὅπλα. 2. ἐλθόντες δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν τετρακοσίων τινὲς ᾑρημένοι πρὸς αὐτοὺς ἀνὴρ ἀνδρὶ διελέγοντό τε, καὶ ἔπειθον οὓς ἴδοιεν ἀνθρώπους ἐπιεικεῖς, αὐτούς τε ἡσυχάζειν καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους παρακατέχειν, λέγοντες τούς τε πεντακισχιλίους ἀποφανεῖν, καὶ ἐκ τούτων ἐν μέρει, ᾗ ἂν τοῖς πεντακισχιλίοις δοκῇ, τοὺς τετρακοσίους ἔσεσθαι, τέως δὲ τὴν πόλιν μηδενὶ τρόπῳ διαφθείρειν μηδ' ἐς τοὺς πολεμίους ἀνῶσαι. 3. τὸ δὲ πᾶν πλῆθος τῶν ὁπλιτῶν ἀπὸ πολλῶν καὶ πρὸς πολλοὺς λόγων γιγνομένων ἠπιώτερον ἦν ἢ πρότερον, καὶ ἐφοβεῖτο μάλιστα περὶ τοῦ παντὸς πολιτικοῦ· ξυνεχώρησάν τε ὥστ' ἐς ἡμέραν ῥητὴν ἐκκλησίαν ποιῆσαι ἐν τῷ Διονυσίῳ περὶ ὁμονοίας. XCIV. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐπῆλθεν ἡ ἐν Διονύσου ἐκκλησία, καὶ ὅσον οὐ ξυνειλεγμένοι ἦσαν, ἀγγέλλονται αἱ δύο καὶ τεσσαράκοντα νῆες καὶ ὁ Ἀγησανδρίδας ἀπὸ τῶν Μεγάρων τὴν Σαλαμῖνα παραπλεῖν· καὶ πᾶς τις τῶν *πολλῶν αὐτὸ τοῦτο Ὅσοις ἦν βουλομένοις δημοκρατεῖσθαι τὴν πόλιν, οὗτοι δὴ μόνως προσηγόρευον τὴν κατάστασιν, ἣν ἐβούλοντο γενέσθαι, φοβούμενοι τὸ ὄνομα, ἀλλ' ὑπαλλάττοντες, πεντακισχιλίους ἐκάλουν.

Ch. XCIII. The differences between the two parties are adjusted by a mutual accommodation; and the decision of the points yet at issue is left to an assembly of the people, announced to meet on a certain day.

1. ἐξεκλησίασαν] So Bekker and Goeller edit, with the approbation of Buttmann and Krueger, for the common reading ἐξεκκλησίασαν, which, however, is defended by Schneider and Schoemann. Poppo preserves a neutrality by editing ἐξε(κ)κλησίασαν. I rather agree with Bekker and Goeller, because no little harshness is involved in the sense thus assigned to ἐξεκκλησιάζειν,—namely, 'to hold an assembly out of the usual place.' It is true that Josephus may seem to have read ἐξεκκλ.; for in his Antiq. xvii. 6, 3, (where he has an evident reference to the present passage,) he writes, καὶ παραγενομένων (scil. αὐτῶν) ἐξεκκλησιάσας (scil. αὐτοὺς) εἰς τὸ αὐτὸ θέατρον. Yet there the term cannot mean any other than simply, 'to hold an assembly;' and the same sense must have place in certain passages of the Septuagint, as Levit. viii. 4. Numb. xx. 10. 1 Paral. xiii. 5. 2 Paral. xv. 6. 2 Sam. xx. 14. Jerem. xxxvi. 9.

ἐν τῷ Ἀνακείῳ] 'in the temple of Castor and Pollux;' on the situation of which see Col. Leake's Topography of Athens and Demi of Attica (2nd edition), as also on that of the temple of Dionysius or Bacchus just after mentioned.

2. ἐπιεικεῖς] 'respectable persons:' a sense occurring in the Attic writers. So Gregorius de Dialectis, p. 246, says, τὸ δὲ μέτριον καὶ καλῶς ἔχον ἐπιεικέστατον φασί: and the Scholiast on Lucian, t. ii. 737, explains τὸ ἐπιεικὲς by τὸν τρόπον ἀγαθὸν, τὸ σύμμετρον, τὸ πάνυ: and so Xen. Hist. i. 1, 21, τοὺς ἐπιεικεστάτους τῶν τριηραρχῶν. Compare Eurip. Epist. iv. 3. Pausan. i. 23. Demosth. p. 925, 10; and see note on ii. 68, and my Lex. N. T. in v.

ἀνῶσαι] This is well explained by Portus: ἀνατραπεῖσαν ἐς τὰς τῶν πολεμίων χεῖρας ἐμβάλλειν.

Ch. XCIV. On the very day appointed for the assembly, and just as it is meeting, the Peloponnesian fleet appears off Salamis. Whereupon the Athenians, more than ever crediting the accusations of Theramenes, immediately man the fleet, in order to oppose the enemy.

1. πολλῶν] So I read, with Haack, Goeller, Poppo, and Dr. Arnold, for vulg. ὁπλιτῶν, retained, though not on good ἐνόμιζεν εἶναι τὸ πάλαι λεγόμενον ὑπὸ Θηραμένους καὶ τῶν μετ' αὐτοῦ, ὡς ἐς τὸ τείχισμα ἔπλεον αἱ νῆες, καὶ χρησίμως ἐδόκει κατα-πεπτωκέναι. 2. ὁ δὲ Ἀγησανδρίδας τάχα μέν τι καὶ ἀπὸ ξυγ-κειμένου λόγου περί τε τὴν Ἐπίδαυρον καὶ ταύτῃ ἀνεστρέφετο, εἰκὸς δ' αὐτὸν καὶ πρὸς τὸν παρόντα στασιασμὸν τῶν Ἀθηναίων, δι' ἐλπίδος ὡς κἂν ἐς δέον παραγένοιτο, ταύτῃ ἀνέχειν. 3. οἱ δ' αὖ Ἀθηναῖοι, ὡς ἠγγέλθη αὐτοῖς, εὐθὺς δρόμῳ ἐς τὸν Πειραιᾶ πανδημεὶ ἐχώρουν ὡς τοῦ ἰδίου πολέμου μείζονος [ἢ] ἀπὸ τῶν πολεμίων οὐχ ἑκὰς ἀλλὰ πρὸς τῷ λιμένι ὄντος. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐς τὰς παρούσας ναῦς ἐσέβαινον, οἱ δὲ ἄλλας καθεῖλκον, οἱ δέ τινες ἐπὶ τὰ τείχη καὶ τὸ στόμα τοῦ λιμένος παρεβοήθουν. XCV. αἱ δὲ τῶν Πελοποννησίων νῆες παραπλεύσασαι καὶ περιβαλοῦσαι Σούνιον ὁρμίζονται μεταξὺ Θορικοῦ τε καὶ Πρασιῶν, ὕστερον δὲ ἀφικνοῦνται ἐς Ὠρωπόν. 2. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ κατὰ τάχος καὶ ἀξυγκροτήτοις πληρώμασιν ἀναγ-κασθέντες χρήσασθαι, οἷα πόλεώς τε στασιαζούσης καὶ περὶ τοῦ μεγίστου ἐν τάχει βουλόμενοι βοηθῆσαι (Εὔβοια γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἀπο-κεκλημένης τῆς Ἀττικῆς πάντα ἦν), πέμπουσι Θυμοχάρην στρατη-γὸν καὶ ναῦς ἐς Ἐρέτριαν. 3. ὧν ἀφικομένων ξὺν ταῖς πρότερον grounds, by Bekker. Highly probable is the supposition of Dr. Arnold, that the word ὁπλιτῶν was added as a marginal explanation of τῶν πολλῶν, because the citizens of the middle class, i. e. οἱ ὁπλῖται, were the principal actors in this revolution. Τῶν πολλῶν, as Dr. Arnold and Poppo have well pointed out, refers to those whom Thucydides has just before (ch. 93) called τὸ πᾶν πλῆθος τῶν ὁπλιτῶν.

χρησίμως] i. e. 'for the good of the city.'

2. ἀνέχειν] 'to stand:' a sense which the word bears also in Xen. Hellen. i. 6, 20. See also note at ii. 18.

3. Of the words ὡς τοῦ ἰδίου πολέμου—ὄντος the sense is clearly that expressed by Dr. Arnold, 'seeing that a foreign war, greater than their domestic one, was now brought home to the very mouth of their harbour.' The ἢ I have, with Bekker, placed within brackets; though it ought rather to be cancelled, on the authority of two of the best MSS., as having no place here.

Ch. XCV. The Peloponnesian fleet sails towards Eubœa, followed by that of the Athenians. A battle is fought, in which the Athenians are defeated, and the whole of Eubœa, except Oreus, revolts from Athens.

2. ἀξυγκροτήτοις πληρώμασι] The Scholiast explains by ἤγουν ἑτοίμοις ναυσὶν, for which words, manifestly incorrect, I propose to read ἤγουν ἀνετοίμοις (imparatis, 'unready') ναύταις: an emendation confirmed by the words of the Leyd. Schol. μὴ ᾑρημένοις ἐπιβάταις: and so Bredow explains ἀξυγκ. by incompositi, nullo usu subacti: and Dr. Arnold, 'not blended together by use and discipline into one solid mass.' He adds, that the metaphor is 'one taken from the hammering of metal,' as in Dio Cass. 184, 94, δύναμιν συνεστηκυῖαν καὶ συγκεκροτημένην ἔχει, and he further notices, that 'in a passage of Polyb. i. 61, 3, we have τὰ πληρώματα συγκεκροτημένα put in opposition to crews, ἀνασκήτοις.' He might more aptly have adduced a passage of Pollux i. 158, στρατιῶται—ἀγύμναστοι, ἀσυγκρότητοι, ἀμελέτητοι, and especially i. 121, (where the lexicographer had an evident reference to the present passage,) καὶ τὰ μὲν καλῶς πεπληρωμένα, συγκεκροτημένα· τὰ δὲ ὡς ἑτέρως, ἀπλήρωτα—καὶ ἀσυγκρότητα. With respect to the nature of the metaphor, it is one taken from the welding, or forging, of two or more pieces of metal into one, by heating and hammering them together,—so that the two masses are so beaten together as to be perfectly incorporated.

Εὔβοια αὐτοῖς—πάντα ἦν] 'Eubœa was to them all in all,' i. e. their sole hope and defence. Compare Herodot. i. 122, ἦν τέ οἱ ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τὰ πάντα ἡ Κυνώ, and vii. 156, where he says, 'that to Gelon Syracuse was ἅπαντα, 'all in all.' See Herm. on Vig. p. 727, 95, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 438.

ἐν Εὐβοίᾳ οὔσαις ἓξ καὶ τριάκοντα ἐγένοντο. καὶ εὐθὺς ναυμαχεῖν ἠναγκάζοντο· ὁ γὰρ Ἀγησανδρίδας ἀριστοποιησάμενος, ἐκ τοῦ Ὠρωποῦ *ἀνήγαγε τὰς ναῦς, ἀπέχει δὲ μάλιστα ὁ Ὠρωπὸς τῆς τῶν *Ἐρετριέων πόλεως θαλάσσης μέτρον ἑξήκοντα σταδίους. 4. ὡς οὖν ἐπέπλει, εὐθὺς ἐπλήρουν καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὰς ναῦς, οἰόμενοι σφίσι παρὰ ταῖς ναυσὶ τοὺς στρατιώτας εἶναι· οἱ δ' ἔτυχον οὐκ ἐκ τῆς ἀγορᾶς ἄριστον ἐπισιτιζόμενοι (οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐπωλεῖτο, ἀπὸ προνοίας τῶν Ἐρετριέων), ἀλλ' ἐκ τῶν ἐπ' ἔσχατα τοῦ ἄστεος οἰκιῶν, ὅπως σχολῇ πληρουμένων, φθάσειαν οἱ πολέμιοι προσπεσόντες, καὶ ἀναγκάσειαν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους οὕτως, ὅπως τύχοιεν, ἀνάγεσθαι. σημεῖον δ' αὐτοῖς ἐς τὸν Ὠρωπὸν ἐκ τῆς Ἐρετρίας, ὁπότε χρὴ ἀνάγεσθαι, ἤρθη. 5. διὰ τοιαύτης δὴ παρασκευῆς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀναγαγόμενοι, καὶ ναυμαχήσαντες ὑπὲρ τοῦ λιμένος τῶν Ἐρετριέων, ὀλίγον μέν τινα χρόνον ὅμως καὶ ἀντέσχον· ἔπειτ' ἐς φυγὴν τραπόμενοι καταδιώκονται ἐς τὴν γῆν. 6. καὶ ὅσοι μὲν αὐτῶν πρὸς τὴν πόλιν τῶν Ἐρετριέων ὡς φιλίαν καταφεύγουσι, χαλεπώτατα ἔπραξαν, φονευόμενοι ὑπ' αὐτῶν· οἱ δὲ ἐς τὸ τείχισμα τὸ ἐν τῇ Ἐρετριαίᾳ, ὃ εἶχον αὐτοί, περιγίγνονται, καὶ ὅσαι ἐς Χαλκίδα ἀφικνοῦνται τῶν νεῶν. 7. λαβόντες δ' οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι δύο καὶ εἴκοσι ναῦς τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ ἄνδρας τοὺς μὲν ἀποκτείναντες τοὺς δὲ ζωγρήσαντες, τροπαῖον ἔστησαν. καὶ ὕστερον οὐ πολλῷ Εὔβοιάν τε ἅπασαν ἀποστήσαντες, πλὴν Ὠρεοῦ (ταύτην δὲ αὐτοὶ Ἀθηναῖοι εἶχον), καὶ τἆλλα τὰ περὶ αὐτὴν καθίσταντο.

Τοῖς δ' Ἀθηναίοις ὡς ἦλθε τὰ περὶ τὴν Εὔβοιαν γεγενημένα, ἔκπληξις μεγίστη δὴ τῶν πρὶν παρέστη. οὔτε γὰρ ἡ ἐν Σικελίᾳ ξυμφορὰ, καίπερ μεγάλη τότε δόξασα εἶναι, οὔτ' ἄλλο οὐδέν πω οὕτως ἐφόβησεν. 2. ὅπου γὰρ στρατοπέδου τε τοῦ ἐν Σάμῳ ἀφεστηκότος, ἄλλων τε νεῶν οὐκ οὐσῶν οὐδὲ τῶν ἐσβησομένων, αὐτῶν [τε] στασιαζόντων, καὶ ἄδηλον ὂν ὁπότε σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ξυρράξουσι, τοσαύτη ἡ ξυμφορὰ ἐπεγεγένητο ἐν ᾗ ναῦς τε, καὶ τὸ μέγιστον, Εὔβοιαν ἀπολωλέκεσαν, ἐξ ἧς πλείω ἢ τῆς Ἀττικῆς ὠφελοῦντο, πῶς οὐκ εἰκότως ἠθύμουν; 3. μάλιστα δ' αὐτοὺς καὶ δι' ἐγγυτάτου ἐθορύβει, εἰ οἱ πολέμιοι τολμήσουσι, νενικηκότες, εὐθὺς σφῶν ἐπὶ τὸν Πειραιᾶ, ἐρῆμον ὄντα νεῶν, πλεῖν· καὶ ὅσον οὐκ ἤδη ἐνόμιζον αὐτοὺς παρεῖναι. 4. ὅπερ ἂν, εἰ τολμηρότεροι ἦσαν, ῥᾳδίως ἂν ἐποίησαν,

3. ἀνήγαγε] Bekk. in 2nd ed. ἀνῆγε.

4. ἐπωλεῖτο] literally, 'was being sold,' was on sale.

Ch. XCVI. Athens is in the utmost consternation at this complete defeat, the effects of which, however, are diminished by the failure of the Peloponnesians to follow up their victory.

2. ὅπου γὰρ] 'for whereas.' See ch. 27.

ἄδηλον ὂν ὁπότε] See note on i. 2, 2. Αὐτοῖς ξυρράξουσι, 'should engage in conflict.' Of this word examples are found elsewhere in Xiphil. p. 1181, 51, and Dionys. Hal. p. 1713 and 950.

3. δι' ἐγγυτάτου ἐθορύβει] 'gave them the nearest alarm.'

καὶ ἢ διέστησαν ἂν ἔτι μᾶλλον τὴν πόλιν ἐφορμοῦντες, ἢ, εἰ ἐπολιόρκουν μένοντες, καὶ τὰς ἀπ' Ἰωνίας ναῦς ἠνάγκασαν ἄν, καίπερ πολεμίας οὔσας τῇ ὀλιγαρχίᾳ, τοῖς σφετέροις οἰκείοις καὶ τῇ ξυμπάσῃ πόλει βοηθῆσαι· καὶ ἐν τούτῳ Ἑλλήσποντός τε ἂν ἦν αὐτοῖς καὶ Ἰωνία καὶ αἱ νῆσοι, καὶ τὰ μέχρι *Εὐβοίας καὶ ὡς εἰπεῖν ἡ Ἀθηναίων ἀρχὴ πᾶσα. 5. ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐν τούτῳ μόνῳ Λακεδαιμόνιοι Ἀθηναίοις πάντων δὴ ξυμφορώτατοι προσπολεμῆσαι ἐγένοντο, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις πολλοῖς· διάφοροι γὰρ πλεῖστον ὄντες τὸν τρόπον, οἱ μὲν ὀξεῖς οἱ δὲ βραδεῖς, καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐπιχειρηταὶ οἱ δὲ ἄτολμοι, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἐν ἀρχῇ ναυτικῇ, πλεῖστα ὠφέλουν. ἔδειξαν δ' οἱ Συρακόσιοι· μάλιστα γὰρ ὁμοιότροποι γενόμενοι, ἄριστα καὶ προσεπολέμησαν.

XCVII. Ἐπὶ δ' οὖν τοῖς ἠγγελμένοις οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ναῦς τε εἴκοσιν ὅμως ἐπλήρουν καὶ ἐκκλησίαν ξυνέλεγον, μίαν μὲν εὐθὺς τότε πρῶτον ἐς τὴν Πύκνα καλουμένην, οὗπερ καὶ ἄλλοτε εἰώθεσαν, ἐν ᾗπερ καὶ τοὺς τετρακοσίους καταπαύσαντες, τοῖς πεντακισχιλίοις ἐψηφίσαντο τὰ πράγματα παραδοῦναι (εἶναι δὲ αὐτῶν ὁπόσοι καὶ ὅπλα παρέχονται)· καὶ μισθὸν μηδένα φέρειν μηδεμιᾷ ἀρχῇ· εἰ δὲ μή, ἐπάρατον ἐποιήσαντο. 2. ἐγίγνοντο δὲ καὶ ἄλλαι ὕστερον πυκναὶ ἐκκλησίαι, ἀφ' ὧν καὶ νομοθέτας καὶ τἆλλα ἐψηφίσαντο ἐς τὴν πολιτείαν. καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα δὴ τὸν πρῶτον χρόνον ἐπί γ' ἐμοῦ Ἀθηναῖοι φαίνονται εὖ πολιτεύσαντες· μετρία γὰρ ἥ τε ἐς τοὺς ὀλίγους καὶ τοὺς πολλοὺς ξύγκρασις ἐγένετο, καὶ ἐκ πονήρων τῶν πραγμάτων

4. Εὐβοίας] I have not followed Bekker in editing Βοιωτίας, on the authority of one MS., because I think Dr. Arnold has shown it to be utterly unsuitable here, though it is sufficiently so at ch. 43, 3, which probably (as he imagines) suggested the false correction.

5. πάντων δὴ ξυμφορώτατοι προσπολεμῆσαι] Meaning, 'of all their enemies by far the most convenient to war with:' a cutting and sarcastic remark, such as our author seldom throws out; and when he does, it is generally at the expense of the Lacedæmonians, whose vices were especially odious to one of a disposition so totally the reverse to theirs.

διάφοροι γὰρ—ἄτολμοι] A brief contrast, for the more lengthened one at i. 70 and 71. The words διάφοροι ὄντες ὠφέλουν are (as Poppo remarks) put for τὸ διαφόρους αὐτοὺς εἶναι ὠφέλει. See note on vi. 33. With ὁμοιότροποι γεν.—προσεπολέμησαν compare vii. 21 and 55.

Ch. XCVII. Concord is restored at Athens, and the Four Hundred being deposed, a mixed constitution, on moderate principles, is established. Alcibiades is recalled from banishment, and the armament at Samos is called upon to concur in the later changes.

1. μισθὸν μηδένα φέρειν μηδεμιᾷ ἀρχῇ] Here ἀρχὴ must, as Thirlwall says, be interpreted by the observations of Aristot. Pol. iii. 1, in the definition of a citizen, τῶν ἀρχῶν αἱ μέν εἰσι διῃρημέναι κατὰ χρόνον—ὁ δ' ἀόριστος, οἷον ὁ δικαστὴς καὶ ἐκκλησιαστής.

2. νομοθέτας] 'persons to model the constitution,' (Arnold,) lit. 'layers down of the law.' Whence we are supplied with an illustration of the true etymon of our word law, which is (as H. Tooke has shown) the past partic. of the Anglo-Saxon leegan, 'to lay, or put,' q. d. 'something laid down as a rule of conduct,' as θέμις and θεσμὸς, from τίθημι. So in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 627, 20, (Sylb.) we have, ἀλλὰ τὸ μὲν ἀρχαῖον οἱ βασιλεῖς αὐτῶν ἐτάττοντο (for which read ἔταττον, 'ordered, laid down') τὰς δίκας, καὶ τὸ δικαιωθὲν ὑπ' ἐκείνων, τοῦτο νόμος ἦν.

γενομένων τοῦτο πρῶτον ἀνήνεγκε τὴν πόλιν. 3. ἐψηφίσαντο δὲ καὶ Ἀλκιβιάδην καὶ ἄλλους μετ' αὐτοῦ κατιέναι, καὶ παρά τε ἐκεῖνον καὶ παρὰ τὸ ἐν Σάμῳ στρατόπεδον πέμψαντες, διεκελεύοντο ἀνθάπτεσθαι τῶν πραγμάτων.

XCVIII. Ἐν δὲ τῇ μεταβολῇ ταυτῃ εὐθὺς οἱ μὲν περὶ τὸν Πείσανδρον καὶ Ἀλεξικλέα, καὶ ὅσοι ἦσαν τῆς ὀλιγαρχίας μάλιστα, ὑπεξέρχονται ἐς τὴν Δεκέλειαν· Ἀρίσταρχος δ' αὐτῶν μόνος (ἔτυχε γὰρ καὶ στρατηγῶν) λαβὼν κατὰ τάχος τοξότας τινὰς τοὺς βαρβαρωτάτους, ἐχώρει πρὸς τὴν Οἰνόην. 2. ἦν δὲ Ἀθηναίων ἐν μεθορίοις τῆς Βοιωτίας τεῖχος· ἐπολιόρκουν δ' αὐτό, διὰ ξυμφορὰν σφίσιν ἐκ τῆς Οἰνόης γενομένην ἀνδρῶν ἐκ Δεκελείας ἀναχωρούντων διαφθορᾶς, οἱ Κορίνθιοι, ἐθελοντηδὸν προσπαρακαλέσαντες τοὺς Βοιωτούς. 3. κοινολογησάμενος οὖν αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἀρίσταρχος, ἀπατᾷ τοὺς ἐν τῇ Οἰνόῃ, λέγων ὡς καὶ οἱ ἐν τῇ πόλει τἆλλα ξυμβεβήκασι Λακεδαιμονίοις, κἀκείνους δεῖ Βοιωτοῖς τὸ χωρίον παραδοῦναι· ἐπὶ τούτοις γὰρ ξυμβεβάσθαι. οἱ δέ, πιστεύσαντες ὡς ἀνδρὶ στρατηγῷ, καὶ οὐκ εἰδότες οὐδὲν διὰ τὸ πολιορκεῖσθαι, ὑπόσπονδοι ἐξέρχονται. 4. τούτῳ μὲν τῷ τρόπῳ Οἰνόην ληφθεῖσαν Βοιωτοὶ κατέλαβον, καὶ ἡ ἐν ταῖς Ἀθήναις ὀλιγαρχία καὶ στάσις ἐπαύσατο.

XCIX. 3. οὐχ οἱ ἀδυνατώτατοι] for οἱ δυνατώτατοι, optimates. See Valcken. ad Hdot. iv. 95, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 463; and compare Dionys. Hal. προσεταιριστοὺς] 'voluntary associates:' a very rare word, of which I know of no example elsewhere except in Dio Cass. 335, 20. Hence may be illustrated a passage of Lucian, i. 47, 57, ἐπεὶ δὲ τοὺς θρασυτάτους προσεταιρούμενος καὶ δορυφόρους συναγαγών.

Ch. CII. The Athenian squadron at Sestos is surprised, and with difficulty escapes.

1. φρυκτωροὶ ἐσήμαινον] See notes on ii. 94, and iii. 22 & 80. Ὑπομίξαντες τῇ Χερσονήσῳ, 'having kept close under (or, in nautical phraseology, hugged) the shore of the Chersonesus.' For such is the force of the preposition ὑπὸ, agreeably to the interpretation originally propounded by me in my Translation, and afterwards acceded to by Dr. Arnold: and the same use of the preposition has place in a similar nautical term occurring in Acts xxvii. 4, ὑπεπλεύσαμεν τὴν Κυπρίαν, and 7, ὑπ. τὴν Κρήτην.

2. προειρημένης — ἐπίπλῳ] A harsh and strangely confused form of expression, standing, as Dr. Arnold observes, for προειρημένου αὐτοῖς ὑπὸ τῶν ἐπιπλεόντων φίλων, φυλάσσειν τοὺς πολεμίους, the abstract ἐπίπλῳ for the concrete ἐπιπλέουσι, resembling the expressions at iv. 127, 1. viii. 64, to which Goeller subjoins another passage, supra ii. 90, μὴ διαφύγοιεν πλέοντα τὸν ἐπίπλουν σφῶν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι.

ὅπως αὐτῶν ἀνακῶς ἔξουσιν] 'that they might exert themselves diligently [in watching] for them.' The Schol. expounds ἀνακῶς by προνοητικῶς καὶ φυλακτικῶς, and it is similarly explained by Hesych. and Eustathius; and, what is of more consequence, the phrase ἀνακῶς ἔχειν with a genitive following occurs in Hdot. viii. 109, where see Valckenaer. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 348.

ποιούμενοι] This word is confessedly corrupt; and of the conjectures propounded, the ποιουμένων of Haack is that least liable to objection; though the corruption is one apparently too deeply seated to be thus effectually emended. Just after, for παρὰ, Dobree with reason conjectures the true reading to be περί; a common mistake, of which another example is adduced by Dr. Arnold from a passage of our author, supra vi. 57, 3.

ἑβδομήκοντα] So Haack, Poppo, Goeller, Bekker, and Arnold very properly edit, on the authority of some of the best MSS., for vulg. ὀγδοήκ.: and, just after, the same editors have corrected vulg. ὀκτὼ καὶ ἑξήκοντα into ὁ. κ. ὀγδοήκοντα. Arnold alone has ventured to alter ὀκτὼ into ἓξ, partly on the authority of ch. 103, and partly because the whole corruption of the numbers in the MSS. seems to be in this manner more easily accounted for. He is quite right (and I have done the same); but he might as well have apprised the reader, that the emendation in question had been originally propounded by myself in the note to my Translation, and in my smaller edition of our author. It has also, I find, been adopted by Bp. Thirlwall.

Ch. CV. 1. περισχόντες] See note on v. 71.

2. διώκοντες] So I have edited, with Poppo and Goeller, on the authority of seven of the best MSS., for vulg. διώκειν, retained by Bekker and Dr. Arnold, though not on good grounds; since in a construction so confused as the present, by a commixture of two forms of expression, the more recondite is the more likely to be the genuine reading, especially when external authority comes in aid of internal evidence.

3. After Θρασύβουλον I have, with Haack, Poppo, Duk., and Dr. Arnold, placed a comma; by which the sense becomes quite clear, and is well expressed by Dr. Arnold, as follows, 'When Thrasybulus observed the disorder of the enemy's centre, he immediately made a vigorous attack on the ships of their left, which were particularly opposed to him; and having beaten them, he then proceeded to attack their centre also.' Ἐπεχούσας is, as the Scholiast notices, put for ἐφεδρευούσας. Poppo compares here the similar words of an anonymous writer in Schneider's Lex. ἐπεχούσας ναῦς πρὸς τὴν Πελοπόννησον. On the sense of ἐπεξαγωγῆς see note at ch. 104, and v. 71.

Ch. CVI. The moral effect of this victory on the Athenians is now described.

4. τὰ ναυάγια προσαγαγόμενοι] 'attractis naufragiis.' (Valla.) The sense is better represented by the version of Steph. 'vendicatis naufr.' which follows the gloss of the Scholiast, ἰδιωσάμενοι. This use is formed on the original force of the middle verb προσαγαγέσθαι, 'to bring or draw any thing to oneself;' a sense which the term bears also in Plato, Xen., and other of the best Attic writers.

CH. CIX. Tissaphernes resolves to follow the Peloponnesians to the Hellespont, and, if possible, appease them, as to his delay in sending the Phœnician fleet, and to expostulate with them for their proceedings at Antandrus. While on his journey, he stops at Ephesus to sacrifice to the great goddess of the Ephesians.

(Bp. Thirlwall.) Be that as it may, this act of Tissaphernes was not inconsistent with the Persian religious belief, which prevailed both at this and at an earlier period. The many-sided divinity of Ephesus was much less a Greek than an Asiatic goddess, intimately allied with the leading personages of the Persian theology.

TOPOGRAPHICAL AND HISTORICAL NOTES ON SYRACUSE,

BY COLONEL W. M. LEAKE.

THE most interesting occurrence in ancient history, illustrated by the topography of Syracuse, is the expedition of the Athenians in the 17th and 18th years of the Peloponnesian war, (B.C. 415, 414.) an expedition which had in view the subjugation of all Sicily, but which ended in the total discomfiture of the entire armament, and led to the capture of Athens itself by the Lacedæmonians.

Of the Greek cities of Sicily founded about three centuries before this time, (namely, Naxus, Syracuse, Megara, Gela, and Messene,) all except Megara[1] were still flourishing, and all, including Megara, had founded colonies in other parts of Sicily, some of which had even rivalled their parent cities. (Thucyd. vi. 3, seq.) Syracuse itself had not yet attained above half the area given to it by Dionysius, but even then it was between nine and ten miles in circumference.

In the autumn of the 2nd year of the 91st Olympiad, B.C. 415, the Athenians effected their first landing over-against the Olympieium, (κατὰ τὸ Ὀλυμπιεῖον, Thucyd. vi. 65, 2.) a place which had been pointed out to them by the Syracusan deserters as a safe position against the cavalry of the enemy, whose superiority in this force was very great. The position was protected by woods, marshes, precipices, walls, and houses; and there were trees which afforded materials for making an intrenchment and palisading round their ships (παρὰ τὰς ναῦς σταύρωμα ἔπηξαν, Thucyd. vi. 66, 2). At Dascon, the weakest point of the position, they constructed a fortress formed of rough stones (λίθοις λογάδην) and wood; and they broke down the bridge of the Anapus. Though Dascon is not again named by Thucydides, there can be little hesitation in placing it at the projection in the middle of the bay opposite to Ortygia, which separates the low shore at the mouth of the Anapus from the bay of Madalena or Milocca, which Diodorus (xiii. 13) describes as τὸν κόλπον τὸν Δάσκωνα. The trees grew, probably, on the marshy bottom and plain between the cliffs of Olympieium and the Anapus, and were thus at hand for forming a stockade to protect the ships, as well as for constructing the fortress of Dascon, which protected the right of the Athenian position.

In the evening of the day on which the Athenians had landed, the Syracusan cavalry, returning from a fruitless expedition to Catana, whither they had been led by a stratagem of the enemy, advanced towards the temple of Jupiter Olympius, and were followed soon afterwards by the infantry. Around the temple there was a πολίχνη or small town[2]: the temple itself seems not to have been in possession of the Athenians, but the houses and the cliffs which extended from the Olympieium to Dascon afforded cover to their line. The Syracusan army, finding the Athenians not disposed to attack, retired behind the road which led from Syracuse to Helorus, and encamped (ἀναχωρήσαντες καὶ διαβάντες τὴν Ἑλωρινὴν ὁδὸν ηὐλίσαντο, Thucyd. vi. 66, ad fin.).

The bridge of the Anapus, destroyed by the Athenians, was probably in the place where the remains of an ancient bridge are still seen, a little below the junction of the Anapus and Cyane; and it would seem, from the words just cited, that the Helorine way branched off to the right immediately beyond the bridge, leaving the Polichne and the temple on the left. It would seem also, from the Syracusans having retired behind the Helorine way, that the valley of Cyane was in those days better drained towards the sea, than it is at present: on the contrary, the plain appears to have been more marshy, both to the right and left of the Anapus, on which latter side was the marsh Lysimeleia, formed chiefly by some copious springs which issue from the foot of the hill of Epipolæ. In the bay of Syracuse, as in all other similar situations where rivers terminate in the sea,—we are to expect to find the coast at the mouth of the river, and the lower course of the river itself, different from their ancient state: and as the alluvium which causes such changes has, in the present instance, been operated chiefly or entirely by the Anapus, (the Cyane being a pure, deep-seated source, with a course of no more than two miles,) it is probable, that the course of the Anapus, below the junction, is now nearer, than it was anciently, to the hill of Olympieium, and that the ground between them is narrower.

On the following day both armies drew out in order of battle. The Syracusan cavalry was on the right; their left seems to have been extended nearly to the heights of Syracuse, for Thucydides remarks that some of the infantry on the left, who were nearest to the city, retired thither. The Athenian hoplitæ were for the most part 8 in depth, the Syracusan 16. The Athenians advanced, were met by the enemy, and gained a complete victory, in the midst of rain and thunder, though they were prevented from availing themselves thoroughly of their advantage by the enemy's cavalry,—under cover of which the infantry rallied on the Helorine way, threw a garrison into the temple of Jupiter Olympius, lest the Athenians should plunder it, and retreated in safety. Their loss was 260, that of the Athenians 50. The winter season now induced the Athenians to give up their enterprise until they should receive some assistance in cavalry from Athens and their allies of Sicily; they withdrew therefore with the whole armament to Catana and Naxus, where they passed the winter, and at the former of these cities prepared bricks and iron for the circumvallation of Syracuse, ἐς τὸν περιτειχισμὸν πλινθία καὶ σίδηρον ἠτοίμαζον. (Thucyd. vi. 88, 6.)

The Syracusans, meanwhile, strengthened their city on the side towards Epipolæ, with the view of preventing the Athenians, should they obtain possession of that height, from making a circumvallation in the narrowest part. They built a wall, therefore, connected with the city, looking in all its extent towards Epipolæ, and enclosing within it the sanctuary of Apollo Temenites: ἐτείχιζον πρὸς τῇ πόλει, τὸν Τεμενίτην ἐντὸς ποιησάμενοι, τεῖχος παρὰ πᾶν τὸ πρὸς τὰς Ἐπιπολὰς ὁρῶν, ὅπως μὴ δι' ἐλάσσονος εὐαποτείχιστοι ὦσιν. (Thuc. vi. 75, 1.) They placed also a garrison (φρούριον) in Megara, and another in the Olympieium, and they palisaded all the places adapted to debarkation, (τὴν θάλασσαν προεσταύρωσαν παντα-χῇ ᾗ ἀποβάσεις ἦσαν,) not without the hope that they might succeed in preventing the Athenians from occupying Epipolæ, without which there was little danger of Syracuse being taken. And for this purpose, in the early part of the summer of B.C. 414, they turned their attention to the defence of the passes leading up to Epipolæ through the cliffs which surround it. Three of these passages were in Neapolis: one behind the theatre; another now called Fusco (Sicilian for Ital. fosco, 'dark') is half a mile further to the westward; and there is a third at the western extremity of Neapolis, where appears to have been a gate leading into Epipolæ. Two of these were accessible to wheel-carriages; and the principal entrances on the other sides of Syracuse were doubtless equally so. But, besides these passages through the cliffs, there were others which led to πυλίδες, or small gates, and were intended for foot-passengers. The positions of some of these, having steps cut in the rock leading up to them, are still to be observed in the enclosure of Syracuse, as well on the land side as on that towards the sea.

The name Epipolæ is applied by Thucydides, as already hinted, not only to the western part of the triangular table-summit of Syracuse,—where in later times stood one of the three component cities of Syracuse,—but to the whole tabular height bordered by cliffs, which lies westward of the hill of Achradina, and which was called Epipolæ from its situation above[3] the city. Thucydides describes Epipolæ as rising in a slope from the city, so as to afford a view of its interior, and as surrounded by precipices which admitted only of an access to the height through certain passes in the cliffs: οἱ Συρακόσιοι, ... νομίσαντες, ἐὰν μὴ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν κρατήσωσιν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι,—χωρίου ἀποκρήμνου τε καὶ ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως εὐθὺς κειμένου,—οὐκ ἂν ῥᾳδίως σφᾶς, οὐδ' εἰ κρατοῖντο μάχῃ, ἀποτειχισθῆναι, διενοοῦντο τὰς προσβάσεις αὐτῶν φυλάσσειν, ὅπως μὴ κατὰ ταύτας λαθῶσι σφᾶς ἀναβάντες οἱ πολέμιοι· οὐ γὰρ ἂν ἄλλῃ γε αὐτοὺς δυνηθῆναι. ἐξήρτηται γὰρ τὸ ἄλλο χωρίον, καὶ μέχρι τῆς πόλεως ἐπικλινές τέ ἐστι καὶ ἐπιφανὲς πᾶν εἴσω· καὶ ὠνόμασται ὑπὸ τῶν Συρακοσίων, διὰ τὸ ἐπιπολῆς τοῦ ἄλλου εἶναι, Ἐπιπολαί. (vi. 96, 1, 2.)

At the moment when the Syracusans had drawn out their army in the meadow of the Anapus for the purpose of selecting 600 hoplitæ for the defence of Epipolæ, the Athenians, who had sailed from Catana, landed at Leon 6 or 7 stades from Epipolæ in the opposite direction, and, before the Syracusans could arrive from the meadow of the Anapus, which was 25 stades distant, had ascended by Euryelus into Epipolæ. The distance of Leon from Epipolæ identifies it with a small harbour below Targia on the road from the Aguglia to Targetta. Immediately after the landing, the fleet was sent to Thapsus, (now Magnisi,) a neighbouring peninsula connected by a narrow isthmus with the main: χερσόνησος ἐν στενῷ ἰσθμῷ προὔχουσα ἐς τὸ πέλαγος, τῆς δὲ Συρακοσίων πόλεως οὔτε πλοῦν οὔτε ὁδὸν πολλὴν ἀπέχει. (Thucyd. vi. 97, 1.) Here the naval force protected itself by a stockade across the isthmus, διασταυρωσάμενος τὸν ἰσθμὸν, ἡσύχαζεν. As soon as the 600 hoplitæ with some other troops arrived on Epipolæ, they were defeated by the Athenians, who slew 300, and among them Diomilus, leader of the 600. The Syracusans then retired into the city, towards which the Athenians, the next day, advanced to offer battle, but without effect. They then proceeded to build a fortress at Labdalum on the highest rocks of Epipolæ, looking towards Megara, to serve for a place in which their materials and property might be deposited, whether they should be employed in fighting or in circumvallating: φρούριον ἐπὶ τῷ Λαβδάλῳ ᾠκοδόμησαν, ἐπ' ἄκροις τοῖς κρημνοῖς τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν ὀρῶν πρὸς τὰ Μέγαρα, ὅπως εἴη αὐτοῖς, ὁπότε προΐοιεν, ἢ μαχούμενοι ἢ τειχιοῦντες, τοῖς τε σκεύεσι καὶ τοῖς χρήμασιν ἀποθήκη. (Thucyd. vi. 97, ad fin.) Hence Labdalum appears to have been the name of the narrow ridge, defended by cliffs now called Belvedere, which extends a mile to the north-west from the pass of Mongibellisi, and terminates in a peak, at the foot of which is a small village, and now (1839) on the summit, a telegraph. On some part of this ridge the fortress of the Athenians was probably built. It has indeed been supposed that the height named Bufalaro, to the east of Mongibellisi, where are ancient quarries, was the site of that fortress; and that Euryelus was at the peak of Belvedere[4]: but if Euryelus was the key of Epipolæ from the westward, as Thucydides plainly shows, it cannot have been anywhere but at Mongibellisi, where is the only pass into the table-land of Epipolæ at its western end. Labdalum was situated on the highest cliffs of Epipolæ; whereas Bufalaro is a round summit, midway between the southern and the northern cliffs. It is almost needless to remark, that Labdalum could not have been at Mongibellisi itself, because Labdalum looked down upon Thapsus and Megara, whereas the ancient castle at Mongibellisi stands on a depression which connects the ridge of Belvedere with that of Bufalaro, and is concealed by a ridge on its northern side from the sites of Leon and Thapsus. If Labdalum was in any position within the table-land of Epipolæ, it should be placed on the edge of the northern cliffs, on a line with Bufalaro, rather than on Bufalaro itself. But I am more inclined to believe that Labdalum, like the modern Belvedere, is applicable to the whole of the ridge westward of Mongibellisi, and that Euryelus, or 'the broad knob or knoll,' was a name descriptive of the entire height of Bufalaro, from its termination eastward of the Latomiæ, to its other end at Mongibellisi,—where, in an age subsequent to the Peloponnesian war, was erected the castle of Euryelus, of which the ruins are still extant.

Soon afterwards the Athenians received a welcome reinforcement of 400 horse from their Sicilian allies, and thus increased the amount of their cavalry to 650; after which, having left a guard in Labdalum, they proceeded to Syce, and began to construct their circumvallation as quickly as possible. (Thucyd. vi. 98, 2.) An attempt was made by the Syracusans to interrupt them, but was defeated in an action, in which all the Athenian cavalry was engaged, together with a single φυλὴ of hoplitæ. The next day the Athenians worked at their wall on the northern side, and some were employed in collecting stones and wood near Trogilus, at which place the line between the harbour and the outer sea was shortest: οἱ μὲν ἐτείχιζον τῶν Ἀθηναίων τὸ πρὸς βορέαν τοῦ κύκλου τεῖχος, οἱ δὲ λίθους καὶ ξύλα ξυμφοροῦντες παρέβαλλον ἐπὶ τὸν Τρώγιλον καλούμενον ἀεί, ᾗπερ βραχύτατον ἐγίγνετο αὐτοῖς ἐκ τοῦ μεγάλου λιμένος ἐπὶ τὴν ἑτέραν θάλασσαν το ἀποτείχισμα. (Thucyd. vi. 99, 1.) We find, in fact, that the shortest line from the outer sea to the great harbour of Syracuse is from Scala Greca to the shore of the harbour below the Theatre. Scala Greca, therefore, was the port of the Trogilii, as it is termed by Livy; and Trogilus probably was the name of the entire suburb adjacent to the northern wall of Syracuse, below the modern Targia and Targetta, which names may have been corrupted from Τρώγιλος: but this shortest line was interrupted by the outwork of the Syracusans at Temenitis.

From all these circumstances it seems probable that Syce,—the Athenian position from which it was their intention to carry their wall of investment northward to Trogilus, and southward to the great harbour,—was near the southern cliffs of Epipolæ, opposite to the advanced work of the Syracusans around Temenitis, and about midway between the two extremities of the intended Athenian circumvallation. Syce (the fig-tree) was probably the name of a small village then occupying that part of Epipolæ. That the Athenian position at Syce was near the southern cliffs of Epipolæ, seems evident, from the fact that the Athenians worked at first in two places to the northward of their position, namely, near it, and on the other side of Epipolæ, near Trogilus, where the materials were prepared, and where the circumvallation was to terminate to the north. Some commentators have supposed that συκῆ is an erroneous or dialectic reading for τύχη, and that Thucydides intended the τυχεῖον or temple of Fortune, which afterwards gave name to one of the quarters of upper Syracuse: but we have the clear testimony of Livy, that Hexapylum, the great northern entrance of Syracuse, led through Tycha to Achradina; consequently that Tycha was adjacent to the northern walls Συκῆ, the fig-tree, was not uncommon as the name of a village, like Sykiá at the present day; and, in this instance, it seems to have been that of a small suburban place, like Labdalum, Leon, Trogilus, and others.

The Syracusans now resolved to build a cross-wall (ἐγκάρσιον τεῖχος or ὑποτείχισμα) to intercept the Athenian circumvallation, (ὑποτειχίζειν δὲ ἄμεινον ἐδόκει εἶναι, ᾗ ἐκεῖνοι ἔμελλον ἄξειν τὸ τεῖχος, Thucyd. vi. 99, 2.) and to serve as a defensive work to themselves on that side; and which would, if the Athenians should endeavour to frustrate the attempt, cause an interruption to their operations on Epipolæ. This Syracusan counterwork consisted of a wall and palisade with wooden towers at intervals. Stockades were also raised at the places which afforded the readiest access from the Athenian position, σταυροῖς προκαταλαμβάνοντες τοὺς ἐφόδους: these places were the προσβάσεις or passes in the southern cliffs of Epipolæ, which afford an ascent into Epipolæ from Neapolis. For these purposes the Syracusans cut down the olive-trees in the temenus of Apollo. The Syracusans, observes the historian, were at this time masters of the places on the seaside, (ἐκράτουν τῶν περὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, Thucyd. vi. 99, 4.) while the Athenians, whose ships had not yet sailed from Thapsus, obtained their supplies from thence by land; a remark which accounts for the Syracusan cross-wall having been erected between Epipolæ and the harbour, for in the sequel this clearly appears to have been its position. Had the Athenian fleet been in possession of the harbour, a cross-wall, exposed, as it would have been, to the enemy on both sides, would have been too hazardous an undertaking: and accordingly we find that when the Athenians had occupied the harbour with their fleet, they were no longer opposed in prolonging their wall from Syce to the harbour.

The counterwork of the Syracusans appears to have commenced from the western wall of Achradina, between the Agrigentine gate and that point of the western wall where it was joined by the inclosure or outwork of Temenitis; and to have been carried along the platform afterwards occupied by Neapolis, having the cliffs of Epipolæ on the right, and the plain with the marsh Lysimeleia on the left. In the wall of Temenitis there was a πυλίς, or small gate, protected as usual by a stockade in front.

When the Syracusans had carried on their work to a considerable extent, and found that the enemy made no attempt to interrupt them, they withdrew into the city, leaving a single φυλὴ in guard of their counterwork. The Athenians now cut off the conduits of water, (we have seen that the principal aqueduct of Syracuse passed exactly through the position which I have assigned to Syce) and,—watching the moment when the Syracusans in charge of the counterwork had retired into their tents at midday, and some into the city, and when the guard eft at the stockade of the work was negligent, (τοὺς ἐν τῷ σταυρώματι ἀμελῶς φυλάσσοντας, Thucyd. vi. 100, 1.)—they sent 300 chosen Athenian hoplitæ, (σφῶν αὐτῶν λογάδας,) at a rapid pace, suddenly against the counterwork, (πρὸς τὸ ὑποτείχισμα,) while the rest of their forces, (ἡ ἄλλη στρατιά,) divided into two bodies, proceeded, the one to the city, that is to say, towards the gate of Agrigentum, to meet any force that might advance from thence, and the other to a palisaded work before the small gate, (πρὸς τὸ σταύρωμα τὸ παρὰ τὴν πυλίδα,) which led into the outwork of Temenitis. The 300 took the stockade, followed the flying garrison into Temenitis, and entered it; but there meeting with opposition from the Syracusans, some Argives and a few Athenians fell in the encounter. The Argives, it appears, were of those who were sent against the stockade of the small gate, and who it thus appears had also forced their way in; for the 300 consisted of Athenians alone. The entire force then took possession of the Syracusan counterwork (ὑποτειχισιν καθεῖλον), destroyed the stockade, carried away with them the stakes (σταυροὺς), and erected a trophy. (Thucyd. vi. 100, ad fin.)

The next day the Athenians,—whose circumvallation had hitherto been carried on to the northward of Syce, and who were encouraged by the former day's success to continue it to the harbour,—prepared for this work by building a wall along the crest of the cliffs until they reached a point where the distance would be the shortest possible to that part of the shore of the harbour which was to be the southern end of their circumvallation, and which was separated from the cliffs by the lower level afterwards occupied by Neapolis, and by the plain and marsh: τῇ δ' ὑστεραίᾳ ἀπὸ τοῦ κύκλου ἐτείχιζον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὸν κρημνὸν τὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἕλους, ὃς τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν ταύτῃ πρὸς τὸν μέγαν λιμένα ὁρᾷ, καὶ ἦπερ αὐτοῖς βραχύτατον ἐγίγνετο καταβᾶσι διὰ τοῦ ὁμαλοῦ καὶ τοῦ ἕλους ἐς τὸν λιμένα τὸ περιτείχισμα. (Thucyd. vi. 101, 1.)

Here the words ἐτείχιζον τὸν κρημνὸν may require a little consideration. It could not have been the purpose of the Athenians to strengthen the cliffs, which were not only strong enough in themselves, but were on that side of the Athenian camp which was the most free from danger; for the Syracusans were never sufficiently strong to make a serious attack upon the Athenian camp, even when they possessed a chain of posts extending to the enemy's rear. The wall along the cliffs, therefore, was for the purpose of covering the communication along the cliffs between the camp at Syce and the advanced point of the cliffs from which commenced the double wall of circumvallation across the site of Neapolis and the plain to the seashore.

The Syracusans immediately commenced a second counterwork, to the southward of the former, and which was intended to intercept the Athenian walls in the plain. It commenced from the city, and consisted chiefly of a trench and palisade across the marsh Lysimeleia, (καὶ οἱ Συρακόσιοι ἐν τούτῳ, ἐξελθόντες, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀπεσταύρουν αὖθις, ἀρξάμενοι ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως, διὰ μέσου τοῦ ἕλους· καὶ τάφρον ἅμα παρώρυσσον, ὅπως μὴ οἷόν τε ᾖ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις μέχρι τῆς θαλάσσης ἀποτειχίσαι, Thucyd. vi. 101, 2.) which, though it may formerly have been larger than it is now, is still of considerable dimensions in the brumal half year, and communicates with the sea about midway between the angle of the great port, where I have supposed the wall of Achradina to have terminated, and the mouth of the Anapus. As the Athenian walls were directed to some point in this interval, the palisaded intrenchment of the Syracusans, had it been completed, would have intersected it nearly at right angles in the middle of the plain, and would have had a length of about 1200 yards.

As soon as the Athenians had completed their wall along the cliff, it was necessary to attempt the destruction of the enemy's new intrenchment, at the same time that the ships at Thapsus were ordered to enter the great harbour of Syracuse. Descending early in the morning from Epipolæ into the plain, they crossed a part of the marsh by throwing wooden doors and planks over the most difficult places, and at daybreak carried all the enemy's palisade and dyke, except a small part which was taken afterwards. A battle ensued, the Athenians were victorious, the right of the Syracusans fled to the city, and the left towards the river, with the view of retreating to the Olympieium, which was in possession of the Syracusans. A body of 300 select Athenians endeavoured to cut them off from the bridge of the Anapus, but were turned by the Syracusan cavalry, and driven upon the right wing of the Athenians, when Lamachus, the Athenian general, advancing from the left to their defence, was slain with a few others in passing a ditch, and his body was carried across the river by the Syracusans. This occurrence encouraged those who had fled into the town to advance again; and part of them attacked the Athenian works on Epipolæ, where Nicias had been detained by sickness. They succeeded in taking, and destroyed, an outwork 1000 feet long, (τὸ δεκάπλεθρον προτείχισμα, Thucyd. vi. 102, 2.) which had been raised to afford a necessary protection from surprise, to those who were at work on the wall itself; but they were prevented from attempting the latter (αὐτὸν τὸν κύκλον) by Nicias, who ordered the machines and wood collected before the wall, for the further progress of the work, to be set on fire, so that the enemy was unable to advance through the flames. They retired, therefore; and the more hastily, as the Athenians had now received assistance from the plain below, and the fleet from Thapsus was seen to enter the great harbour.

The Athenians having now their fleet and army collected in one place, confidently undertook the completion of a double wall from the cliffs of Epipolæ to the sea: ἀπὸ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν καὶ τοῦ κρημνώδους ἀρξάμενοι, ἀπετείχιζον μέχρι τῆς θαλάσσης τείχει διπλῷ τοὺς Συρακοσίους. (Thucyd. vi. 103, 1.) They were now joined by many of the Siculi, and by three penteconters from Tyrrhenia; they received supplies also from the adjacent parts of Italy; while the Syracusans, despairing of being able to prevent the circumvallation, began to confer among themselves, as well as with the enemy, concerning terms of surrender. These conferences, however, had no result, and the only step taken by the Syracusans was to dismiss Hermocrates, and to appoint three new generals in his place.

Meantime Gylippus the Lacedæmonian had sailed with four ships to their relief, leaving at Leucas the rest of the Corinthian fleet; and, although some accounts which he had received led him at first to believe that he should be too late,—which made him turn his attention to the security of the Greek cities on the coast of Italy, on his route,—further advices which reached him during his progress determined him, after having landed at Himera, to proceed from thence across the island to Syracuse, with 700 armed sailors and marines (ἐπιβάται), 100 Siculi, 1100 Himeræi (of whom 100 were cavalry), and a small force from Selinus and Gela. Encouraged by the arrival of a Corinthian ship, which announced the speedy advent of others, as well as by the intelligence of the approach of Gylippus by land, the Syracusans advanced with their whole force towards the Athenian position on Epipolæ; while Gylippus marched unopposed through the same pass of Euryelus by which the Athenians had ascended from Leon, and joined the Syracusans on the Athenian line of circumvallation. The Athenians were at this time employed in the construction of their double wall towards the sea, which was 7 or 8 stades in length, and no more than a small portion on the shore remained to be executed: ξυνταξάμενος ὡς ἐς μάχην, ἀφικνεῖται ἐς τὰς Ἐπιπολάς· καὶ ἀναβὰς κατὰ τὸν Εὐρύηλον, ᾗπερ καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὸ πρῶτον, ἐχώρει μετὰ τῶν Συρακοσίων ἐπὶ τὸ τείχισμα τῶν Ἀθηναίων. ἔτυχε δὲ κατὰ τοῦτο τοῦ καιροῦ ἐλθὼν ἐν ᾧ ἑπτὰ μὲν ἢ ὀκτὼ σταδίων ἤδη ἐπετετέλεστο τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐς τὸν μέγαν λίμενα διπλοῦν τεῖχος, πλὴν κατὰ βραχύ τι τὸ πρὸς τὴν θάλασσαν. (Thucyd. vii. 2, 3, 4.)

As the nearest point of the cliffs to the angle of the great harbour, near the site of the Agragian gate, is not less than 8 stades, it seems evident that the '7 or 8 stades' are to be confined to that part of the Athenian lines which were in the maritime plain, and that the portion which began at the cliffs, and crossed the site of Neapolis, having been completed, was not taken into account in this computation of Thucydides. Indeed it is likely that this part of the work was already in progress when the Syracusans began their second counterwork or intrenchment across the marsh.

Towards Trogilus and the other sea stones were laid ready most part of the way; some part of the wall was half-finished, and some part completed. To such an extreme of danger, adds the historian, had Syracuse arrived. He seems to have thought, that had the circumvallation been completed, the capture of the city would have been certain.

The fatal error of Nicias in neglecting to fortify Euryelus, the key of Epipolæ, —the importance of which, in the opinion of the ancients, is shown by the still extant fortress which afterwards protected this entrance into Syracuse,—is one of those unaccountable infatuations which often occur in military history. Instead of so doing, he had placed a garrison at Labdalum, apparently because that position commands a view towards Leon and Megara, on which side were his naval forces. As an exterior security to Euryelus, a post at Labdalum might have been useful, but was of no value whatever when that point was left open.

As soon as Gylippus had effected a junction with the Syracusans, he offered to treat with the Athenians for their undisturbed evacuation of Sicily in five days: no answer was given. The forces on both sides were drawn out for battle, but no action ensued: Gylippus, seeing the Syracusans in disorder, withdrew to a more open place, (ἐς τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν μᾶλλον, Thucyd. vii. 3, 3.) and, when he perceived that Nicias remained behind his wall, (ἡσύχαζε πρὸς τῷ ἑαυτοῦ τείχει,) led his army to the hill Temenitis, and there encamped (ἐπὶ τὴν ἄκραν τὴν Τεμενῖτιν καλουμένην καὶ αὐτοῦ ηὐλίσαντο). The first position of Gylippus appears to have been between the Athenian wall and that of Temenitis; from thence he moved into the space afterwards occupied by the third Syracusan counterwork, and by the inclosure adjacent to it, and from thence into Temenitis. The next day Gylippus made a demonstration towards the Athenian works, while he sent a division against Labdalum, which was unseen from the Athenian position. By these means he succeeded in taking Labdalum, and put the garrison to death. The fact of Labdalum having been invisible from the Athenian position, shows that it could not have been on the height of Bufalaro, as Professor Dunbar supposes, and that it must have been on the cliffs behind (north of) that summit, or on the ridge of Belvedere. On the same day an Athenian ship was taken by the Syracusans, while entering the harbour.

The Syracusans and their allies now began to build a wall upwards from the city in a transverse direction to that of the Athenians, for the purpose of preventing them from continuing their circumvallation in a northerly direction: ἐτειχιζον διὰ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν, ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως ἀρξάμενοι ἄνω, πρὸς τὸ ἐγκάρσιον[5] τεῖχος ἁπλοῦν· ὅπως οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, εἰ μὴ ἔτ' ἐθέλοιεν κωλύεσθαι, μηκέτι οἷοί τε ὦσιν ἀποτειχίσαι. (Thucyd. vii. 4, 1.) We have seen that the Athenian circumvallation was a double wall: that the first Syracusan counterwork was a wall with a palisade before it, having wooden towers at intervals; and that their second counterwork in the marsh consisted of a trench and palisade. In this third counterwork a single wall seems to have been considered sufficient, because it was covered on the left by the outwork of Temenitis, and had a powerful force to protect the workmen engaged in raising it.

The Athenians, having now finished their wall ending at the harbour, had collected their forces on the heights: ἀναβεβήκεσαν ἤδη ἄνω. (Thucyd. vii. 4, 2.) In the night Gylippus advanced towards a weak place in the Athenian wall; but finding that his opponents were on the outside of the wall, and that they advanced against him, he withdrew: after which the Athenians raised that part of their wall higher, and kept that station to themselves, while their allies were stationed in other parts of the walls.

Nicias, finding his hopes of a successful event by land much impaired, now turned his attention to his naval resources, and resolved to fortify Plemmyrium. This promontory was opposite to the city, and narrowed the entrance of the harbour, so that, when fortified, the importation of necessaries would be easier, the station of the Athenian ships would be nearer to the Syracusan port, (i. e. the smaller or northern harbour,) and the Athenians would not be obliged to advance from the inner part of the bay in case of any movement on the part of the enemy: οὐχ, ὥσπερ νῦν, ἐκ μυχοῦ τοῦ λιμένος τὰς ἐπαναγωγὰς ποιήσεσθαι, ἢν τι ναυτικῷ κινῶνται. (Thucyd. vii. 4, 4.) Proceeding therefore with some land-forces and the ships, he built three forts, (διακομίσας οὖν στρατιὰν καὶ τὰς ναῦς, ἐξετείχισε τρία φρούρια,) in which he placed the greater part of the naval stores; the ships of burthen as well as the war-ships had already anchored there: τὰ σκεύη τὰ πλεῖστα ἐκειτο, καὶ τὰ πλοῖα ἤδη ἐκεῖ τὰ μεγάλα ὥρμει, καὶ αἱ ταχεῖαι νῆες. (Thucyd vii. 4, 5.) But the ships' companies (τὰ πληρώματα) soon experienced the inconveniences of this position. Water was scarce or far to fetch, and the Syracusans had augmented their cavalry at Polichne and the temple of Jupiter Olympius, so that it now amounted to one-third of their whole strength in that arm; and the Athenian seamen were sometimes cut off by them when employed in collecting fuel: ἐπὶ φρυγανισμὸν ὁπότε ἐξέλθοιεν οἱ ναῦται. (Thucyd. vii. 4, 6.)

Nicias sent, likewise, 20 ships towards Rhegium and Locri, to look out for the Corinthian ships coming to the assistance of the enemy. Meantime Gylippus continued the cross-wall through Epipolæ, (τὸ διὰ τῶν Ἐπιπολῶν τεῖχος,) making use of the stones which the Athenians had provided for their own circumvallation,—and which, as Thucydides had before informed us, were chiefly collected near Trogilus. While engaged in this work, Gylippus drew out the Syracusans and their allies in front, which obliged the Athenians to form a line opposite to them. At length he attacked the enemy,—but, as the action occurred between the walls of the respective parties, (μεταξὺ τῶν τειχισμάτων,) the Syracusan cavalry was of no avail. From these circumstances we may deduce with some degree of probability the position of the ἐγκάρσιον τεῖχος ἁπλοῦν, or transverse single wall of the Syracusans, as well as the extent to which the Athenians had carried their circumvallation to the northward. We may infer also that the distance was not very great between the Athenian lines and the nearly parallel Syracusan outwork of Temenitis.

Gylippus took the blame of this failure upon himself, and in a second action was more successful. On this occasion, Nicias, who saw the necessity of making an effort to prevent the enemy's wall from crossing his line, which it had almost done, (ἤδη γὰρ καὶ ὅσον οὐ παρεληλύθει τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων τοῦ τείχους τελευτὴν ἡ ἐκείνων τείχισις, Thucyd. vii. 6, 1.) commenced the attack. Gylippus drew out the hoplitæ further beyond the walls than before, (ἔξω τῶν τειχῶν μᾶλλον ἢ πρότερον, Thucyd. vii. 6, 2.) and thus obliged the Athenians, in meeting them, to expose their left flank to his cavalry in the plain beyond the termination of the walls of either party (κατὰ τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν ᾗ τῶν τειχῶν ἀμφοτέρων αἱ ἐργασίαι ἔληγον). The Athenians were defeated, and retired in confusion within their walls: and in the following night the Syracusan counterwork was carried out so far beyond the construction of the Athenians, that it was no longer possible for the latter to complete their circumvallation[6]. Soon afterwards, twelve ships from Corinth, Ambracia, and Leucas, arrived at Syracuse without having encountered the Athenian ships sent to meet them. The Syracusan cross-wall was now united with the enclosure of Temenitis, (ξυνετείχισαν τὸ λοιπὸν τοῖς Συρακοσίοις μέχρι τοῦ ἐγκαρσίου τείχους, Thucyd. vii. 7, 1.) and thus largely extended the dimensions of that outwork of Achradina.

Nicias, in a despatch which he now sent to Athens, informed the Athenians that he could not continue to circumvallate the enemy, (περιτειχίσαι αὐτούς, Thucyd. vii. 11, 3.) unless their outwork (παρατείχισμα) were taken, which would require a large force; and that, being unable to face their cavalry, he was rather the besieged than the besieger. He complained particularly also of the increase of the enemy's allies, of the bad repair of his own ships, and of the loss or desertion of his seamen. The Athenians refused his request to resign, and voted reinforcements to be sent in the spring under Demosthenes and Eurymedon, despatching the latter, meantime, about the winter solstice, with 10 ships, and 20 (or 120) talents.

The Corinthians, having resolved at the same time upon sending further assistance to Syracuse, fitted out 25 ships, and vessels of burden (ὁλκάδες) for the transport of hoplitæ. In the early spring Gylippus in person collected more forces from his Sicilian allies, and on his return with them to Syracuse, urged the Syracusans to oppose the enemy at sea, in which counsel he was seconded by Hermocrates. Accordingly, 45 Syracusan ships from the small port, where was the naval arsenal, (ἐκ τοῦ ἐλάσσονος οὗ ἦν καὶ τὸ νεώριον αὐτοῖς. Thucyd. vii. 22, 1.) endeavoured to effect a junction with 25 others in the great harbour, with the view of assisting Gylippus in a projected attack by land upon Plemmyrium. Against the former of these squadrons the Athenians sent 25 ships, while 35 others met the squadron from the small port at the entrance of the great harbour. The Syracusans were at first successful; but those who had forced the entrance of the harbour falling into disorder, the Athenians ultimately prevailed, destroyed 11 Syracusan ships, slew the greater part of the men on board of eight of them, and captured those of the three remaining. They erected a trophy on the small island off Plemmyrium, (ἐν τῷ νησιδίῳ τῷ πρὸ τοῦ Πλημμυρίου, Thuc. vii. 23, 4.) now called Castelluccio, and, towing away the wrecks of their prizes, returned to their station at the head of the great harbour.

Meantime Gylippus, marching by night, had attacked Plemmyrium, and, while the garrison was intent on the proceedings by sea, had carried the three fortresses, in honour of which event the Syracusans erected three trophies. The loss of Plemmyrium, observes the historian, was the chief cause of the ruin of the Athenian armament. Three of their triremes were here stranded, (ἀνειλκυσμέναι, Thucyd. vii. 24, 2.) and taken possession of by the enemy; besides which they lost the sails of 40 triremes, a provision of corn, and many stores belonging to trierarchs and sutlers: nor was it long before they had to lament a similar loss sustained by them on the coast of Italy, where a squadron of Syracusan ships of war encountered and destroyed some vessels laden with supplies for them, burnt some of their ship-timber, (ξύλα ναυπηγήσιμα, Thucyd. vii. 25, 2.) which had been collected for them in the Cauloniatis, and returned to Syracuse with no other loss than that of one ship taken by the Athenian squadron of 20 ships which was stationed at Megara.

[6] Thucydides, in adding εἰ καὶ κρατοῖεν, cannot be supposed to have meant such a superiority in the field as would have left the Athenians complete masters of Epipolæ; but merely such as would have driven the Syracusans behind their ἐγκάρσιον τεῖχος ἁπλοῦν.

In the (great) harbour the Syracusans made a stockade in the sea, before the old ship-houses, (ἐν τῷ λιμένι πρὸ τῶν παλαιῶν νεωσοίκων, Thucyd. vii. 25, 5.) as a protection to them against the enemy. Although the historian employs only the words ἐν τῷ λιμένι, he could not have meant the smaller harbour, into which the Athenians never entered, and of which doubtless the interior part, containing, as we know, the νεώρια or naval arsenal, was a closed port (κλειστὸς λιμήν). It is probable that the old ship-houses were within the walls of Achradina, on the south-western shore of the isthmus, or western extremity of Ortygia, which in all ages was the position of the great works of the Syracusan government. Here they would have been at no great distance from the smaller port, and, if not contiguous, would at least have had a safe and easy communication with the arsenals of that harbour[7].

The Athenians, having brought near the stockade a ship of 1000 talents' burthen, fortified with wooden towers and bulwarks, drew out the stakes by windlasses placed in barges, or cut them with saws by means of divers: ναῦν μυριοφόρον, πύργους τε ξυλίνους ἔχουσαν καὶ παραφράγματα, ἔκ τε τῶν ἀκάτων ὤνευον ἀναδούμενοι τοὺς σταυροὺς καὶ ἀνέκλων, καὶ κατακολυμβῶντες ἐξέπριον. (Thucyd. vii. 25, 6.) Meantime there was an active interchange of missiles between the two contending parties; but the Athenians succeeded in destroying the greater part of the stockade.

About this time the Syracusans received some augmentation to their land-forces from their Siciliote (Greco-Sicilian) allies; and, being informed of the expected arrival of an armament from Athens under Demosthenes and Eurymedon, determined to make an attempt upon the enemy by sea and land before the arrival of these reinforcements. They prepared for the naval attack by shortening, lowering, and strengthening the prows of their ships, in imitation of the Corinthians; which alteration, as the Athenian prows were high and narrow, would give them an advantage when striking with the prow (ἀντίπρωροι[8]), as well as the means of preventing the Athenians from breaking their line (the διέκπλους), while another favourite manœuvre of the Athenians, that of moving round the enemy with the view of laying their ships alongside the opponents and boarding them (the περίπλους), would be frustrated by the want of space, now that the Athenians were confined to a small part of the harbour.

While Gylippus advanced from the city against the Athenian lines, the hoplitæ stationed at the Olympieium with the cavalry and light troops of Syracuse, threatened the opposite side of the enemy's wall (ἐκ τοῦ ἐπὶ θάτερα προσήει τῷ τείχει, Th. vii. 37, 2). The attack, it seems, was made near the two extremities of the Athenian position, but upon opposite sides of the circumvallation: 80 Syracusan ships then advanced against the Athenian ships, to the great surprise of the Athenians, who were not in expectation of a naval attack. But speedily manning 75 ships, they advanced against the enemy, when an engagement ensued which lasted a great part of the day, but terminated with little loss on either side, except that one or two Athenian ships were sunk by the enemy.

During the following day, the Syracusans reposed; while Nicias, in expectation of a renewal of the attack, moored some vessels of burthen in front of the stockade which he had erected in the sea before his triremes, to answer the purpose of a closed harbour: ὁλκάδας προώρμισε πρὸ τοῦ σφετέρου σταυρώματος, ὃ αὐτοῖς πρὸ τῶν νεῶν ἀντὶ λιμένος κλῃστοῦ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἐπεπήγει. (Thucyd. vii. 38, 2.) An interval of 200 feet (δύο πλέθρα, § 3.) between the vessels of burthen afforded egress to his ships, as well as a retreat in case of pressure from the enemy. The next day the attempt of the Syracusans was renewed by land and by sea,—when, partly by renewing the attack at an unexpected moment, and partly through the annoyance given by light vessels which moved round the Athenian ships, as well as in consequence of the improvements which had been made in the Syracusan ships, the Athenians were obliged to retreat, with the loss of 7 ships sunk, and a great number of men killed or taken: but the enemy was prevented from entering the stockade by the dolphins, or weights attached for that purpose to the yards of the ships of burthen: ἔπειτα, αὐτοὺς αἱ κεραῖαι ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐσπλων αἱ ἀπὸ τῶν ὁλκάδων δελφινο-

[7] In the time of the Peloponnesian war Ortygia was a peninsula. (Thucyd. vi. 3.) It was afterwards an island connected by a bridge.

[8] Thucyd. vii. 36, 3. Diodorus says, that by means of the low prows of the Syracusan ships, they were often enabled to sink the Athenians by a single blow. This appears to have been the commencement of that great change in the construction of the ancient galleys of war, by which the most projecting part of the metallic prow was placed below the water. See some remarks on this subject in reference to a brazen prow found on the site of the battle of Actium, in the first volume (second series) of the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, p. 249, seq.

φόροι ἠρμέναι ἐκώλυον. (Thucyd. vii. 41, 2.) By the effect of these, one of the Syracusan ships was destroyed, and another was taken, together with the men belonging to it. The result of this encounter inspired the Syracusans with great hopes of becoming superior by sea, as well as on shore: and they were preparing for further offensive operations, when the arrival of Demosthenes and Eurymedon with the reinforcement from Athens, which consisted of 73 ships and 5000 hoplitæ, with a large force of light-armed, made an entire change in their feelings,—as they little expected that when the Lacedæmonians had established themselves at Deceleia, within sight of Athens, the Athenians would have been capable of sending forth such an armament.

Demosthenes, desirous of profiting by this effect of his arrival, and of avoiding such ill consequences as had arisen from the dilatory conduct of Nicias, resolved either to take Syracuse, or to withdraw the entire armament. Perceiving that the counterwork of the Syracusans on Epipolæ, which interrupted the Athenian circumvallation, consisted of a single wall, he resolved upon making an attempt to carry it, and then the camp of Gylippus, which was within it: ὁρῶν τὸ παρατείχισμα τῶν Συρακοσίων, ᾧ ἐκώλυσαν περιτειχίσαι σφᾶς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ἁπλοῦν τε ὂν,—καὶ, εἰ ἐπικρατήσειέ τις τῶν τε Ἐπιπολῶν τῆς ἀναβάσεως καὶ αὖθις τοῦ ἐν αὐταῖς στρατοπέδου, ῥᾳδίως ἄν, &c. (Thucyd. vii. 42, 4.) We may here remark, that παρατείχισμα was the word employed by Nicias in describing this work of the Syracusans, which now covered all the western side of Achradina, with the exception of its northern extremity, and comprehended all the hill Temenitis, (ἡ ἄκρα Τεμενῖτις,) together with a large portion of the lower part of Epipolæ, between Temenitis and Trogilus; Epipolæ being here employed in its largest or Thucydidean sense. Besides this great outwork, Gylippus had formed three προτειχίσματα, (Thucyd. vii. 43, 4.) intrenched or walled positions, on the ascent of Epipolæ, and a τείχισμα, (Thucyd. vii. 43, 3.) or redoubt, at Euryelus,—all manned by the Syracusans or their allies. And thus it appears that the Syracusans had now a system of outworks reaching from Achradina to Euryelus, not only covering the city, but occupying likewise the whole northern side of Epipolæ. But, even thus outflanked, and threatened in the rear, the Athenians were still able, by their numerical strength, to maintain their position on the southern cliffs of Epipolæ, in face of Temenitis, from whence they extended nearly to the Anapus, and thus blockaded every part of Achradina, except its outlets towards the north.

Demosthenes began his operations by laying waste the enemy's lands near the Anapus; the only resistance he met with was from the cavalry and light troops at Olympieium. He then made a direct attempt upon the great outwork (παρατείχισμα, Thucyd. vii. 43, 1.) by machinery, but was not successful; his machines were burnt by the enemy who defended the walls, and his troops were repulsed by their other forces. He then determined, in concert with Nicias and the other generals, to make an attempt upon the enemy's extreme right at Euryelus. It was resolved that Nicias should remain in charge of the camp, while Demosthenes, Eurymedon, and Menander, taking with them 5 days' provision, as well as masons and other necessaries for the erection of a wall of circumvallation, should make the circuit of Epipolæ in the night, and, ascending the pass of Euryelus, should endeavour to surprise the enemy's fortified post (τείχισμα) at that place. In this they succeeded, having ascended by the same pass through which the Athenians had gained Epipolæ on their first arrival (κατὰ τὸν Εὐρύηλον, ᾗπερ καὶ ἡ πρότερα στρατιὰ τὸ πρῶτον ἀνέβη). A part of the garrison was slain, the remainder retired, and gave the alarm to those who occupied the three other outworks (προτειχίσματα), as well as to 600 Syracusans who were in charge of that part of Epipolæ, and who advanced to the support of the others, but, after a brave resistance, were turned by the Athenians.

The latter now advanced to the Syracusan outwork, and began to pull down the battlements, (τὰς ἐπάλξεις ἀπέσυρον, Thucyd. vii. 43, 5.) when Gylippus, at the head of the Syracusans and their allies, issued from their outworks (ἐκ τῶν προτειχισμάτων). At first they were unable to resist the enemy,—but, when the latter, in confidence of victory, advanced in disorder, an attack of the Bœotians first checked them at a moment when, although the greater part of the forces had attained the heights, some were still on the ascent, and at length obliged them to retreat. The confusion soon became complete. If (adds the historian) there is difficulty in describing a battle by day, how shall the occurrences of a νυκτομαχία (Thucyd. vii. 44, 2.) be detailed? Though the moon shone brightly, there was not always sufficient light to distinguish a friend from a foe. The watchword of the Athenians, by its frequent repetition aloud, became known to the enemy, and no longer gave confidence to the Athenians. The singing of the Pæan, too, by the Doric allies of the Athenians, as well as by the enemy, was another misfortune, as it left them quite uncertain as to the numbers of the enemy around them. Driven back to the narrow entrance of Epipolæ (at Euryelus), or to the precipices (at its northern side), many perished in falling from them, after throwing away their arms: of those who reached the plain in safety, many of the men recently arrived were unable, from their ignorance of the place, to find their way back to the camp; but, wandering in the night, were cut down in the morning by the cavalry of the Syracusans.

The next day the Syracusans erected two trophies: one at the entrance of Epipolæ; the other where the Bœotians first opposed the enemy (ἐπί τε ταῖς Ἐπιπολαῖς ᾗ ἡ πρόσβασις, καὶ κατὰ τὸ χωρίον ᾗ οἱ Βοιωτοὶ πρῶτον ἀντέστησαν). The entrance of Epipolæ was doubtless no other than the pass of Euryelus, by which the Athenians had ascended; and to which those ignorant of the localities would naturally retreat; and where, embarrassed by the narrow way, they would be exposed to their pursuers under the greatest disadvantage; while the troops who had been long at Syracuse, retired,—probably to that part of the southern cliffs which was still in possession of the Athenians. A truce was then agreed upon for the purpose of delivering to the Athenians their slain.

This failure left no hope of accomplishing the object of the expedition. Demosthenes, therefore, now urged in council his other alternative,—an immediate return to Athens; and the more so, as his active opponent had instantly departed for the purpose of collecting land-forces from the other parts of Sicily. The Athenians, moreover, were encamped in a marshy place; the unhealthy season had commenced, and the men were dispirited. But Nicias would not consent to decamp without instructions from Athens. Demosthenes and Eurymedon then urged a removal to Thapsus or Catana, from whence the land-forces might subsist themselves upon the lands of the enemy, and where the ships would have space for their movements. But Nicias still entertained hopes, founded partly upon the distressed state of the Syracusan treasury, but chiefly upon a party within the walls of Syracuse, with whom he entertained a correspondence. No measures of departure therefore had been taken, when Gylippus, returning to Syracuse with numerous auxiliaries, about the same time that a re-inforcement of hoplitæ arrived from the Peloponnesus by the circuitous route of Libya and Selinus, the Syracusans prepared for a general attack upon the enemy by sea and land. Meantime sickness increased in the Athenian camp, and Nicias consented that orders should be issued for a departure at the shortest notice; when an occurrence intervened which sealed the fate of this unfortunate armament.

A total eclipse of the moon, on the 27th of August, 413 B.C., was considered by most of the Athenians as an omen, (ἐνθύμιον, Thucyd. vii. 50, 4.) which warned the commanders to desist from departure; and Nicias, who was somewhat superstitious, leaning to this opinion, the sacred interpreters pronounced that it required a delay of thrice nine days. The Syracusans were rejoiced to hear of this, and, with the view of preventing the enemy from establishing himself in any other part of Sicily, determined to attack his ships. After having exercised their own for some days, they began by a demonstration on the Athenian walls, where the approach was narrow, and where the Athenians suffered a loss of 70 horses and some hoplitæ,—when they found themselves under the necessity of retreating to the gate from which they had issued.

The next day the Syracusans advanced with 76 ships, while their infantry proceeded against the Athenian walls. A general action ensued by sea, the Athenians engaging with 86 ships. The Syracusans defeated their opponents in the centre, which gave them the means of cutting off and destroying, in the bay of Dascon, the Athenian right, under Eurymedon, who, in his endeavours to outflank his adversary, had approached very near the land in that part of the great harbour, ἐν τῷ κοίλῳ καὶ μυχῷ τοῦ λιμένος[9]. (Thucyd. vii. 52, 2.) Eurymedon himself was slain[1]. Gylippus now,—with a view to occupy the shore, and to destroy the defeated Athenian sailors who should land upon it from their ships, as well as to assist the Syracusan ships in dragging away the enemy's defeated vessels,—which had not been able to enter the stockaded refuge at the Athenian camp, but had drifted (καταφερομένας) along the shore (to the eastward),—advanced with a portion of the army along the mole (χηλή, Th. vii. 53, 1.) which separated the marsh Lysimeleia from the sea. He was opposed by the Tyrseni[2], who drove some of the leading files into the marsh; after which, re-inforcements arrived on both sides,—when the Athenians prevailed, with the loss of a few of the enemy's hoplitæ. By this fortunate occurrence the greater part of the Athenian ships were saved, and brought within the stockade; but 18 were taken on this day by the enemy, who put to death the crews. An attempt was then made to burn the Athenian ships by sending against them an old ship of burthen (ὁλκάδα παλαιὰν) filled with combustibles. The wind was favourable, but the Athenians met the fire-ship with materials for extinguishing fire, (σβεστήρια κωλύματα, Thucyd. vii. 53, 4.) and thereby prevented its approach.

[1] According to Diodorus, seven Athenian vessels were sunk on this occasion, and Eurymedon was slain after having landed.

Thucydides has not informed us, in any part of his narrative, of the numbers of land-forces on either side; but he has named the allies of each party. On that of the Athenians there were troops from about thirty states of Greece, in alliance or subjection to Athens, besides the Greek cities of Thurium and Metapontum in Italy, those of Naxus, Catana, and Egesta in Sicily, (Agrigentum remained neutral,) some Iapyges and Tyrrheni, and the greater part of the Siculi. The Syracusans were assisted from Sicily by the Greek cities Camarina, Himera, Gela, and Selinus, and by some of the Siculi; from Greece by Sparta, Corinth, Leucas, and Ambracia, and by some Arcadians, Sicyonii, and Bœotians.

The Syracusans, having now become masters of the great harbour, aimed at nothing less than the capture of the entire armament; and with this view began to close the entrance, which was eight stades in width, by anchoring triremes placed lengthwise, together with sailing vessels and barges: τριήρεσι πλαγίαις, καὶ πλοίοις καὶ ἀκάτοις, ἐπ' ἀγκυρῶν ὁρμίζοντες. (Thucyd. vii. 59, 3.) The Athenian commanders, in notifying to the Catanians their intention of sailing from Syracuse, had imprudently authorized a suspension of the supplies which they had been in the habit of receiving from thence, and had now to add the prospect of starvation to their other difficulties. Thus circumstanced they found it prudent to abandon their upper walls, to contract their fortification round the ships to the smallest compass sufficient to comprehend their sick and stores, (τὰ μὲν τείχη τὰ ἄνω ἐκλιπεῖν, πρὸς δὲ αὐταῖς ταῖς ναυσὶν ἀπολαβόντες διατειχίσματι ὅσον οἷόν τε ἐλάχιστον, &c. Thucyd. vii. 60, 2.) and, leaving a force to protect it, to place all the rest of the infantry on board of the best ships, and to hazard a general naval action; if victorious, to proceed to Catana; and if not, to burn the ships, and to endeavour to reach by land some friendly state, whether Hellenic or barbaric, that is to say, whether of the Σικελιῶται (Greek colonies) or of the Σικελοί.

They descended therefore from the upper walls, ἔκ τε γὰρ τῶν ἄνω τειχῶν ὑποκατέβησαν, (on the southern cliffs of Epipolæ[3],) and manned about 110 ships: every hoplite, who by age was suited to the service, was obliged to embark; and to them were added many bowmen and javelin-men of Acarnania and other foreign states. Nicias made a speech to his troops, in which he insisted upon the advantage to be derived from the grappling-irons, (χεῖρες σιδήρεαι,) with which the Athenian ships had been fitted, as they would render boarding easy, and then the hoplitæ embarked had only to do their duty. But Gylippus,—to whom every thing which now passed in the enemy's camp seems to have been known,—had already provided a covering of leather for the prows of his ships, to obviate the effect of the grapples, (τὰς γὰρ πρώρας καὶ τῆς νεὼς ἄνω ἐπὶ πολὺ κατεβύρσωσαν, Thucyd. vii. 65, 2.) and he remarked, in a speech addressed to his troops, that 'the crowd of landsmen whom the enemy had placed on board, and their numerous ships, forced to act in a small space, could not fail to create confusion.'

Nicias drew out the remainder of the land-forces on the sea-bord, while Demosthenes, Menander, and Euthydemus advanced with the fleet, directly across the great harbour, against the barrier of ships at the entrance, with the intention of forcing it: εὐθὺς ἔπλεον πρὸς τὸ ζεῦγμα τοῦ λιμένος, καὶ τὸν καταληφθέντα (al. -ειφθέντα, παραληφθέντα, -ειφθέντα) διέκλουν, βουλόμενοι βιάσασθαι ἐς τὸ ἔξω[4]. (Thucyd. vii. 69, 4.) Of the Syracusan ships, which in number were nearly as before, some were stationed for the protection of the barrier, the remainder round the harbour, in order to fall upon the enemy on every side, while the land-forces were similarly disposed on the shore opposite to the ships. Sicanus and Agatharcus commanded on the right and left; Pythen, the Corinthian, in the centre. The Athenians, having arrived at the barrier, succeeded at first in overpowering some of the ships which composed it, and were endeavouring to detach the fastenings, when they were attacked on every side by the Syracusans: ἐπειδὴ δ' οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι προσέμισγον τῷ ζεύγματι, τῇ μὲν πρώτῃ ῥύμῃ ἐπιπλέοντες ἐκράτουν τῶν τεταγμένων νεῶν πρὸς αὐτῷ, καὶ ἐπειρῶντο λύειν τὰς κλήσεις· μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο, &c. (Thucyd. vii. 70, 2.)

The action soon became general throughout the harbour. In such a crowd of vessels, amounting together to near 200, attacks with the beak (ἐμβολαὶ) were much less common than those alongside (προσβολαί). Great skill was shown on both sides by the officers (κυβερνῆται), and promptitude by the seamen (ναῦται), nor was there less emulation on the part of the soldiers embarked (ἐπιβάται), in their attempts to board their adversaries, after the discharge of arrows, darts, and stones, as the opponent ships approached each other. So great was the noise, that those who gave out the orders (κελευσταὶ) could seldom make themselves heard. At length the Athenians were every where turned to flight.

The land-forces on both sides had beheld the spectacle with the utmost anxiety. Of the Athenians, some endeavoured to assist such of the ships as escaped from capture, and took refuge at the camp; others turned their attention to the safety of their walls, for there was now a probability, observes the historian, that they might experience what they had caused the Lacedæmonians to suffer at Pylus, who, after the destruction of their ships, had lost also their men on shore. But they still possessed about 60 serviceable ships, while the Syracusans had not so many as fifty. Demosthenes proposed, therefore, to endeavour again to force the passage early the next morning, and Nicias consented to it, but the seamen refused to embark; and so completely were they morally subdued, that, during the second day after the battle, they allowed the Syracusans to tow away all their ships, except a few which had been burnt by the Athenians.

In the mean time Hermocrates, on the first of these two days, had proposed to the Syracusan commanders to send some of their men to break up the roads and occupy the passes, as he feared greatly the effect of such a land-force, should it obtain a footing in the interior of Sicily. But his proposition was overruled on the ground that the Syracusans were fatigued with their exertions, and wished to enjoy the festival of Hercules, which happened to be on that day[5].

Hermocrates, therefore, in order to gain time, and prevent the Athenians from marching that night, sent persons, in friendly guise, to the gate of their camp, desiring them not to march, as the Syracusans were guarding the passes:—a stratagem which not only produced the desired effect, but induced the Athenians to remain the ensuing day, in order to furnish themselves as much as possible with whatever would be useful on their intended march; while Gylippus and the land-forces under him proceeded to block up the roads, and occupy the fords and other places where the enemy was likely to pass.

On the third day after the battle, the Athenians, leaving their sick and wounded in the camp, and carrying with them a very insufficient store of provisions, in the expectation of meeting a supply from some of the friendly Siculi, marched in two bodies; the first commanded by Nicias, the second by Demosthenes. The hoplitæ in each body formed a hollow quadrangle, (τὸ δὲ ἐχώρει ἐν πλαισίῳ τεταγμένον, Thucyd. vii. 78, 2.) within which were the baggage, the light-armed, and the followers (τοὺς δὲ σκευοφόρους καὶ τὸν πλεῖστον ὄχλον ἐντὸς εἶχον οἱ ὁπλῖται). They found the ferry of the Anapus occupied by the enemy, but made good their passage, though annoyed in their subsequent march by his horse and light-armed. After a march of 40 stades, they halted for the night on a hill, from whence they advanced in the morning 20 stades, and encamped in a plain (χωρίον ἀπεδόν τι, Thucyd. vii. 78, 4.) for the sake of obtaining provisions and water, which latter was scarce for many stades on the road they were about to take. Their march was directed upon Catana, by the vale of the Anapus, and round the northern side of Mount Hybla, the maritime road from Syracuse to Catana being closed against them.

It appears, therefore, that they crossed the Anapus about the modern bridge over that river, situated about a mile and a half from the head of the great harbour, and that, having marched 4 miles further along the right bank of the Anapus, they halted for the night on the heights about a mile south of the Cavetta, a precipitous gorge

[2] The Tyrrhenian hoplitæ were armed like the Greeks, as we perceive from numerous monuments lately discovered in Tyrrhenia.

[3] τὸν δὲ λοιπὸν ὄχλον ἔστησε παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν ὁ Νικίας, ἐκλιπὼν τὸ μέγα στρατόπεδον καὶ τὰ τείχη τὰ συνάπτοντα πρὸς τὸ Ἡράκλειον. (Plut. Nic. 24.) This is the only datum, I believe, for the situation of the temple of Hercules.

[4] The Scholiast reads καταλειφθέντα, and supposed that an opening had been left in the ζεῦγμα: but the nature of the Athenian attack upon the barrier is adverse to this supposition, which is otherwise unlikely.

[5] They recovered possession of the temple of Hercules when the Athenians abandoned their upper walls. (Plutarch, Nic. 24.)

so called, where the Anapus issues from the heights of Hybla, and is immediately joined by the branch from Floridia and S. Paulo. The inhabited plain into which they moved on the following morning is evidently that of Floridia, and their position must have been near the site of that town. Here they remained during that day, while the Syracusans were employed in obstructing their line of march, and in fortifying a strong height in that direction called the Acræan rock, on either side of which there was a precipitous ravine: ἦν δὲ λόφος καρτερὸς καὶ ἑκατέρωθεν αὐτοῦ χαράδρα κρημνώδης· ἐκαλεῖτο δὲ Ἀκραῖον λέπας[6]. (Thucyd. vii. 78, 5.)

On the following day the Athenians moved forward, but were so much annoyed by the enemy's horsemen and light-armed, that they returned to their former station, though it afforded no supplies, and the communication around them was cut off by the enemy's cavalry. The next morning they again advanced to the fortified hill, (τὸν λόφον τὸν ἀποτετειχισμένον, Thucyd. vii. 79, 1.) but found the enemy so well protected by their wall, and by the light-armed on the steep slope of the height behind them, that the Athenians were again obliged to retire, having been somewhat disheartened also by a thunder-storm. Gylippus, at the same time, sent a division of his army into the rear of his opponents, to obstruct their retreat in the direction by which they had come, (ἀποτειχιοῦντας ἐκ τοῦ ὄπισθεν, Thucyd. vii. 79, 4.) and they were able to frustrate this attempt, — so that, advancing further into the plain, they remained there that night. In moving forward the next day, they were surrounded by the enemy, many of their rear and stragglers were cut off, and many others were wounded by missiles; so that they had not advanced more than 5 or 6 stades, before they found it necessary to halt in the plain, where they remained that night, and where it was decided by their guides to change their line of march, and, instead of pursuing the route towards Catana, to turn towards the other side of Sicily, in the direction of Camarina and Gela.

Endeavouring to deceive the enemy, therefore, by making fires, they moved off in the night, but not without some confusion; so that the division of Demosthenes, amounting to more than half the army, became separated from that of Nicias, and followed at some distance in a less orderly manner. In the morning (ἅμα δὲ τῇ ἕῳ, Thucyd. vii. 80, 4.) the whole army arrived near the sea, and fell into the Helorine way, (τὴν ὁδὸν τὴν Ἑλωρινὴν καλουμένην,) which they pursued until they arrived at the river Cacyparis, which they intended to ascend, (παρὰ τὸν ποταμὸν ἴοιεν ἄνω διὰ μεσογείας,) hoping to meet some of the Siculi, to whom they had sent for that purpose. Hence it appears that the distance between the Athenian camp in the plain of Floridia, and the Helorine way near the sea, to the northward of the Cacyparis, was about two-thirds of a night's march; for they moved in the night, (ἐν νυκτί, Thucyd. vii. 80, 2.) and the beginning of the night had been consumed in deliberation. The distance of the Cassibili from Floridia is about ten miles by the road; this river, therefore, being moreover the first of any magnitude to the south of Syracuse, seems clearly to be the ancient Cacyparis.

At the river the Athenians found a Syracusan guard obstructing the ford with a wall and palisade, (ἀποτειχίζουσάν τε καὶ ἀποσταυροῦσαν τὸν πόρον, Thucyd. vii. 80, 5.) an effect apparently of the provision made by Gylippus and the Syracusans for occupying the fords and passes (τῶν ῥείθρων καὶ ποταμῶν τὰς διαβάσεις ἐφύλασσον, Thucyd. vii. 74, 2.) before the Athenians had moved from Syracuse, and while it was yet uncertain in what direction they would march. The Athenians, having forced the passage of the Cacyparis, moved on towards the Erineus. The division of Demosthenes, which was 50 stades in the rear of that of Nicias, was overtaken by the Syracusans about the hour of dinner, (περὶ ἀρίστου ὥραν, Thuc. vii. 81, 1.) and had no more than time to form in order of battle, when they were surrounded and attacked in a walled inclosure of olive-trees, having a road through it either way, into which they had retired: ἀνειληθέντες ἔς τι χωρίον, ᾧ κύκλῳ μὲν τείχιον περιῆν, ὁδὸς δὲ ἔνθεν τε καὶ ἔνθεν, ἐλάας δὴ οὐκ ὀλίγας εἶχεν, ἐβάλλοντο περισταδόν. (Thucyd. vii. 81, 4.) Here they suffered so much during the remainder of the day from the enemy's missiles, —for he avoided close action,—that, when at night Gylippus, in his own name and that of the Syracusans and their allies, offered the Athenians their lives on condition of submission, they accepted the terms. They were 6000 in number: each man, in delivering up his arms, placed the money he had with him in his shield; the whole amount filled four shields. The prisoners were then marched off to Syracuse.

[6] The Ἀκραῖον λέπας appears not to have had any connexion with Acræ, a colony of Syracuse, of which there are considerable remains at Acremonte, near Palazzuolo. This place is about 20 miles (24 M. P., Antonin. et Peuting. Itin.) due west of Syracuse, whereas the Acræan rock was in a north-westerly direction, and not more than ten or eleven miles distant from Syracuse.

The next day Gylippus continued in pursuit of Nicias, who in the course of the preceding day had arrived at the Erineus, and, having crossed that river, had halted on a height beyond it. Here he was informed by the Syracusans of the surrender of Demosthenes, and having been permitted to send a horseman to be assured of the fact, he then made an offer to the enemy to defray all the expenses which the Syracusans had incurred by the war, and to deliver an Athenian as a hostage for each talent. But Gylippus and the Syracusans rejected these conditions, and assailed the enemy on all sides with missiles. This lasted until the evening, when the Athenians found themselves in great distress for want of provisions; during the night they made an ineffectual attempt to retreat, but were unable to elude the enemy's vigilance; and it was not until the morning that they were once more in motion,—when they hastened forward to the river Assinarus, (ἠπείγοντο πρὸς τὸν Ἀσσίναρον ποταμόν, Thucyd. vii. 84, 2.) urged by thirst and the hope of finding some protection from the horsemen and light-armed, who incessantly annoyed them. But the enemy attacked them at the passage of the Assinarus, and thus threw them into confusion while pressing forward to cross the river, which flowed between precipitous banks (ἦν δὲ κρημνῶδες, § 4). Some were carried down the stream, (ἐμπαλασσόμενοι κατέῤῥεον, § 3.) and many fell either by the missiles of the enemy's light-armed, or by the swords of the Peloponnesians who descended into the ravine, or by the horsemen, when any attempted to escape. The water, muddy as it was, and discoloured with blood, was still drunk, and even contested for among the Athenians. Nicias now surrendered to Gylippus,—to whom and the Lacedæmonians he left the disposal of his own fate, requesting at the same time that the slaughter should cease: upon which, Gylippus gave orders to make prisoners, (ζωγρεῖν ἐκέλευε, Thucyd. vii. 85, 2.) and his surviving enemies laid down their arms, including 300 who had made good their passage through the Syracusan guards in the preceding night, but who were speedily overtaken.

The whole number collected, however, was not great; for the loss sustained, as well at the Assinarus as in the preceding attacks, had been greater than on any occasion during the Sicilian war; and many were concealed by the victorious soldiers, to be sold as slaves for their own profit.

As the route of the Athenians appears to have been changed after forcing the passage of the Cacyparis, and, instead of following up that river to the north-westward, to have been directed to the south-westward upon Camarina, where, as appears from some former transactions, (Thucyd. vi. 88.) they were likely in their present condition to meet with assistance; it is probable, that in approaching the site of the modern Noto, they quitted the Helorine way and the vicinity of the sea-shore;—and that having crossed the river Falconara, probably not far from Noto to the westward, they encamped upon a height on the right bank of that river. The day's march, on this supposition, was about 12 miles. The next day they hastened forward to the Assinarus, but their march under the circumstances could not have been of more than three or four miles; at which distance, from the Falconara to the west, occurs the river Abisso, not far from its exit from the hills of Spaccafurno. I am inclined to believe, therefore, that the river Falconara is the ancient Erineus, and the Abisso the Assinarus.

The prisoners were confined in the stone-quarries. Nicias and Demosthenes were put to death; the former chiefly by the instigation of the Corinthians, supported by the Syracusans who had been in secret correspondence with Nicias, and contrary to the wishes of Gylippus, for the Lacedæmonians were grateful to Nicias for his conduct in favour of their countrymen taken at Pylus, while they bore a contrary feeling towards Demosthenes, who was the victorious commander at the same place. During eight months, the Athenians, and their allies of the Sicilian and Italian Greek cities, suffered the extreme of misery in the quarries, exposed without shelter to the sun, and the cold nights of winter, with a scanty allowance of food and water. The other captives at the end of 70 days were sold as slaves: all Sicily, says the historian, was filled with them.

Thus ended this imprudent enterprise: a result not unusual in such distant expeditions, but in the present instance disastrous in the extreme; chiefly in consequence of the inability of the commander, who, however deserving of the encomium of Thucydides, was unfit for the circumstances in which he was placed; and who was still more unfortunate in having for an opponent one of the most able commanders whose actions have been recorded in the history of Greece.
